Roger Vetter, a professor of music at Grinnell College, will deliver a lecture entitled "The Traditional Music of Ghana: Can the Best Go On" Dr. Vetter will show videos of traditional Ghanaian musical performances that he recorded while a Fulbright lecturer in Ghana during the 1992-93 academic year. With the support of the Ministry of Culture and Tourism, Dr. Vetter visited a number of villages in the Central Region of Ghana to record traditional music performed at weddings, funerals, festivals, and ceremonial events. The Office of Folk Life Programs at the Smithsonian is considering producing his recordings for general distribution. Dr. Vetter will present his talk Wednesday, March 30 at 7:30 in the International House. The general public is invited.

The Office of Student Affairs reminds all students interested in living in East or West Halls that the deadline for applications is April 18. Stop by the Student Affairs Office for more information.

Do You Hate Laundry?
Kent Laundry
207 High Street
Pick Up & Delivery

Start Now!

Blub

by Tanya Allen

Tina L. Mateu

Ducks in the Chesapeake area have been victims of nature in the last few weeks. Ducks have been dying in frighteningly large numbers in the area from the Bay Bridge to eastern Virginia. The culprit of these frightening deaths appears to be a disease known as Avian Cholera that fortunately presents no threat to humans, but unfortunately is very contagious among animals. Wildlife officials fear that the current bout could leave as many as 50,000 birds dead. The disease can kill birds in as quickly as 6 hours once they are infected with the virus. This is not the first time that a disease of this sort sweeps over the Chesapeake bay area. In 1978 the area suffered a bout of Cholera that affected more than 100,000 birds. The cause of the disease is unknown, but it is thought that the cold weather may be a highly influential factor.

The first diseased ducks were found on Monday the 21st in the areas of St. Mary's, Calvert, Talbot and Dorchester counties, which seem to be some of the most affected areas. Only recently has Virginia beach started to lose some of their ducks and it is feared they may take the illness up north to breeding grounds. So far the ducks most affected have been Old squaws and Scoter ducks, both of these deep-diving ducks and neither heavily hunted. There is, however, the risk that the Cholera might spread to other higher demand populations such as Mallards or Canvasbacks. Several seagulls have been affected by the Cholera as well, but fortunately the victims are few among these birds.

The disease usually runs its course after a period of three weeks. Little is known about it. Experts state that Avian Cholera is not a risk for humans "under normal conditions" but it can harm pets. If you find a dead or sick duck, Maryland's Wildlife Officials encourage you to notify the Department of Natural Resources or some expert on the matter. You should avoid contact with the animal's body fluids and place it in a double lined garbage bag. When dealing with a sick or diseased animal, no matter the specific disease you should wear gloves and always keep your pets away. The only thing that they can do at present is dispose of the dead ducks in an attempt to keep the Cholera at bay, or away from the Bay as it were.

After being turned back into a human and being rescued from near-death by drowning, PRESIDENT TROUT sucked in a huge gasp of Chestertown air and howled, "TANYA ALLEN! WHY ARE YOU ALWAYS TRYING TO HUMILIATE ME?! WHAT HAVE I EVER DONE TO YOU?! WHY DID YOU TRY TO DROWN ME? I'M NOT YOUR FINGERPUPPET!"

"But...but...I'm sorry!" the author gasped. "It's nothing personal—I would have done the same to any president, no matter who they were...."

"WHY IS EVERYBODY ALWAYS MAKING FUN OF ME? I DON'T GET ANY RESPECT AROUND HERE!"

"But...but...I'm sorry. Maybe it's your name..." offered the author. "I mean, you have a really good name, and...gee. Again, it's not personal, it's just because you're the president. I mean, well, if Dean Wubbles were president, I at least would make fun of him, too—for instance, I'd make everyone at WC turn into weebles, instead of fish. And if Dr. AMT were president, I'd turn everyone on campus into insects, and if JUDITH or DENNIS BERRY were students, I'd turn us all into fruits, and if DARRELL JESTER was president, I'd turn us all into fools, and if EARL SAVAGE was president, I'd turn us all into hoodlums, and if DR. BEVERLY WOLFF were president, I'd turn WC into a campus of animals, and if DR. SIEMEN were president...."

"DIDN'T ANYONE EVER TELL YOU IT'S NOT NICE TO MAKE FUN OF PEOPLE'S NAMES?"

"Well, uh, yeah, but—listen! It's nothing personal! Really!"

"I'LL SHOW YOU! I'LL SHOW EVERYONE!" shouted President Trout. "I'LL TURN THIS CAMPUS AROUND! I'LL MAKE EVERYTHING RIGHT AGAIN! I'LL MAKE EVERYTHING BETTER THAN RIGHT AGAIN! I'LL SHOW YOU ALL! I'M GOING TO SAVE THIS PLACE! YOU'LL SEE! YOU'LL SEE! WUBBLES? WHERE'S WUBBLES?"

"Right here, boss!" said DEAN WUBBLES, a wahoo fish.

"TAKE ME TO THE SHORE!" said President Trout. "I'M GOING TO SAVE THIS PLACE, WUBBLES! With your help, of course..."

"Sure thing, boss!" said DEAN WUBBLES. Trout rode on DEAN WUBBLES back all the way to shore. The sun rose as they swam.

"I wish them luck..." said JANIE ASHLEYfish.

"Yeah," said JOSH DREIBANDfish. "I'm tired of being an aquatic sea creature."

"I don't know how much longer we can last like this, anyway," said SALWA AMER NAHDIfish. "Even fish can't stand this weather too long—70 degrees one day, 32 the next...being in this ever-changing water so long is killing us..."

"And it's getting really hard to avoid the fishermen," said SKYE TEGTMEIERfish. I mean...."

Suddenly, "AGH!" a quarter of the fish screamed as a net suddenly tightened around them and they were lifted, gasping, into the air by greedy fishermen. "Oh, no!" they screamed. "Oh, no! President Trout! Come back! Save us! The Sho'men got us! We're going to die!" Ω the picture.

"Melrose," from 3

Unfortunately, I can only visit Melrose Place once a week, until syndication. I hang on the "scenes from next week" to find out what newsworthy topic will be addressed and who will sleep with whom. After all, with John Bobbitt getting remarried (and you thought I was gonna say reattached!) Tonya Harding quitting amateur skating, and the Menendez brothers awaiting another trial, I have to look somewhere for cheap escapist thrills. Drive Safely. Ω

OLD WHARF INN
ON THE CHESTER RIVER
FOOT OF CANNON ST.
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
JOHN & SANDY LINVILLS, OWNERS
410-778-1566
FAX: 410-778-2989
All-You-Can-Eat Triple Treat
Salad Bar Taco Bar
Self-serve Sundae Bar
Monday--Thursday 4--9 p.m.

WC Students Attend Model OAU

Kate Meagher

A student model of the Organization for African Unity met from March 2-5 at Howard University in Washington D.C.. Many colleges participated, with some coming from as far as California.

The OAU is composed of African member-states, each of which provides input in establishing policies as an African body. The student model is a replica of the real OAU, with each school representing a country, or two countries, as was the case this year for Washington College. There are approximately ten representatives for each member-state, each of whom sits on a different commission alongside representatives from the other countries. Each commission has a separate interest, such as politics, defense, the military, the economy, or social concerns.

The students from WC represented Chad and Mozambique. They spent a great deal of time researching these countries in order to effectively represent them. They studied the customs and ideals of the people and the national priority objectives of the countries.

Students in any major can go, though the majority of students in attendance from WC major in international studies. Christabel Garcia-Zamor, who was a representative of Chad, finds this to be a hindrance to the success of the OAU. Each student must prepare his or her own resolution. This is a paper stating a problem and outlining a solution. The whole commission debates the issue for hours, attempting to consolidate similar resolutions," Garcia-Zamor said.

"I would encourage people of different majors to participate," she said. "We could benefit from their expertise." There are commissions to which economics, sociology, and anthropology majors would be able to add useful input. "I think the professors should get involved and get students to participate in the program," Garcia-Zamor added.

The trip is subsidized by the school. This year there was a problem concerning reimbursement of food expenses, and the SGA has yet to provide this money for the students. Ω

Important Dates For Course Registration for Fall '94

Thursday, March 3: First Advising Day
Wednesday, April 6: Second Advising Day

Friday, April 8: Last Day to Submit Program Cards

Monday April 18: Arena Registration (if needed)

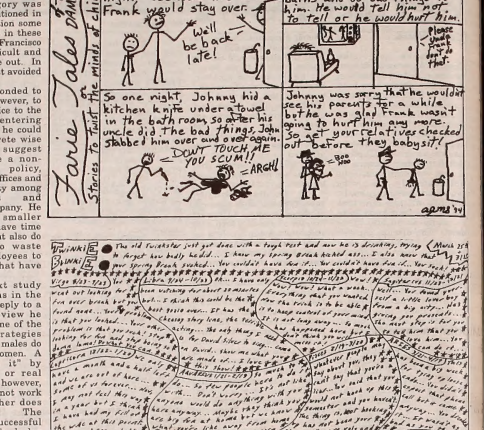
"Sexuality," from p.3

her/his difference is conspicuous. This visibility leaves the individual vulnerable to accusations of flaunting their sexuality. Woods mentioned an interviewee who described a discussion in which he wished to participate but refrained for fear of these accusations. Last distinction was the nature of the notice that bi and homosexuality receives because of the nature of the difference. A bisexual or homosexual's difference lies in their sexual orientation. When a person reveals their bi or homosexuality to someone else that someone often cannot help but visualize the difference (thoughts of tangled sheets and sweaty bodies). Woods mentioned that bi or homosexuals often find themselves privy to the secrets and problems of a heterosexual's sex life.

Woods related the viability of bi or homosexuality to the visibility of the first black or first woman in a company.

Next Woods outlined the differences between discrimination and heterosexism. Discrimination is believed to be mostly episodes, a remark, a firing or not receiving a job for which the individual was qualified. Woods explained that this definition is too narrow. Heterosexism he says includes social exclusion, stress, fear of exposure, lack of support, role models and benefits. He mentioned a situation presented to him by an interviewee. The individual related hours spent on the job, staring at the computer screen worrying about exposure. After coming out the individual was more productive.

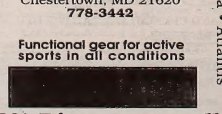
Woods said Heterosexism is bad for the individual and the company. For the individual it often means taking safe jobs with low or no exposure, remaining at lower level jobs for the same reason and leaving the corporate U.S. completely. For the company heterosexism is wasteful, promotes outmoded ideas of men, boxes both sexes in behavioral niches and encourages turn-over.



Woods also covered the issue of managing secrecy and disclosure. He described three paths, two extremes and one middle. The first he termed counterfeiting, an individual pretends to be straight. The other extreme includes various ways of coming out. The largest category was avoidance. He mentioned in response to a question some regional differences in these strategies. In San Francisco avoidance was difficult and most faked or came out. In Washington DC most avoided the issue.

Woods responded to many questions; however, to the request for advice to the bi or homosexual entering the business world he could not give any concrete wise words. He did suggest requesting to see a non-discrimination policy, walking about the offices and looking for diversity among the employees and researching the company. He said that many smaller companies do not have time to create policies but also do not have time to waste training new employees to replace the ones that have left.

Woods' next study focuses on lesbians in the workplace and in reply to a request for a preview he mentioned that some of the counterfeiting strategies which work for gay males do not work for gay women. A man can "butch it" by displaying faked or real machismo; however, "butching it" does not work for women. Neither does "feminine" work. The stereotype for a successful businessperson includes many traditional male characteristics. A feminine woman is perceived as non-professional in the workplace. Therefore attempting to appear feminine, while dispelling any rumors, would not advance the individual in her job.



In response to the question which most concerns this campus, the question on heterosexism in the academic world, Woods confessed to limited knowledge on this subject because of the wide variety in college and university-supported attitudes. For example heterosexism in a seminary or bible college would most likely be vastly different from the attitude on the campus of Sarah Lawrence. Woods said that heterosexism even varies from department to department and mentioned that the tenure system creates a unique picture. Before and after tenure pictures can be quite different.

In last words to the reporter Woods conveyed a feeling for the immensity of this dimension. He felt that studies of heterosexism is the next frontier for gay and lesbian activism. Ω

Bay to Bay Traders

Mad Bomber • Bula • Atlantis

207 Cross Street
Chestertown, MD 21620
778-3442

Ray Ban • Jansport • Great Lakes

Functional gear for active sports in all conditions

20% Discount on all Patagonia in Stock

Classifieds

Cruise Ship Jobs!
We will show you how to get on board.
800-303-2700

Cruise Ship Jobs!
Students needed! Earn $2000+ monthly. Summer, holidays, fulltime. World Travel, Caribbean, Hawaii, Europe, Mexico. Tour Guides, Gift Shop Sales, Deck Hands, Casino Workers, etc. No Experience Necessary. Call 602-680-4647, Ext. C147.

Andy's

25 Friday--Darren Defoore Trio country, folk, swing, country rock
26 Saturday--Bitter Creek simply great bluegrass
27 Wednesday--Bridget & the Damn Quartet
28 Thursday--Breslin, Hogans, Lang, & Price

Gender," from p.1

...xpresses "the hope that this ...inor will be applied ...rospectively, that is a ...urrent student may apply ...he courses that he or she ...as already completed to a ...Gender Studies Minor."

When asked what procedure current students would have to go through to have past courses count towards the Gender Studies minor, Dean Sansing said they would have to go to the Academic Standing Committee for approval. When asked if seniors graduating this May could ...ed a minor in Gender Studies, she said "I'm sure it ...as happen, I don't know ...hat would happen in terms ...f the new course." Interested students should contact their academic advisor for more information.

The new minor will have to be approved by the Academic Standing Committee of the Board of Visitors and Governors. It is expected to be approved. Ω and administration and that this is unproductive. He also said that, even as hard working and dedicated as faculty members at Washington College are, they are overburdened by an excessive number of obligations. He said that one reason for this overextension of faculty resources is that student advising weighs heavily upon department chairs at Washington College. He also said that the College has an excessive number of committees which burden the faculty.

Kessinger said that while the current system of student advising shows a commitment to the individual student, it may not be cost effective and needs to be reworked. He also said that the College's admissions program needs to better convey a distinctive institutional image.

Kessinger noted that, in the area of assessment and planning, there was little of the first and one of the second. He said that the College needs more and better planning and stressed the importance of departmental reviews. He also said that the visiting team felt the current holdings of the library are inadequate, and noted that in a conversation with a student the student had said that a professor had told him that "Washington College is the only school of its size with two gyms and half a library." He said the College needs to examine its priorities in this regard.

In the arena of governance, Kessinger said the Board of Visitors and Governors should understand the nature of the College's enterprise. He also said that, while the Board needs to play an even greater role in the finances of the College, it must carefully assess its role at the College and avoid micromanaging other areas of the College. Ω

"Middle," from p. 1

...as the subject of the morale ...f the faculty. He said that ...here was a tradition of ...ension between the faculty attach the pledge "I have abided by the Washington College Honor Code with respect to this assignment. If I have witnessed a violation of the Honor Code, I understand that it is my responsibility to confront the violator" to all credit-bearing work. Additionally, faculty members would be asked to discuss the implementation of the Honor Code at the beginning of each semester in every class.

"Honor," from p. 1

The new Honor System also specifically enumerates academic violations, including plagiarism, revealing details of an exam or quiz or attempting to obtain same, copying the answers of others, using crib sheets and submitting the same work twice for two different instructors without the permission of both instructors.

These provisions are to be enforced by the self-reporting of violators: anyone witnessing such violations is required to ask the violator to self-report their violation within 48 hours: the witness must then report to a faculty or administration member of the Honor Board to make sure the violator has self-reported and, if the witness finds that the violator has not self-reported, he must report the violator. Social violations are to be handled in a similar fashion: any student who steals, vandalizes, violates residence hall policy, violates the alcohol policy or uses illegal narcotics is required to self-report within 48 hours.

Although it seems polished and well-thought out, the new Honor System document is still a work in progress, according to Walton. The section which outlines the proceedings of the Honor Board is currently being examined to make sure that it is legally air tight. In addition, the new policy would have to be ratified by the SGA, the Faculty and possibly the Board of Visitors and Governors before it can come into effect at Washington College. All SGA senators have copies of the draft, and Walton encouraged students interested or concerned about the Honor System draft to read it and see him or their SGA senator if they have any questions or comments.

In other SGA news, the SGA discussed whether or not to vote to ban smoking in William Smith Hall. The debate was sparked by a letter to the President from an asthmatic student who was bothered by second-hand smoke from other students smoking in the hallways of Bill Smith between classes. After a short debate on the relative merits of the issue, SGA President Jamie Baker called for a non-binding vote to gauge the sentiment of the SGA on this issue. The SGA voted overwhelmingly in favor of forbidding smoking in William Smith. The issue was then set aside pending further input on the decision. Earlier this year the SGA voted to ban all smoking in the upper section of the new Student Center. Three years ago the SGA banned all smoking in the Dining Hall. If the SGA does ban smoking in William Smith, the only area on campus where smoking would still be legal other than the dormitories would be multipurpose room of the Student Center, which excludes the television lounge area where smoking is strictly prohibited. (See related article.)

The SGA is also attempting to get used books at the Bookstore. Currently, the Bookstore is unable to stock used books because they are not given enough notice before buying books. The SGA has drafted a proposal for the faculty's consideration on this matter, and is currently awaiting a response. Ω

Sororities Celebrate Zeta Day at WC

Sharla Ponder

On Saturday, March 5 over one hundred women from the Maryland and Virginia area visited Washington College for District III Alpha and Province III Alpha's Zeta Day. Women from Towson State University, Washington College, George Mason University, Salisbury State University, and University of Maryland, as well as several alumnae chapters from all over the area came for the chance to share ideas and experiences at the gathering sponsored by the Chestertown alumnae chapter. Events of the day included items such as a guest speaker, a song contest, a raffle, and the presentation of several honors and awards.

The guest speaker was Louanne Roark, director of the Cosmetic, Toiletry and Fragrance Association. She spoke about a program sponsored by her foundation called Look Good Feel Better, which helps breast cancer patients live normal lives as they continue along the path of recovery and survival. Because Zeta Tau Alpha's national philanthropy is the Susan G. Comen Breast Cancer Foundation, the speech was well received by all in attendance.

The awards program included awards for membership, financial excellence and improvement, pride in ZTA, song contest awards, as well as many more. Gamma Beta (Washington College's chapter) won the song contest after presenting their version of "ZTA's greatest hits of the 70's" which they performed at the Panel Tea during rush. They also won awards for membership excellence and an award for ZTA pride.

The day ended with a ceremony for all those who will be graduating in May. Everyone enjoyed the chance to get to know ZTA's from other schools, sharing ideas and learning about what each chapter is like. Despite the fact that these women only get together formally once a year at Zeta day, the sisterhood that they all share is a common bond that will always keep them together. Ω

Saturday, March 26
Wild Video Dance Party
Featuring
Wild Music Videos
at the Cove
9 p.m. to 1 p.m.
sponsored by the SGA
and the Office of Student Activities and Campus Recreation

NOW OPEN
Terry Rabinowitz, formerly of Krome Vision Care of Kent Plaza is very happy to announce the opening of his own eyeglass dispensary called:
Chestertown Optical Shoppe
GRAND OPENING SPECIAL 10% OFF
Selected Serengetti, Ray Ban & Vaurnet In Stock
Eyeglass Prescriptions Filled
Eyeglass Prescriptions Duplicated
Eyeglasses Repaired
The Latest Styles At Affordable Prices
State Of MD, Blue Cross/Blue Shield & MDIPA Accepted
Conveniently Located At Austin's Carpet Plaza On Rt. 213 North
Phone: 778-9089
Hours: Monday-Friday 9:00am-5:30pm • Sat. 9am-12noon

Maryland Custom Embroidery
Custom Hats
Team Uniforms
Fraternity & Sorority Apparel
Your Goods or Ours
Special Apparel for Special Events!
Maryland Custom Embroidery
204 High St. 778-9786

Park
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
101 N. CROSS ST.
CHESTERTOWN, MARYLAND 21620
778-3181
Shirt Laundry
Carpet Sales

If Smoking is Outlawed, Only Outlaws Will Smoke

Scott Koon

American history is full of outlaws and badmen: the James brothers, Bonnie and Clyde, John Derringer. And when such notables posed for photographs with their guns, they usually had a cigarette hanging out of one corner of their mouths, often at a glaringly jaunty angle. For at least a century, smoking has been part of the glamorous image of the American outlaw.

Yet in today's world of health-conscious hysteria, it is easy to forget that for centuries tobacco was associated not with banditry, but with pride. Yes, pride, for in many ways it was tobacco which made this country great-it certainly enriched many of this nation's founding fathers. When General George Washington gave his now famous fifty guineas to Washington College, how much of that money was derived from tobacco profits? It may very well be that without tobacco there would be no Washington College. And no Chestertown, for that matter. This town was built as a port to serve the Eastern Shore of Maryland, and one of the principal crops of this region at that time was tobacco.

It is incredibly ironic that even here, in a region with long and illustrious roots in the tobacco industry, we are debating whether smoking should be banned in all public areas of the College except one. In an editorial on October 1, 1993 I wrote "Once, people could smoke in the magazine room in Miller Library. No more. Once, we could smoke anywhere in the Lit House. No more. In the Casey Academic Center we have a new building on campus which is entirely smoke free-ashtrays notwithstanding. And when they renovate Bill Smith, they will probably make that a smoker-free zone as well."

Well, I'm sorry I mentioned it. It appears that the SGA cannot wait to outlaw smoking in Bill Smith. On this issue they are, in the words of former Maryland Governor Spiro T. Agnew, nattering nabobs of negativism. It does not matter that smokers have been banned from virtually every area of campus-the SGA wants more restrictions. It seems that smokers are the last minority it is socially acceptable to discriminate against. SGA Vice President Max Walton, a self-avowed militant anti-smoker, says he's perfectly willing to allow us to smoke outside. Damned nice of him.

But how can we be sure that one day the SGA will not ban smoking in the great outdoors? So far, they are batting 1.000 against smokers, and it will not stop. How soon we forget that tobacco is part of our great American heritage, how quick we are to condemn its use! Today we associate tobacco with death, but for so long it meant life for America. The tobacco trade nourished our nation in its infancy, and it is even today helping this grand land reduce its trade deficit. Before the Europeans invaded, tobacco was widely used by American Indians: to smoke tobacco is to pay homage to a great American tradition.

But if the SGA has its way, this campus will become totally smoke free-their record of limiting our freedoms in this regard speaks for itself. The only senator to speak out against this groundswell of groupthink has been Jen Friedman, who spoke out passionately and eloquently against anti-smoker hate mongering. Yet her appeal to reason fell on deaf ears: the SGA will not listen to reason at this point, implacably driven as it is by the overwhelming compulsion to forever punish the smokers of Washington College in the rush to appear decisive and effective the SGA is willing to trample the rights of the smoking minority. What about the right to breathe smoke-free air? No problem-let them go outside.

Now I'm willing to bet that that raised a lot of hackles out there, which is exactly my point: no one wants to be told that they must go outside to live in a puritanical society where people in power are always looking for a way to enforce their values and behaviors on others: there is always someone there who knows what's best for us, and who will do their damnedest to force their will upon us. The atmosphere today on the issue of smoker's right's is clouded by the urge to punish smokers. Even smokers themselves are afraid to stand up for their rights. President Jamie Baker says he thinks the majority of the campus would support the move to ban smoking in Bill Smith. Naturally he'll do the politically popular thing and try to push this through the SGA.

What can we do at this point? The straw vote at the last SGA meeting was nearly unanimously in favor of restricting one right which our country's citizens have had ever since the founding of this great nation: the right to smoke. Fellow smokers, let us not sit idly by as the SGA restricts our rights yet again! This nation was founded on the principles of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness-let us not give up our liberties for the sake of a fad! Our political leaders may not have the spine to speak out against the tyranny of the non-smoking majority, so we must! If you voice an opinion to your SGA senator on only one issue this year, let this be the one. Do not let the SGA sign away forever our right to smoke, and the right of future generations of Washington College students to smoke. Talk to your senator, talk to Jamie Baker, make an appointment to see the President of the College. Do not let them reduce smokers at this College to outlaws hiding behind the shrubbery to catch a few puffs from a cigarette-and hold your heads high with the knowledge that you have done what you can to end this anti-smoking, anti-American campaign. Ω

The Sisters of Alpha Chi Omega are Proud to Announce Their Fourteen Spring 1994 Pledges
Erin Branch
Tiffany Glenn
Stacey Hammond
Lee Ann Lezzer
Amy Lutz
Elizabeth Massing
Laura Meerholz
Katie Pagliughi
Jayme Ricketts
Debbie-Ann Robinson
Alicia Sievert
Becky Stephens
Kiyan Washington
Allison Wentworth
Congratulations to Shelley Brown, the newly elected president of Alpha Chi Omega's Beta Pi Chapter!

Notice Notice Notice

To Students Planning to Attend Summer School

If you are planning to attend summer school at another institution with the expectation that the course(s)/ credit(s) you complete successfully will transfer back to Washington College, you must submit a Summer School Petition prior to the end of the Spring 1994 Semester.

Petition forms are available in the Office of the Registrar

The Drama Department will be conducting Auditions for a Festival of Scenes and One-Acts
April 4 and 6
at 7:00 p.m.

Another Time II
Fine Furniture, Collectibles & Antiques
Donna Dukes (410) 778-6525 1-800-310-6525
819 High St. Ext.
Chestertown,MD
BUY & SELL

Chestertown Natural Foods
"Quality natural foods, products & gifts at reasonable prices"
Hours:
Tuesday Noon-9 p.m.
Wednesday-Friday 10a.m.-9 p.m.
Saturday 9 a.m.-5 p.m.
Off-street parking available
410-778-1677
101 Spring Ave Suite #1 Chestertown

Do You Want VISA & MasterCard Credit Cards?
REGARDLESS OF CREDIT EXPERIENCE
Now you can have two of the most recognized and accepted credit cards in the world...Visa® and MasterCard® credit cards...in your name.* EVEN IF YOU ARE NEW IN CREDIT or HAVE BEEN TURNED DOWN BEFORE!
VISA® and MasterCard® the credit cards you deserve and need for— ID—BOOKS—DEPARTMENT STORES—TUITION—ENTERTAINMENT—EMERGENCY CASH—TICKETS—RESTAURANTS—HOTELS—MOTELS—GAS—CAR RENTALS—REPAIRS—AND TO BUILD YOUR CREDIT RATING!
GUARANTEED! VISA/MASTERCARD Guaranteed issue or money back
No turn downs! No credit checks! No security deposits!
SEND THE COUPON TODAY YOUR CREDIT CARDS ARE WAITING!
EZ-CARD, BOX 16516, ATLANTA, GA 30321
YES! I want VISA®/MASTERCARD® Credit Cards approved immediately. 100% GUARANTEED!
NAME
ADDRESS
CITY STATE ZIP
STUDENT? Yes No SS#
SIGNATURE
NOTE: MasterCard is a registered trademark of MasterCard International Inc. Visa is a registered trademark of VISA USA, Inc. and VISA International
MAIL THIS NO RISK COUPON TODAY

Washington Men's Tennis Beats George Mason, Emory; Takes Furman To Wire

Matt Murray

The nationally ranked Washington College men's tennis team opened its season March 5 with an impressive 6-1 victory over Division I opponent George Mason University.

Behind Robin Sander's 6-1, 6-3 win against G.M.U.'s Kevin Gerard, Division III's eighth ranked Shoremen began the year at 1-0 after their visit to northern Virginia.

"They were a tough team, and going into the match I was a little cautious," head coach Tim Gray said. "But we played well, and it was a good win for us."

Sander, a freshman from Baden-Baden, Germany, began his Washington College career on a high note by easily handling George Mason's top player in Gerard.

In other singles matches, Washington's Damian Polla (Bahia Blanca, Mexico) beat Herman Swart 6-3, 6-2 at number four, Stephan Berger (Rastaat, Germany) topped Kai Engelhardt 6-4, 6-1 at number four, Emilio Degrati (Bahia Blanca, Argentina) handled Dave Stout 6-3, 6-3 in the number five slot, and Max Nilsson (Stockholm, Sweden) beat Jason Schaffer 7-5, 7-5 at number six.

Washington's only loss in a singles match on March 5 happened when George Mason's Parth Sambamurti overcame a strong effort by Ernesto Berson in a three-set 6-4, 1-6, 7-5 match.

In doubles action, Sander and Nilsson defeated Gerard and Swart 8-5, and Berger and Bogado took care of Stout and Engelhardt 8-4. However, Beran and Polla fell to G.M.U.'s Floeck and Sambamurti by an 8-6 score.

In winning five of the six singles matches, Washington took a 6-1 lead. In doubles, since Washington won two of the three matches, it earned a doubles point and made the final score 6-1.

The George Mason match was just the beginning of a rigorous schedule for the Shoremen.

"We're in all competitive programs," Gray said of Indiana State, U.N.C.-Greensboro, Furman, Northern Illinois, and Clemson. "They're all going to be equal or better than George Mason."

Gray who feared his team could be 1-5 by last Tuesday after playing such tough competition, pointed to Monday as the most difficult match. The Tigers are a Division I top 20 team and are 10-1 before Spring Break after victories over Michigan State, Rice, and Texas A & M.

However, going into the week, Gray believed the key match would be on Tuesday when Washington faced Emory University—the seventh ranked team in Division III.

Gray apparently had nothing to worry about, as the Shoremen performed well over the course of the week--so well that three of the Division I opponents originally scheduled did not want to play the Shoremen. Washington came the closest of any victory to beating Furman, as the Shoremen nearly pulled off an upset but fell 6-3.

In the Furman match, Sander continued to win as he rebounded from a 6-4 first set loss to win 4-6, 6-0, 6-0, and Miro Beran was victorious by a 6-3, 6-2 score. Washington also swept the three doubles matches, but still fell short by one.

Washington's near miss against Furman illustrates how strong this year's squad may be. Furman had just come off a close 4-3 loss to North Carolina at Chapel Hill--the fourth ranked team in Division I. In staying close with a strong Division I team, Washington justified its top four Division III ranking.

Over the week, Washington also defeated Furman and Clemson's second teams—both strong showings against deep programs.

Against Furman's second six, Polla, Beran, Carlos Nuno (Mexico City, Mexico), and Michael Kember (Auckland, New Zealand) all recorded singles victories. Washington also took two of the three doubles matches.

Against Clemson's second six, Washington swept the doubles, and Polla, Bogado, and Nuno won on the way to a 4-3 victory.

Washington highlighted the week with a win over Emory on Tuesday.

The Shoremen hammered Division III's seventh ranked Emory on the way to a 9-0 rout. Sander, Polla, Nilsson, Beran, Berger and Kember all recorded singles victories.

Once again, Washington showed its strength in doubles by winning all three doubles matches.

"We've been playing some good doubles," Gray said. "We've been using some different formations, and the guys are really responding to it."

As the season progresses, Gray believes Washington will clearly be recognized as the top team in the Centennial Conference.

"This is one of the best recruiting classes that this program has ever seen here," said Gray of a program which was narrowly edged out of going to the NCAA tournament last year.

On a team which also features sophomore Andrew Moffat of Johannesburg, South Africa and freshman Andrew King of Aiken, South Carolina, this year's Shoremen definitely has an international flavor with nine of the ten players hailing from outside of the United States.

However, no matter what country they call home, Gray feels the Shoremen could be turning heads all over the United States this spring.

"I think our potential is unlimited this year," said Gray of his 5-1 squad. "It's just a matter of staying healthy and staying focused."

The Shoremen will travel to Muhlenberg tomorrow for a 2:00 match and visit Penn State on Sunday.

Softball Looks Forward To Promising 1994 Season

Cole's Second Year Is Off To A Strong Start At 3-1 Behind Hakanson, Rathel, Chin, Eakin, Zemanski

Matt Murray

The Washington College softball team finished last season with a 3-14 mark in head coach Lanee Cole's first season. With the addition of 10 new players, including eight freshmen, the Shorewomen hope to improve their record in 1994.

"We're a much stronger team all around," second-year head coach Lanee Cole said. "Defensively, we have more depth, we've got more team speed, and we're definitely have more depth offensively.

"I'm confident we're going to build and be better than last year."

The Shorewomen are bolstered by the return of letter-winners Denise Hakanson (Gloucester, NJ), Tara Rathel (Sharpstown, Md.), Michelle Chin (Glen Burnie, Md.), Kelly Eakin (Aberdeen, Md.), and Nicole Zemanski(Glenelg, Md.).

Hakanson, a First Team All-MAC Southwest selection and Second Team All-Middle Atlantic Region selection as a freshman, batted .500 in 1993 with 19 hits in 38 at-bats, including six doubles and three triples.

The sophomore co-captain also stole seven bases in eight attempts and made only one error in left field.

Rathel, a junior, returns for her second year for Washington. Last season, she hit .333 with a .448 on-base percentage and nine stolen bases.

A shortstop last season, Rathel will see playing time at both shortstop and third base in 1994.

Chin batted .317 last year with a .555 on-base percentage. The graduate of Archbishop Spalding High School played center field for the Shoremen last season.

Eakin played third base last year and batted .242 with four doubles. The sophomore will be expected to carry the pitching staff this year in her first season on the mound.

Zemanski played catcher and outfield for Cole last season, and the sophomore co-captain's role should be similar this year.

Cole is also encouraged by the newcomers to the team, particularly freshmen Amy Povloski (Linthicum, Md.), Cherie Gallini (Piscataway, NJ), and Melissa Kordula (Baltimore, Md.)

Povloski, a first baseman, will also see time on the mound. Gallini, a three-time All-State selection in New Jersey at Rutgers Prep, will play shortstop, pitcher and catcher. Kordula is an infielder and aggressive hitter out of Baltimore Lutheran.

If there's one concern for the young team, it is pitching. The Shorewomen will sorely miss Diana Holton. Last year, Holton provided senior leadership, while also carrying the burden of the pitching staff.

Holton pitched in 13 games last year, completing 10. Out of 101 innings over the course of the season, Holton pitched 75.3. While her 3-10 record and 6.60 ERA are not attractive, the amount of innings she pitched is quite notable.

However, Cole is still excited about the team's prospects this year, especially after the Shorewomen started their season on a positive note. Washington now stands at 3-1 after a double header split with SUNY-Old Westbury and a double header sweep of Wesley College. Washington defeated Wesley on Tuesday 10-4 and 18-1.

"They're young and enthusiastic and they're ready to get playing," she said. "It's going to take a little time for the team to grow into a competitive team, but I'm very optimistic. I think we're capable of beating anybody."

Filling out the Shorewomen roster are: Leanne Cole (freshman; Andover, NJ), Kouri Coleman (sophomore; Rock Hall, Md.), Danica Heath (freshman; Baltimore, Md.), Iris Lewis (freshman; Bel Air, Md.), Sabrina Luginbuhl (junior; Dover Plains, NY), Laura Meerholz (freshman; Bel Air, Md.), and Alicia Washburn (freshman; Worton, Md.).

Cole's squad will travel to Gettysburg tomorrow for a 1:00 p.m. double header.

photo by Sarah Fogelsanger

Tara Rathel, of Sharpstown, Maryland, returns for her second year on the Washington softball team. Last season, Rathel batted .333 with nine stolen bases.

Baseball Team Looks Strong In '94; Sho'men Start Off Swinging In Florida

Erika K. Ford

With a new season up at bat, Washington College returns 12 veterans to this spring's varsity baseball squad. This will give Coach Ed Athey and his assistants Al Streeiman, Steve Sandeski, and Jonn Scott a sound nucleus on which to build a competitive team as they start their first season in the newly organized Centennial Conference. There are several newcomers that figure prominently in the plans for spring.

Coach Athey said, "We will field a strong defensive unit, but question marks cover the pitching and hitting—this is something that remains to be seen."

The Shoremen compiled a record of 11-15 last year.

Three veteran pitchers return for this year's competition. Senior Keith Whiteford (one of the three captains) has been the mainstay of the staff throughout his three years on campus. During his first two years he was chosen for the All-Middle Atlantic Conference All-League Team. Last year however, Whiteford had an unexpected 2-6 pitching record.

Sophomores Kevin Roland and Doug Blair are also returning pitchers for Washington. Roland had one win in five starts, while Blair was 2-0 with an ERA of 3.815. Blair was used mainly in relief last year, but figures to be a starter in this new season.

Upon considering the baseball team, Blair said, "Our defense has always been good and strong. We have a fast outfield. And all of the freshmen are talented—they should fill the spots from last year's seniors pretty well."

Andy Moore, a transfer from Chesapeake Community College, will help considerably on the pitcher's mound. Other pitchers that are all-position players will fill in when needed. They include upperclassmen Rory Conway, Dan Coker, Chad Campbell and Brian Rush, as well as freshman Jarrett Pasko.

"Competition for positions in both the infield and outfield is the area strong," Coach Athey said.

Brian Rush will start as the first line catcher, possessing a strong arm to handle pitches well.

Captain Andy Parks will start at first base, with substitutions by Max Walton and Kyle Bowers. Second will be manned by sophomore Jan McVeigh or freshmen Pasko and Chris Costello. Pasko can also be used at shortstop behind veteran Dan Coker.

Two newcomers are vying for the third base spot—Tim Pilarski and Andy Moore, who have been performing well in the preseason.

Coach Athey has five veterans to use in the outfield positions. Senior captain Rory Conway leads the flychasers are will play in center field. When he is not pitching, Whiteford will start in left. Sophomore Gary Yovanovich finished up the 1993 season in right, and will likely start there again.

Chad Campbell and Jason Kraus will also play outfield if Whiteford or Conway pitch.

"Hitting, especially with men on base, was a glaring deficiency of the 1993 team," Coach Athey said. "If this is improved and Whiteford returns to his winning ways, this year's team could be a real surprise in the Conference."

"Conway and Whiteford are the leading hitters on the squad. Parks finished up with a respectable average, but should hit for more power this year."

The Sho'men opened their season in Lincoln on Sunday, March 13th against Husson College and played four other teams during the week of Spring Break.

The baseball team's regular season begins tomorrow with a double-header against Muhlenberg at 1 p.m.

Washington Crews Take In Warm Florida Sun At Metro

Y. Jeffrey Lee
Steve Kim

With the spring season under way, the Washington College Crew, under the guidance of head coach Mike Davenport hopes to continue its success in going the distance towards their final stretch at Dad Vail and Champion Intercollegiate regatta this season.

Having gone under one of the years' worst weather conditions, the Washington crews had a chance to perform during the spring break under the warm sunny skies of Florida.

As a crew team in the Metro Cup Regatta at Rollins College, the team showed an immense determination to put away the opposing team for good.

The Men's lightweight varsity four and the Women's lightweight varsity four took the first place in front of Rollins College and University of Central Florida. The Men's four included Ray Herndon, Mike Beardsly, Leroy Gatell, and Brendon Norris. The Women's four included Mellen Olson, Laura Green, Taber Overall and Kathy Mullin.

The heavyweight varsity four and varsity eight for both men and women came in second place with both Men's and Women's crew eight coming in third place.

"The light-weight four has a lot of good hopes for the future," Laura Green said. "They are showing a lot of promise and they are looking very competitive."

With the addition of more than twenty freshmen, this year's top contenders include Seniors Ray Herndon, Eric Jewett, Laura Green and Mary Bird.

"We are coming off our best years," assistant coach Matt Conty said. "We have a bright future in terms of numbers and a great potential to peak at the Dad Vail."

With a total of eight races left in the season, Washington is looking for the best finish ever. With tough races ahead, this season should prove challenging to the Shorewomen and men.

"I feel that we have achieved alot," captain Mary Bird said. "I am excited about my final season here and coming off our successful trip, I feel good about what we have accomplished thus far."

For Washington, there will be two varsity eights for both men and women, two light-weight fours, two heavy-weight fours, a pair and a single. This will be followed by three novice eights and two novice fours.

Washington will be competing this weekend against Elmira College at home and also in the Casperson Cup in Baltimore in the following weekend.

The season's schedule is as follows:

Saturday, March 26, Union College-Home
Saturday, April 2, Casperson Cup-Baltimore, MD
Saturday, April 9, Lasalle invitational-Cherry Hill, NJ
Saturday, April 16, Murphy cup, Philadelphia, PA
Saturday, April 30, Washington College invitational-Home
Sunday, May 8, Mid-Atlantic Championship-Occoquan, VA
Saturday, May 14, Dad Vail Regatta-Philadelphia, PA
Sunday, May 15, Championship Intercollegiate Regatta, VA

Erika K. Ford

The Washington College baseball team returned from its recent Spring Break trip to Florida encouraged by the results of a 3 win, 4 loss record.

"With more effective pitching, the results would have been a 5-2 record," Coach Ed Athey said.

Pitcher Keith Whiteford delivered a 4-3 win over Husson College (Maine) with sophomore Doug Blair relieving him. A double-header victory over Western New England College (Massachusetts) accounted for the other two victories.

Whiteford went the distance against Western New England for his second win and he relieved Blair in the second game, with Blair getting the victory.

"Overall, I think we did very well down in Florida," senior tri-captain Whiteford said. "We're a pretty determined team, and we're scrappy—we want to win."

Westfield State College (Massachusetts) defeated the Sho'men 14-11 Going into the tenth inning they were tied 9-9 with Washington but poor fielding allowed Westfield five runs in the top of the ninth, and ultimately the win at 14-11.

Wooster College, past champions of the Ohio Conference, dealt Washington a double defeat, 11-4 and 11-10. The Sho'men had a chance to tie in the second game, but a diving catch of Max Walton's line drive in left center snuffed Washington's rally.

The University of New Haven (Connecticut), an NCAA Division II school ranked 16th in their division, gave Washington their fourth loss. After the Sho'men scored eight runs in the first two innings, New Haven regrouped to score 21 runs during the game to win 21-8.

"The coaching staff saw very encouraging signs in both hitting and defense," Coach Athey said. "Our pitching must improve considerably in order to have a good chance of competing in the Centennial Conference."

Keith Whiteford's outstanding show in Florida, proves he is necessary for the team's future successes. He will be used just twice a week during the season, so pitchers Doug Blair, Andy Moore, Jarrett Pasko, Kevin Roland, and Brian Rush are crucial elements of a winning coalition.

Sophomore Chad Campbell is also showing progress after converting from outfielder to pitcher, and he will see relief spots for the Sho'men last week.

Whiteford, freshman Tim Pilarski, and captain Dan Coker all batted over .400 in Florida. Whiteford hit two home runs and Pilarski hit three.

"I think the team is deep and really rich in talent," captain-tight-corner said. "We're a good hitting team and the whole line-up is strong; like champs so far this season.

"We played some really good clubs in Florida, but we had deep hitting against them though. I think we're going to go very far this season and win the whole thing."

Washington will come out swinging against Muhlenberg tomorrow at home at 1 p.m. in a double-header. It will be the first conference game for both teams.

Washington Sports Legend Dies At Age 86

Crisfield Native Passed Away February 28

Washington College lost a legendary figure on February 28 when G.F. "Gimp" Carrington passed away at the age of 86 in Crisfield, Maryland.

Carrington was a member of the Washington College Sports Hall of Fame, came to Chestertown in 1925 where he excelled in basketball and football.

The history major went on to graduate magna cum laude and become a teacher and coach in Crisfield High School.

After a nine-year stint at Crisfield, Carrington left to coach soccer, basketball and baseball at Frostburg College. He also has a place in the Frostburg Hall of Fame for his success there.

Also a World War II veteran, Carrington went back to Crisfield High School in 1945 as its principal. He is credited for setting the stage for the building of a new high school in 1954, and he continued to coach athletic teams during his 14-year stay as principal.

In addition to his honors at Washington and Frostburg, Carrington was elected to the Eastern Shore Baseball Hall of Fame, he was President of the Maryland State Athletic Association, and he was active in promoting and organizing high school basketball tournaments.

Carrington was born on August 5, 1907 in Waterbury, Connecticut.

The Crisfield Times contributed to this story.

Men's Lax Sticks It To Division III Opponents

Matt Murray

After two Division I losses to open the season, the Washington men's lacrosse team has won three consecutive games to earn a 3-2 record with a Division III clash looming tomorrow against Cortland State.

Over Spring Break, Washington defeated St. Mary's (23-12), Greensboro (13-9), and Colby (16-6). Junior Paige scored nine goals in the St. Mary's victory—only one short of a school record for a single game.

However, the month of March wasn't so kind to the Shoremen in the early going. After a loss to Navy on March 2, Johns Hopkins visited Kibler Field for a showdown on March 9.

The Bluejays ran all over the Shoremen in the first half, taking a 12-3 halftime lead. However, in the second half, Washington played an even game with its Division I rival, with each team scoring nine goals apiece.

"I was really disappointed in the first half," head coach Terry Corcoran said. "We were doing the same things wrong as we did in the Navy game, and mainly, we weren't clearing the ball out of our end. It was nice to see in the second half that we started clearing the ball."

However, Corcoran had a few accolades for his team which proved to be true in the next three games.

"I think we're playing good defense, and I think we have a good offensive group," said Corcoran after the Hopkins game.

The second half effort of the Hopkins game carried over into Saturday's victory over St. Mary's. Washington took a 16-10 lead over the Seahawks after three quarters and pulled away in the fourth stanza.

Paige's nine goals were supplemented by Chris Sanchez's six goals and two assists, Bart Jaeger's four tallies and two assists, and Chris Cote's three goals and an assist. Blair Muneses also contributed a goal and an assist while Christian Boone had an assist.

Washington continued its hot streak by outlasting a tough Greensboro team 13-9 on March 16. The successful run carried over into the weekend when Washington dominated Colby 16-8.

The Shoremen will host Cortland State tomorrow for a 1:30 p.m. game. One of the top programs in Division III, Cortland features a quick attack. Washington defeated the Red Dragons last season 18-9 in sloppy conditions, as Paige had five goals. At the time, Cortland was ranked 10th in Division III.

With an impressive win over Cortland tomorrow, Washington could attract attention in the national polls as well as prepare itself for upcoming games against Dickinson, Swarthmore, and Franklin & Marshall. While neither team is a particularly strong squad, Franklin & Marshall could be a tough game, and a showdown with Gettysburg is waiting on April 16.

Young Women's Tennis Team Goes 0-For-Carolina For Week

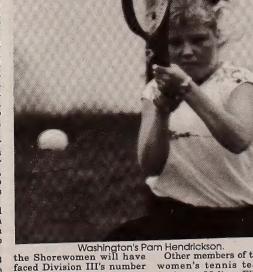
However, Gray Encouraged By Play Against Talented Teams

Matt Murray

The Washington College women's tennis team will opened its season last Saturday against Division II's University of South Carolina at Spartanburg.

The Shorewomen also played Wofford, Trinity, and Emory while traveling over Spring Break.

Against the talented competition, Washington could not win a match, and the team returned home with an 0-4 record. However, against Division III's ninth ranked Emory University, the Shorewomen refused to go down without a fight, losing by a 7-2 score.



Led this season by senior Pam Hendrickson (Kutztown, Pa.) and junior Diana Clausen (Freedom, N.H.), Washington hopes to improve over last year's record.

"We're real young," head coach Tim Gray said. "Pam Hendrickson and Diana Clausen are going to have to provide some leadership."

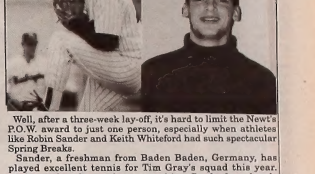
Hendrickson was the 1993 Middle Atlantic Conference champion, and she has made three consecutive appearances in the NCAA tournament. She is the only senior on the team, and Clausen is the only junior on the young seven-woman squad.

Gray believes it will be a rebuilding year for his team, which faces an extremely tough schedule.

Before the season is over,

Washington's Pam Hendrickson.

the Shorewomen will have faced Division III's number one ranked Trinity University, third ranked Washington & Lee, seventh ranked Mary Washington, ninth ranked Emory University, 10th ranked Trenton State, and 17th ranked Franklin & Marshall.



The Centennial Conference will also be difficult for the young team as F & M, Haverford, and Swarthmore all have strong programs.

Other members of the 1994 women's tennis team are freshman Melissa Ellwanger (Queenstown, Md.), sophomore Anne-Marie Maiena (Hyde Park, N.Y.), sophomore Kim Prettyman (Laurel, Delaware), freshman Amy Rizzetello (St. Michael's, Md.), and sophomore Victoria Roth (Berlin, Md.).

The Shorewomen will visit Muhlenberg tomorrow for an 11:00 match.

NEWT'S
Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

Well, after a three-week lay-off, it's hard to limit the Newt's P.O.W. award to just one person, especially when athletes like Robin Sander and Keith Whiteford had such spectacular Spring Breaks.

Sander, a freshman from Baden Baden, Germany, has played excellent tennis for Tim Gray. Undefeated at the number one position, Sander has already beaten two Division I opponents this year. Against George Mason's number one, Sander played mercilessly, and Furman's number one player suffered the same fate in a 4-6, 6-0, 6-0 match. I guess Robin just teased him in the first set and then crushed his confidence like a grape.

Whiteford, who calls Baltimore, Maryland home, has been equally as impressive for the baseball team. The Calvert Hall alumn hit over .400 with 2 homeruns in Florida while also carrying the pitching staff. He gets the nod this week after a strong recommendation from "the old bomber"--A.P. himself.

So there you have it, a German who can't lose at tennis and a Baltimorean who only hits homers get the old Newt's nod this week. Other people deserving recognition are Damian Polla (men's tennis), the softball team for starting 3-1, the Crew teams for their performances in Florida, and a big good luck goes out to Sarah Feyerherm, as she'll make her Washington debut as lacrosse coach tomorrow.

(And Blair, you don't stand a chance to get in this column all year, no matter how badly you want it--just kidding Billy).

And by the way for anyone who missed it, yours truly shocked the sports world when I gave Adam Foe a scare he'll never forget on the one-and-one court. Dropping three-point bomb after three-point bomb ("you can't stop me, you can't even hope to contain me"), I took a 6-4 lead on the varsity player before he took my jeans-and-loafers-wearing self to the hole one too many times in an 11-7 loss. However, I definitely redeemed myself after losing 10-0 to the New Jersey native last year. Just wait til next year Adam...

Newt's

Others may try to imitate us, but they can never duplicate us

Extended Hours for Midnight Madness

15¢ Drafts: 11 p.m. - 1 a.m. Every Thursday Night

WASHINGTON COLLEGE
SPORTS
THE ELM

SCORES

Men's Lacrosse

Washington	16
Colby	6
Washington	13
Greensboro	9

Softball

Washington	10 18
Wesley College	4 16

Baseball

Washington	3-4
Spring Break	Record

Men's Tennis

Washington	4-1
Spring Break	Record

Women's Tennis

Washington	0-4
Spring Break	Record

photo by John Forbs

Michelle Chin, a sophomore from Glen Burnie, Maryland, is one of five returning letter-winners on the Washington softball team. Chin hit well over .300 for the Sharewomen last year and played a near flawless centerfield. Along with Denise Hakanson, Nicole Zemanski, Kelly Eakin, and Tara Rathel, she is part of the backbone for this years 3-1 squad.

Newt's Players of the Week:Keith Whiteford & Robin Sander

Upcoming Games

MEN'S LACROSSE
Washington vs.
Cortland State
March 26 1:30

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
Washington vs.
Swarthmore
March 26 1:00

Washington vs.
Franklin & Marshall
March 29 4:00

BASEBALL
Washington vs.
Muhlenberg
March 26 1:00

SOFTBALL
Washington at Gettysburg
March 26 1:00

TENNIS
Washington at
Muhlenberg
March 26 11 & 2

CREW
Washington vs.
Union College
March 26 7:30 a.m.

INSIDE

•W.C. Teams Return From Spring Break

•Men's Lax On A Roll

•Men's Tennis Beats Emory

•Softball Starts Year At 3-1 Record

•Carrington Obituary

The Washington College

ELM

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Volume 63, Number Twenty-two • April 1, 1994

Washington College • Chestertown, Maryland

Wubbels Wobbles Trout Flounders

Scott Koon

The administration is currently reeling from serious charges leveled against it in a document recently leaked to the Elm. The document is written in the form of a resolution, and it appears to be intended for introduction at this Monday's upcoming faculty meeting.

The resolution singles out the President and the Dean of the College for particular abuse. It charges that "the President is a Scorpio, and therefore unfit for a position of such authority. Additionally, he smiles too much, and this makes us really nervous. Plus, he drinks nearly as much as the editor of the Elm."

The document says of the dean that "he lacks a sense of humor. The man is as stiff as a post, and really needs to lighten up. And while we recognize the need to conserve energy, the College does not need a dean who rides around town on a late 1960s model Schwinn. It's positively undignified."

The resolution does not call for any action other than demanding that "the president and the dean should both shell out some serious bucks for a hipper wardrobe."

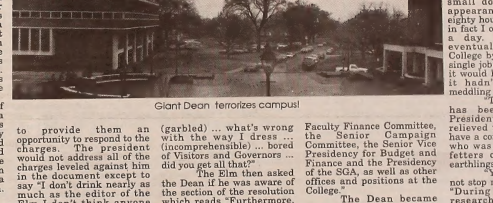
Yesterday the Elm went to the Dean's office to conduct an interview with the President and the Dean to provide them an opportunity to respond to the charges. The president would not address all of the charges leveled against him in the document except to say "I don't drink nearly as much as the editor of the Elm-I don't think anyone does." President Trout added "That boy needs to check himself into detox, the sooner the better."

Dean Wubbels said of the charges "Um, I really think the faculty could ... (unintelligible) ... in a much more ..."(mumble mumble) ... it's not a Schwinn ... (garbled) ... what's wrong with the way I dress ... (incomprehensible) ... bored of Visitors and Governors ... did you get all that?"

The Elm then asked the Dean if he was aware of the section of the resolution which reads "Furthermore, the Dean is evidently on a personal power trip. Every time a new committee is formed, he makes himself the chair, and we have recently learned that he has been working behind the scenes to procure for himself the chair of the Board Finance Committee, the Faculty Finance Committee, the Senior Campaign Committee, the Senior Vice Presidency for Budget and Finance and the Presidency of the SGA, as well as other offices and positions at the College."

The Dean became noticeably disturbed at this point, and suddenly broke out in a meglomaniacal cackle of the kind rarely heard outside of Saturday morning cartoons. "So, the faculty has caught on to my little plan," Wubbels said. "Hah! It matters little now. I was working on a new chemical-a form of methyoxyproplamine so powerful that it would allow me to completely abrogate the rules of physics as you earthlings understand them!"

"You mean?" said the President.



"Yes," said the Dean, "a chemical which will allow me to actually be in two or more places at the same time. So far I've only taken small doses, to give the appearance of working an eighty hour work week when in fact I only work six hours a day. I planned to eventually take over the College by performing every single job at the College-and it would have worked too, if it hadn't been for that meddling professoriate!"

Then your scheme has been foiled!" said President Trout, obviously relieved that he would not have a competitor for his job who was not bound by the fetters of physics as we earthlings understand them.

"Yes, but that will not stop me!" said the Dean. "During the course of my research on methyoxyproplamine I made an even more earth-shattering discovery. Nothing can stop me now!" The Dean then made a mad dash for his coffee cup and drained it's contents as the President called Security.

"You fool!" said

See "Dean," on p. 3

Giant Dean terrorizes campus!

SGA Mandates Smoking in Student Center

Kate Meagher

Students of WC will be glad to know that the SGA is considering legislation requiring everyone who enters the student center to be carrying at least one lit cigarette. The policy is "the more, the better." It seems that the Cove has received complaints from a number of students concerning a serious problem that affects all members of the Washington College community. Several students have determined that they have not received the full benefits of the student center. One student, who wishes to remain anonymous because of the sensitivity of this issue, related his own touching story.

"The whole thing started last week," the student said. "I had gone into the cove for a grilled cheese, tomato, and turkey sandwich. I went into the student center to eat, and there were a few people playing pool. It was all nice and respectable, until I noticed that not one of them was smoking. Not one. Now I ask you, what is the fun in that?"

In order to rectify the situation, the student pulled out his Camels and offered to donate them to the pool players.

"I wanted to do what I could to help," he said, choking back the tears. "But for some ungodly reason, they refused. It really hurt me. When I went back to my room to wallow in my futility, none of my clothes had the slightest odor of good clean smoke. That's really the shame of it all." And this is only one account of one experience of one student. Who knows how many others may be out there who have experienced the same thing and haven't come out with their stories? There could be dozens, maybe more.

Some have been bold enough to come forward in defense of those who rejected the offer of assistance from the student.

See "Smoke" on 6

Inside

My Mother the Car 3

Help-the Elm needs a new Photo 3

5

SGA Orgy 7

My life as a sex slave to alien amazons from the planet Dorglefloop 8

Normally I like to reserve this space for something important which I feel the College community should know about. This week is no exception, except that there isn't really anything important I feel the College community should know about.

But what about Dr. Beverly Wolff accepting the position of Associate Dean? Well, okay, I guess that's kinda important. But, hey, we'll cover it next week, I promise. What about the SGA voting to secure and retain for itself the right to make smoking policy for the Student Center and the dorms? Yeah, that's important too, but again, we'll cover it next week.

For those of you who have not noticed-April Fools! Yes, once every seven years or so the Elm actually comes out on April Fool Day, so this is sort of a special issue. Just to clarify things I'd like to say that almost all of what you will read in this week's issue is not true-practically all of this week's paper is a gag.

There are exceptions, however. Joy Yarusi's Open Forum on hate crimes is not a joke. In a way, it's a real shame that we had to run it this week, because it's a topic which shouldn't be confused with all the other gag stuff in the paper. The Letters to the Editor section contains no gag material either. And the Sports section is all real, too. Congratulations to the lacrosse, crew and baseball teams for their victories.

Having said that, I'm sure we'll catch some flak for this issue anyway. So be it. I hope the rest of you find it amusing.

And speaking of flak, I caught a lot of it for my pro-smoking polemic on page eight of last week's issue. Evidently, a lot of people thought it looked too much like a news article. Here is a few ways you can tell a news article from a feature:

Read the section heading at the top of the page. If it says "features," then what is found on that page is most likely not news, but features. Usually.

Read the headline. If it says something like "If Smoking is Outlawed, Only Outlaws Will Smoke," beware! What you are about to read will probably subjective: even its headline contains a value judgment.

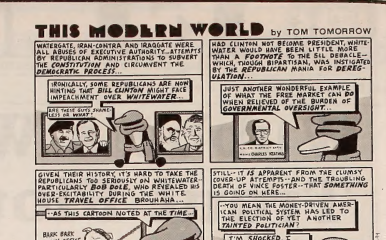
Look for words like "I" or "we." If the author ever writes in the first person, you can be damn sure it's not a news article you're reading.

Look for hyperbole. If the author uses it, then it is unlikely it is a news story you are reading.

Many features we run are opinion/commentary pieces about campus life. I've often considered running the words "opinion" or "commentary" next to such articles. Many newspapers do this, but I think it's kinda silly on a twelve page paper. It's insulting to one's intelligence, or at least I think so. I like to think that people are pretty good at being able to tell what is opinion and what is not. Perhaps next year's Editor will learn from my mistakes.

And then there is the question of why I ran that piece last week in the Features section rather than on the Editorial page. The reason I did so was that I try to make sure that the pieces which appear here are ones which don't offend the entire College community. Since I was certain that this particular article would tick off a good many people, I ran it on page eight.

Does any of this sound rather arbitrary to you? You betcha. There's a good deal of work that goes into this paper, decisions have to be made, and someone's got to make them. The buck stops here. The time is drawing near for me to pass the torch on to someone else so they can make arbitrary decisions and catch hell for them. We have received only one application for the position of Editor in Chief of the Elm so far. We need more. Applicants must be unafraid of getting the worst grades of their college career. Applicants must be extremely hard-working, putting the paper before everything else. Applicants must be willing to accept the vilification along with the praise, and not let either affect your self image. I would also hope that whoever comes after me will build on what this year's staff has accomplished and make next year's paper better than this one. If you can handle it, send an application explaining your qualifications and why you want the job to Dr. Striner ASAP. Spelling, grammar and punctuation count.



The Washington College ELM
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Scott Ross Soon
News Editor
Racael Fink
Feature Editor
George Jamison
Advertising Manager
George Jamison

Layout Editor
Abby R. Moss
Sports Co-Editors
Matt Murray & Y. Jeffrey lee
Photography Editor
Katrina Dudkewski
Circulation Manager
Rae Brown

The Washington College ELM is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in them or in his Editor, Open Forum, and Campus Voices is not necessarily reflect the opinions of the ELM staff.
The ELM welcomes letters to the editor. Letters to the editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Wednesday night at 9 p.m. for that week's paper.
Letters to the editor may be left in the ELM office in the basement of Hodi Hall, sent through campus mail, mailed into Queenstown or placed in drawer in the ELM fax machine. All letters must be received by midnight in the interests of the deadline mail.
The ELM does not discriminate of any basis.

THIS MODERN WORLD by TOM TOMORROW

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

I believe that you and your staff merit congratulations on your editorial dated February 25, 1994. The editorial was, to say the least, a timely one. More than that, I applaud your choice of options — candor seldom goes wrong, particularly when it emanates from a newspaper.

As a matter of introduction, I graduated from Washington College in 1940, and my brother in 1942. My father, Benjamin Johnson, graduated in 1911. My family and I have 'seen it all' simply because of the span of our experience at this institution.

I am writing to you now — not because I have anything to contribute with respect to the 1782 Society gala — but to congratulate your perception and judgment with respect to the durability of this institution. As you say, there is no genuine cause for alarm. After 211 years, you can be sure that the College will survive. On the other hand, austerity is only prudent, and in my opinion, the Board of Visitors and Governors, as well as the Committee Chairman, are entitled to praise along with you and your staff.

As you say, hard times do mean an opportunity to build a better place and assure its permanence. Conversely, the progress in the last 20 years is worthy of commendation and I have great confidence myself that it will continue. In the words of Dr. Tom Kessinger, the president of Haverford College, "We are entitled to say that our favorite college is indeed a wonderful place."

So thanks to the Elm for recognizing and playing out a course of thinking which will serve us all well.

See " Letters," p. 6

Week at a Glance

April 1-7

Film Series: The Oak
Norman James Theatre, 7:30 p.m. Friday, Sunday, Monday

1 Friday
Art Exhibit:CAC Gallery through April 28
Concert for Good Friday Emmanuel Episcopal Church, 8:00 p.m.

2 Saturday

3 Sunday

4 Monday

5 Tuesday
A Talk by Patricia Horne, Dept. of Sociology
I-House Lounge, 7:00 p.m.

6 Wednesday
Advising Day No Classes

7 Thursday
Dr. Faustus A play by Christopher Marlowe Tawes Theatre, 8:00 p.m.

Open Forum

What comes to mind when I say the words "Hate Crimes"? Did you know that this campus has no policy regarding this issue? Should it? I mention this only to raise consciousness, not to drag anyone down with yet another movement about being politically correct. So many issues concern me lately, but I think that this is the most difficult to take a stand on. We live in a country where, thank GOd, we have freedom of spech, and we don't burn books, and yet at the same time we allow such groups as the KKK and Aryan youth to print and handout fliers publicizing their convictions. So how should we apply the term here at Washington College within the Student Conduct Code?

Joy Yarusi

Recently this issue was brought to my attention at an SCC meeting where I was blown away by discovering that students here could commit such hateful crimes. I am revealing nothing scandalous, this was discussed and printed in the SGA minutes for all to see last week. What I found was I got me to thinking about how far can we go in applying a law to penalize one who commits a hate crime, and how do we define it? I will admit, I'd be the first to want to knock someone out who verbally or physically attacked me or someone close to me, but at the same time think I would have to laugh at the ignorance of such a hateful individual,(perhaps beause I am too small to get into a brawl).

My argument is, can we really teach someone a new way to think and can we punish them for something out of their control? That is, in a country where Howard Stern is King of morning radio, and skinheads wearing whiter shoelaces(meaning white supremacy) are as common as liquor stores in New York City and other cities? Here is something to contemplate. The other evening I got a fortune cookie from a Chinese restuarant and it read "count to ten before speaking". Now I don't want to go into another lengthy dissertation about whether it is good or bad to speak out your opinions whenever you fel the urge. And yes, I know that this family has the greatness of poetic license and spontaneity, but it does make you think. How many personal feelings could be spared the hurt? How many SCC trials avoided? I know that it would save me from one of my level cycles at big family parties that jokes about individuals of Jewish and Polish descent.

One of my professors asked of the class whether the human capacity to hate was greater than it's capacity to love, and I am not so sure. However, I do believe the world would be a better place in general if we all thought a bit harder and longer about what we felt before it was announced to someone who may take offense. Ten seconds is just a starting point. Ω

"Dean," from p. 1

Wubbels to Trout, "You can do nothing to stop me now little man, nothing! I needed you once, but no more! My God, how it has pained me to put up with you and your blathering inanities! I sat by for so long doing all the work, and yet you got to go to all the interesting intercollegiate functions, you get to give all the speeches, you get to schmooze it up with all the big donors at the muckety-mucks, you get all the hot babes, you get the money, all the credit, all the perquisites and all the glory. and I'm sick and tired of being cooped up in my office!"

"Well, gee Gene, I'm sorry you feel that way," Trout said. "Why don't we discuss this? By the way, I don't know what you meant by that 'hot babes' crack, but-

"Don't you dare patronize me, Trout, you're nothing but a mere flea on a small gnnd!" Wubbels said. "Well, two can play at that game! I am a big fish too! Mwooh-hah-hah-hah-hah-

Hah!!! A VERY big fish... any second now..."

At that moment, the Dean began an incredible spurt of growth, bursting first out of his clothes, then out of his office, and then out of the Buntagon itself. Wubbel's weight eventually caused his feet to crash through the floor and come to rest in the basement of Bunting. The collapse occurred directly above the office of Michele Messick, who was out to lunch at the time.

Wubbels' height stabilized at about seventy-five feet. At that point, Wubbels began fishing around for Trout, who was floundering about in the corner, paralyzed with fear. Unfortunately for the Dean, he had forgotten one thing: which is that legs designed to hold up a normal-sized human body simply do not suffice to hold up a seventy-five foot tall human body: this is the reason why an elephant's legs are thicker in proportion to its body than those of a human. In any event, the Dean must have remembered this at that point in time, but by then it was too late. Wubbels, weakly wobbling on his ill-proportioned legs, staggered out of Bunting. He then loped around towards the CAC before tripping on a tree and falling harmlessly on Martha Washington Square. The force of the impact caused him to return to his true form.

This reporter was shocked to learn at this time that the wobbly Wubbels was not in fact same real Gene Wubbels who was born in a log cabin in Preston Minnesota on September 21, 1942, but was really a space alien from the planet Xenor (pronounced ZEE-nor). Fortunately, this tale has a happy ending. Using the threat of nuclear weapons (see related story), Chessie, and with a meteor crash eminent, immortal time traveler Louis L. Goldstein was able convince the Xenorians that it would be in their best interest to release Wubbels. Ω

WC Has a New Theme Song

Marshall Norton

Some have called the move ridiculous, others have heralded it as long overdue. The rumors that have been circulating are entirely true. It's official: in a special ceremony scheduled for the upcoming Earth Day weekend, the "upbeat, funky pop-reggae" band, Urban Blight will unveil a song that, in a special dedication to be given by President Charles Trout, will then be declared the official school song.

SGA President Jamie Baker explained, "We felt that the school lacked a certain unity and thought that a school song that, over time, everyone would come to know and love would be just the thing to bring Washington College together." He went on to say that the various bands that have been invited here to play at the Pavilion and in the Student Center this year inspired the SGA members to propose that the school song be of the "ska" variety.

The melody for the song is reportedly based on a Colonial fife-and-drum tune said to have been composed by George Washington himself. The lyrics, however, were penned exclusively by the SGA. Reprinted here is the chorus to "Washington College, Our Alma Mater." Lyrics used by permission.

Washington College...yeah.
Washington College...yeah.
Washington College...yeah.
Yeah.

In an interesting side note, most likely stemming from all of the hype surrounding the new school song, there are unconfirmed reports that efforts are under way to make an acronym out of the Student Government Association, rather than just an abbreviation. Much like "NASA", "NATO", and others are abbreviations pronounced as one word, under the new plan it would become acceptable, if not mandatory, to refer to the Student Government Association as "The Sga." No further information on this subject was available at press time. Ω

We Must Not Turn Our Backs Upon Ourselves

Paul Briggs

There have been a number of highly interesting developments on the international scene.

On Monday, Russian nationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky reportedly traveled to Srebrenica to meet with Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadsic. The two discussed cultural and historical ties between their respective regions and worked out a mutual agreement to pose naked on the cover of Rolling Stone.

In yet another effort that no place on earth is truly safe from international terrorism, twelve heavily armed followers of the infamous Islamic militant Li Peng offered the Secretary of State a chair at the head of the table. At roughly the same time that Christopher sat down, a number of reporters claim to have heard a "loud embarrassing noise."

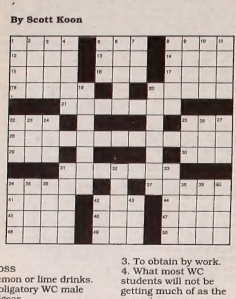
• Close examination of a photograph on page 38 of this week's Beijing Review reveals Christopher with a sign taped onto his back which, translated into English, reads "Kick Me, I'm an Imperialist Running Dog."

• A Secret Service suffered first-degree burns on his face after testing a proffered "complimentary Cuban Stogie."

• Upon returning to the United States, Christopher announced that he had been given a "secret message" for President Clinton. Inside sources at the White House allege that, upon opening, the "secret message" was discovered to contain a photograph of the aging Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping with a toothbrush inserted in his rectum. (See related article on page 4)

In South Africa, Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi announced that, in addition to forming an alliance with the white supremacist Afrikaner Resistance, he had also arranged a coalition with North Korean dictator Kim Il Sung, Saddam Hussein, Khalil Abdul Muhammad, and the militant Israeli settler group Kahane Chai ("Warriors of Brooklyn") Buthelezi was quoted as saying, "Come, let us reason together."

Without a doubt, however, the most disturbing development was the refusal of the Kappa Alpha Order to allow U.N. inspectors into Middle Hall. Inspectors had been sent by the International Atomic Energy Agency in response to U.S. government satellite photos which reportedly showed the Kappa Alphas to be on the verge of developing a nuclear device. Matt Murray denied these charges, insisting that "we are engaging in legitimate nuclear research, nothing more."



President Clinton was quoted as saying he was "deeply troubled" by the fraternity's refusal. When asked about rumors that he was considering sending a shipment of Patriot missiles to the Drama Department, the President replied, "We are keeping all our options open."

The Literary House officially declared neutrality. Lit House Spokesperson Aharon Pierce issued a statement saying that "we are opposed to nuclear aggression on

See "Briggs," on p. 5

Washington College Crossword Puzzle

By Scott Koon

Across

1. Lemon or lime drinks.
5. Obligatory WC male headgear.
8. Country near Libya.
12. Mountain range separating Europe and Asia.
13. Past tense of eat.
14. To sharpen.
15. Uncommon.
16. WC president's initials.
17. The longer and thinner of the two forearm bones.
18. Former Maryland governor Spiro T. ____.
20. Not over.
21. ___ mantis.
22. ___ dye.
25. The Princess and the ___.
28. An executive officer.
29. ___ the season to be jolly.
30. To inquire.
31. Treetops do this as children listen as you're dreaming of a white Christmas.
34. Type of rock where you may find oil.
37. A place to eat when you're on the road.
41. A musical sound.
42. A male sheep.
44. An exploding star.
45. ___ gadda da vida.
46. ___ Wan Kenobi.
47. What a long, strange ___ it's been.
48. 500 sheets of paper.
49. Boy Scouts of America acronym.
50. Senior drama major Elisa ___.

Down

1. A nimbus or halo.
2. To pull along the ground.
3. To obtain by work.
4. What most WC students will not be getting much of as the semester progresses.
5. Marble laden campus building.
6. WC baseball coach.
7. Domestic animal pal.
8. Everybody have fun tonight, everybody wang ___ tonight.
9. To grasp.
10. Christ's maternal grandmother.
11. This word begins most letters.
19. To argue or herd livestock.
20. Not bearing weapons.
22. I tawt I taw a puddy ___.
23. ___ Amin Dada.
24. Emergency Medical Services acronym.
25. Parent Teacher Association acronym.
26. Greek Goddess of the dawn.
27. Raiders of the Lost ___.
31. A short burst of light.
32. Strike-busting workers.
33. It comes after the eighth in a series.
34. To mix with vigor.
35. See 14 across.
36. Tolstoy's ___ Karenina.
38. WC alum and Dining Services supervisor ___ Sullivan.
39. Wicked or satanic.
40. The crime of forcing another person to submit to sex acts, especially sexual intercourse.
42. To steal.
43. Woody's ex.

Important Dates For Course Registration for Fall '94

Thursday, March 3: First Advising Day
Wednesday, April 6: Second Advising Day
Friday, April 8: Last Day to Submit Program Cards
Monday April 18: Arena Registration (if needed)

DIRT

Whaddya MEAN It's Not True?

Dirt is so maligned in our culture. What's wrong with soil, anyway? You can't grow without it. Topsoil, loam, even clay and sand are useful, if for nothing more than walking barefoot and feeling your toes squish. Please, don't dish on dirt.

And now, for something completely different. In honor of our April Fool's Day issue (if you haven't figured this out by now, go back to Aesop), I've decided to compile some popular urban legends for your perusal and amusement.

An urban legend is any modern folktale told as true by its propagators. Some genuine true amazing stories are eventually spread so much that they take on legendary status. In addition, almost any "true" story having to do with ghosts or hitchhikers can fit into this category.

Some Washington College legends, which are based somewhere in fact, include numerous tales of climbing the old water tower, stories of Allen Ginsberg trying to levitate the Buntagon, and anything having to do with Chas Foster.

Stock Legends: These are circulated everywhere, by everyone. While there may or may not have been a grain of truth in the original tellings, all of these have happened to so many friends of friends, that in their current incarnations, they aren't to be believed.

Pet Chihuahua An elderly lady with failing poor sight picks up a stray dog, or buys one in Mexico or California. She tends to her perky pooch, but when it gets sick, her vet informs her that it's not a small dog at all, but A GIANT RAT!

Fatal Cactus Tourists in the desert of the Southwestern US take a cutting of a cactus to take home and grow for their very own (which is, by the way illegal). After a few weeks, the cactus starts to MOVE ON ITS OWN! The skin splits, and hundreds/thousands of baby spiders/scorpions emerge from it, driving the poachers out of house and home.

Hotel Horror A couple staying in a hotel suite return to find that their room has been broken into, but oddly nothing is missing, just moved around a bit. However, when they return home and develop their film, included are pictures of the perps with the couple's toothbrushes inserted in their rectums.

Roommate Roundup One of my favorites. A coed returns to her dorm room, which is unlocked, from elsewhere in the building to retrieve her keys and go out. Since her keys are just inside the door, she doesn't bother turning the light on, but she locks the door from the hallway she leaves. When she comes home that night, she finds her door still locked with her roommate inside, raped, murdered and mutilated. In blood on the wall is the message, "Aren't you glad you didn't turn the lights on?

This story always brings up the fabled question of roommate death and grades. If your roommate is killed or commits suicide, do you truly get a 4.0 GPA for the semester? Of course, this is supposedly the case at the Naval Academy, UCLA, or Cornell; any school which you personally aren't attending.

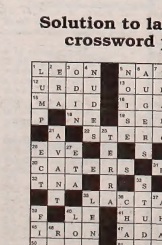
Big Brother is Listening Ultra-top-secret government bureau the National Security Agency is suite return to find that their room has been broken into, but oddly nothing is missing, just moved around a bit. However, when they return home and develop their film, included are pictures of the perps with the couple's toothbrushes inserted in their rectums.

Roommate Roundup One of my favorites. A coed returns to her dorm room, which is unlocked, from elsewhere in the building to retrieve her keys and go out. Since her keys are just inside the door, she doesn't bother turning the light on, but she locks the door from the hallway she leaves. When she comes home that night, she finds her door still locked with her roommate inside, raped, murdered and mutilated. In blood on the wall is the message, "Aren't you glad you didn't turn the lights on?

This story always brings up the fabled question of roommate death and grades. If your roommate is killed or commits suicide, do you truly get a 4.0 GPA for the semester? Of course, this is supposedly the case at the Naval Academy, UCLA, or Cornell; any school which you personally aren't attending.

Big Brother is Listening Ultra-top-secret government bureau the National Security Agency is reported to have the capabilities to listen in on any phone conversation conducted in the United States. If you, too, want your phone lines monitored by the NSA, all you have to do is mention the keywords "President Clinton" and "uranium" at least twice each in conversation. The NSA's speech-pattern filter, run by computer, will begin recording all your incoming and outgoing calls.

Twisted but True



J. Tarin Towers

One lunch hour, a machine operator with the bad habit of masturbating by laying his penis on the conveyor belt had a rude awakening. The skin of his scrotum was caught in the gears under the belt and ripped open. Several days later, he checked into the hospital complaining of pain in the groin area. No wonder — he had stapled the injured scrotum shut himself. Apparently, lunch hour was almost over, and he didn't want to miss any work — or embarrass himself.

Note: This is by no means a comprehensive list. For more keen reading on the subject, Jan Brunvand has a series of collections on American folklore, including The Vanishing Hitchhiker, The Choking Doberman, and Curses! Broiled Again. For truly bizarre tales, the News of the Weird column has published a few books as well, including their latest, News from the Fringe.

The Office of Student Affairs reminds all students interested in living in East or West Halls that the deadline for applications is April 18. Stop by the Student Affairs Office for more information.

Solution to last week's crossword puzzle

Wanted: Elm Photo Editor!
Please contact Scott Koon at 8585.

Wanted: Elm Editor!
Apply in writing to Dr. Richard Striner ASAP. (See this week's editorial for more details.)

Asteroid to Rock Chestertown

Rudy Weltz

Thursday, April 30

Yesterday, at a seminar at Washington, D.C., astronomy and physics professors from Washington College announced findings of a possible asteroid collision with Maryland's Eastern Shore.

For several weeks the world scientific community has quietly focused its attention to the 20 by 30 mile Goliath. Last month the asteroid was discovered to be in a direct and untimely crossing with Earth's orbit. It has been known that a collision is probable on April 7, but until yesterday no scientist had ventured to suggest a precise impact location.

Dr. Sidhu and Dr. Lin both confirm that they have found that the asteroid will undoubtedly strike the Eastern Shore, specifically 200 Cannon Street in Chestertown. When asked how they can pinpoint with such certainty the exact point of impact, Lin said "There are many factors that must be considered when predicting the trajectory of a stellar body. Our data is being reviewed by top scientists, some of whom doubt the accuracy of our calculations. But we think any criticism is offset by the magnitude of what is possible. Besides, we need to get published."

The asteroid is moving with incredible force and speed and will be in the Earth's atmosphere for two to three seconds. The impact will devastate the area, and could even separate the Delmarva Peninsula from the North American continent.

But every asteroid has a glowing lining. Scientists report detecting the sheen of a radioactive substance on the rock. Scientists say this substance, Yadeloofirpa, will set off a positive local chain reaction - beginning with beneficial mutations in the local marine ecosystem. The Rock Hall crab population will explode, which is always a positive economic indicator for the area.

The Elm enlarged the scope of its investigation and interviewed a variety of people, hoping to elicit local and national reaction to the impact.

President Clinton offered his condolences to Governor Schaefer, and then went to lunch at McDonald's.

Schaefer and his staff are trying to understand the economic implications of the upcoming disaster.

Local towns person Andy Stuckle said "I'm all a'quiver. That there habitat's gonna be dis, dees, das... uh, gone."

Washington College Freshman J.T. Lidman said

See "Rock," on p. 9

Gaia's Legion Stirs Ire

Susan Huck

Suspicion has fallen upon members of the College community in the wake of livestock mutilations in Kent County. Irate dairymen have complained to county and state officials, charging that unknown persons affiliated with the College, and specifically with Gaia's Legion, are responsible.

Gaia's Legion is a new campus group inspired by Professor Helga Holzkopf, who came to us from the University of California at Berkeley and is teaching a cluster of courses on Environment and Society.

Legion commander Garth Frenzi (senior, Philosophy) denies any wrongdoing. He issued a statement yesterday on behalf of his organization.

"We of Gaia's Legion are dedicated to protecting our Mother Earth from rape by evil people who exploit Her for their own selfish and greedy purposes. And if there are people out there who have the heart to liberate these enslaved animals by making them useless to their so-called owner, we admire their courage."

In a related development, charges of assault with a deadly weapon, leveled by legion Sergeant Arthur Bungee (junior, Political Science) against Kent dairyman Bernard Frowse of Kennedyville were withdrawn this week. Bungee had charged that Frowse attacked him with a manure fork.

Bungee, who was hospitalized with a serious tetanus infection, was advised by his attorney, Lillian Billingsgate of Chestertown, to drop the charges when confronted with evidence that Frowse was attending the harness races in Harrington, Delaware, at the time.

"We have to expect this sort of thing," Bungee told The Elm. "These rednecks cover for each other. I don't trust any farmer. They're all species-exploiters. They even exploit grass."

Asked about his presence in Frowse's loafing shed at approximately ten p.m. on the night in question, Bungee said that he enjoys moonlight bicycling, as everyone knows. When his tire went flat, rather than walk all the way back to the College, he thought he might find a tire repair kit in one of the farm outbuildings.

"I still say Frowse attacked me with that thing after I slipped on one of his cowpies. He should be investigated by the government, anyway. That stuff was all over the place."

Bungee added that his attorney was also exploring the possibility of charging Frowse with reckless endangerment for leaving the implement unsecured and in a filthy condition, where it was a menace to innocent people.

"Horse-Hockey!" Frowse responded. "He's one of them nut cases been cutting the teats off our cows. And who hired that crazy woman?"

In a statement this morning, President Charles Trout renewed his commitment to defend the academic freedom of the faculty. He called for calm and reason, suggestion that all the mature individuals of goodwill should be able to negotiate their differences. Ω campus, from whatever quarter." President Trout has approached Zeta Tau Alpha in the hopes that they might persuade the Kappa Alphas to accept international mediation. Tomorrow the Theta Chis are scheduled to meet at the L-Hise with a representative from the Chinese government to hammer out proposals for a "regional counterbalance" to the Kappa Alphas' newfound military power.

"Briggs," from p.3

In this difficult and complex era we must have the courage not to turn our backs upon ourselves, but to stand shoulder to shoulder to shoulder in hopeful determination. Ω

Blub

by Tanya Allen

Now, You Too Can Make Finger Puppets out of the WAC Administration! (Hours of Fun)

Super-easy instructions:

1. Cut out puppet
2. Wrap puppet around finger
3. Scotch tape strips around finger
4. Play with finger puppet. Use it to make up your OWN satirical sketches. Be as scandalous as you like. You will have fun.

"Letters," from 2

Sincerely,
William B. Johnson

To the Editor,

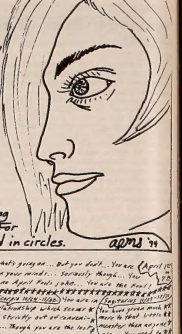
I would like to clarify the some points about the article about honor code draft printed in the Washington College Elm last week. I was extremely disappointed with the reporting of this article because I do not believe that the article genuine reflects the effort that so many people have put into the committee's work in drafting this honor document. It also does not reflect the work that is yet to be done on this document. It is true that the students drew up the first draft of the document, and submitted it to the Ad Hoc Committee on Academic Honesty back in September. That draft has been significantly altered and changed through joint conversation between faculty, students and members of the administration. It is also true that there was a version of the honor code draft-d1 distributed at the SGA meeting last Tuesday, and I personally distributed that document. There are several students and several faculty and administrational people who have worked diligently towards drafting a better, more functional honor system. The Ad Hoc Committee on Academic Honesty is a fine example of how the students faculty and administration can work together for a common goal.

I would like to emphasize a few points. First, this is a draft document that was given to the senators do get comment and to see how they feel about the basic points of the new code. Second, I would like to admit publicly that I was mistaken by giving the document to the SGA when it was not in final form. I felt that it was the wishes of the committee to distribute the document, I was wrong.

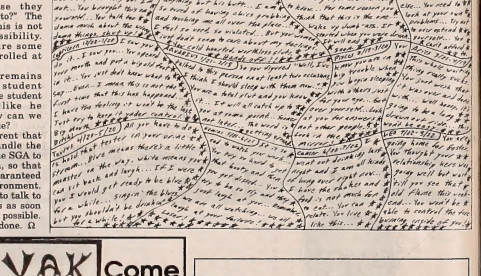
This process of drafting an honor code has been a long and tedious one, that has had input from many different people. I am personally a cog in the wheel of that process. How can we exclude all of those who

See "Letters" on p 7

"Smoke," from 1



"Maybe they felt bad about bumming cigarettes off of a stranger," was an explanation offered by freshman Robyn Mitchell. "I mean, I don't see why, but some people are ridiculous about accepting charity like that. I say, grab them while they're free. You never know when you'll be offered one again. But some don't see it that way. And it really is a shame that they have to suffer because of their own stubbornness."



Some have proposed that perhaps the students had strict parents who were visiting at the time and were in the room, or that they were all chewing fresh gum and did not want to let it go to waste.

By far the most outrageous proposition came from Joshua Lawrence, another freshman. "Maybe they didn't want the cigarettes," he said. "Is it possible that they chose not to smoke because they simply didn't want to?" The answer is clear. This is not even a remote possibility. There certainly are some silly freshmen enrolled at WC these days.

The fact remains that at least one student came away from the student center smelling like he always does. How can we allow this to continue?

It is apparent that the only way to handle the situation is to get the SGA to pass the legislation, so that every student is guaranteed a smoke-filled environment. Students are urged to talk to their dorm senators as soon and as fervently as possible. Something must be done. Ω

Only one Cigarette tastes like YAK!

Surgeon General's Warning: Smoking is really bad for you

YAK

Come Taste the YAK!

Do You Hate Laundry? WE LOVE IT!

Kent Laundry

207 High Street •

Pick Up & Delivery

Andy's

1 Friday-Angie Miller & 'topher
2 Saturday--The Hula Monsters & Annual Easter Egg Dyeing Party
7 Thursday--Phil Swaby Duo

Bay to Bay Traders

Ray Ban • Jansport • Great Lakes

Mad Bomber • Bula • Atlantis

207 Cross Street
Chestertown, MD 21620
778-3442

Functional gear for active sports in all conditions

20% Discount on all Patagonia in Stock

Classifieds

Cruise Ship Jobs!
We will show you how to get on board.
800-303-2700

Cruise Ship Jobs!
Students needed! Earn $2000+ monthly. Summer, holidays, fulltime. World Travel. Caribbean, Hawaii, Europe, Mexico. Tour Guides, Gift Shop Sales, Deck Hands, Casino Workers, etc. No Experience Necessary. Call 602-680-4647, Ext. C147.

'Letters, " from 6

have helped the process so much. I send out a sincere apology to all of those who have worked on this new honor system. I certainly did not think that I gave the impression to anyone that I was working on this honor code alone.

Max Walton
SGA Vice-President

Editor's Note: It certainly was not my intention in "Honor Code Student Draft Presented" to lead anyone to believe that Max Walton was the only person who has worked on the draft. The second sentence of the article reads "The draft is a culmination of over two years of work on the part of Washington College students and faculty, with Walton leading the effort for the past year." While it is safe to say that Walton has played a leading student role, I was in error in omitting to mention that Dr. John Taylor is the Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee on Academic Honesty. The Elm would also like to take this opportunity to recognize the other members of the Ad Hoc Committee on Academic Honesty: Alicia Carberry, Audrey Fessler, Edward Maxcy, Maureen McIntire, Jim Pipken, Sharla Ponder, Lucille Sansing, Ruth Shoge, Reuben Stump, Gail Tubbs, Gerald Walsh and Carol Wilson. It was also not our intention to lead anyone to believe that the document in question was anything other than a working draft; after all, the word "draft" was present in 20 point type on the front page, and the article did mention that "the new policy would have to be ratified by the SGA, the faculty and possibly the Board of Visitors and Governors before it can come into effect at Washington College. All SGA senators have copies of the draft, and Walton encouraged students interested or concerned about the Honor System draft to read it and see him or their SGA senator if they have any questions or comments." I'd like to extend my apologies to any who felt this phrasing was ambiguous.

To the Editor,

This letter is in reply to your attack on those students who find lung cancer and emphysema less than appealing.

The most glaring thing in your argument is how tobacco played such prominent role in our nation's past and development. Yea, well, guess what Scott. Slavery did too, but I don't think many believe it should be preserved as a testament to its role in American history.

Like slavery, smoking is an American tradition whose time has come and, fortunately, gone. The only thing cigarettes are good for is raising government revenue, and even that really isn't worth all the hassle.

Maybe instead of a new academic building, habitual smokers would prefer the College to build them THE CASEY NICOTINE FIT AND RECREATION BUILDING where you all can go and puff yourselves to death. Yeah, that would be great. We could have maybe three large rooms. The first would be lined wall-to-wall with cigarette machins; any brand you wanted. The second room would be a larger lounge-type area with a vast plethora of ashtrays. The third, and my personal favorite, would be stocked with oxygen tanks so you all can breathe after you've transformed your lungs into two black, cancerous masses. If the school threw in a few classrooms, bedrooms, and bathrooms, you all would never have to leave the confines of the building. Wouldn't that be great?!? And to top it all off, we'd have a statue of Mr. Casey dressed as a cigar store Indian out front for all to enjoy.

My roommate is a smoker, and I feel no guilt whatsoever in asking him to smoke outside of our room. I don't want my stuff smelling like Earl's Snuff and Tobacco Shack. It's never been a problem for him to do so either. He doesn't mind doing going outside. If I'm in someone else's room and they smoke, they smoke. It's their room, I respect their right to smoke there, and they are the ones who have to deal with it. If worse comes to worse, I can excuse myself and leave.

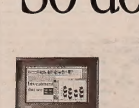
Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of happiness, eh, Scott? Well, you make get two out of three, because everyone knows smoking and life just don't go together. And if an ever-worsening cough and shortness of breath are your idea of happiness then so be it. Just let it be away from those of us who don't like smelling and breathing the stuff.

I occasionally smoke a cigar. But I never do it inside. That's because I have enough respect for others to take it somewhere they won't be affected by it.

I don't have a problem with people smoking. I mean, personal choice and all that other individuality stuff. However, I don't think that non-smokers should be subjected to walking through hallways full of a gray, gritty, smelly haze on their way to class.

And it is not as if this policy will be any better enforced than any other around here. I mean, I don't foresee the College instituting a smoking security force. Picture it: "HALT! PUFF POLICE. DO YOU KNOW MUCH YOU WERE SMOKING? DROP THAT BUTT NOW, MISTER!" You'll still be able to sneak a drag in Bill Smith before class and in CAC while you're getting your mail.

I salute Max, Jaimie, and everyone else in the SGA who voted to ban smoking. It's about time. But it is not just the SGA. The Maryland State Legislature (that's in Annapolis, Scott) just voted on and passed a bill that banned smoking in virtually every public building. So don't blame Max, Jaimie, and the others, because their just acting on a positive, sensible trend that is sweeping across our nation from sea to shining sea.



So smoke while you can guys. Because hopefully soon it will be lights-out at WAC.

Bob Brown-sophomore

Editor's Note: Great letter Bob! It's nice to see that my article provoked a public debate—which is what it was intended to do, seeing as how there was so little debate and so much unanimity on the issue in the SGA. Having lived for seven years in West Berlin (which is in Germany, Bob, right next to what used to be East Berlin), it wares me whenever I see a representative body take a vote with so little dissent. It reminds me of the televised East German Communist Party Congresses, where votes were unanimous no matter how contentious the issue actually was.

The dictionary has at least three definitions for "value." So do we.

Macintosh® LC 475 8/160. Apple® Color Plus 14" Display. Apple Extended Keyboard II and mouse. Only $1,680.00.

PowerBook® 165/c 4/120. Only $1,550.00.

Macintosh® LC 575 8/160. Color Plus 21" 1024 x 768 Display. Apple® Extended II and mouse. Only $1,965.00.

Giving people more value for their money has made Macintosh® the best-selling personal computer on campuses and across the country for the past two years.* And that's a trend that is likely to continue. Because there are Macintosh and PowerBook® models available within your budget. Meaning you get it all. Power. Quality. And affordability. It's that simple. So, if that sounds like value to you, visit your Apple Campus Reseller today. And leave your dictionary at home.

Affordable computers from Apple.

Apple

For more information visit the WC Bookstore
Casey Academic Center or call x7200

Any students whose parents or family have written books and who would like these books to be displayed this weekend for parent's day weekend should contact Eve Zartman, Dean Maxcy or Mr. Tubbs.

Any seniors interested in submitting a T-shirt design for the graduation tee shirt should please submit any and all ideas to Melissa Sullivan, Andrew Evans, Eve Zartman or Christine Smith by April 8.

To all interested in running for SGA executive Board positions:

Petitions Availible in Student Affairs Office-Wed. Mar 30
Petitions Due- Mon. Apr 4
Speeches- Thurs. Apr 7
Elections- Mon. Apr 11

All candidates should also submit a short (<2500 characters) essay to the Elm, along with a photo. Contact Scott Koon at 8585 for more info.

Wanted: Elm Photo Editor!
Please contact Scott Koon at 8585.

Wanted: Elm Editor!
Apply in writing to Dr. Richard Striner ASAP (See this week's editorial for more details.)

Chesapeake Bay Monster Captured

Andrew M. Evans

The mysterious Chesapeake Bay Monster affectionately known as Chessie was captured this week by a team of researchers using a large net baited with 100 pounds of Chef Cletus' famous beer battered fish filets. The joint effort between Washington College and Baltimore Aquarium scientists was led by Dr. Donald Munson. The investigation began last September when several sightings suggested the suspiciously slippery serpent was splashing about the sparkling shores of the Chester River.

The search was postponed in December due to the Chester's icy conditions, but resumed this February when the river had sufficiently thawed. Scientists believe the ice was actually instrumental in the eventual capture; "Chessie was confined to the river over the winter and was extremely hungry when we finally baited the net to snare her" said Dr. David Russell.

Chessie was caught in the Comegys bight near Cliff City. The scientists lowered the titanium chain link net into water while other boats patrolled the water trying to lure Chessie into their trap by banging on a triangle and yelling Scooy! Chessie, when captured, didn't even put up a fight as was expected, she simply gobbled up the fish filets and then became rather docile and later complained of stomach pains. Reports by witnesses indicate Chessie is over 100 feet in length,

Before her capture, Chessie terrorized the the WC crew team in the Chester River.

Dr. Munson holding a "spawn of Chessie," shortly after the beast was captured.

"She's really big" confirmed Dr. Munson.

Researchers were notified of Chessie's location by Washington College student Toby Lloyd. "I was picking up trash along the shore with my dad when I noticed a large object in the water-suddenly a head popped out and looked around before submerging" said Lloyd. Toby informed the Coast Guard and they forwarded the information to the research team.

The scientists plan on further studies before a decision is made about what to do with Chessie. Rumors have suggested that Chessie may be reunited with her cousin, the Loch Ness Monster. Another suggestion has been that the Baltimore Aquarium should attempt to display Chessie in a water theme park ride for children.

Regardless, the research team plans to get as much publicity as possible. "I'm only in this for the money" one scientist wishing to remain anonymous said. "I plan on marketing Chessie T-shirts, lunch boxes, and action figures. Maybe Steven Spielberg would like to buy Chessie for a Jurassic Park sequel."

Time will only tell what the future holds in store for Chessie, but one story can now be put to an end. Thanks to the scientists, it can now be proven that the Chesapeake Bay Monster is not Dr. Scott frolicking in the water on a hot summer day, as earlier rumors had suggested. Ω

Another Time II
Fine Furniture, Collectibles & Antiques
Donna Dukes (410) 778-6525 1-800-310-6525
819 High St. Ext.
Chestertown,MD
BUY & SELL

Chestertown Natural Foods
"Quality natural foods, products & gifts at reasonable prices"
Hours:
Tuesday Noon-6 p.m.
Wednesday-Friday 10a.m.-6 p.m.
Saturday 9 a.m.-5 p.m.
Off-street parking available
410-778-1677
101 Spring Ave Suite #5 Chestertown

Do You Want VISA & MasterCard Credit Cards?
REGARDLESS OF CREDIT EXPERIENCE
Now you can have two of the most recognized and accepted credit cards in the world...Visa® and MasterCard® credit cards..."in your name." EVEN IF YOU ARE NEW IN CREDIT or HAVE BEEN TURNED DOWN BEFORE!
VISA® and MasterCard® the credit cards you deserve and need for— ID—BOOKS—DEPARTMENT STORES—TUITION—ENTERTAINMENT— EMERGENCY CASH—TICKETS—RESTAURANTS— HOTELS—MOTELS—GAS—CAR RENTALS— REPAIRS—AND TO BUILD YOUR CREDIT RATING!
Both Yes!
IAL SERVICES, INC
VISA
AL SERVICES, INC.
MasterCard
GUARANTEED VISA/MASTERCARD APPROVAL or MONEY BACK
No time delays!
No credit checks!
No security deposits!
SEND THE COUPON TODAY
YOUR CREDIT CARDS ARE WAITING!

EZ-CARD, BOX 16516, ATLANTA, GA 30321
YES! I want VISA®/MASTERCARD® Credit Cards approved immediately. 100% GUARANTEED!
NAME
ADDRESS
CITY STATE ZIP
STUDENT? Yes No SS#
SIGNATURE
NOTE: MasterCard is a registered trademark of MasterCard International, Inc. Visa is a registered trademark of VISA USA, Inc. and VISA International ouis Goldstein: State comptroller or Immortal Time Traveler?
MAIL THIS NO RISK COUPON TODAY

n Elm Exclusive Investigative Report on K. Phoebus

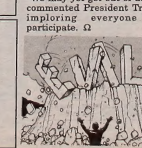
Research by the Elm ff into the archives of shington College has overed photographic idence suggesting that rent Chairman of the ard of Visitors and rnors, Louis Goldstein, actually present during s founding years of shington College in 1782. ote claims that he was a ng graduate of the ndation in 1935, the Elm proof that he was ally one of the early ors of Maryland. The mpanying photo shows ldstein, posing spicuously as a captain the Maryland Guard ng the settling of St. y's City in 1654. While man pictured with him s a striking resemblance the late Maryland State nptor Harry T. Phoebus, Sue Tessem of the art rtment confirms that the lopment techniques used this photograph are sistent with those used in mid-seventeenth century.



Goldstein's visit this Wednesday presented a at Washington College ding his experience as a dent at WC in the 30s to se of students today. playing an uncanny wledge of the events rring during the ding of this state and College, his talk gested that his knowledge uld only have been first d. When confronted by author about this fence, Goldstein replied d bless you all real good, continued long life, ess, prosperity and ppiness." He also duced a coin which had on one an abbreviated script his same message. While on the surface, Goldstein's comments appeared to lead nowhere, the twinkle in his eye when he produced the coin led the author to pursue a new line of investigation.

The coin (see inset) distributed by Goldstein was of a light metal and measured an inch and a half in diameter. Respected numismatologist George C. Brooke, Jr. analyzed the coin for the Elm. "Remarkable!" he said, "The alloy in this coin appears to contain a remnant that is hundreds of years old. This coin has a small amount of metal in it that dates back to the late 1700s!" After further consultation with Mr. Brooke, it was determined that the coins distributed by Goldstein quite possibly could contain an alloy of the very metal that originally composed the fifty guineas donated to the college by patron George Washington.

Further study determined that shortly after Washington's donation of the fifty guineas all but one disappeared from the school's treasury in the year 1789 — seven years after WC was founded. Comparison of the metal in that guinea and the tokens distributed by Goldstein were conclusive. Not only do the tokens dispersed in perhaps immeasurable quantities among the state of Maryland contain the metal of the original guineas, but they were taken by our very Chairman of the Board over two hundred years ago. According to Math Professor Gene Hamilton, had these guineas remained in a trust fund earning seven percent interest, they would have accrued to the amount of $158,500,000 by this decade. An effort is currently being mounted by those who sit in Bunting to collect all of these tokens in order to piece together an important part of Washington College's history. If any members of this community have such tokens, they are asked to return them to Bunting Hall in exchange for tuition breaks (or in the case of faculty and staff, health care benefits). "We may yet get out of debt," commented President Trout, imploring everyone to participate. Ω

Art Department Closes

Constance Stuart Larrabee House Becomes Lacrosse Party Lounge

Dolores Haze

Washington College's Department of Art will be formally shutting down at the end of this semester. Following the loss of studio professor Tex Andrews, the course offerings decreased by 40 percent.

Dean and Provost Gene "Wobbly" Wubbels decided that the only recourse would be to cut the department from the catalog entirely.

In the words of Professor Susan Tessem, Department Chair, "I'm sick of this st." Both she and Robert Janson-LaPalme will be retiring.

Prof. Tessem will be opening a golf course called "The Nineteenth Hole." Prof. Janson-LaPalme will be managing a fashion consulting firm based in Dubuque, Iowa.

The Constance Stuart Larrabee Fine Arts Center reportedly will be converted into a lacrosse team Lounge, coincidentally called "The Nineteenth Hole."

Larrabee herself, as President of Washington College Friends of the Arts, is distressed by this change. In her words, "Stop what you're doing in there!"

The upstairs studio space will be outfitted with leather couches, and the department offices will be occupied by the lacrosse coaches. A wet/snack bar will be located in the large storage cube under former professor Andrews' office.

Downstairs, equipment and weight training rooms will replace the current ceramics and printmaking studios. The current darkroom will house several large keg coolers. Space occupied by wood and metal shop equipment will be upholstered entirely in rubber.

All equipment formerly used by the art department is being co-opted by the departments of physics and chemistry.

To replace the offerings of the art department, lacrosse players will themselves be teaching beginning drawing and painting courses as part of the REC-sports program. "Anyone can do art. I did it in high school," said Coach Terry Corcoran.

While the loss of the department will be mourned by some continuing members of the faculty, President Trout is hopeful that students will no longer be inspired to make any hand puppets. Ω

"Rock," from p. 5

"Good. I hope that rock hits the Lit House."

President Trout plans to take his binoculars up to his roof. "I'll be able to get a great view of what's coming in from up there," Trout said.

President Trout was not available for further comment. One administrative source hinted that members of the administration have siphoned funds from the student meal plan to build a bunker under the CAC. In a late night clandestine interview our source nervously smoked cigarette after cigarette rolled with $100 bills as she told of the plot. She said the asteroid bunker under the CAC, a.k.a. Covert Asteroid Cover-up, has been in the works for over a month. This person indicated that the College knew of the impact because they had been consulting a respected astrologer-none other than the Elm's own Twinky-Blinky. The source of the funding leaves open the question of how students will eat. When pressed on this issue, the source became testy and replied "Like it matters. They'll all be dead soon anyway." Ω

Custom Hats
Team Uniforms
Fraternity & Sorority Apparel
Your Goods or Ours
Special Apparel for Special Events!
Maryland Custom Embroidery
204 High St. 778-9786

778-3181
Shirt Laundry
Carpet Sales
Park
RUS and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS ST.
CHESTERTOWN, MARYLAND 21620

OLD WHARF INN
ON THE CHESTER RIVER
FOOT OF CANNON ST.
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
JOHN & SANDY LINVILLE, OWNERS
410-778-3760
FAX: 410-778-2989
All-You-Can-Eat Triple Treat
Salad Bar
Taco Bar
Self-serve Sundae Bar
Monday–Thursday 4–9 p.m.

Shoremen Put Out Dragons' Flame

Sophomore Jaeger Paves Way To Four-Goal Victory With Eight Tallies

Matt Murray

Two weeks after teammate Jason Paige's nine-goal performance against St. Mary's, sophomore Bart Jaeger decided last Saturday's contest against the highly touted State University of New York at Cortland was his chance to jump into the spotlight.

Jaeger tallied six times over a 22-minute stretch in the second and third quarters, and Washington went on to defeat Division III's ninth-ranked SUNY-Cortland by a 24-20 score.

"Everybody started playing with intensity," Jaeger said. "I got open for my shots, and guys were giving me the ball. Everything just went my way today."

However, not everything went Washington's way for the duration of the game. After holding a 22-9 lead with 14:53 remaining in the fourth quarter, the Shoremen had to withstand a serious run by the Red Dragons who eventually cut the lead to three with 4:05 left after a diving goal by Kenny Garcia made the score 22-19.

Washington head coach Terry Corcoran appeared unconcerned with Cortland's comeback in the fourth quarter.

"This is a team (Cortland) who could have beaten us—this wasn't Colby or St. Mary's—this was one of the better teams in Division III," Corcoran said.

"If we had ball possession, we scored. If they had the ball, they scored. I think it's better for us to win a close game like this as opposed to a blowout because it's good to be challenged."

Washington wasn't challenged often in the early going. Each team started off strong, but the Shoremen pulled away midway through the first quarter.

With the score tied at 2-2, Jaeger inspired the Washington offense with a hustling play to save a ball going out of bounds on the right sideline. Diving to make contact with the ball and slap it to Paige, Jaeger set up Washington's third goal of the game when Paige fed Chris Cote for a 3-2 lead.

The Shoremen continued to build momentum when midfielder Jamie Carver picked out a low corner and nailed a 10-yard shot while falling down to make the score 5-3 with 3:09 left in the first period.

After two Paige goals on Sanchez assists, Jaeger capped off the quarter with his first goal of the game with one second remaining on the clock. On a long clear from junior defender Greg Miller, Jaeger wheeled and fired high on the Cortland goalie, giving the Shoremen an 8-3 lead.

The onslaught continued in the second period, as Jaeger scored three times with Paige chipping in a goal to extend the lead to 12-5 at halftime.

Four different Shoremen tallied in the third period with Sanchez and Jaeger each scoring three times, Paige adding two, and Christian Boone contributing his second goal of the game.

However, after extending the lead to 22-9 with 14:53 left on a Jaeger goal, Cortland State tried to make the game interesting.

The Red Dragons scored 10 unanswered goals to pull within three with 4:05 left. Garcia scored five of his seven goals during the run with Andrew Wendol adding three tallies to the streak.

Cortland could not pull any closer, as two Sanchez goals within 19 seconds of each other slammed the door on the Red Dragons and gave the Shoremen their fourth victory of the season.

Now with a 4-2 record and ranked seventh in Division III, Washington's next game will be in Carlisle, Pennsylvania against the Dickinson Red Devils tomorrow at 1:00 p.m.

Washington will travel to Swarthmore on April 6 and will return home on April 9 to play Franklin & Marshall in a key Centennial Conference match-up.

On Saturday, the scorers for Washington included: Jaeger (8 goals, 2 assists), Sanchez (7, 3), Paige (5, 3), Boone (2, 1), Cote (1, 3), Carver (1, 1), Blair Muneses (2 assists), Brian Flynn (1 assist), and Miller (1 assist).

Sophomore goalie J. Lundberg recorded 19 saves

Senior Jason Paige scored five goals and added three assists last Saturday against Cortland.

Feyerherm's Debut Not A Spectacular Beginning

Washington Drops First Three Contests

The Washington College women's lacrosse team has gotten off to a rough start under rookie head coach Sarah Feyerherm.

Going into yesterday's game at Ursinus (results were unavailable at press time), the Shorewomen stood at 0-3 after falling to Mary Washington, Swarthmore, and Franklin & Marshall.

On Wednesday, March 23, Washington opened its season with a 17-6 loss to Mary Washington College.

The home team gave the Shorewomen a rude welcomin g as Mary Washington took a 13-2 first half lead.

Renee Guckert scored two second half goals to keep the game even in the second session, but Mary Washington still left with a resounding victory.

In Feyerherm's first home game last Saturday, the Swarthmore Garnet visited Washington and taught the Shorewomen an early season lesson.

After Washington opened the game on goals from Elisabeth Aylesworth and Megan McCurdy, the Garnet responded by scoring nine unanswered goals to take a 9-2 halftime lead.

In the second half, Swarthmore's Julie Noyes (10 goals) scored three unaswered goals for her team to take a 12-2 lead before Aylesworth and McCurdy could close out the scoring with two goals in the last four minutes for a 12-4 final score.

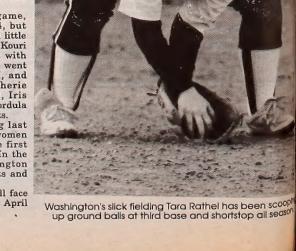
On Tuesday, lacrosse powerhouse Franklin & Marshall visited Washington.

The Diplomats, with a 1-0 record, pounded Washington goalie Peggy Busker with 30 shots on the afternoon, notching nine tallies in the first half.

Washington possessed a balanced scoring attack, as Elizabeth Moga, Kirsten Lucas, Aylesworth, and McCurdy (twice) all found the net, but it wasn't enough to stop Franklin & Marshall's Lauren Petralla (eight goals, one assist), and Megan McGowan (four goals).

Washington's next game will be tomorrow at home versus Dickinson College at 1:00 p.m. In the next two weeks, the Shorewomen will also face Western Maryland, Gettysburg, Johns Hopkins, Widener, and Haverford.

Softball Drops Doubleheaders To Gettysburg And Salisbury



After getting off to a 3-1 start after a win over SUNY-Westbury and two victories over Wesley College, the Washington softball team has hit a recent slump with doubleheader losses to Salisbury State University and Gettysburg College.

On Thursday, March 24, the Maroon and Black dropped two to the Sea Gulls of Salisbury. Washington managed only three hits in the opener, falling to Salisbury 14-0 in a five-inning game due to the eight-run rule.

In the second game, Washington lost 12-4, but the Shorewomen put a little bit of offense together. Kouri Coleman went 3-for-3 with an RBI, Amy Pivloski went 2-for-3 with one RBI, and Michelle Chin, Cherie Gallini, Tara Rathel, Iris Lewis, and Melissa Kordula all cranked out base hits.

Against Gettysburg last Saturday, the Shorewomen had seven hits in the first game but lost 12-2. In the second game, Washington only had five base hits and lost 9-1.

The Shorewomen will face Western Maryland on April 6.

Washington's slick fielding Tara Rathel has been scoopi up ground balls at third base and shortstop all season

Baseball Sweeps Mules In Centennial Contest

Blair And Whiteford Each Go The Distance

Erika K. Ford

The Sho'men baseball team opened its Centennial Conference play with two wins over Muhlenberg in a doubleheader last Saturday at home.

In the first game Washington went to extra innings to win in nine, 2-1. The Sho'men held on to grab the second game, 5-4.

Senior Keith Whiteford and sophomore Doug Blair each pitched complete games. The opener had Whiteford in trouble in only one inning, the fourth. The visitors scored once and had the bases loaded with only one out. However, a double play, from pitcher to catcher to first retired the side. Whiteford gave up only five hits and struck out 11.

There were several batting heroes in the first game against Muhlenberg. Centerfielder Rory Conway drove in Jarrett Pasko with the first run with a triple to deep right.

Freshman second baseman Pasko drove in shortstop Dan Coker with the winning run in the bottom of the ninth with a double down the right field line.

"The inning before, Coker and I were sort of planning for him to get on base and for me to get a hit to knock him in," Pasko said. "When Coker got on second, he started yelling to me—I hit it and he scored to make it 2-1 us."

Pasko, Coker, and freshman Tim Pilarski all had two hits in the game.

In the second contest, Blair shut out Muhlenberg until the final inning when four runs crossed for the Mules. Blair struck out the last batter with two outs and a man on second in the top of the seventh to record the 5-4 victory.

Rightfielder Chad Campbell and Pilarski both had two hits in the nightcap. Campbell's double in the second drove in Brian Rush and Pilarski for two RBIs.

Dan Coker was also credited with two RBIs when his single to right field in the fourth scored Andy Parks and Campbell.

Said senior first baseman Parks: "pitching was a real question coming into this season, but Doug pitched his heart out for us, and so did Beardsley, Leroy Gatell, and Brendan Norris won in 8:11.98 crushing Stockton by 33 seconds.

The varsity eight of Osborne, Peterson, Scholl, Pitt, Jewett, Gatell, Beardsley, Aran Downes, and John Shanahan also won in a time of 6:41.51. Union trailed at 6:56.15.

Additionally, the men's novice four was victorious, as coxswain Tom Webb, Steve Kim, Regis deRamel, Chris Camillo, and Jeff Lee pulled away from Union and won with a time of 8:41.37. Union placed second in 8:56.68.

Whitey today. We executed some pick-offs and a double play to help us out.

"We have only three real pitchers, so we need them to continue performing for us. If we can score and play good defense, I think this'll be one of the best seasons in recent years."

Sophomore outfielder Gary Yovanovich drove home what was the winning run when his single in the sixth scored Campbell. Blair gave up 12 hits and struck out nine to pitch a complete game for the Sho'men.

"We're limited to a small pitching rotation, but that's our only weakness," Yovanovich said. "As a team we have strong hitting and a batting average for the team at over .300."

Yesterday Washington hosted Neuman College for a doubleheader.

Tomorrow the Sho'men will travel to Lancaster, PA to play Franklin & Marshall in a Centennial doubleheader.

Next Tuesday Washington will travel to Johns Hopkins, and next Friday the Sho'men host Hopkins at home on Kibler Field at 3 p.m.

Crew Blows Visitors Out Of Water

On Saturday, the Washington College Crew won seven of 10 races on its way to a resounding victory over Union College and Richard Stockton College.

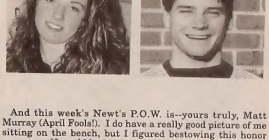
On the women's side, the varsity eight, varsity four, and lightweight boats all won their races.

The varsity eight, consisting of coxswain Eileen Hunter, Tonya Howell, Mary Bird, Jen Dougherty, Melissa Olson, Laura Green, Liza Dickson, Kathryn Mullen, and Stacey Hammond won its race in 8:15.20 edging out the Union boat by six seconds.

The women's varsity four, consisting of coxswain Hunter, Howell, Bird, Dougherty, and Hammond won by a 26-second margin over Union.

The lightweight four of Hunter, Olson, Green, Mullen and Taber Overall won in a time of 9:59.13.

On the men's side, the varsity four of coxswain Amy Osborne, Doug Peterson, Adam Scholl, James Pitt, and Eric Jewett won in 7:31.96, outdistancing two Union boats and a Stockton crew by an 18-second cushion.



The lightweight four of coxswain Cindy Dewaters, Ray Herndon, Michael

The Washington College Lella Hyson Boating Pavillion was the perfect vantage point for another Sho'men crew race last Saturday against Union and Stockton. Washington won seven out of 10 races to highlight last weekend's athletic contests.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

And this week's Newt's P.O.W. is--yours truly, Matt Murray (April Fools!). I do have a really good picture of me sitting on the bench, but I figured bestowing this honor upon myself would be in poor taste, and it wouldn't give us a chance to recognize the people who really deserve it.

And the people who really deserve it this week are softball's Denise Hakanson and lacrosse's Bart Jaeger.

Hakanson, a sophomore, received this award last season, b ut she's already proven she's back for another strong year on the diamond. An All-Conference selection last season after hitting .500 for Coach Lanee Cole's squad, Hakanson has bolted out to another strong start.

She was named to the Centennial Conference Honor Roll this week after batting .529 through Washington's first eight games. The starting leftfielder, the Gloucester, NJ native is already tearing up the field in 1994.

Jaeger, another sophomore, exploded for eight goals last Saturday against SUNY-Cortland. The Crofton, MD native and St. Mary's High School graduate has 22 goals and eight assists through Washington's first six games.

The lacrosse team, which now stands at 4-2, really needed Jaeger's effort on Saturday, as SUNY-Cortland made a strong run at the Shoremen late in the game and the home team needed every one of Jaeger's tallies.

Well anyway...all of the spring sports are now underway, and the semester's halfway gone. Time flies when you're having fun. Only a few more weeks and all of the fun will be over.

And it's Good Friday, which means it's got to be a good day. So everyone have a good one and a great Easter. Jeff and I will be back next week for another issue, and you'll never know we were home for the weekend or anything.

Good luck to all of the good sports teams this weekend, as they all try to come up with strong efforts against some good teams.

Have A GREAT Easter!!!

Newt's

Others may try to imitate us, but they can never duplicate us

Extended Hours for Midnight Madness

15¢ Drafts: 11 p.m. - 1 a.m. Every Thursday Night

WASHINGTON COLLEGE
SPORTS
THE ELM

SCORES

Men's Lacrosse

Washington	24
SUNY-Cortland	20

Baseball

Washington	2 5
Muhlenberg	1 4

Softball

Washington	2 1
Gettysburg	12 9
Washington	0 4
Salisbury	14 12

Women's Lax

Washington	5
F & M	17
Washington	4
Swarthmore	12

Blair Muneses, one of the best faceoff men in Division III, hopes to return to the NCAA Tournament, as he is shown in this picture from last year's tourney. Pictured in the Salisbury game, Muneses and the Shoremen will face their archrival again on April 23 at Kibler Field.

Newt's Players of the Week:Bart Jaeger and Denise Hakanson

Upcoming Games

MEN'S LACROSSE
Washington at Dickinson
April 2 1:00

Washington at Swarthmore
April 6 3:30

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
Washington vs. Dickinson
April 2 1:00

Washington vs. Western Maryland
April 6 4:00

BASEBALL
Washington at Franklin & Marshall
April 2 1:00

SOFTBALL
Washington vs. Western Maryland
April 6 3:00

CREW
Washington at Casperson Cup
April 2

INSIDE

•Shoremen Lacrosse Is Victorious Over Cortland

•Baseball Sweeps Mules

•Women's Lax Struggling

•Softball Drops Four In A Row

The Washington College

ELM

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Volume 63, Number Twenty-three • April 8, 1994

Washington College • Chestertown, Maryland

Faculty Finance Committee Receives Check

Board Instructs Committee not to Make Own Budget Proposals

Scott Koon

The faculty meeting last Monday began with an address by Faculty Finance Committee Chair Dr. Steven Cades, who announced to the faculty that, after extensive talks with the administration and the Board, he was definitively decided that the right to propose a budget to the Board belongs to the President and the President alone.

The debate on this issue stems from attempts by the Faculty Finance Committee to gain more power over the College's budgetary process. The Committee has sought to obtain the right to make its own recommendations directly to the Board of Visitors and Governors without using the President as an intermediary. The President has consistently maintained that budgetary power is a function of his office. Cades told the faculty that the Board had told the Committee not to submit its own list of budgetary proposals. Cades said that "this has not been a negotiation which benefits the faculty," and intimated that it could have a deliterious effect on the College's academic departments.

After Cades' short and vitriolic presentation, the President announced that the College had made $950,000 in cuts, but that the actual reduction was $1,050,000. The reason for the $100,000 gap is due to the fact that there are 27 instead of 26 pay periods next year, an event which only happens once every eleven years.

The President went on to say that the Board wants $55,000 more in cuts, which he feels confident he can make in ways which will cause little pain. He noted that the deficit next year should be only $340,000, which is a considerable improvement over the past several years of seven-figure deficits. He is also hopeful that the Board will agree to increase the draw on the endowment from 5% to 6%, which he says would move the College out of the red entirely.

The savings next year are due to a number of cuts, most notably the reduction in the size of the faculty from 74 this year to 70 next year. He emphasized that this should not have an impact on the size of classes or faculty workload. Another major savings came from the change in the College's insurance policy. The remainder of the money came from many small cuts throughout the College.

Dr. Trout said that all of the cuts were done with the goal of "minimizing the impact on students." He said that with the increases in the funding for maintenance and repair that many students "May indeed come back (next Fall Semester) to a College which is spiffier than it has ever been."

President Trout also announced that the Middle States Report should arrive on schedule in mid-April, and that he expects that there will be few surprises contained in the document.

Dean Wubbels, Chair of the Appointments and Tenure Committee, announced that Dr. Baldwin would be participating in a teacher exchange program next year, and that the College will have the honor of hosting a German instructor from a gymnasium (a college preparatory school) in Berlin.

Martin Williams, Vice President for Development, thanked the faculty for their gifts to the College and their participation in programs designed to encourage alumni giving. He also said ballots for alumni Board members are going out, and that alumni engaged in financial enterprises are well represented on the ballot. Dr. Steven Cades expressed concern that there are no minority or women candidates on the ballot. Williams responded that while this is the case, minorities and women have been amply represented on the ballots in the past.

The faculty approved a measure which recommends to the President that the College ban smoking in all academic buildings. In related news, the SGA will put the ban on smoking on campus to a referendum on next Monday's elections. Both this referendum and the faculty's decision will be considered by the President Trout when he decides what policy on smoking at Washington College will be.

The faculty also voted on student awards. Awards will be awarded at graduation. Ω

Wolff Named Associate Dean

Scott Koon

Visiting Assistant Professor of English Dr. Beverly Wolff will soon be assuming the duties of the Associate Dean of Washington College. Wolff is replacing Lucille Sansing, whose last day of work was March 19. Dr. Sansing left to assume the Deanship of Whitehead Center at the University of the Redlands, near Los Angeles.

Wolff said she is uncertain exactly when she will assume the new position, but that it is likely that she will be installed in the post by June or July. "I'll miss the classroom," Wolff said, "but I expect that I'll have at least as much contact with students in this new position."

Wolff said that she does not envision making major changes in the office of the Dean, but that she intends to "Bring my own approach to programs that exist."

The replacement of Sansing comes at a time when the College could ill afford to conduct a national search to fill the position. Wolff said that Redlands actually wanted Sansing to assume her duties there in January, and that it was a stretch for them to give her until March before taking the job. Given this very limited amount of time, the College had to find a suitable candidate quickly.

Wolff was scheduled to stay on at the College only for the rest of this semester. She said she first became interested in the Associate Deanship when she first heard

See "Wolff" on page 13

SGA Keeping Busy as Year Winds Down

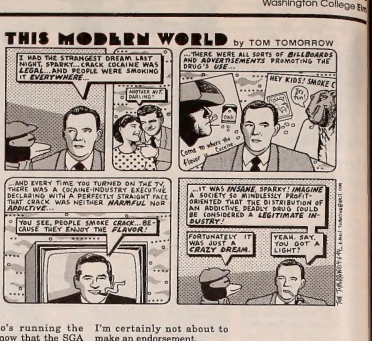
Scott Koon

In the past two weeks the SGA has been busy wrapping up the loose ends for this year. As is usually the case, this has meant a flurry of activity and legislation as senators complete the projects they have been working on over the past months.

Recently the SGA took the opportunity to examine the proposed Honor Code. The response to the document was extremely mixed, with some senators expressing grave reservations that the document is too strict, and that casual remarks about a test or assignment may in fact constitute Honor Code violations, even in cases where there is clearly no intention of cheating.

Of special concern were instances where casual remarks exchanged between students might be construed as cheating by a third party. The draft code requires any person who believes that a violation of the Honor Code has occurred to confront the suspected violator, and also requires them to request that the suspect turn themselves in for the violation. If the student in question does not turn himself in, the witness must in turn turn him in, protestations of innocence notwithstanding. Anyone failing to comply with this policy is also guilty of violating the Honor Code.

Several people made the point that many people talk about courses with friends who will never take that particular course. This situation pertains especially to upper level courses for majors.



Another major issue of debate was the 48-hour period for violators to report themselves. It was generally agreed that there should be some leniency built into the system for people who opt to self-report within this period.

In other SGA news, the Sporting Clay Club was awarded $300, on the

See "SGA," on p. 13

Inside

Start Now in the Chesapeake Bay	5
Self Destruction	5
Empties Review	6
Goldstein Speech	7
SGA Supplement	8 & 9

This upcoming Monday the Washington College student body will elect its Executive Board members of the SGA-the President, Vice President, Treasurer, Secretary and Student Life Chair.

Student Life Chair?

Don't be fooled by the name change: the Student Life Chair includes all of the duties of what we today call the Social Chair. The change in the name of the position, and the change of the position itself, is a welcome one. It is not merely a matter of semantics. Now that we have a new Student Center and an Office of Student Activities and Campus Recreation, it was obvious that the role of the Social Chairs had to change.

The SGA has amended its constitution so that the new position "will chair the Social Committee, and will work to gain consensus on student activity desires and student life concerns. The Chairperson will represent these views from the senate to the Student Activities staff."

Despite the grammatically unfortunate phraseology of the second sentence, the amendment provides a needed boost to the role of student government in determining the social life of the campus. This year's SGA and the Student Activities Office had to make the best of a bad situation last semester before the completion of the new Student Center, and they are to be lauded for their success in the face of adversity.

Spring is a time of new beginnings, and this creation of a Student Life Chair is one such beginning. It strikes me that the phrase "Student Life concerns" is deliberately vague. And while this aspect of the proposal was not discussed by the SGA in its deliberations, it seems the Student Life person basically has a blank check to write their own job description. This is not a bad thing: too much specificity would have placed unnecessary restraint on a position which should grow and develop naturally as we seek to create a new social atmosphere on this campus.

The new position is charged with coordinating "activities between the SGA and . . . the Student Activities Office." As originally proposed, the appointee was to be appointed by the SGA President in consultation with the head of Student Activities and the SGA. This seemed to me to be a sound proposition, given that the Chair is charged with working with both organizations.

Yet SGA senators voted to amend the amendment so that the position of Student Life Chair would be one elected by the student body. It is understandable that an organization of elected representatives would vote in such a manner-they owe their own positions to a voting constituency, and may feel that to take away the right to elect an official would be to betray that constituency.

But still, I wonder if they made the right choice. I'm sure most of us share the common experience of seeing student elections on both the high school and college level devolve into a kind of popularity contest. In the SGA elections, the voter turnout is hardly overwhelming, and a few votes either way can make a big difference. Who is to say that the few deciding votes are necessarily cast by well informed voters?

When you attend a social function at the College, do you always know who is working behind the scenes to make certain things run smoothly? I know I don't. That's probably a good thing. When you attend a party in the Student Center, it should be a time to relax, not to worry about who's running the thing. I know that the SGA President and Dennis Berry, and the SGA itself, all know who these people are. They're better informed on this issue than I am, so personally I'd prefer to leave the decision up to them.

In any event, that decision has been made: the position will be an elected one. The importance of the new position can be gauged by the number of candidates-it is the most hotly contested position in this year's executive board elections. All three candidates seem well qualified-and since I've already admitted that there are plenty of people better qualified to make a recommendation than I am, I'm certainly not about to make an endorsement.

This Monday's election is also important because there will be a referendum on the ballot on the status of smoking in public buildings at Washington College. The referendum is totally non-binding: its only result will be a recommendation, one way or the other, to the President. My own views on the issue are well known-perhaps too well known. The only promise I'll make here is that win, loose or draw, I'll never mention the issue of smoking on campus in this space again. Quite frankly, I'm tired of it.

The Washington College ELM
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Scott Ross Koon
News Editor
Racael Fink
Features Editor
George Jamison
Advertising Manager
George Jamison
Layout Editor
Abby R. Moss

Sports Co-Editors
Matt Murray & Y. Jeffrey lee
Photography Editor
Mary Price
Circulation Manager
Rae Brown
Office Manager
Steve Kim

The Washington College ELM is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and classes.
Opinions are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Open Forum, and Campus Voices do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the ELM staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadline for letters are Wednesday night at 8 p.m. for that week.
Correspondence can be delivered to the ELM office in the basement of Hodson Hall, sent through campus mail, mailed over Quickmail to joneel or thrown on the ELM file server. Anonymous letter should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
The ELM reserves the right to refuse any letter.
The ELM does not discriminate on any basis.

Week at a Glance

April 8-14

Film Series: La Discrete
Norman James Theatre. 7:30 p.m.
Friday, Sunday, Monday

8
Friday
Dr. Faustus
A play by Christopher Marlowe
Tawes Theatre
8:00 p.m.

9
Saturday
Dr. Faustus
A play by Christopher Marlowe
Tawes Theatre
8:00 p.m.

10
Sunday

11
Monday
A talk by Richard DeProspo
Lit House
4:30 p.m.

12
Tuesday
Ciaran O'Keeffe: A Senlor Recital
Tawes Theatre
8:00 p.m.

13
Wednesday
The Generalship of Robert E. Lee
Richard Gallagher, Penn State U.
Hynson Lounge
7:30 p.m.

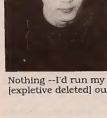
14
Thursday
Current Concerns in Russia
A talk by William M. Eichbaum
Dunning Lecture Hall
7:30 p.m.

Open Forum: Safer Sex or No Sex

Safe sex no longer exists, but safer, cautious sex does and can save your life. For some sexually active people it is too late they have already contracted one or more venereal diseases which cannot be cured. What is frightening are the men and women who have been infected and still practice unprotected sex. Some modicum of intelligence is required to be in college, yet those sexually active students who do not use protection fall far short in the intellect department.

There are some who knowingly pass disease on without real concern for the repercussions. Some might call this natural selection, and feel some degree of humor that those stupid people will most likely drop from the gene pool; others might look upon such a situation with sympathy or even anger. By unprotected this means non condom use. The pill is a method of birth control, not a shield from disease. The sponge is also only a method of birth control. The condom while not 100% effective is still the best answer to safer, healthier sex. For more information on safer sex talk to someone at Health Services or any Peer Educator.

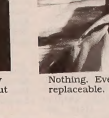
Tired of hearing the lectures on why you should wear a condom? Well think about this, anyone who passes a disease such as Herpes, Genital Warts, H.I.V./A.I.D.S., or Gonnorrea to name a few- can be sued by the victim for anything from intent to maim to murder. It takes two, yes, but it only takes one moment of non-communication to ruin someone else's life. Not sharing past sexual history with a partner is ignorant especially if you have information which might lead to a different ending. According to statistics in Newsweek within the past two years the number of teens and young adults who have H.I.V./A.I.D.S. has risen 80%. It is no longer a matter of "hooking up" for the night: it is a matter of risking your health and well being.



Scenario: Two people meet at a party, they've been scoping each other out for a few weeks and each decides that it's time. (Great) They go back to her place and trip the light fantastico (have sex) the next morning she says "By the way, I have ...(any number of diseases can be inserted here)" You start to panic you didn't use protection- you're going to get what she has, who will want you if they know you have a disease? Then she starts to calm you down saying things like "Don't worry there is no problem as long as I don't have a spell of them. You relax and go on your merry way thinking you scored and it wasn't bad and your safe because she didn't say she was having a "spell." The next day she comes down with a real bad case of (whatever she has), and you are none the wiser. Then you get back together with your ex and pass on the disease to her because you believed false reassurances from someone who is too selfish to care what they do to others, just as long as people don't think poorly of them. It happens more often

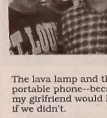
See "STD" on pg. 11

Campus Voices



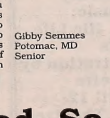
By: Tarin Towers, Scott Koon, and Steve Kim

Question: If there was a fire in your room and you could only save one thing, what would it be and why?



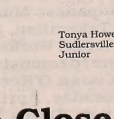
Nothing --I'd run my [expletive deleted] out

Joe Suen
Stony Brook, NY
Freshman



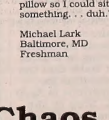
Nothing. Everything else is replaceable.

Charles Bucknor
Columbia, MD
Junior



The lava lamp and the portable phone--because my girlfriend would kill us if we didn't.

Kraus & Haus
Middle Hall



Nothing--BROWN IT.

Gibby Semmes
Potomac, MD
Senior

My roomate(Alexandra Geller) because she's not so bad.

Tonya Howell
Sudlersville, MD
Junior

As the great pharoah, Benjamin T. Hinkle once said, "I would take my pillow so I could sit on something. . . duh."

Michael Lark
Baltimore, MD
Freshman

So Far From God, So Close to Chaos

Paul Briggs

1994 is not shaping up to be a good year for Mexico.

Last year, the country seemed to be doing beautifully. Carlos Salinas de Gortari, elected president in 1988, had reined in runaway inflation, successfully privatized countless state-owned industries and dreamed about the resolution to the debt crisis, economic achievements with very few parallels in modern history.

After a memorable political battle in the United States, NAFTA was ready to come into effect, eliminating restrictive tariffs and making Mexico an investment mecca. With its resources, work force, and access to the United States, Pacific Rim and Latin American markets, it seemed as though Mexico might be able to take its place among the developed nations by the year 2000.

No sooner had the new year begun, however, than a crisis broke out. Armed rebels calling themselves "Zapatistas" (after Emiliano Zapata, a radical leader of the 1910 Revolution) seized several towns in the southern province of Chiapas. The fighting was brief and relatively few lives were lost before the Mexican army drove the rebels back into the hills. However, it was not long before human rights abuses by the army came to light, including summary executions of rebels held prisoner without trial.

Moreover, the rebellion called attention to the plight of the Maya Indians in Chiapas, which, politically as well as geographically, is much closer to Guatemala than it is to the United States. The Mayas are the poorest and most downtrodden group in one of Mexico's poorest provinces. Although no one is quite sure about the leaders of the rebellion (the Mexican government insists that they are foreign agents) most of the rank-and-file rebels are Maya.

Rather than fight a protracted guerrilla war, Salinas has chosen to try to enter into negotiations with the rebels. This has given the Zapatista leader, the self-styled "Comandante Marcos," a chance to indulge in the most extraordinary theatrics. Appearing only on camera in a black ski mask and uniform, Marcos struts and poses as a sort of Robin Hood-cum-Ché Guevara fighting Mexico's wealthy and powerful elite. North of the Rio Grande, his performances (when they have been noticed at all) have been met with cynicism and derision. Among Mexico's poor, however, the rebel meets with a much more sympathetic audience.

The end result is that although the relatively enlightened government of Salinas has defeated the rebels on the military front (two-thirds of the casualties sustained in the fighting were among Marcos's own men) it has itself been routed in the propaganda war.

Meanwhile, of course, much of Mexico's attractiveness to foreign investors has been lost completely.

As if that were not bad enough, Mexico has recently been struck by a horrible tragedy. On March 23, Luis Donaldo Colosio, the PRI's candidate for president in the upcoming elections, was assassinated in Tijuana.

First, some background information. By Mexican electoral law, it is the duty of the outgoing president to personally choose his party's candidate for the presidency. The initials of Salinas's party, PRI, stand (in English) for "Institutional Revolutionary Party." The key word here is

See "Briggs," p 11

WHEN YOU RIDE DRUNK, ONE MORE FOR THE ROAD CAN HAVE AN ENTIRELY DIFFERENT MEANING.

Alcohol quickly affects your judgment, balance, and coordination. Don't drink and ride. Or your last drink might be your last drink.
MOTORCYCLE SAFETY FOUNDATION

Classifieds

Cruise Ship Jobs!
We will show you how to get on board.
800-303-2700

Cruise Ship Jobs!
Students needed! Earn $2000+ monthly. Summer, holidays, fulltime. World Travel, Caribbean, Hawaii, Europe, Mexico. Tour Guides, Gift Shop Sales, Deck Hands, Casino Workers, etc. No Experience Necessary. Call 602-680-4647, Ext C147.

The Office of Student Affairs reminds all students interested in living in East or West Halls that the deadline for applications is April 18. Stop by the Student Affairs Office for more information.

Stor & Lock

Self storage
You store it,
Lock it
And keep the key

1004 Washington Avenue,
Chestertown, MD 778-6464

Important Dates For Course Registration for Fall '94

Friday, April 8: Last Day to Submit Program Cards
Monday April 18: Arena Registration (if

Blub

by Tanya Allen

When we last left off, the newly-transformed-back-into-a-human PRESIDENT TROUT rode into the sunset on the back of DEAN WUBBLESfish—a wahoo. "We will save Washington College!" the two declared. "We will find out how to change everyone back into human beings again! We will remove this curse! We will make everything right!"

As they were riding off into the sunset, the Chestertown fishermen cast their nets into the Chester River and caught a quarter of the WC population, bringing them into the sun, all wiggling, scales gleaming, mouths gasping "Help us! Help us! Somebody, save us!"

The Chestertown fishermen cast their nets again and caught another quarter of the WC population, bringing them up to the sun as well, all wiggling, scales gleaming, mouths gasping....and then the fishermen cast their nets again and caught another quarter! And then the last quarter! All the little fishes wiggling, scales gleaming, mouths gasping! The Chestertown fishermen lifted the nets into their boats! Sunlight poured down on them and everyone—students, faculty, and staff wiggled, gasped, gleamed, and.... died!

"Died?" asks THE READER.

"Yes, died!" says THE AUTHOR OF THIS FISH TALE "Everyone died! They all died! Everyone on the Washington College Campus died!" THE AUTHOR OF THIS FISH TALE then dove at her desk, covered with thesis material, research books, graduate school material, half-edited "Broadsides," unread novels, etc. etc. and then declares "YES! Everyone DIED! And they all went...to HELL!"

"Everyone?"

"Well....no, I take that back. Everyone...except for me and my boyfriend and two of my favorite female friends."

"Two of your favorite female friends?"

"Er, no. If I save two of my favorite female friends, I'll have to save THEIR boyfriends and favorite friends as well, and then I'll have to save their boyfriends' favorite friends and their favorite friends' favorite friends too, and then....no. Everyone can go to Hell except for me and my boyfriend."

"Everyone?"

"EVERYONE!"

Twentieth Century Japanese Music; Toru Takemitsu, His Life and Works
A lecture/demonstration by Ciaran O'Keeffe
Tuesday, April 12
8:00 p.m. Tawes Theatre

Solution to last week's crossword puzzle

DIRT

The Big Black Hole

Being a senior has its ups and downs.

I didn't have to be advised this week or last week, which on the surface means having two days off. But instead of lounging in the sun, playing frisbee, or taking a road trip, I worked on my senior obligations.

I have a thesis draft due today, and by the time you read this I will have gone through two comps sessions for art history, one this morning and one graduates call any job wh... earns the equivalent ... welfare "temporary. Temporary jobs are the kin... you take while your resu... is going out and you're doi... interviews, waiting for th... Call of the Lumberman.

But not all of us ar... eager to take the next ... step after college, whether ... academic or occupational. Some of us are going for s... Year Off, which involve... taking a temporary job fo... enough to call it permanent.

J. Tarin Towers

yesterday. Art history majors are required to know the date, title and author of every canvas ever painted, every sculpture ever carved, and every building ever built. This is fun.

These, of course, are the downs. Seniors not only have to keep up with their full course load, we also have to complete our two senior obligations, and on top of all that, we have to decide what to do when the big void gets here.

The big void starts on May 23 AG, which is Monday morning. After Graduation. Some of us have already decided that the next logical step is graduate school, and that the hard work required to achieve that goal has been done by this point.

The other alternative is work, unless you can convince your parents that supporting you for another eighteen years is a viable option.

Work falls into two categories: permanent and temporary. And I'm not talking about temp work, otherwise known as Other People's Filing. No, the difference is more subtle. Roughly, permanent jobs require resumés. Temporary jobs don't.

Most college

This can actual... lead to making more mone... in a given year than peopl... who opt for permanent ... career-track positions right ... away. Or at least, better job... titles. When you have a ... degree, that means you won't ... be a mere clerk for very long. It means you'll be in ... Assistant Manager, which ... has about the same pay bu... more work.

Me, I plan o... hopping in my car, heading ... west and stopping just wes... of the Mississippi. Then I'll ... bartend, or work at a hou... store, all the while living o... sin and cool stuff like that. ... My boyfriend lives in Iowa ... and I need a change of scen... (and a new set of living).

Whatever you decid... to do, have fun. This summe... may be your last chance t... take that roadtrip you've ... always wanted to take, or t... get a part-time job stuffing ... envelopes at $16 per hour ... work at McDonald's until you ... get enough money to go to ... Europe.

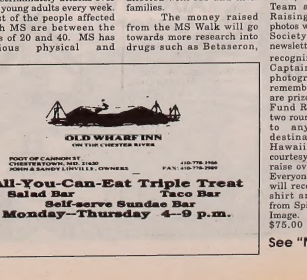
I say last chance ... because statistically, most o... us will have full time jobs ... and the start of a family ... within the next 5-7 years. ... That means not being able t... drop everything and go t... Denny's at 4 a.m. That ... means not being able to quit ... your job and be a bum until ... your money runs out—... because your bills won't let ... you, and neither will your ... wife.

So spend this ... summer, or longer, thinking ... really hard about what you ... want to do with the rest of ... your life. Not that you'll ... never be able to change your ... mind, or your career. But ... this is a good opportunity to ... do things that you might not ... have the freedom to do once ... you're reading other people's ... resumés.

And if you're an ... underclassman: enjoy this ... too. It'll be gone before you ... know it.

START NOW

I have been asked to write an article about the Chesapeake Bay, a task that is simply to large to even hope to do justice to in a single article. Thus I will assume that most people know the basic logistics of the Bay, and will only mention a few aspects of the Bay that are critical for the continued survival of this estuary we call home.



One of the main things that seem true with any environmental problem is that everyone keeps busy pointing fingers at everyone else, and often very little gets done to find a feasible solution to the problem. People have blamed the sewage treatment plants, the farms, the watermen, and acid rain to name a few. However, no one of these is responsible for damaging the Bay — it is all of these factors combined that create the problems we see today. For years sewage treatment plants were responsible for spewing raw sewage into the Bay, and thus responsible for choking the Bay with nutrients. The sewage, combined with the fertilizer run-off from farms and suburban yards, causes algae blooms which are dangerous for two reasons. They cloud the water, thus blocking sunlight from the underwater grasses, plus, when these massive blooms die their decomposition uses up vast amounts of oxygen, and thus literally choke the organisms of the Bay. Another culprit of blocking sunlight is sediment run-off that is flooding into the Bay due to the decreased forests, boom in construction, and farming. Compounded upon all of these problems is the constant stresses put on commercial animals by the Bay's watermen.

Many things can be done to help save the Bay. Increasing pressure must be put on farmer's to plant buffer strips on their land, particularly on the banks of any streams or rivers that run through their land. All other land-owners in the Chesapeake Bay region also need to cease drenching their lawns in fertilizers — a lush green lawn is hardly worth the loss of the Bay. The Bay's watermen are not some evil moneyhungry villians out to strip the Bay. They, more than anyone else, depend on the Bay for a living. However, strict restrictions must be placed upon both the fragile oyster population, as well as upon the Blue Crab. Since the watermen practice free-enterprise it is difficult for them to limit themselves for they have to remain competitive, thus the limiting has to be done by the government.

However, it must be stressed that one should not perceive too gloomy of a picture of the Bay. The sewage treatment plants have greatly improved their efficiency and now one can only hope that they can keep up with the Mid-Atlantic region's overpopulation growth. The stripped bass population is doing well, and currently the Blue Crab is doing well. In fact, in a rare measure of governmental foresight, the restrictions upon crabbing that are trying to be introduced are not a reaction to an emergency, but are a step to assure that an emergency will not occur. So, as you graduate from school, keep on enjoying eating those tasty crabs, just try to refrain from sloshing on loads of fertilizer upon your lawns because if you live anywhere in Maryland, Virginia, or Pennsylvania chances are that you are in the

See "Start Now," p. 7

The Most Self -Destructive Generation Since the 1920's

by Tanya Allen

This is a difficult article for me to write, because of the personal aspect of it. I have a hormone imbalance and a severe form of a blood-sugar imbalance called hypoglycemia. The two of these combined with family problems and all the regular adolescent agonies into a case of clinical depression that began in fifth grade and lasted for seven years—up to and through my senior year of high school. When I was 16 I started hurting myself whenever I became upset; hitting myself in the face, arms and legs; and cutting myself, using my nails, broken glass, tacks, safety pins, and anything else around that was sharp.

For a few months I thought I was the only person who did things as abnormal as this, but unfortunately, after talking to peers, and after spending the summer after my 17th birthday in a psychiatric hospital/drug and alcohol rehabilitation center, I discovered that my behavior was not unusual in people my age, and gained insight into a side of our generation that I wish I had no knowledge of. It may be argued that I can only speak for middle class suburban youth instead of for the whole of my fractured generation, but I admit it is difficult for me to write about this topic objectively. I know the majority of us are not self-destructive, but we have a high enough minority of self-destructive people that many many of us have at least had the experience of dealing with friends or relatives who have suffered from this problem. I personally have had at least 14 friends who have been in psychiatric hospitals, and have gone to the funerals of two young men who committed suicide. I know a young woman who had slept with 5 guys by the time she was 13, and another woman who started having sex at 16 and whose friends had a big "hoffmitzva" for her when she turned 17, because she'd slept with 13 guys. I've used street to clean the blood of a 16 year old woman who did something horrid to her arm off of a wall. I once knew the frustration of dating an alcoholic. I have restrained myself from slapping friends who carved anarchy signs and crosses into their skin; rocked children who were contemplating suicide; and the first thing I came to when I opened the folder I've been keeping on this topic was the obituary of a friend who died of a drug overdose.

Between 1980 and 1987 the number of people between 10 and 19 discharged from psychiatric units increased 43 percent, from 126,000 to 180,000. In 1987—the year I was hospitalized, America had a record rate of 18 suicides per 100,000—a total of 1,901. This was double that of 1970. According to a recent number

See "Allen," on p. 14

SGA Sponsors MS Walk Tomorrow

Thea Mateu

Tomorrow, Chestertown and Washington College will be welcoming the Maryland Chapter of the Multiple Sclerosis Society in the MS Walk. The MS Walk is a fundraising event supporting the National Multiple Sclerosis Society in the creation and maintenance of support services and research. Thousands of people in the United States in over 50 cities will be participating in the walk and joining efforts to raise funding.

Multiple Sclerosis (MS) is a disease that randomly attacks the nervous system and destroys the individual's control over the muscles and body in general. The disease indiscriminately attacks over 200 young adults every week. Most of the people affected with MS are between the ages of 20 and 40. MS has serious physical and emotional effects on the patient's lives and their families as well. The unpredictability of the disease makes it a frightening and devastating one. The symptoms and progress of MS cannot be predicted or charted systematically, and people with MS can never know with certainty how long their attacks will last or how severe they will be. There is no known prevention or cure for MS. One of the effects of Multiple Sclerosis can be total paralysis; during the attacks the person can lose his/her ability to speak, walk, or see clearly. The National Multiple Sclerosis Society is hard at work in their efforts to find a cure, prevention and treatment to improve the lives of those affected with MS and their families.

The money raised from the MS Walk will go towards more research into drugs such as Betaseron, that has been recently approved by the FDA to help treat the symptoms of MS in some people. It will also help provide for Individual and Family Support, Independent Living Assistance, Advocacy, Public and Professional Education and Therapeutic and Recreation Programs in the community.

Our Student Government Association is helping in the organization of this Walk in Chestertown along with our local chapter of the MS Society. You can walk alone or as a team. For a team you only need four people and a captain. Registration forms can be obtained from SGA President Jamie Baker. Statewide awards will be presented to the Largest Family/Friends Team, the Largest Corporate Team and the Top Fund Raising Team. The team photos will appear in the MS Society newsletter. All teams will be recognized and each Team Captain will receive a photograph of the team to remember the event. There are prizes offered for the Top Fund Raiser who will win two round-trip airline tickets to any TWA domestic destination (including Hawaii and San Juan) courtesy of TWA. You must raise over $3,000 to qualify. Everyone raising over $75.00 will receive a MS WALK T-shirt and gift certificates from Spiegel or The Sharper Image. Walkers who submit $75.00 or more by March

See "MS," on p. 6

A Band That Bridges Nothing

A Review of The Emptys' "Bridge Across the Ocean"

Brian Matheson

It's always tough to really listen to music the first time you're hearing it live. I came to this conclusion during the first set of the Emptys' concert last month. Then I left Ardy's for a bit, and took a little walk. When I came back I revised my first sentence with the following qualification: unless the band is really really good.

As I sat down, and got comfortable in my seat, the eeriness of the first licks hit me like a brick wall. "Another Place," sets you up for its passion with some killer percussion on the recorded version; but I only wish I could take you to the same point of despair as Doug Derryberry can on stage. His guitar is the perfect mirror for the brilliantly forlorn lyrics that literally dance out of Mitch's mouth. You begin to think, along with the band, that maybe that this isn't the "perfect time to find out what life is all about." The reggae like beat helps you revisit that place where the "meat-market mentality" finally killed your spirit. But as with any revisitation, "it's not the same anymore." At the time you didn't think it was a sin, but how about now; was the time right to learn about lust? Turning these ideas around, it's easy to miss the subversive rhythmic changes that come in the middle of another killer guitar solo. The song ends with love, and a note of resolution that erases the fear; or does it just make you forget about it?

I certainly do, with the happy, 'elevator-music' opening of the next track on the CD. But Mitch just won't let us. "Do you remember? You said you would a year ago." The music intensifies as the song goes on, and the whole diverges into utter chaos as Mitch seeks resolution and remembrance. His lyrics leave me feeling incapable of writing anything that could come close to relating the intricate melodies. The peaceful music belies the tension of the lyrics, but the resolution of "the sun going down on me" parallels the lapidary melody that reaches after that painted sky.

This same musical mastery is displayed in songs like "Bigger than alone." The horns makes this song sound bigger than lyrics like "we can feel a little bit smaller together," and "I like the moon." Love is again the topic of Mitch's composition, indeed we find him naming a restaurant after it: "Luna D'amor." Amore is, of course, one of the most common topics in rock and roll, but the Emptys put their own spin on all the old problems. Other tunes on this album, like "Im Bare," and "Change of Season," display this same kind of tongue-in-cheek, cynical twist more forcefully, but overall, this album straddles the full spectrum of emotion and guides the careful or casual listener into a sympathy with its composers.

That seems to be the hallmark of bands like the Emptys, though. It's refreshing to see such a beautiful, yet plain Jane, wandering, Garcia-esque guitar set to words that convey such reversals as "It nothing lasts forever "I'll just grab some nothing and split," and "she can't send her reflection, see she's...." Rock and roll's been around for a while, and there's only so much that's worth writing songs about. But here's a band that takes a fresh look at life, love, and the college experience. I'm almost tempted to think that they wrote them during a stroll down the hallowed halls of his alma mater, WU.

We can certainly read our experience here at good ole' WAC into the album's title track, "Bridge Across the Ocean." The context of the song is a pot-smoking director (professor?) hooking up with one of his young cast members; "...see she's Guilty of a scene she never starred in. Worthy of the part she always plays...." In this song, that part would seem to be the temporary diversion of a worldly fellow who's eye she caught while "out rehearsing with the zebras." So these two are stuck with the memory of an awkward experience; another scene written into the passion play.

The unfortunate truth of it is that the pencil with which this scene is written doesn't have any eraser, so "...he's Guilty of the scenes he never edits. Guilty of a crime that ain't so bad...." So he sparks up splesfa, chills to Latifah, and does his best to forget. The rhythmic groove of the song certainly helps us forget about everything but the beat. Jeff holds the whole thing together in a way that makes you wonder why bassists usually just disappear into the background of the tune. This guy is just plain funky! Leland's drums pull us out of our seat; there's just no describing his rhythms that could possibly do him justice. All this, of course, provides the substance for the incredible tension between Mitch's Lyrics and backing guitar, and Doug's guitar lead and backing vocals.

Their work on the album is phenomenally dissonant, and makes me recall all I've seen them do on stage. This kind of recollection draws you into the music in the same way that they drew me back into Andy's on Friday night.

But there's more to the Empty' style than mere trips down Mitch's mnemonic lane; my personal favorite on the album has a more meditative flavor. Rather than dwelling on previous loves it wanders about the world of life's purpose—not the cultural underview of collected experiences, but the chaotic reality of experience itself. There's an inherent futility to the song of life, the futility that makes us want to "Plot a flea on a dog on a planet." "Keeps a beat from the heat of a groove." And this mellow groove makes us comfortable in our "scientific" knowledge of everything; but then, "all that you really know is nothing compared to me at you." "You wouldn't expect me to see what I'm supposed to see," at least, not if there's anything interesting being said about the reality I'm looking at. Again, the duality of life is presented in somewhat mournful melody belies our tense frustration with this bizarre world in which we live—where our freedom is supreme, but our social relations (particularly monetary ones) are in fact taking full advantage of it. Our only recourse is to the scientific absurdity of "taking census for humanity" in the sand." But is that our purpose—to be a "subject in someone else's study?" Can we devoid of all but this analytic reason? Must I feel empty without them to "plot a point on the graph there for me"? Not if we just escape culture and loose ourselves in the beat, for therein lies the escape from the drudgery of this life. Until, at least, one remembers his curious about this other place: now is certainly no time to find out what life is all about. And whether or not we might unravel our purpose with a nice fat joint, a little tab, or with several cocktails while sitting at a bar, this revelation builds nothing but a momentary bridge to this other place across that atomistic ocean of sensuality.

I can't thank Andy enough for getting these guys to come across the bridge and play at her bar; if you're interested, you might want to check them out on April 30th. It's a Saturday, so it'll cost you a few bucks and you'll need an ID. But, unless you're up for a road trip to DC or until we can get them to play on campus (hint hint), that might be your last chance to catch this band before they hit the big time. And who knows maybe you'll dig this truly metaphysical band as much as I do.

Senior Bash: BEER BEER BEER BEER BEER

The senior campaign, striving for 100 percent participation in donations, is ready to throw a bash to celebrate the successes so far.

Campaign committee members have voted to put all the money collected towards a scholarship endowment which would give a rising senior money for tuition and fees. This senior, a "behind-the-scenes" hard worker, will be chosen by the Senior Campaign Committee and the Deans of Students.

In the immediate future, however, the Senior Class Party kicks off Saturday night at 7 p.m. With the exciting combination of Dave Lipinsky's band, hot dogs and beer on tap, not to mention the company of friends, it's sure to be a blast.

Admission is just $5, and all proceeds go to the scholarship fund. If you've already given, you're in for free; if you haven't, this is a perfect time to join in and give your support to the students of the future.

"MS," from p. 5

31,1994 will receive their T-shirts early. If you collect $125 or more in pledges you qualify for a national drawing with a trip to Paris, France or anywhere TWA flies system wide as the grand prize.

You can dedicate your walk to a friend or family member afflicted with MS, or the Solemates program can match you up with someone who has the disease that you can walk for. You'll receive an "I'm walking for ..." sticker to display and get detailed information on the individual.

All students, faculty and staff are welcomed and encouraged to participate in the walk. Sororities and fraternities can register teams as a Community Project. Volunteers are also needed to help with the organization in positions such as Registration, Entertainers, Support Vehicles and more. You can call the Multiple Sclerosis Society at (410) 821-8626. Ω

The Honorable Louis L. Goldstein Speaks at Washington College

Washington College Yesterday, Today, Tomorrow

Good evening officers, members and guests of the Washington College Historical Society, ladies and gentlemen. I'm delighted to be with you at my alma mater here in historic Chestertown, Kent County, Maryland.

Kent County was created as Maryland's second county in 1642. When it was first created, Kent County included the entire Eastern Shore-most of which was still undeveloped. The county included Kent Island, which was the site of the first English settlement in Maryland, started in 1631 by William Claiborne. But today, Kent Island is part of Queen Anne's County. The town of Chestertown was officially created in 1706. But, in fact, the courthouse had already stood there for 20 years, on a piece of land valued at 2,000 pounds of tobacco.

Chestertown soon became the maritime center of the Eastern Shore. And during the Revolutionary War, it became the site of one of the most famous tax protests in Maryland history. That was the Chestertown Tea Party of May 23, 1774- when the brave Patriots of Kent County threw British-taxed tea on board the ships into the Chester River.

That act and many others helped America to win freedom. And 203 years ago today-on March 30, 1791- Maryland ceded the land to form the District of Columbia to the United States Government for the new nation's permanent capital.

And on that same day our patron—President George Washington- proclaimed the boundary of the new capital city on the Potomac River.

By the time the city named for George Washington was born, the only college to be named after him by his express consent—was almost nine years old.

Of course, I'm talking about this great institution—Washington College—the oldest chartered college in Maryland and the tenth oldest in the United States.

While the founding fathers were still laying out the new nation's capital city, our college was busy trying to define higher education in the New World. It's something that we are still doing today.

I believe that the essence of higher education ought to be about learning to see the opportunities that the world has to offer. Our college was founded by a man who could see the opportunities of higher education in the New World. He was a Scotsman named William Smith who had been educated at the University of Aberdeen. He was also a clergyman. He came to America in 1751 because he saw the opportunity to start a college of his own. He wrote the charter for the University of Pennsylvania in 1755. In 1780, William Smith traveled here to Chestertown, Maryland, to become the principal of the Kent County School.

That year—1780—Reverend Smith also led a conference of clergy and laymen of the Church of England, meeting at Emmanuel Church in Chestertown. They reorganized to Church of England in America as the Protestant Episcopal Church. William Smith did a great job at the Kent County School, because in this these first two years, the student population grew 30 to 142.

Some folks would have just been satisfied with that growth. But William Smith saw the opportunity for something bigger and better. He thought that Kent County could support a college—and he went to the Maryland General Assembly for a charter. In May, 1782, the General Assembly told him that he could have his charter, if he could raise 5,000 pounds sterling as a private endowment within five years. With that go-ahead, William Smith started a fund-raising campaign that would be the envy of many institutions today. He made sure that he involved some of the prominent men of the day.

One of them was William Paca of Queen Anne's and Anne Arundel Counties. He was a Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence—and he was elected Governor of Maryland on November 17, 1782. William Paca invited local planters to his beautiful home on Wye Island to hear his plan for a new college. William Paca himself contributed 50 pounds as a charter subscriber to the school, which became one of his favorite causes.

George Washington also gave a substantial gift of money—then apologized for not giving more!

William Smith didn't miss many opportunities in his search for money, as he rode on horseback from farm to farm, from plantation to plantation.

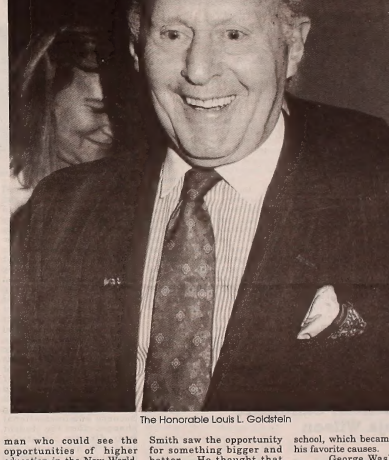
One historian estimates that by the time he was finished, William Smith collected five percent of the total money in circulation in Maryland! And it took him only five months, instead of five years. The Maryland General Assembly granted a charter for Washington College in October, 1782. William Smith became the College's first President.

q In a letter to President Smith, George Washington wrote, "I am much indebted for this honor conferred upon me, by the giving my name to the college in Chester, and serving on its first Board of Visitors and Governors." In June, 1789, a delegation, including President Smith, called on President George Washington at his office in New York City to confer on him the honorary degree of Doctor in Laws.

Our founder, William Smith, also established a charter for St. John's College in Annapolis in 1784. He wanted to combine the two colleges to create a great University of Maryland. That union never did come about, although this "University of Maryland" continued in name until 1805, when the General Assembly ended its annual contribution to both colleges.

To some students today, the course of study that the early students at Washington College followed would be a shock, because it included a heavy dose of the classics, Greek and Latin, and Mathematics for everyone. The cost of tuition would also be a shock. In 1796, tuition was $16. Room and Board would add another $80 or $90 to the cost.

Today, students still have to follow rules and regulations, but you're probably happy that you don't have to abide by some of the rules of bygone days. If students weren't prepared to recite in class, they could be fined fifty cents. Quarreling or swearing could draw a fine of two dollars. Students were also advised not to damage the college buildings.



Other aspects of college life haven't changed that much. Washington College started out in good financial shape, but when the State cut its subsidies to the College, the Board of Visitors and Governors looked for ways to raise money.

In 1816, the General Assembly approved the Board's request to conduct a lottery to raise $30,000. The proceeds went toward repairing facilities and starting a permanent fund.

In 1824, Washington College became much more like the school we know today, because that's when it started to offer the opportunity of higher education to women. Reportedly, every member of the faculty was in favor of the change. One of the reasons for admitting women was that it would be greatly help to improve the moral tone of the College.

When I came to Washington College in 1931, our nation was in the grips of a great depression. I had the opportunity for a higher education because I won a scholarship to go to either St. John's College in Annapolis or to Washington College in

See, "Goldstein," 12

The Honorable Louis L. Goldstein

SGA Elections Supplement

Presidential Candidates

James Baker

I believe in making a commitment to Washington College. Before I was elected president a year ago, I was committed to many different groups. I have been employed as a peer advisor, a member of ODK, Psi Chi, a student band, the Rugby Team, the Ice Hockey Team, the Rescue Squad, and the Dean's List. Now my commitment is to serve as your representative in the SGA.

My involvement with the SGA began last year when I served as dorm senator. I began to recognize the potential power that students have when we work together. I began realizing some of these goals both alone and with other senators. There are many areas of the SGA that I worked with as a senator and I was able to gain a thorough understanding of many of these diverse tasks of the senate. This experience encouraged me to run for SGA President last year. Through my experience as President, I have learned a great deal about our school. My involvement as a member of the Long Range Planning Committee has introduced me to many concerns of the entire college community. The Long Range Planning Committee has critically analyzed the position of Washington College in a larger context. In this setting I was appointed to represent the views of students. I believe my experience as President this past year clearly makes me the most qualified candidate for another term in office.

This past year, some of the SGA's accomplishments include, Casey Time, Parent's Day, Birthday Ball, the Multiple Sclerosis Walk, Earth day/Parent's Day, addressing Student Center concerns, addressing the Long Range Plan, working with Communicorp, Middle States, the Board-Student Relations, and the redrafting of the Honor Code. I do not take credit for all of these events, but they provide examples of an efficient SGA working on student concerns. These are just a few of the ways that we as students have empowered ourselves to reach our goals.

Helping other students to accomplish their goals is an important responsibility of the president. The president's main responsibility is to the students; to represent your views to the Faculty, Administration, and the Board. The ability to act as a liaison is crucial to the President's role. I believe that I have been receptive to suggestions and will try to continue to be approachable and available.

If re-elected, I would like to improve group leadership and better communications between the SGA and students. I would also continue to work with the IFC and any other interested groups to encourage the social life on our campus. My role as President is to work for the students and represent your views. I would welcome the opportunity to build on this experience and continue to work for you. Looking towards next year, I believe I can do an even better job, and I ask that you re-elect

Max Walton

I have dropped my name in the hat for SGA president because I believe that the SGA needs a greater voice in the affairs of the college community. I have been a member of the SGA for three years.

I was the president of the class of 1995 for two years and vice president of the SGA last year. I have seen how much the SGA can accomplish. With my association with the class of 1995, we brought in a parents day that marvels any all-campus events. We argued for a new student center and we got one. There will be a new honor code here at the College. These are changes that the SGA can make if the right leadership is displayed. I believe that during that during my tenure in the SGA, I have provided that effective and strong leadership. The SGA should and can significantly effect the policies of the College. I guess this is why I have had my differences of opinion with the administration from time to time. The SGA needs to stand up for what it believes. That is why I believe that students should have a significant voice in all matters of colleges planning because administrational changes effect the student body directly. A strong leader is needed for the student voice to be heard.

I am concerned with the social life of the college. The morale of the students is somewhat down, and I am committed to regain a live, thriving social life here on campus. We need to commit the funds for a varied social program of diverse activities for those who reside here on campus. It is important for the students to be in direct contriol of the social acitivities on campus. For off-campus activities, I believe that it is necessary for the SGA to provide safe transportation back campus, and I will bring a Taxi service if elected. I am committed to keeping Washington College a non-suitcase school.

Beyond a stronger student voice, improved social life, and effective leadership, I will brind a more effective honor code, bnetter alumni relations, and better awareness to the student body about what the SGA is doing. I will not decline an invitation to speak to any hall about the SGA. I will involve more people in the activities of thje SGA.

Leadership is something that I want to give to this college. If I am elected, I will be a no nosense kind of president. I am not afraid to stand up and fight for the students as a whole. I have the experience to handle the job, and I will be a different kind of president— one who is committed to the students and a fighter for their interests. The key question to to ask yourself is, "Is the College better now than it was last year?" If you think that it is, vote for my opponent— but if you would like to see a different kind of student representation, and a committment to the students as a whole, vote for a change.

Vice Presidential Candidate
Sonja Wilson

On Monday, April 11, you will be asked to cast your vote for next year's Executive Board. You must decide which candidates are most qualified for each position. I hope that you will consider me for the office of Vice President of the Student Government Association.

I served as a Dorm Senator of Caroline House for two consecutive years. In addition to being a Resident Assistant, I am currently the Treasurer of the Student Government. This position has enabled me to fully understand the role of the SGA as a group, as well as the individual roles of the Executive Board members. Because of this active exposure to the SGA, I can honestly say that I am highly qualified for the role of Vice President.

The current Vice President has made great strides in the restructuring of the Honor Code. I hope to contiue working on the Honor Code until the Student Government can comfortably submit a proposal to include in our constitution. Another project that merits attention is the submission of a formal student response to the Long Range Plan. This document must be addressed by the student body. I look forward to presenting a response from the Senate.

One of the duties of the Vice President is to serve as a vice chairperson to the All-Campus Judiciary. As a Resident Assistant, I am familiar with the policies and procedures of Washington College. Therefore, if elected, I do not foresee any difficulties in assuming this role.

My three years of experience with the Student Government Association have prepared me for this role. When choosing your candidates next Monday, I encourage you to vote for me as Vice President.

Photo not available.

Sharla Ponder is running unopposed for SGA Secretary

SGA Elections Supplement

Student Life Chair

Ken Pipkin

Increasing awareness of the Student Activities Chair has resulted in an increasing change throughout my three years here. Washington College has found that having an active campus life is the key to no longer being "suitcase" campus. Social events have increased; bands are more frequently seen and other activities such as the comedy club and many of the other one day events have made this campus more enjoyable. The activities chairs and the Student Activities Office have both seperately made the life on campus more exciting.

Within the last three years I have seen the SGA and the Social Chairs increase activities and make life on campus more fun. Their ideas have increased the activities. The way these ideas were acted upon were good and with them I believe I can increase and speed up the process of the action. The influence of the activities have helped me to form ideas that I believe will make campus life even better. The students, being the best resources, help to make campus life better. With the Activities Chair being changed to a singular Social Life Chair, I believe that the ability to recognize all the different aspects on campus is nessesary. I want to see all the campus better represented and an increase in the and an increase in the connection between student activities and Social Life Chair increase. Over the past three years these two organizations have been seperated and I believe that these two organizations need to work together better. I believe that these two bodies have been at a distance and I have worked with both and feel very comfortable with both groups. Working with both groups I believe I am competent to bring both together to better the student life.

My experiences with SGA as a dorm senator and governor, as an RA on a freshman hall, and various other activities I feel as though I have the abilities to take what I have seen and make social life better. I have been involved in party planning, organizing bands concerts, and many other various events. I know you are sitting there going why vote for this guy, well because I work hard and what you want is important to me because I want to make campus life better.

Mark Reyero

Recently, the Executive Board of the SGA had made a proposal to do away with the elected position of "Social Chair". Instead, they wish to appoint the position through the Office of Student Affairs. Upon reading the proposed amendment, members of the SGA, including myself, became opposed to the switch. Perhaps above any other position in the SGA, what the Social Chair does is directly felt by the student body. The student body entrusts him/her to provide them with activities ranging from bands to Velcro wall jumping. I, as did a few others, fear that this position is being taken away from the student body and placed in the hands of a few people. Thankfully, the amendment failed. Upon its failure, I proposed the current amendment which keeps the position an elected one. However, the Student Life Chair (formerly the Social Chair) must be present at all events sponsored by the SGA with Student Affairs and conduct weekly meetings with them.

Whoever is elected to Student Life Chair, that person must have three very important credentials, initiative, responsibility, and contacts. Having served as Sophomore Class President during the past year, I have learned much about what those three words actually mean. In the fall, I helped to coordinate and plan the first annual "Casey Time", which I am extremely proud of. Over forty students and alumni got up on a cold and wet Saturday morning to plant trees and roll around in the mud outside of Kent.

After being elected Sophomore Class President last spring, I had contacted the booking agent for the band God Street Wine. Although I didn't actually sign the contract, I believe that the few phone calls that I had made with the booking agent helped to book them for Earth Day. My brother has founded a production company, Gatehouse Productions, in upstate New York which is coordinating bands with Michael Lang the founder of the original Woodstock Festival and who is currently working on the Woodstock II Festival this summer. Through my brother's company, I may be able to attract some quality bands to Washington College. I also volunteered my time back in February to help Carey Hargrove with the Birthday Ball. The Student Life Chair must be willing to coordinate events such as "Casey Time", Earth Day, and the Birthday Ball to make Washington College an exciting place.

Carey Hargrove

Hello my name is Carey Hargrove and I am running for the position of Student Life Chair. I first became interested in this position as a result of my recent involvement in the 1994 Washington College Birthday Ball. The success of this event gave me the confidence that the Washington College Community is looking for in order to revitalize the social life here at Washington College. I believe that I can successfully fulfill this position and bring the students of Washington College the change that they have been looking for.

For years, I have been spending my holidays and summers working for my families' business, which deals specifically with the production of a variety of special events. This business has been the way of life that I have been accustomed to ever since I can remember, and I would like to continue this for the rest of my life. This is a business, where I hold a great deal of responsibility, that I take very seriously, and would like to carry these same responsibilities to the position of the Student Life Chair.

This past year I have served as the Parliamentarian for the Student Government Association (SGA) and became oriented with the events that were organized to increase the student life at WAC. The student life dwindled last year due to the delay of the opening of the Cove. When there were SGA events they were mostly just bands. I would like to focus not only on bring bands to our campus, but on other activities that both students on and off campus will enjoy. After the Birthday Ball, it became very obvious that people enjoyed a theme party, instead of just listening to a band. I would like to continue this "theme" a little bit further, by having events that have the potential to become a tradition here at Washington College.

I feel that the majority of students at Washington College want to make changes in the social life here. I strongly believe that through my experiences and responsibility that I have been delegated in the past, that I would be the best candidate for the position of Student Life Chair.

You never know, one day you may see organized pig racing on the lawn in front of Bill Smith. Who knows, anything could happen here at Washington College if I were to be elected for this position.

Treasurer

Liz Likens

I would like to present to you my qualifications for the position of SGA Treasurer and state why I should be elected to this office. My experience with the SGA and the Student Activities Office make me the most qualified candidate for Treasurer. By having served on four committees within the student government and currently holding the position of Associate Director of Special Events in the Student Activities Office, I have become familiar with the internal operations of this college. The organizational skills that I have developed through these positions are crucial to the role of Treasurer and I will successfully apply them to this office. I also believe that my past experience with the Student Executive Boards make me the best candidate for Treasurer. Serving at my high school as the SGA Secretary, President, and Senior Class Treasurer has provided me with the skills that are essential for all members on an Executive Board to have in order to successfully perform the duties that are required of them.

While it is important for the most qualified candidate to be elected Treasurer, it is equally important to elect a candidate who will be committed to the job- a candidate that can be trusted with the responsibilities of the job and a candidate who recognizes flaws in the system and is willing to correct them. If I am elected Treasurer, I will work at consolidating all of the SGA money into one account. As I see it, the current systems subject to unintentional errors. With the business office reserving the right to allocate funds from the SGA account, there is the potential problem of discrepancies occurring between the ledgers of the business office and the SGA Treasurer. I would like to see one account for the Student Government with access limited to the President and Treasurer. I feel this will eliminate possible differences in the records, make allocating money more efficient, and work solely for the student body. I believe my qualifications and views are representative of a competent SGA Treasurer, and I solicit your votes for this position.

"Goldstein," from 7

Chestertown.

I have to admit that I had never heard of Washington College, so I asked the advice of an educator I respected- Franklin O. Day, our county superintendent of public schools. He advised me to go to Washington College because it was further from my home in Prince Frederick, Calvert County, MD, and I'd have a better chance to meet new people, make friends, to learn to make decisions, and to develop independence. I took his advice, came to Washington College, where I majored in Chemistry, and I've never regretted it. When I say Washington College was far away from my Calvert County home in Historic Tidewater Southern Maryland, you might not realize how far it really was until you realize that we didn't even have one Chesapeake Bay Bridge, much less two.

I was first eligible to vote during the general election of 1934. But to get home to vote, I left Washington College on Monday. We didn't have absentee ballots in those days. I didn't have a car, so I had to catch rides all the way around the head of the Bay to Elkton, then to Baltimore, and then home. I didn't get back until Wednesday. I missed a total of six classes, and I was fined $2 a class for cutting class in order to go home and vote.

In those days that was a lot of money. It was especially for me — because I had to have a job to pay my own expenses. I was the first man that Fox's Department Store, on Cross Street here in Chestertown, hired to sell ladies' shoes.

They said they didn't need any clerks — but I said, that's fine, you don't have to pay me a salary. I'll just work on a 15 percent commission. All I need is a three-way mirror and a shoe chair and some shoe horns, and I could do my job!

The first day, I made $15. And you have to remember that's when most shoes cost $1.95 — and the most expensive ones were $10.

I also earned money passing out samples of Philip Morris Cigarettes — "America's Finest 15 Cent Cigarette" — even though I never smoked cigarettes.

I have to admit that one of my jobs got me into a little bit of trouble. Back then, you had to buy blue books to take exams. Do they still use them?

The only place you could get them was at the bookstore — which was run by the dean's wife. She sold them for five cents each.

Well, I knew the company that made them — and they weren't anywhere near that expensive. So I bought a supply, and I sold them two or three for a nickel.

Well, I'll tell you right now the dean's wife didn't like the competition and that got me into some hot water.

One other time — or at least one other time that I can remember — I got into a little bit of trouble. I had been to a dance in Centreville with some nice folks named the Bill Usiltons — editor of the Kent News. When they were bringing me back to campus, they wanted to stop at one of the fraternity houses — the KA house to see someone, so I went in with them.

They visited their friend, and then we left.

Well, the next Monday Dean Jones called me into his office. He asked if I had been in the KA fraternity house on Saturday night? Yes, I had. Did I see any women there? No sir, I didn't.

Well, as it turned out, it was stated that one of the KA fraternity members had a girl up in his room — and I got suspended for two weeks. I didn't see the girl — I wasn't a member of any fraternity. I was a victim, but the dean didn't pay any attention to the truth.

That's enough to make you appreciate the more relaxed rules you have today.

I spent some of the best years of my life here at Washington College. Those years left me with good friends and a good education.

Above all, they left me with the belief in the value of a liberal education — an education that has stood me in good stead throughout my career in public service.

I've seen tremendous changes in Washington College since I graduated in 1935 — especially in the last decade. Just look at the buildings that were added during the campaign for excellence:

- The Decker addition to the lab
- The Larrabee Arts Center
- The Johnson Lifetime Fitness Center
- The Casey Swim Center
- The Casey Academic Building.

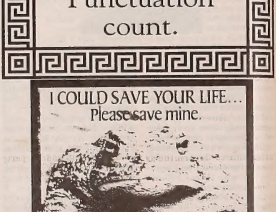
If I look at the technology that makes life so much easier for students: searching through the library card catalog on your personal computer; using Internet to access libraries all around the country; using E-mail instead of the phone down the hall to leave messages; using a magnetic ID card to get into the dining hall; and more.

These innovations are great. I'm not one of those folks who say we should go back to the good old days without technology. In my office — the State Comptroller's Office — we've been pioneers in technology and we use the latest technology every day.

Recently we have had governmental representatives from as far away as Australia come to Annapolis to see our new data imaging technology.

Technology is part of our great future — in our nation and in Washington College. But to plan for that future — we need to understand our past. We can't know where we want to go if we don't know where we've been.

And the best opportunity to explore our past and to prepare for our future — to continue to grow all of our lives — comes through the kind of liberal education offered here at Washington College — and through organizations like yours.



Although I majored in Chemistry here at Washington College — and earned a law degree at the University of Maryland — history has always been one of my favorite subjects. I commend your interest and enthusiasm for history. It will always stand you in good stead.

A chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities once said, "We would wish for our children that their decisions be informed not by the wisdom of the moment, but by the wisdom of the ages."

The kind of education I received here at Washington College and that you are receiving here will always give us the opportunity to seek that kind of wisdom.

Thank you, and may God love and bless you all real good with continued success, good health and happiness.

Wanted:
ELM and PEGASUS EDITORS
Apply in writing to Dr. Striner ASAP.
Spelling and Grammar and Punctuation count.

For more information
Call 1-800-824-WILD
The Houston toad produces alkaloids – pharmaceutical wonders that may prevent heart attacks or act as an anesthetic more powerful than morphine. Yet, due to habitat loss, it is on the very brink of extinction, another member of the Endangered Species list.
NATIONAL WILDLIFE FEDERATION
1400 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036-2266

Do You Hate Laundry? WE LOVE IT!
Kent Laundry
207 High Street
Pick Up & Delivery

778-3181
Park
Shirt Laundry
Carpet Sales
RUG and DRY CLEANING CORP.
Custom Hats
Team Uniforms
Fraternity & Sorority Apparel
Your Goods or Ours
Special Apparel for Special Events!
Maryland Custom Embroidery
204 High St. 778-9786

"STD" from pg. 3

then you think.

Some of the problems which certain diseases can bring about are even more detrimental than the disease. Genital warts can cause cervical and ovarian cancer, herpes can be passed from mother to child, and what's worse is that these things never go away and often reoccur when you least expect it. A sage man once told me that every time you have sex you are gambling with death and the only thing a condom does is increase your odds of winning. "I am going to die anyway." is an attitude that many have, well the quality of your death is still within your control when it comes to consenting sex.

Those of you who feel this article is preaching at you are probably right, but then again you are most likely the perpetrators of these crimes. For the intelligent reader who sees this article as inforsive if not slightly opinionated you are probably well on your way to a healthier life. Sadly for those of you who read this as fact or warning, all I can say is seek help, or take measures to insure the safety of others. Anyone who knows they have been with an infected person should seek medical attention to determine if they too are now a carrier.

Sex can be pleasurable with a condom (which is properly worn) and those who say it is not are ignorant and selfish. Respect your partner, be honest about past sexual history and always use proper protection. Remember, don't be blinded by lust- she/he may be appealing to look at, but riddled with diseases- ask around but better yet ask them. If they are half the person you think them to be they won't be insulted by your questions they will only think higher of you for your intelligence and desire to know what lies ahead. Ω

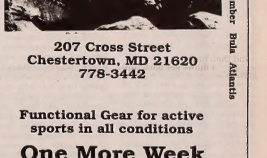
"Briggs," from p. 3

"institutional", not "revolutionary"- the party has completely (and, it has been alleged, not always legally) dominated the government for 65 years. There is, in fact, an almost monarchial quality to the way Mexican presidents have chosen their successors. President Salinas has tried to liberalize the system and end the electoral fraud which has helped the PRI keep its hold on the Mexican government.

Other parties have made gains in local and state elections, but at the national level the PRI remains dominant.

So far investigators have only found that the murder of Colosio was almost certainly a conspiracy. On Tuesday seven people, including some members of the candidate's bodyguard, were arrested in connection with the assassination. The motivation of the conspirators, and who else might have been involved, is anybody's guess, but there is no evidence that it was linked to the uprising in Chiapas. Last Tuesday's Washington Post had an interesting juxtaposition of two articles on the same page. One was a report on the continuing investigation. The other was a description of the PRI "old guard," party loyalists unhappy with Salinas's liberalization policy.

The president has picked another candidate, a capable but relatively unknown government official named Ernesto Zedillo Ponce de Leon. Zedillo has pledged, if elected (which he almost certainly will be) to continue his predecessor's work- no surprise, since Salinas's government has proven itself to be one of the most capable on Earth. However, Zedillo may find governing Mexico a more difficult job. The Chiapas rebellion and the Colosio assassination have raised disturbing questions about national security and social justice. The expansion of minor parties into the political arena will inevitably weaken the PRI's hegemony, and with it the atmosphere of consensus it created.



Even if all the conspirators in the death of Colosio are caught and punished, and the grievances of the rebels and the Mayas they claim to represent are successfully addressed, the country will never completely return to normal. In Mexico, which is struggling to make the transition from the Third World to the First World

"Start Now," from 5

Chesapeake Bay watershed. Support "Save the Bay" legislation, because for once the politicians aren't just blowing a lot of hot air. Additionally, try to remember that while all those condo's you see popping along the edges of the Bay are sitting on areas that used to be occupied by wetlands. The preservation of these wetlands is key in saving the Bay for they help absorb all of the nasty sediments and nutrients that I have been describing above. So remember, everyday is be nice to wetlands day. Ω

Wanted:
ELM and PEGASUS EDITORS
Apply in writing to Dr. Striner ASAP.
Spelling, Grammar and Punctuason count.

Bay to Bay Traders

207 Cross Street
Chestertown, MD 21620
778-3442

Functional Gear for active sports in all conditions

One More Week
20% Discount on all Patagonia in Stock
Spring and Summer Shipments Have Arrived!!

Another Time II
Fine Furniture, Collectibles & Antiques
Donna Dukes (410) 778-6335 1-800-310-6126
319 High St. Ext.
Chestertown,MD
BUY & SELL

Chestertown Natural Foods
"Quality natural foods, products & gifts at reasonable prices"
Hours:
Tuesday Noon-6 p.m.
Wednesday-Friday 10a.m.-6 p.m.
Saturday 9 a.m.-5 p.m.
Off-street parking available
101 Spring Ave
Suite #3
Chestertown
410-778-1677

Do You Want VISA & MasterCard Credit Cards?
REGARDLESS OF CREDIT EXPERIENCE
IAL SERVICES, INC.
VISA
AL SERVICES, INC.
MasterCard
Now you can have two of the most recognized and accepted credit cards in the world...Visa® and MasterCard® credit cards in your name. EVEN IF YOU ARE NEW OR CREDIT or HAVE BEEN TURNED DOWN BEFORE!
VISA® and MasterCard® the credit cards you deserve and need for— ID—BOOKS—DEPARTMENT STORES—TUITION—ENTERTAINMENT—EMERGIENCY CASH—TICKETS—RESTAURANTS—HOTELS—MOTELS—GAS—CAR RENTALS—REPAIRS—AND TO BUILD YOUR CREDIT RATING!
GUARANTEED
No turn downs!
No credit checks!
No security deposits!
SEND THE COUPON TODAY
YOUR CREDIT CARDS ARE WAITING!
EZ-CARD, BOX 16516, ATLANTA, GA 30321
YES! I want VISA®/MASTERCARD® Credit Cards approved immediately. 100% GUARANTEED!
NAME
ADDRESS
CITY STATE ZIP
STUDENT? Yes No SS#
SIGNATURE
NOTE: MasterCard is a registered trademark of MasterCard International Inc. Visa is a registered trademark of VISA U.S.A. Inc. and VISA International
CANADIANS WELCOME-SEND FOR DETAILS

"Allen," from pg. 5

1992 issue of Atlantic Monthly, our generation has a suicide rate higher than it's been for any other child generation measured since the 1920's.

Adolescence is one of the most difficult periods of life, and teenagers of all generations have had problems getting through it. But why should so many people belonging to one generation deal with their individual problems by hurting themselves? Why should so many of us have cried out and continue to cry for help in such desperate fashions? For the past five years I have been researching and writing essays on this subject, trying to analyze and understand it, and to come to grips with my own experiences. Even when one is working with generalized reasons, they are too enormous and complex to fully explore in one newspaper article, so here I am only going to try and condense some of what I have learned, and to give a hopeful note to those who still suffer from their own self-destructive compulsions.

To start with the common consensus of many of the articles I have read: The members of our generation were not wanted children. During the years we were born one out of every three pregnancies was terminated, and the rate of surgical sterilization was doubled. According to an an Atlantic article by Neil Howe and William Strauss about the "Thirteenth Generation," we were among the first babies that women took pills not to have. On surveys given during those years on what was needed for "the good life" adults ranked automobiles ahead of kids. Many landlords actually banned children from their neighborhoods. Devil-child horror movies such as "Rosemary's Baby" became a new, popular cinematic genre. Howe and Strauss state that the years between the late 1960's and the early 1980's made up "the most virulently anti-child period in modern American history."

We are the victims of the divorce epidemic. An estimated 40% of those of us in our 20's have parents who have terminated their marriages. The relative vulnerability brought by life-changes such as this caused many parents to neglect the emotional needs of their children. They often had to remove themselves from our lives, trying to replace themselves with expensive toys and brand name clothing. Many parents even turned to their own kids for the emotional support they would otherwise have gotten from spouses. As children we had to worry about the well-being of our parents when they should have been worrying more about ours. Because of the absence of support and the unhappiness of our parents we had to learn on our own how to take care of our emotional needs.

The term "latch-key kid" was also coined to describe many of us during our childhood years. Many of us who did have both parents through our childhood still only saw them for a few hours each day, because they both worked. Again, we were forced at a perhaps too-young age to learn how to take care of ourselves, as well as our younger siblings. In an article about time and the American family, a 1989 article in Time quotes Yale University psychology professor Edward Zigler as saying, "We're at the breaking point as far as family is concerned....Eight year olds are taking care of three-year-olds. We're seeing depression in children. We never thought we'd see that 25 years ago. There is a sense that adults don't care about them."

In the Donald Justice poem "The Suicides" he writes "What you meant to prove you have/proved—we did not care for you/nearly enough." People sometimes hurt themselves out of a need for attention, and out of anger. We grew up angry at the lack of time our parents spent with us. Many of us started becoming self-destructive out of a subconscious need to try and get them to listen to and look at us. Many of us hurt ourselves in the way of hurting the people we love.

I have often found myself calling self-destructive peers, "Look. You have to talk about your problems to other people, or else you'll get more and more upset and then you'll end up doing bad stuff to yourself, to distract yourself from your emotional pain....Talk to someone." But there are many of us who feel as though we don't have the right to complain. Since our parents weren't always around in order to voice we were growing up, we now don't know how to let ourselves or our friends. Many of our parents pushed us away when we needed help, because they themselves were too busy or had difficulties of their own. Plus, everyone has problems, so what right do we have to complain about ours? We can't even turn on the tv without seeing footage of other people's pain—starving children who we once tried to save by buying We are like time albums, casualties of other country's wars, murder victims. We have seen images of enormous suffering on our tv sets ever since the 1970's, when they started showing footage from the Vietnam War. What do our own problems matter when compared to the tragedies we see on tv? But by not allowing ourselves to admit that we too have problems, fears and worries, we force our subconscious minds to make us self-destruct, to cry out for attention in unhealthy ways.

For all of the talk of "peer pressure" and the "mutual protection circles" we've had, we are not a connected generation, whether to each other or to the larger world. Some have linked our rising suicide rate to these feelings of disconnection. During the 1960's young people were much more visible than we are, protesting against the Vietnam War together, bonding at Woodstock, making lots and lots of collective noise. Sometimes it seems like the only thing connecting our generation is a depressing future.

We are the generation that will be, and is already being, hit hardest by the AIDS virus. According to the Atlantic, we are living in a world in which "politicians pushed every policy lever conceivable—tax codes, entitlements, public debt, unfunded liabilities, labor laws, hiring practices—to tile the economic playing field away from the young and toward the old." One day an uncomprehensibly large national debt is going to be piled on us, and after we stop boomeranging back to live with our parents, they—the members of the enormous "Boomer" generation, will become senior citizens and will come to live with and depend on us. Statistics say that "Since 1973 the median real income has fallen by 10 percent for families with children who are headed by persons under 30...Over the past 20 years the poverty rate among under-thirty families has almost doubled."

But perhaps our upbringing has, in a morbid way, been preparing us to deal with the problems we are inevitably going to face. According to the Atlantic article, "Others don't see it yet, but today's young people are beginning to realize that their upbringing has endowed them with a street sense and pragmatism their elders lack. Many admit they are a bad generation-but so, too, do they suspect that they are a necessary generation for a society in dire need of survival lessons." Some say that we are going to be the janitors and carpenters of America, that we are the ones who are going to renovate the nation. Others say that we will be the "family generation," that will make our marriages last, that we will give our children the care and attention that our own parents were not able to provide.

There is a strength and pride that comes from overcoming self-destructive tendencies. I think of a friend who once struggled with bulimia, and now is facing a family crises which, because of the coping skills she learned to get over her disorder, I am confident she will get through. I think of ex-patients from the hospital I was at who came back later to work as aides, lending their strength and experience to those as vulnerable as they themselves had once been. I think of a woman who had problems with alcoholism, who after leaving rehabilitation helped found a group at her college to create and promote alcohol-free school functions. I think of how many people now go to other friends who have overcome eating disorders for advice on their own problems. The strength and coping mechanisms we earned from the ordeals we put ourselves through in adolescence and young adulthood will give us what we need to get through any other problems our lives may bring; as well as helping us to help our friends, families and future children in getting through their own troubles as well. Many of us have learned valuable lessons from putting ourselves together after breaking apart, or from helping friends do the same. These lessons may be what will get us through the confusion and troubles of a society which, as it demonstrates by the way it's been neglecting its children through the past two decades, is itself inherently self-destructive. We are the generation who will teach society how to make itself well. Ω

Congratulations to the newest Psi Chi inductees:
James Baker
Steve Fuchs
Laura Green
Amy Hanes
Jenny Rock
Eshani Ruwanpura
Tina Welch
Psi Chi-The National Honor Society for Psychology

Any seniors interested in submitting a T-shirt design for the graduation tee shirt should please submit any and all ideas to Melissa Sullivan, Andrew Evans, Eve Zartman or Christine Smith by April 8.

Andy's

8th Firday
& 9th Saturday - Bird Dog & the Road Kings
Next Thursday - Tom Pirozzoli

Wanted:
Elm Editor
&
Pegasus Editor
Apply in writing to Dr. Richard Striner ASAP

Rooms to Rent

Two second-floor rooms with private bath 117 Pine Street--College Heights
One block from College-near Lutheran Church
Interested persons may arrange to see the rooms byt calling 778-3422
Can be used as two bedrooms or one bedroom and study-lounge. Furnished or unfurnished as needed. It's a lovely Cape Cod house--Rooms are heated and air-conditioned. One bedroom is furnished according to usage and need.

"Wolff," from p. 1

that Sansing might be leaving. After discussing the matter with Sansing and Dean Wubbels, she decided to apply for the job.

When asked if she felt comfortable moving from the faculty to working in the Office of the Dean, Wolff said she and the Dean have "an amicable relationship. He laughs at my jokes, and that's a good sign."

Wolff has high hopes that her tenure in her new position will be a success. "I hope to help students come to terms with themselves, with their place in the College and their place in the universe. I hope at the same time that it's going to do the same for me. The things I've learned in the classroom [from students] have been things that have affected my personal growth." Ω contingency that none of the money go towards ammunition.

"SGA," from p. 1

The Student Activities Committee reported that the Cove would stay open until 2:00 a.m. on Fridays and Saturdays in order to eliminate confusion. The last call for beer will be at 12:30 and no beer will be sold after 12:45. No sales of any kind will be made after 12:59.

The SGA also approved an amendment clarifying the role of the President at meetings of the Board of Visitors and Governors and faculty meetings, and also places the Vice President on the Alumni Council, the Honor Board, Academic Council and as a non-voting member at faculty meetings.

Another amendment replaces the SGA Social Chair with a Student Life Chair who, in addition to the duties formerly performed by the Social Chair, will also work directly with the Student Activities Office. The SGA amended the amendment to change it from an appointed to an elected position.Ω

Introducing the fastest ways to get through college.

Power Macintosh® 6100/60 8/160, Apple® Color Plus 14" Display, Apple Extended Keyboard II and mouse. Only $2,105.00.

Power Macintosh® 7100/66 8/250, Macintosh® Color Display, Apple® Extended Keyboard II and mouse. Only $3,190.00.

Speed. Power. And more speed. That's what the new Power Macintosh® is all about. It's a Macintosh® with PowerPC™ technology. Which makes it an incredibly fast personal computer. And the possibilities are endless. Because now you'll have the power you need for high-performance applications like statistical analysis, multimedia, 3-D modeling and much more. So, what are you waiting for? Visit your Apple Campus Reseller for more information and see for yourself. Now that Power Macintosh is here, college may never be the same.

The new Power Macintosh from Apple.

Apple

For more information visit the
WC Bookstore
Casey Academic Center or call x7200

© 1994 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the Apple logo and Macintosh are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. AppleCD and Power Macintosh are trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. PowerPC is a trademark of International Business Machines Corporation, used under license therefrom.

Sho'men Deal Diplomats Demoralizing Defeats But Fall To Hopkins Bluejays

Erika K. Ford

The Sho'men baseball team continued its success in Centennial Conference play by sweeping Franklin & Marshall in a doubleheader last Saturday.

Washington now holds a 4-1 conference record after 17-4 and 8-5 road wins against F & M and 11-1 loss to Johns Hopkins on Tuesday.

Pitcher Keith "Whitey" Whiteford registered his fourth win of the season in the first game against F & M. A healthy batting attack by the entire team allowed Whiteford to coast to an easy victory, 17-4.

The second half of the doubleheader with F&M was more challenging. Sophomore Kevin Roland started for the locals and had some trouble throwing strikes.

After the Sho'men scored one run in the first inning of the second game, F & M took over. At the end of the second, Washington trailed 5-1. Pitcher Doug Blair took over for Roland and proceeded to pitch a shut out for the remainder of the game.

In the meantime, W.C.

"Johns Hopkins is a very good team, but so are we, and we can take them on if we improve our play."
--Rory Conway

gradually fought back aided by home runs off the bats of Andy "A.P." Parks and Brian Rush. Going into the top of the seventh, Washington trailed 5-4.

Jarrett Pasko drew a walk and Rory Conway was safe when the F & M third baseman threw the ball away. With Pasko and Conway on second and third, Whiteford then won the ball game with a homer over the left field fence.

"This week the Sho'Men will face their toughest week of competition, taking on Johns Hopkins in two single games and Gettysburg in a doubleheader," head coach Ed Athey said.

"Both are pre-season favorites to win the Centennial Conference," Athey continued.

In Tuesday's 11-1 loss at Hopkins, "we really fell apart defensively and offensively," catcher Brian Rush said. "If on Friday we pull together and play better defense, we'll be in contention."

Senior Rory Conway shared similar views.

"We didn't hit as well as we usually do," he said. "We didn't hit with men on base, and we had a lot of errors in defense.

"Johns Hopkins is a very good team, but so are we, and we can take them on if we improve our play."

This afternoon Washington hosts Hopkins on Kibler Field for a rematch at 3 p.m. Tomorrow Gettysburg comes to C'town to battle the Sho'men at 1 p.m.

Senior Keith Whiteford beat Franklin & Marshall with his pitching in the first game, and then he capped the day off with a home run to beat the Diplomats in the second.

On Monday the team travels to Lincoln to play in a game rescheduled due to rain earlier in the season.

Women's Lacrosse Falls To 0-5 On Season With Losses To Centennial Conference Foes

Matt Murray

With two more losses last week, the Washington women's lacrosse team continued its season-long slump, as it watched its record fall to 0-5.

At Ursinus on March 31, the Shorewomen fell by a 17-9 count, while they fell 13-6 to Dickinson College on Saturday.

Head coach Sarah Feyerherm had mixed feelings about her teams results going into Wednesday's clash with Western Maryland.

"I think we've improved overall since the beginning of the season, but we haven't been as consistent as I would have hoped," Feyerherm said. "We have moments of good play. For instance, we'll play a really good second half, but by that point, we're behind."

The Ursinus game was the perfect example of playing a strong second half after falling far behind. Washington trailed the Bears 14-2 at halftime but outscored the home team 7-3 in the second half to cut the difference to 17-9 by game's end.

Amy Scarlett, Elizabeth Moga, Kirsten Lucas, Renee Guckert, and Megan McCurdy (three times) all scored in the second half to cut Ursinus' commanding lead to eight.

The Ursinus contest was also an example of Washington jumping ahead early only to be buried by a pile of goals in the first half.

The Shorewomen took a 2-1 lead on Guckert's first goal only to be the victims of a 13-goal onslaught which saw Ursinus leading at halftime, 14-2.

On Saturday, McCurdy put together another three-goal effort, but it wasn't enough to stop the Red Devils of Dickinson College.

Dickinson's Jess Colby tallied six times, and Washington fell by a 13-6 score. Peggy Busker made 10 saves for the Shorewomen, but Dickinson held on to its 7-3 halftime lead.

After getting off to an 0-5 start (Washington played Western Maryland on Wednesday but the results were too late for press time), and with Gettysburg on tap for tomorrow, Feyerherm has attributed her team's woes to one aspect of the game.

"While our defense as a unit is consistent, we're not transitioning well at all," she said. "We're not getting the ball from defense to offense."

Washington Women's Tennis Improves Record

Wins Against Salisbury, Muhlenberg, Millersville Take Shorewomen To 3-6 Mark For The Season

The women's tennis team improved its record to 3-6 in the past two weeks with victories over Salisbury State University, Muhlenberg College, and Millersville.

Against Salisbury on March 24, the Shorewomen rolled over the Sea Gulls by a 5-2 score.

On March 26, Washington had a tougher time against Muhlenberg but still prevailed 5-4.

Amy Rizatello scored a key singles victory, and she teamed up with Vicki Roth to take a key doubles win.

The victory started Washington's conference season on a high note, giving the squad a 1-0 Centennial record.

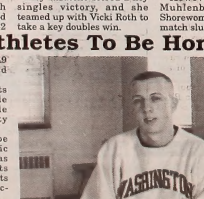
However, following the Muhlenberg win, the Shorewomen hit a brief two-match slump.

On March 27, the Shorewomen fell to Division III's seventh ranked Mary Washington. Rizatello and Melissa Eilwanger recorded singles victories, but two close singles losses for Washington left the Shorewomen short in the end, as they fell 7-2.

On April 2, Washington fell to the Haverford Red Wave 6-3 with Pam Hendrickson and Diana Clausen recording the only victories in singles, and Hendrickson and Clausen teaming up for a doubles win.

This Tuesday, Washington beat Millersville 5-2 to improve its record to 3-6.

"Even though it's a rebuilding year, we're getting some good play out of the women," head coach Tim Gray said.



Student-Athletes To Be Honored

During the fall semester, 49 student-athletes earned Dean's List status.

Additionally, 55 students earned above a 3.0 grade point average while participating in a varsity sport.

All 104 students will be honored by the athletic department on Monday, as the department holds its reception for those students achieving the academic-athletic honor roll.

The athletic department hopes to promote excellence in the classroom as well as on the athletic field by rewarding deserving student-athletes.

The swim team's Chris Frelsheim will be one of 104 students to be honored on Monday by the athletic department for excelling in the classroom while playing a varsity sport.

Lacrosse Beats Devils

The Washington men's lacrosse team travelled to Dickinson College last Saturday for a Centennial Conference game, and the Shoremen dominated from start to finish, winning 16-7.

Jason Paige led all scorers with six goals, and he also chipped in one assist. Chris Spencer (6-1) also had a big day for the Shoremen.

The win improved Washington's overall record to 5-2 (2-0 in the Centennial Conference). The Shoremen travelled to Swarthmore on Wednesday, and will host Franklin & Marshall tomorrow at home at 3:30 p.m.

Others making contributions in the Dickinson game were Pat Meyer (2 goals, China Cole (2, 4), Jamie Carver (1, 0), Eric Hibler (one assist), Matt Vernick (one assist), Christian Boone (two assists), Blair Moneses (one goal), and Joe Dunbeck (three saves).

W.C. Splits Doubleheader With Swarthmore Garnet

Matt Murray

The Washington College softball team travelled to Pennsylvania on Monday to face Centennial Conference rival Swarthmore for a doubleheader.

The Shorewomen returned home with mixed results after demolishing the Garnet 16-4 in the first game but falling 5-3 to the home team in the nightcap.

"I felt we should have swept them," head coach Lanee Cole said. "We just couldn't get the hits rallying at the right time in the second game."

However, Washington did not have any problems putting hits together in the first contest.

The Shorewomen pounded out 16 hits against Swarthmore with Cherie Gallini, Amy Povloski, and Michelle Chinn each contributing RBI doubles. Gallini went 3-for-3 with two RBIs, while Povloski went 3-for-3 with three RBIs.

Washington scored one run in the first inning, six in the second, four in the third, one in the fourth, and two in the fifth to record a victory with the eight-run rule.

Povloski went the distance on the mound giving up four runs on three hits and striking out five.

Leanne Cole, another freshman, went 2-for-3 for the game. Washington currently starts six freshmen with all of them making contributions.

The freshmen are doing a great job," Lanee Cole said. "They've done a nice job making the adjustment."

However, Cole wasn't as excited about the second game which dropped Washington's record to 4-6. Despite outhitting the Garnet, the Shorewomen fell 5-3.

Kelly Eakin pitched her best game of the season, but the offense couldn't make up for Swarthmore's five-run first inning. The loss also dropped Washington to 1-3 in the conference.

Wednesday's game against Western Maryland, last year's MAC champs, was postponed due to rain. With Swarthmore, Maryland, Muhlenberg, and Franklin & Marshall all on the horizon for the Shorewomen, Cole's team is about to embark on the toughest section of its schedule.

"The girls are going to have an opportunity to see how hard we need to work to compete in the conference," Cole said. "They (Western Maryland, Muhlenberg, Franklin & Marshall) are all good, experienced teams. We'll be there someday—it just doesn't happen overnight.

"I think we're capable of sneaking a few more wins."

"The girls are going to have an opportunity to see how hard we need to work to compete in the conference. They (Western Maryland, Muhlenberg, Franklin & Marshall) are all good, experienced teams. We'll be there someday–it just doesn't happen overnight."

–head coach Lanee Cole

Men's Tennis Continues To Dominate Over Courts

Despite dropping a match to Penn State on March 27, the Washington men's tennis team has continued to roll over the competition.

On March 26, the Shoremen gave their top three players a rest but still blanked Muhlenberg 9-0.

Miroslav Seran, Stefan Berger, Michael Kember, Carlos Nuno, Andrew King, and Andrew Moffat all recorded straight set singles victories.

However, the Shoremen fell 6-1 to the Nittany Lions the next day with Max Nilsson recording the only win for Washington against the Division I powerhouse.

Last Sat., Washington continued to roll with a win over the University of the South in Tennessee.

The University of the South, which was picked as the 10th ranked team in Division III in the pre-season, was no match for the Shoremen.

Washington shut out its opponent once again with a 9-0 rout.

Wednesday's match against Franklin & Marshall was postponed due to rain.

The Shoremen's next match is today against Haverford at 3:00 p.m.

"Everything's looking pretty good," head coach Tim Gray said. "The rankings coume out this week, so hopefully we'll be in the top four."

Crew Captures Casperson Cup

The Washington College crews travelled to Baltimore, Maryland last Saturday to battle Johns Hopkins University for the coveted Casperson Cup. Washington narrowly defeated the Bluejays 17-16 to bring home a victory for the Shoremen.

Despite losing five of the seven races on Saturday, Washington was rewarded for overall depth in recording the win.

Only the women's varsity four and the women's novice four were victorious over Hopkins.

In the varsity race, coxswain Maria Jerardi, Mary Bird, Tonya Howell, Stacey Hammond, Jen Dougherty beat out their Hopkins counterparts.

In the same race, Washington's lightweight boat came in third place to score two points for the Shorewomen. With the added depth from the lightweight four in addition to the victory from the varsity four, Washington outscored Hopkins 6-3 in the women's four event.

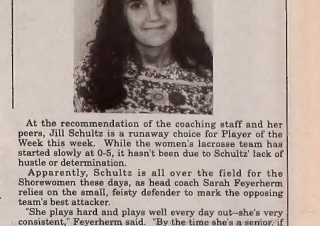
However, the women's novice four was an even more pivotal race for the Shorewomen. Washington's first boat consisting of coxswain Robyn Mitchell, Erica Wilson, Renee Bylkas, Amy Peterson, and Caroline Jensen easily captured first place. The second boat narrowly beat Hopkins to give Washington a 5-1 edge in the novice event.

Overall, the women's boats outscored Hopkins 11-5 (which also included a singles loss) to give Washington a big boost.

On the men's side, the day did not turn out as positively.

The men's varsity four lost its first regular season race in two years in a bit of an upset.

Coxswain Amy Osborne, Doug Peterson, James Pitt, Eric Jewitt, and Adam Scholl fell victim toothe Hopkins boat.



However, with Washington's lightweight boat taking third, the Shoremen still outscored the Bluejays for the event, 5-4.

In the men's novice four, Hopkins sandwiched Washington by taking first and third. In the men's two and single, Hopkins also won to pull them within one, but Washington held on.

Washington's crews will travel to LaSalle tomorrow.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

At the recommendation of the coaching staff and her peers, Jill Schultz is a runaway choice for Player of the Week this week. While the women's lacrosse team has started slowly at 0-5, it hasn't been due to Schultz' lack of hustle or determination.

Apparently, Schultz is all over the field for the Shorewomen these days, as head coach Sarah Feyerherm relies on the small, feisty defender to mark the opposing team's best attacker.

"She plays hard and plays well every day out–she's very consistent," Feyerherm said. "By the time she's a senior, if she keeps improving, she'll be very good."

That's right, Schultz is only a sophomore, which could be trouble for opposing offenses for the next two and a half years.

For honorable mention this week:

Men's tennis--Max Nilsson recorded the only victory against Penn State at Number Three singles.

Women's tennis--Amy Rizzello scored two key wins in the Muhlenberg match which ended up being pivotal in the 5-4 contest.

Baseball--Keith Whiteford continues to perform well. Against Franklin & Marshall, he won the first game with his pitching arm, and won the second game in the top of the seventh inning with a homerun.

Softball--Cherie Gallini continues to impress head coach Lanee Cole. In her rookie year, Gallini is showing versatility by playing behind the plate as well as in the infield, and she continues to hit the ball well.

Men's Lacrosse--Chris Sanchez continues to play well without much recognition. Sanchez scored five times against Dickinson, and he is part of an awesome attacking line along with Bart Jaeger and Jason Paige.

Women's Lacrosse–Amy Scarlett also received high praise from Feyerherm for her play on the defensive end. If Scarlett keeps improving, Washington should be in good shape defensively for the next few years.

Newt's
Others may try to imitate us, but they can never duplicate us
Extended Hours for Midnight Madness
15¢ Drafts: 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Every Thursday Night

WASHINGTON COLLEGE
SPORTS
THE ELM

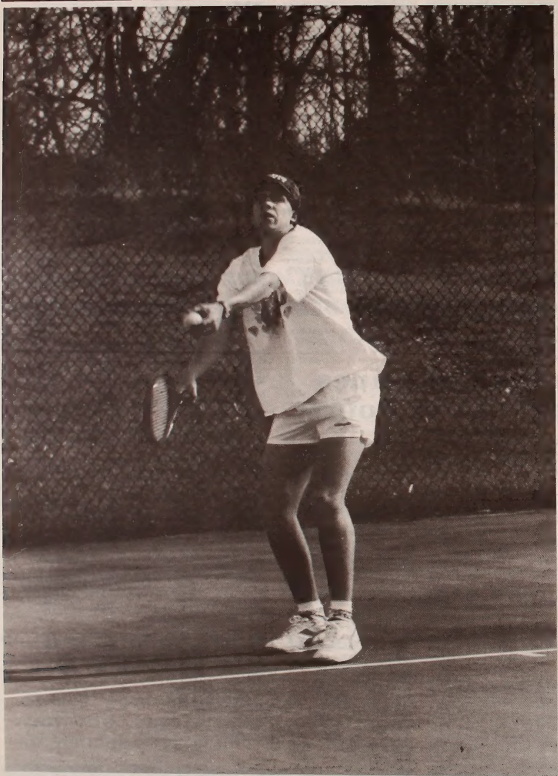
SCORES

Men's Lacrosse

Washington	16
Dickinson	7

Softball

Washington	18	3
Swarthmore	4	5



Women's Lax

Washington	9
Ursinus	17

Baseball

Washington	17	8
F & M	4	5

Washington	6
Dickinson	13

The South African wonder, Andrew Moffat, sets up for the serve in this shot. Moffat "the Prophet" has performed well this season in his second year at the WAC. One of nine international students on the Washington tennis team, Moffat is an integral part of Tim Gray's team which is making a run at the national title.

Newt's Player of the Week: Jill Schultz

Upcoming Games

MEN'S LACROSSE
Washington vs. Franklin & Marshall
April 9 1:30

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
Washington at Gettysburg
April 9 1:00

Washington at Johns Hopkins
April 12 4:00

BASEBALL
Washington vs. Johns Hopkins
April 8 3:00

Washington vs. Gettysburg
April 9 1:00

SOFTBALL
Washington vs. Muhlenberg
April 9 1:00

CREW
Washington at LaSalle Invitational
April 9

INSIDE

•Shoremen Lacrosse Defeats Devils

•Baseball Sweeps F & M

•Women's Lax Drops Two

•Softball Splits With Swarthmore

•Tennis Continues To Be Impressive

The Washington College

ELM

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Volume 63, Number Twenty-four • April 15, 1994

Washington College • Chestertown, Maryland

Baker Wins Second Term

Scott Koon

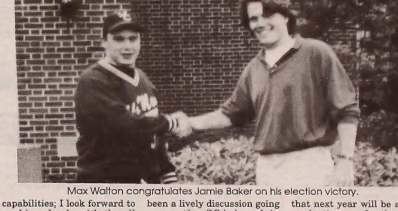
This year's SGA Executive Board elections have resulted in little change-three out of the five newly-elected candidates are current members of the Executive Board. Incumbent President Jamie Baker edged out current SGA Vice-President Max Walton in the presidential race by a margin of 232 to 199. SGA Treasurer Sonya Wilson was unopposed in her bid for Vice President, and won 390 votes, the most votes of any candidate for any office this year. SGA Senator Sharla Ponder won in her unopposed bid for SGA Secretary. SGA Senator Liz Likens won in the Treasurer slot, handily beating her write-in opponent Siu-Yee Ng.

The most hotly contested race was for the newly created Student Life Chair. SGA Parliamentarian Carey Hargrove narrowly defeated Senator Ken Pipkin by a margin of 152 to 147, with Sophomore Class President Mark Reyero coming in third with a respectable total of 122 votes.

President Baker was enthusiastic about plans for the upcoming year, saying "I think this coming year will be an exceptional year for the SGA. We have three two term executive board members; the experience here will make for a smooth transition into next Fall. Our two new board members have already proven their capabilities; I look forward to working closely with the all of them." He added that this continuity would help the SGA run in an efficient manner next year, due to the lack of a "rough transition" between administrations.

Baker also feels that his experiences this year have given him a good idea of what to work on next year. "A few of the themes that we will be revisiting throughout the year will be: increased two-way communication with students (help more students be better informed), more involvement of students with issues we are facing, and better group leadership in and outside the Senate and executive board." Baker said.

During the course of the past two weeks there has been a lively discussion going on on the SGA board in Pacerforum, as well as on public QuickMail. Baker said he was encouraged by this interest in the SGA, adding "I hope that all of the people who have shown such a strong interest in the activities of the SGA in these past few weeks will consider running for a position on the Senate or as a class officer. We have received so many constructive comments already. The recent discussions have been some of the most thought provoking and constructive debates for the SGA. I hope the SGA will have this kind of input from all members of the student body."



Vice President elect Wilson shares Baker's hope that next year will be a very productive one for the SGA. "I'm really excited, I think we have a really good team," Wilson said.

Wilson sees many tasks ahead of her as SGA Vice President. "With the new work on the Honor Board, we have a lot to do. I'm looking forward to finishing it up and tackling some new projects-such as drafting a student response to the Long Range Plan."

Treasurer elect Likens said she looks forward to working on the Executive Board next year, and that she hopes to improve the managing of the SGA's finances. "Next year I plan to utilize the Quicken program on Macintosh for our accounting records. It is a program that I hope will eliminate some of the problems that we had with the business office this past year," Likens said.

Likens also sees a need to reform the role of SGA committees and to improve the SGA's relations with the Office of Student Activities. "We are also looking to have a central office with the Student Activities Office for better communication between the two groups. I would also like to see more involvement by the SGA committees-we are looking to increase the communication between the committee chairpersons and the members on those committees."

Some people, especially Ng, were unsatisfied with the way the SGA publicized the elections for Executive Board positions, and with the way the SGA has conducted its business throughout the year. Baker seemed sensitive to these concerns, saying "I want to encourage anyone who has any comments or suggestions or constructive criticisms to let any of the new board members know. We will all try to be available for suggestions, and anyone is welcome to contact us. I'm easy to contact through QuickMail, or you can call or stop by. Our job of representing students depends on two way communication; I hope students will take advantage of this opportunity." ☐

Max Walton congratulates Jamie Baker on his election victory.

Parent's Day Festivities to Take Place Tomorrow

Kate Meagher

Saturday, April 16, 1994 is the annual Parents' Day at WC. Ken Pipkin, president of the junior class, was in charge of planning the festivities. He did so in collaboration with the Alumni House, SGA Vice President Max Walton, other SGA representatives, the Senior Campaign Committee, and with special help from David George and Jason Myers.

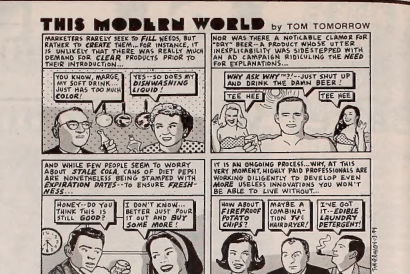
The day's main focus will be the celebration of diversity as well as environmental studies to commemorate Earth Day. Parents will begin arriving at 9 a.m. for coffee and pastries on the Hynson Terrace. At 10:00, President Trout will give an address in Hynson Lounge, where the SGA officers will be officially sworn in. From 10:45 until noon there will be a student and alumni panel regarding majors and career choices. The panel was organized by Mark Reyero and Eve Zartman, and takes place in Hynson Lounge as well.

A Chesapeake Bay Buffet will be served in the dining hall from 10:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.. From noon until 4 p.m. there will be Earth Day exhibits in Casey Academic Center. Dr. Munson will give an environmental talk from 1:15 p.m. to 1:45 p.m. in Hynson Lounge. Students involved with the International House will give a talk to celebrate diversity in the Hodson Study Lounge. A student poetry reading at the O'Neill Literary House will take place at 3:00 p.m..

There are many sporting events scheduled for Saturday as well. Baseball, men's tennis, and women's lacrosse all begin at 1:00. At 1:30, men's lacrosse will play Gettysburg.

Parents' Day will end with music. The Earth Day concert, sponsored by the SGA and organized by Curt Millington, is to be held at Wilmer Park beginning at 4 p.m. Bands Urban Blight and God Street Wine are scheduled to appear. Jazz musician and composer John Harris, a WC senior, will perform in Tawes Theater at 8 p.m..

Ken Pipkin is very enthusiastic about this year's



See "Parents" on 9

Inside

Changes at Security	5
Earth Day	5
God Street Wine to Play Tomorrow	8
MS Walk a Success	8
GALA Declares April Gay Pride Month at WC	8

Editorial

THIS MODERN WORLD by TOM TOMORROW

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

Scott Koon's story on the April faculty meeting requires some clarification, which I offer in behalf of the Faculty Finance Committee (FAC). Our committee, which includes three elected faculty members, the Dean and Provost, and the President of the College, and which is currently augmented by two additional faculty members, "...serve[s] as the official medium of communication for the Faculty on all matters concerning faculty compensation and formulation and annual review of the College budget" (Faculty Handbook, 1993, p. 12). Thus, we have a proper, and established role in the budget-setting process of the College.

Early this semester, we were asked to meet with the Board of Visitors and Governors' Budget Oversight Committee. At that time, and in a subsequent phone call from one of its members, we were instructed that in the event of a disagreement between the faculty members of the FAC and the administration, we were to submit the faculty members' recommendations for budget cuts directly to the Oversight Committee. Before the need arose for us to do so, we were formally instructed, by copy of a letter from the chair of the Board's Financial Affairs Committee that no such list should be submitted; that the President was the only member of the College community who might properly submit a budget to the Board.

While, had the need arisen, the opportunity to propose budgetary alternatives to the Board's committees might have been useful, the FAC did not seek to submit its own list to the Board or its committees, nor did we negotiate on the point with anyone.

See "Cades," on 6

This week I did my duty for Washington College. US News and World Report has sent out surveys to student newspaper editors as part of its "top 100 colleges and universities" ranking system. To me this seems a terribly arbitrary system. How can a prospective student possibly use such a ranking system to determine if a college fits the bill? What might seem a wonderful institution to one person might be found lacking by the next.

And how exactly does US News and World Report go about ranking these institutions? Well, at least in part by asking college newspaper editors questions like "on a scale from A to F, rank the college administration's concern for and helpfulness to students." That's a pretty subjective question to put to a presumably young editor, especially bearing in mind that college newspaper editors routinely find themselves in a confrontational position vis a vis college administrations. I gave Washington College an "A," simply because, whatever its faults, the Washington College administration is well-intentioned.

The questionnaire also asked how many professors "you" (our neophyte journalist) feel comfortable with in engaging in informal conversation, with possibilities ranging from none to more than fifty. I put down "more than fifty," simply because I've got brass balls and feel comfortable conversing with anyone informally, no matter what their official standing. I'm sure that Washington College will therefore be ranked as a school which encourages close relationships between students and faculty, yet you can see that my response was subjective and not necessarily the result of any policy or trend on campus. What about schools with shy newspaper editors? I guess they're out of luck.

The survey also asked "Using a scale of one to five (one meaning unimportant and five very important), how important do you think teaching is to the average faculty member?" I gave Washington College a one, not because I think that teaching is unimportant, but because the question itself is counterintuitive. We say that something is "number one" if it is most important: in Germany the number one is the highest grade. I screwed up because of their poor questionnaire design. Needless to say, I'll be faxing my correction in tomorrow. It's a damn good thing I decided to write an editorial, or else I'm sure nobody would probably wouldn't have noticed it. I wonder how many others made the same mistake, particularly since most college newspaper editors probably do not have the time to fill out questionnaires in a leisurely fashion.

The questionnaire also asked "how good an educational value are you getting for your tuition and fees." Again, this is subjective. Education is what you make of it: I feel as if I'm getting a first rate education, but that will vary from person to person.

The questionnaire also asks about the state of race relations on campus. Again, I had to grade my school an "A": how bad can race relations get in a place that's pretty damn homogeneous in the first place?

Two questions asked if use of alcohol and illegal drugs on our campus has decreased, increased or stayed about the same over the past two years. I'd say they've stayed about the same for the past twenty years, meaning that people here consume a lot. Yet I'm certain our school will score the same as other schools where there has never been abuse of alcohol or drugs, simply because their editors also checked off "about the same."

The questionnaire also asks to grade many other issues using a scale from A to F, which now means a range from "very important" to "somewhat unimportant." Issues are such things as "drug abuse," "date rape," "pressures to be politically correct," and "alcohol abuse." What if I'm a politically correct, date raping, drug abusing alcoholic? Am I supposed to give the college an F on these issues, because it does not encourage politically correct drug abusing alcoholic date rape?

My point is that not only does the allegedly hallowed "US News and World Report" ranking system use empirically questionable questionnaire design, but that all such systems are inherently flawed. There should not be any formal system to rank colleges on a subjective basis. Could we use an empirical basis, such as asking how much alumni typically earn five or ten years after graduation? Certainly, but in so doing we would ignore confounded variables such as non-education related income. Besides that, we would subtilely or-or not so subtilely -undermine the function of a liberal arts education, which is not to credentialize, but to educate.

The Washington College ELM
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief Scott Ross Koon
News Editor Raoul Fink
Features Editor Georgia Jamison
Advertising Manager George Jamison
Layout Editor Abby R. Moss
Sports Co-Editors Matt Murray & V. Jeffrey Lee
Photography Editor Mary Price Wick
Circulation Manager Ken Brown
Office Manager Steve

The Washington College ELM is the official student newspaper of Washington College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, except on holidays or exams. Opinions expressed in the editorial section of the ELM are those of the Editor. Comments and letters to the Editor are welcome. Comments do not reflect the opinions of the ELM staff. The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for submissions are Tuesday at 5:00 p.m. for Friday publication. Letters to the Editor must be typed and must include author's name and address. Anonymous letters will not be published. Letters should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff. Please note we schedule at 719-6343. The ELM does not discriminate on any basis.

Week at a Glance

April 15-21

Film Series: Ruby in Paradise
Norman James Theatre, 7:30 p.m. Friday, Sunday.

15 Friday
Simon Ortiz Poetry Reading
Sophie Kerr Room Miller Library 8:00 p.m.

16 Saturday
Parent's Day
John Harris: Senior Recital
Tawes Theatre 8:00 p.m.

17 Sunday
A Concert of Early Music
Norman James 7:00 p.m.

18 Monday
Maryland Authors: A talk by Frank Shivers
Norman James 4:30 p.m.

19 Tuesday
Xiao Fang Xu
a performance of Chinese dance
Norman James 7:30 p.m.

20 Wednesday
Multiculturalism's Challenge to Anthropology
Hyson Lounge 7:30 p.m.

21 Thursday
Hue Price at Andy's

Self Destruction: Wreck Your Health, Destroy Your Brains, Destroy Yourself

George Jamison

In my own little corner of reality I do not have to do any work. I can just lie around like third base all day and smoke my cigarettes, drink my beer, and watch my television. And I can watch anything that I want to watch. My goal is either to get every program that I want to see on tape or wait impatiently for the new cable system to come along. That's what I wanted the other day anyway. I wanted to sit in front of the television like Winona Rider in Reality Bites and waste my life away. Hell, college is almost over with and I have no real plans, so why not.

I turned on my television and started channel surfing and came to MTV(one of my personal favorites for mindless television) hoping to see some cool videos or, if I was lucky enough, Beavis and Butthead. But, to my chagrin, the only videos they were showing were part of this advertising campaign called Dream Time. I guess they think that most of their viewing audience, at 2:30 in the morning, want to watch bad videos by bad Seattle-based bands that would still be unheard of except in the oh-so-trendy burg of Seattle if it wasn't for the existence of Nirvana and the all-too-depressing self-destruction of pop icons of the past few generations. Hell, with the new exposure that drugs have been given and the ever-so-present use of drugs in the entertainment field, we all knew that it was just a matter of time before some star from the twenty-something generation was going to die by killing him or herself; River Phoenix doesn't count because we didn't expect it. Kurt Cobain, we did expect.

Ever since Nirvana became known we have been aware of their connection/advocacy of drugs and, especially, Cobain's addiction to heroin. And with his recent comatose incident, we were all expecting him to finally reach Nirvana. No, his death was not a shock. Just like Jim Morrison's or Janis Joplin's wasn't a shock. Just like it wouldn't be shocking if one of our stars one out and said that he or she has AIDS. Sure, it would be devastating but no one would be shocked if Madonna, Prince, Boy George or Axel Rose had AIDS.

Come on, rock stars, or any entertainers, are infamous for their sexual escapades. And in this hey day of political correctness, any performer would cash in greatly if there was even a hint of HIV-positivism. Look at Magic Johnson, his career has basically exploded after his announcement.

I think that this is the only thing that Madonna can possibly do now. Not to kill a dead horse but Madonna is basically washed up. And this has nothing to do with her being a woman. She has finally tapped all of her creative energy and is left with millions of dollars and this inordinate ability to annoy people. She even annoys me and I would love to be her bitch. She proved the fact that she is washed up when she appeared on Dave Letterman the other night. The queen of pop can no longer entertain millions of individuals as she once could. Sure, that episode was Letterman's second highest watched show after his premiere and every one was abuzz throughout New York City because there were rumors that she was in town but, she has just become too annoying for the American public to pay attention to any more. She has lost her ability to cause a scandal.

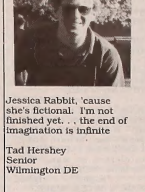
Face it, everyone in this universe has seen her breasts and her sex life is to yawn for. So, Madonna now has to have AIDS. That is all that can really do. But just think, who else would make a better AIDS activist. She is already the most famous woman in the world. And if she had AIDS, she could raise billions of dollars through her benefit concerts alone. She would become the Barbra Streisand of the twenty-something generation because everyone loves a good charity to be part of in this politically correct era.

Anyway, I changed the channel to VH-1 and my mind became entranced in one of the many infomercials that are on. I really like the pasta maker and the microcrisp but Susan Powter has to die. I became annoyed because I realized that this was all on cable and when one pays for cable one would hope that commercials would be kept to a minimum. But no, commercials are now longer thirty seconds long; they are a half-hour long. At least this is what I thought until I changed the channel.

I started to flip through the channels once again and I came to a video by ABBA. It was Fernando. And can I tell you that it kicked ass. I forgot how cool ABBA were/are. They are one of the bands that I can vividly remember when I think back upon my childhood. And I thought, wow, my parents are pretty cool; they listened to ABBA and The BeeGe's. I really do like disco music.

I was having a great time reminiscing over old times when I noticed that down in the corner of the screen was a phone number. It was a 1-800 number. My curiosity aroused, I paid more attention. The video then shrunk and the phone number grew and a price and an item number appeared. What the hell is this?, I thought because I thought that there might be a new video station. But, much to my hilarity, it was an infomercial. And, not just a half-hour infomercial. It lasted at least until I went to bed.

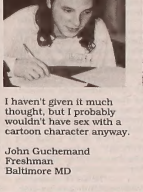
Wow! What a cool idea. It is the perfect way to tap into the infomercial market. It is entertaining and with just enough commercial information for it to work. It was not annoying in the least. It was actually a pleasure to watch; unlike the excrutiatingly painful reruns of Webster or Alf that used to run on that channel.



The only thing that really annoyed me about this station was the MOR Music TV special compilations that they advertised. Can you believe that they had a Baby Boomer Classic Rock CD? Not only are the baby boomers the focus of the market right now but in ten years our generation, the twenty-something generation for those of you who have forgotten, are going to be subjected to the same kind of stupid advertising campaigns. I cannot wait until I can call up a toll-free number at three o'clock in the morning and order something that could quite feasibly be titled "Generation X's AIDS Victim's Compilation CD" or "Turn On, Tune In, Burn Out: A Collection of Drug Influenced Rock from Generation X."

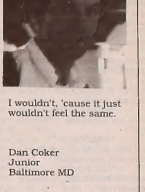
How smart they were ten or so years ago when they decided to start showing bands acting out their songs on television. They knew that the Generation X-ers would love their music and their television. So, why not combine them together and make them pay to watch. Absolutely brilliant. They would make money. The bands would make money. The companies that advertised in between the videos would make money. And if by chance this didn't work out, they would hold contests and award shows so the X-ers would be able to get closer to their idols. They would start a new kind of movement through the use of television. They would educate us and also stupify us at the same time. Thank you MTV. You have made the country what it is today. Actually, you have made the country what it will be tomorrow. Ω

Campus Voices



By: Mary Price Wick

Question: If you could have sex with any cartoon character, who would it be, and why?



Jessica Rabbit, 'cause she's fictional. I'm not finished yet. . . the end of imagination is infinite

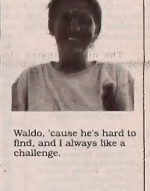
Tad Hershey
Senior
Wilmington DE

I haven't given it much thought, but I probably wouldn't have sex with a cartoon character anyway.

John Guchemand
Freshman
Baltimore MD

I wouldn't, 'cause it just wouldn't feel the same.

Dan Coker
Junior
Baltimore MD



That's a really hard question. Waco Warner, 'cause he's the biggest stud I've ever seen!

Marcia Mowbray
Junior
Estero FL

Is this gonna be for. . . Oh wonderful! It's a toss-up between Mighty Nouse and Popeye--because they last a long time in bed. Now do you have to know what color underwear I have on?

Heather Noble
Freshman
Swedesboro NJ

Waldo, 'cause he's hard to find, and I always like a challenge.

Alison Carr
Sophomore
Bermuda

Blub

by Tanya Allen

Last week, all of the students/staff/faculty/aquatic sea creatures of Washington College died and went to Hell.

"Where the Hell are we?"cried DAN COKER.

"I think we're in Hell," said STEVE DASHIELL.

"But if this is Hell..." said KRISTEN KEENER, "Then why does it look exactly like..."

"Washington College!" said EMILY DICKINSON.

"OMYGOD!" said ERIC DALESSIO. "I'm human again!"

"OMYGOD!" said PAT OPLINGER. "We all are!"

"OMGOD!" said ANDY STONE, "I have Comps in two weeks!"

"OMYGOD!" said KATHY MULLAN, "I have a thesis due!"

"OMYGOD!" screamed MELISSA MOOREHEAD, "I'm graduating!"

"OMYGOD!" screamed PEARL PHAM, "I'm gonna be stuck here for 3 more years!"

"OHMYGOD!" sobbed WILL PHIPPS, "I have a 20-page paper due for Day...."

"OMYGOD!" sighed another ex-fish, "So many of the students here are uneducated and intolerant of homosexuality....That certainly makes it Hell here."

"SHUT UP!" screamed a homophobic ex-fish. "Fag!" He smashed the above-quoted student in the face with a brick from the Cater walk.

"STOP IT, YOU IDIOT!" screamed a female ex-fish, hitting the homophobic fish in the crotch with a brick from the CAC.

"FEMINIST BITCH!" shouted yet another ex-fish, throwing her to the ground.

"BIGOT!" yelled an African American ex-fish, wrenching the just-mentioned ex-fish's arm behind his back.

"JERK FACE!" yelled a Jewish ex-fish, hitting the African American fish with a baseball bat.

"BOOGER!" yowled an Asian ex-fish, slamming the Jewish ex-fish with a piece of railing from the Casey Academic Center.

"POOPIE!" howled a white ex-fish, kicking the Asian fish in the rear.

"WHITEEEEE!" yelled another ex-fish, using a fork to stab...

"STOOOOOOOOOOOP!" screamed the faculty.

"In Hell everyone's prejudices come out," observed GEORGE ATTERBUTY III.

"This sucks!" SUSAN HANNA cried piteously. "I want the veneer of niceness all Washington College people used to have BACK! I don't want to KNOW how intolerant so many W.C. students really are!"

"High," sighed NANCY MILLHOUSER. "Somebody help us...." whimpered JOHNI SAVAGE.

Then there was a great big SHABROING and everyone turned back into fish. Ω

DIRT

Mr. Smith Goes to Washington

Tomorrow's Parents Day here at scenic and historic Washington College. My scenic and historic parents aren't coming; they haven't attended a single Day of Parents in my four years here.

Then again, I live four and a half hours away from Chestertown, and I haven't been home for more than two weeks at a time since I came here freshman year.

What kind of parents travel to see such events? I would guess that the majority will be parents of freshmen who live over an hour but not more than three hours away.

Do Chestertown parents come to these things? They're already in town, but they probably see the campus when they drive by every day.

I know, it's more than a view of the bricks that attracts the folks to Parents Day. The SGA has scheduled a smorgasbord of activities and events for diligent tents to view and visit. I should know: I've been recruited to participate in no less than three of them, although I'm not an SGA senator (and despite the aforementioned absence of Mr. and Mrs. Towers).

While I'm on the topic of SGA, I'd like to congratulate the new officers of the Executive Board. I'm a senior, and it doesn't make sense to some people (as expressed on the Public "bulletin board" of Campus Quickmail) that seniors get a vote.

The theory behind it is that incoming freshmen can't vote for their presiding officers, since the elections are held in the spring. To make up for it, graduating seniors get to help choose the legacy of the SGA for the kids who come in the year after they leave. Sort of democracy-in-absentia, but I think it works.

I know that next year I will be confident in my decision to help re-elect Jamie Baker as president. The last re-elected president was Kevin "Sparky" Kelly, who incidentally replaced another re-elected president, the famed Stu Neiman. (Sparky took over for Stu in November 1990 when the foot hit the fan.)

J. Tarin Towers

I'm not sure Jamie will do better than ol' Stu, but I'm not complaining. That accident led to more journalistic activity on this campus than you can fit in a hopper. Thanks to Stu, I've got a $500/month sublet apartment to share in hopping downtown Iowa City for the summer.

But I digress. The SGA, and parents for that matter, are institutions that deserve more appreciation. You elected (or voted by abstaining) for your officers and dorm senators, and they've brought you a Cove full of goodies, a killer Birthday Ball, and the soon-to-come Parents Day and Earth Day. They're to be congratulated.

And while I'll bet you didn't vote for your parents, they deserve some attention, too. They may or may not pay for your tuition, they may or may not give you monetary support. Sometimes it may be difficult for them to give you verbal support, and that may be because they don't know all the good things that you do around campus, too.

But they deserve to. Because they put you on this planet, and while they may

See "Dirt," on p. 7

Classifieds

Cruise Ship Jobs!
We will show you how to get on board.
800-303-2700

Cruise Ship Jobs!
Students needed! Earn $2000+ monthly. Summer, holidays, fulltime. World Travel. Caribbean, Hawaii, Europe, Mexico. Tour Guides, Gift Shop Sales, Deck Hands, Casino Workers, etc. No Experience Necessary. Call 602-680-4647, Ext. C147.

Tribal College Student Magazine is soliciting simple illustrations for cover art and articles. For reproduction purposes, all drawings (all mediums) must be in black and white.

If interested, please call (410) 778-8487 after 10:00 p.m. MWF pr (410) 778-5628 from 8:30-11:00 on Monday and 8:30- 5:00 p.m. Wednesday.
We will want to see samples of each artist's work before requesting a submission.

Compensation will be made for each illustration used, and all work will be returned to the artist. We reserve editorial constraint on each illustration. No unsolicited submissions will be accepted.

SENIOR READING

ANY GRADUATING SENIOR WHO WOULD LIKE TO READ IN THE ANNUAL SENIOR READING OF FICTION, DRAMA AND POETRY SHOULD LET PROFESSOR WAGNER KNOW BY WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20. THIS YEAR'S READING WILL BE HELD AT THE END OF APRIL OR THE VERY BEGINNING OF MAY!

Stor & Lock
Self storage
You store it,
Lock it
And keep the key
1004 Washington Avenue, Chestertown, MD 778-6464

The Office of Student Affairs reminds all students interested in living in East or West Halls that the deadline for applications is April 18. Stop by the Student Affairs Office for more information.

Class Officer Elections for President, Vice-President, Treasurer and Secretary of the 1994-95 Sophomore, Junior and Senior Classes.

Petitions may be picked up in the Student Affairs Office today, Friday, April 15. Petitions are due back to Student Affairs Tuesday, April 19.

Candidate position papers (2500 characters or less) and photos are due at the Elm office Wednesday, April 20 at 6 p.m. Candidate speeches are Thursday, April 21 at 10 p.m. in the Student Canter, Elections on Monday April 25.

Recent Changes in Security Go Largely Unnoticed

Amy Peterson

As some students on campus may have noticed, from late last semester up until just recently Security numbered among their ranks a female security guard. Her name is Mary Robey, but unfortunately she is no longer with us, as she found, according to Jerry Roderick, head of Security, that " shift work conflicted with her family schedule."

She would have been a valuable asset to female students and the campus as a whole not only by her presence on campus, but also due to previous experience she had had working in a crisis/ date rape counselor for For All Seasons, a local phone in crisis intervention service. As he said, they were "very excited to have her because of her background experience." I would encourage any students on campus to feel free to call them if they feel that anything untoward has occurred, the number is 778-5147.

According to Jerry Roderick, Security had been planning on incorporating Ms. Robey in Campus awareness programs, and are still planning on starting up some new programs next fall, including one to teach self-defense, as well as crime prevention and sexual assault awareness type programs. He said that "we want to build a program that is more utilized and more beneficial to students."

Ms. Robey also indicated to the Elm that she was willing to give talks herself, and felt very positive about working on campus, with the students, to increase awareness and safety, but she felt that after awhile she was "just locking doors." Not through any fault of Security, except maybe in the lack of general knowledge that there was a female security guard on campus. She felt that she "was not utilized enough" while on campus. The responsibility for this lies in us, the student body.

Although more publicity on the part of the administration would have made it likelier that she would have been called upon to share her knowledge and experience with us, the ultimate responsibility rests in the willingness of students to become involved and act upon knowledge received. Ms. Robey has expressed interest in continuing to work with Washington College, so if anyone is interested in organizing a sexual assault or date rape awareness program or discussion, she can be reached at (410) 822-2146. Also Jerry Roderick has informed me that a new security guard has been hired, Darrold Smith, as some of you might recognize. He has been a member of the college community for five years in maintenance, and is now in the training process for security. Roderick has also stated that they are interested in hiring more female security guard should the opportunity arise. Ω

Earth Day: The Future, Not the Past

Eve Zartman

Earth Day is upon us once again. The concern for the world that we live in is a constant state for many of us, but this day is one which shall remind us of all of things that we have done and can do for our earth. Many environmental activists try to blame the problems of the current environmental state of the world on past generations. Indeed some blame can be laid upon those who were aware of the environmental damage that they were doing and choosing not to try and change it, but for many it was complacency and unquestioning attitudes that lead to their contribution to the environmental problems of today.

In much the same way as asbestos was once used readily as a flame retardant material for insulation, pipe lining, and clothing for fire fighters. Information about the negative repercussions, such as cancer, of breathing in this material for extended periods of time came to light in the 1970's and hence the federal and state governments have passed legislation outmoding it's use in all new construction and removing it from all public buildings. In fact the blame for the deaths from the use of this product should not be put on the people who used this product without the knowledge of its negative attributes, but the manufacturers who had done scientific studies and were aware of its possible side effects.

The environmental problems are much the same way. The blame for these problems can not be put on the people who did not know that doing these things would be bad for them or their children. Indeed a society must think of future generations, much the way that the leaders of the Native American Iroquois have their entire goal of bring the survival of their culture and the world for the next six generations. This has always been an initiative of the Iroquois tribe and is now more important then ever with the world in the state that it is currently and the the possibility of the earth not making it to be livable six generations from now is a more realistic possibility then it ever has been in the past.

This is the generation that needs to follow in the Iroquois initiative in attempting to think beyond today and think far into the future. We can not claim the ignorance that our forefathers could. We are all aware of the environmental problems of today with smog reports from L.A. weather stations and marine life of the Chesapeake Bay dying as we speak. This is a generation that can be blamed for our environmental pollution because we are aware of how to prevent it. Our governments, local and federal, can do a lot in our behaves but we need to take action on our own. We need to not only deal with the problems of the present, but identify the problems of the future.

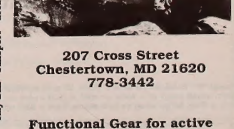
Washington College is giving us the opportunity to raise all of our consciousness about this issue. Kurt Millington is the man who is mainly responsible for the running of the event here at the college. He began the tradition last year and has continued his activism this year with

See "Earth," on 9

Andy's Diner

15th Friday Swamp Weasels
16th Saturday - Ben Andrews
Next Thursday - Hue Price

Do You Hate Laundry?



207 High Street
778-3278

Pick Up & Delivery

Another Time II
Fine Furniture, Collectibles & Antiques
Donna Dukes (410) 778-6323 1-800-310-6525
819 High St. Ext.
Chestertown,MD
BUY & SELL

Chestertown Natural Foods
"Quality natural foods, products & gifts at reasonable prices"
Hours:
Tuesday Noon-6 p.m.
Wednesday-Friday 10a.m.-6 p.m.
Saturday 9 a.m.-5 p.m.
Off-street parking available
410-778-1677
101 Spring Ave
Suite #5
Chestertown

Bay to Bay Traders

207 Cross Street
Chestertown, MD 21620
778-3442

Functional Gear for active sports in all conditions

One More Week
20% Discount on all Patagonia in Stock
Spring and Summer Shipments Have Arrived!!

Honor Code Forum
Sunday April 17
7:00 p.m. Hynson Study Lounge

Classifieds

Cruise Ship Jobs!
We will show you how to get on board.
800-303-2700

Cruise Ship Jobs!
Students needed! Earn $2000+ monthly. Summer, holidays, fulltime. World Travel. Caribbean, Hawaii, Europe, Mexico. Tour Guides, Gift Shop Sales, Deck Hands, Casino Workers, etc. No Experience Necessary. Call 602-680-4647, Ext. C147.

John Harris Recital

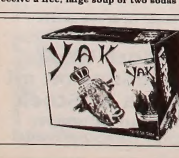
Senior music major John Harris will present a concert of original jazz compositions at the college on Saturday, April 16th, at 8:00 P.M., in Tawes Theater. The concert is free.

Harris will be performing on trombone, backed up by an all-star ensemble: Dick Durham on piano, Shawn Quaissaunee on guitar, Ray Anthony on drums, Tom Anthony on bass, Eric Powell on alto sax, and Mark Macturk on trumpet.

Harris has played with the Brandywine Blazers jazz Band (Downbeat Magazine: Best U.S. High School Jazz Band, 1986), the American Youth Jazz Band, and as a soloist with The Bus, Swing City, and The Dover Laboratory Jazz Ensemble. He has performed for two years with the Dick Durham Trio, and is currently appearing in Wilmington with the Jack DeCarolis Group.

Noted jazz pianist Dick Durham recently recorded Remembrance. He has played with Stanley Turrentine, Richard Davis, and many others. Known for his inspired keyboard technique and energetic renditions of jazz standards. Durham once opened for Count Basie and recieved the better review.

Guitarist Shawn Quaissaunee and drummer Ray Anthony are graduates of the prestigious Berklee School of Music in Boston. Anthony has toured Europe and North America with blues artist Eddie Kirkland and has recorded with John Lee Hooker. Ω



Dave Lipinski & Friends

the Cove
Friday, April 15
9-1 a.m.

China House Restaurant
Kent Plaza

Present WC Student ID or WC Work ID and receive a free, small soup or a soda or with a $10 order or receive a free, large soup or two sodas with a $20 order

Come Taste the YAK!

"Cades," from 2

At the April faculty-meeting I did indeed say, about the meetings of the FAC, that "This has not been a negotiation that benefits the faculty." A reduction in our numbers, a second year of frozen salaries, and a reduction in our benefits—and similar conditions for employees throughout the College—does none of us good. In our discussions with the administration, as President Trout said, we kept uppermost in our minds the need to minimize impact on students. However, the budget reductions the administration brings to the Board will have real consequences. This being Washington College, faculty and staff members will dig down, and try to compensate for the losses in resources. But the College has been a "lean machine" for some while. As the President has also said, in other settings, we are long past cutting fat. We are now cutting muscle and sinew.

The Faculty Finance Committee recognizes the need for the College to balance its budget; three years of red ink is unacceptable; a fourth would be worse. We are now all paying the price of prior inattention to undue budgetary optimism.

Finally, and personally, What Mr. Koon referred to as my "address" to the faculty was an ordinary committee report, which the President asked me to make as an introduction to his own remarks. While a listener always interprets what he hears, my remarks were not intended to be vitriolic, but to be a concise presentation of information about which my faculty colleagues have deep concern.

Sincerely,
Steven Cades
Professor of Sociology
Chair, Faculty Finance Committee

Editor's Note:

Boy, it's major crow-eatin' time! I stand corrected: the notion that the Faculty Finance Committee might, in certain instances, submit its own list of cuts to the Board was initially the idea of a Board member, and was not "sought" by the Committee as I wrote in my article. I also misinterpreted Dr. Cades as saying that what was not of benefit to the faculty was the disallowance of a Faculty Finance Committee budget proposal, when in fact he meant the budget cuts the College is currently undergoing. I'd like to offer my apologies for the mistakes in the article, and my thanks to Dr. Cades for setting them straight in such a polite and eloquent way.

And as for the word "vitriolic," that was a faux pas which I intended to replace, but forgot to. It's a question of who edits the editor. I meant only to say that Dr. Cades was obviously-how shall I say it?-a trifle miffed. My apologies again for the hyperbole.

April 11, 1994

To the resident subjects at Washington College:

We are honored to be informed that you, the subjects of Washington College, have reaffirmed your loyalty to Our position as Supreme Dictator of the Galaxy. You must understand that due to the vast nature of Our Galaxy, a mere vote of reaffirmation from this meager College is inconsequential to Our grand status in Our Galactic Empire.

However, multi-planetary (i.e. many planets — to all you common folk) rule is a complicated matter. Due to your fortunate choice to not face instant annihilation from the face of this unimportant planet, but to heartily voice your support for Our rule, We have decided to reward your acceptance of the status of peons.

The above mentioned reward will be in this form: We will be conducting auditions for the role of Imperial Concubine of the Terran System (a position without power, only dedicated physical servitude) to be chosen from the female subjects of Washington College. Many others positions under the Supreme Dictator will be available. These auditions will be conducted at the Imperial Provincial Residence located in the Talbot Quadrant.

Despite Our gracious reward, it has come to Our attention that there are serious defects within this province which deem remedy. We hereby decree that the campus colors should be changed to the Imperial Colors (consult Grand Earl of Funk). The statue of the Peon George Washington shall be removed in favor of a more fitting tribute to His Imperial Majesty. Furthermore, the Imperial Code of Servitude shall be signed by all resident subjects in lieu of the Honor Code. Important details of this Code are: 1) the Imperial salute shall be given when in presence of His Imperial Majesty; 2) Thursday shall be declared "Libation Day" on which all subjects shall pay respects to His Imperial Majesty before festival; 3) The Introduction to Carpina Burna shall be played upon the entrance of His Imperial Majesty into any building on campus. Further details of the Code shall be learned by all subjects under penalty of merciless taunting by the Imperial Feyd Aqui (the Supremacy's Taunting Guard). Enforcement of these edicts shall be carried out by the Imperial Stormtroopers with extreme force.

See "Topher," on 7

Custom Hats
Team Uniforms
Fraternity & Sorority Apparel
Your Goods or Ours
Special Apparel for Special Events!
Maryland Custom Embroidery
204 High St. 778-9786

778-3181
Shirt Laundry
Carpet Sales
Park
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CANNON ST.
CHESTERTOWN, MARYLAND 21620

OLD WHARF INN
ON THE CHESTER RIVER
POST OFF CANNON ST.
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620 410-778-3166
JOSEPH & SANDY LINVILLE, OWNERS FAX: 410-778-3166
All-You-Can-Eat Triple Treat
Salad Bar
Taco Bar
Self-serve Sundae Bar
Monday--Thursday 4--9 p.m.

"Topher," from 6

Officers of His Imperial Dictatorship are the following: John K. Phoebus, Minister of Misinformation; Grand Moff Evans, Lord of all He Surveys, Stinger Extraordinaire; Daniel P. Coker, Poet Laureate of the Galaxy; Prime Minister Sinister Joshua R. Obercian, sir explanation required; Aran M. Downes, Grand Earl of Funk and Orange; Scott R. Koon, Royal Brewmeister, Grand Admiral James Tiberius Kirk, Commander of the Imperial Surfleet; and lest we forget Sir Loin of Beef, Michael G. Mucha; and finally Christopher P. Berghaus, Royal Scapegoat and Speechwriter.

It has come to Our attention that during the reaffirmation of Our continued rule of this useless province, you peons also selected a President to govern you in the form of a Mr. James M. Baker. We hereby decree that this election, however pointless, shall be considered an Imperial edict and allowed to stand assuming the continued obedience to the Supreme Dictator.

Further communication with such a worthless province is tiresome. This transmission ends now.

[Transmitted under authority and Royal Seal of His Supreme Dictatorship of the Galaxy, Topher the Malevolent, Conqueror of the Kelvans, Defeater of Emperor Shaddham IV, Master of the Martians, Butcher of Bakersfield, Keeper of the Sacred Scroll, Imbiber of the Bohemians, Big Daddy Almighty, Sovereign of Severity, Duke of Cool, King of Sting, and Pharaoh of Phornication.]

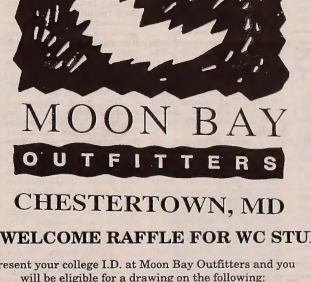
"Dirt," from pg. 4

threaten to take you off it sometimes, they still worry about you. Even if they don't admit it.

So if your parents aren't coming to town tomorrow, give them a call. You may think you don't need to, but I bet when all the parents come sauntering down the cater walk, either holding hands or trying to look cool, you'll get a bit homesick. And I'll bet they won't mind at all. Ω

Editor's Note:

I look into my crystal ball and see. . . a whole slew of letters blasting me for running a letter with obviously sexist content! Im the words of the great Nigel Tufnel "What's wrong with being sexy?"



Running a letter does not constitute agreement, though I do humbly accept the post of Royal Brewmeister. To head off a letter avalanche, I'd just like to point out that:

1. The above letter is a joke to commemorate the fact that Topher actually did get something like 75 votes for Supreme Dictator of the Galaxy.

2. The Royal concubine thing is to be taken in that context.

There. I have, in my usual spineless fashion, explained the obvious. If you take umbrage at any of the above, yeah, you can write, and yeah, I'll print it. But my response will be the same.

MOON BAY
OUTFITTERS

CHESTERTOWN, MD

SPECIAL WELCOME RAFFLE FOR WC STUDENTS

Present your college I.D. at Moon Bay Outfitters and you will be eligible for a drawing on the following:

1st Prize: Outerbanks Polo Shirt

2nd Prize: Hobie Hooded Fleece Pullover

Contest starts Friday April 15; ends Friday April 22

COME CHECK IT OUT!

CASUAL WEAR AND ACTIVE WEAR
FOR MEN AND WOMEN

117 S. Cross Street
(Corner of Cross and Cannon)

M-TH 9:30 A.M. TO 5:30 P.M.
FRI 9:30 A.M. TO 7:00 P.M.
SAT 10:00 A.M. TO 5:00 P.M.

Grand Opening Friday April 15

Grand Opening Friday April 15

God Street Wine to Play Here Tomorrow

Scott Koon

Tomorrow Wilmer Park will host New York Rock and Roll band God Street Wine as part of the Earth Day festivities sponsored by the Society of Off-Campus Students, the Kent County Jaycees and the SGA. Another New York band, Urban Blight, will be opening for God Street Wine with their funk-influenced pop-reggae sound.

Lo Faber, the band's songwriter/guitarist, was quoted in a Star Ledger (a paper in central Jersey) article in June of last year as saying that, with the band's success in playing live, "It's kind of like saying 'We don't even need to be on a major label.'" The same article also said that, at the time, "God Street Wine has recieved no huge marketing pushes and vitually no radio or television exposure."

All of that has since changed with the band's signing to Geffen Records in January. The nice people at Geffin were kind enough to provide The Elm with a nice fat press packet, which I'm using to provide the material for this article you're now reading. If they have the foresight to send a press packet from California-correctly addressed to Scott Koon, mind you,-then I'm sure that God Street Wine Wants Not for adequate publicity.

(Incedentally, the Earth Day programs which have been circulated say that God Street Wine has "a record contract under negotiation with Elektra" which I suppose must have fallen through-either that, or someone at Elektra is using Geffen's letterhead, which would be very naughty indeed. And while Urban Blight is undoubtedly a fine band with many (eight) fine musicians (and a really cool name), nobody in their organization saw fit to send us a nice fat press packet, which is why this article is about God Street Wine and not God Street Wine and Urban Blight. I'm sorry.) these continual references to the way we actually write stories is spoiling the illusion that I'm actually some kind of music authority rather than an overworked hack, but I'm trying to be postmodern about all of this. Work with me.)

God Street Wine, from left to right: Tomo (drums/vocals), Jon Bevo (keyboards), Aaron Maxwell (guitar/vocals), Lo Faber (guitar/vocals), Dan Piffer (bass/vocals).

Photo by Karen Fuller Pacitti

Back when God Street Wine was formed in 1988, they didn't have a record contract, or groupies, and they all worked forty hour weeks like regular working-class stiffs, except for the fact that they also played five nights a week.

Despite their long hair and iconoclasm, the band denies any claim to flower child stauts. "We play poker and eat red meat," Faber says, prompting Tomo to add "That proves we're not hippies." O.K., maybe they're just really butch hippies.

According to percussionist Tomo, the band utilizes "the most styles possible — blues, jazz, reggae, bluegrass, rap, arena rock, James Brown, country, goapel, Seventies cop show themes, Latin, hip-hop, everything except klezmer — and throw them in a blender. What comes out just might sound like God Street Wine." Tomorrow we get to find out how a band can manage to integrate so many apparently clashing influences into something approximating an aesthetically harmonious totality.

The band primarily preforms their own material, and Faber claims that he has enough songs for ten albums. While they've been compared to the Grateful Dead, God Street Wine does not consider this a complement. Of the Dead, Faber said in an Aquarian article: "We'd rather not be compared to them the way they've been playing lately. I just saw them recently and they were so incredibly lame. They're gettin' old and tired and they just don't seem that into it anymore." Amen to that. If they think the Dead are lame they must be pretty cool.

According to the New York Press, God Street Wine is "the most overlooked breakthrough band since the Connells." Washington College, of course, has hosted the Connells as well as Iron Butterfly. It'd be pretty cool if God Street Wine became established in the Rock and Roll canon, 'cause then you could say to our grandkids "Oh yeah, well, back in my day up and coming bands used to play at colleges. Why I remember when God Street Wine came to Chestertown. . ." Of course, that's assuming that we don't all die of AIDS first, and that our grandkids aren't seven armed PCB-mutated aliens from the planet Xenor (pronounced ZEE-nor).

What I'm trying to say is that you should pay

See "'GSW," on 9

College Community Shows Support for MS Society

Kate Meagher

On Saturday, April 9, 1994, while most were sleeping, some WC students were out walking for a good cause. Chestertown hosted the MS Walk, which is organized annually by the Multiple Sclerosis Society. Walks were held in over 50 cities across the country. Jamie Baker, SGA president, was in charge of the event. It is estimated that between 200 and 300 people took part. Each walker had to solicit pledges, and they raised about $6000. Proceeds from the event benefit local chapters that serve those in the community who suffer from this debilitating and, as yet, incurable disease.

Members of the Washington College community as well as local townspeople walked seven miles "through historic Chestertown," as freshman Debbie-Ann Robinson put it. She was part of the Alpha Chi Omega team. The Alpha Chis all participated in the walk.

"Having worked to organize the event, I was thrilled to see such strong support from the Alpha Chis for such a worthy cause," said Jamie Baker. A total of about 50 WC students walked for MS. Among those who helped Jamie with organizing the event were Liz Likens and Erin Woodall.

At 9:00 a.m., all participants met at Casey Academy Center for pastries, fruit, coffee and juice. By 9:45, they were on their way. Kiyaa Washington, another Alpha Chi pledge, had a bit of trouble finding the start of the race. Without her glasses, she simply followed a group of people down 213, not realizing that they were not part of the MS walk.

"Only me," said Kiyaa. "I was going to give up and go back to my room," she said. Fortunately, she found her way to the CAC and got to eat some breakfast along with the others.

Halfway through the seven mile trek there was a check stop, where the tired walkers could find refreshments. Kiyaa was not among the fatigued.

"It was so short," she said. "I didn't even break a sweat."

Upon the walk's completion, participants were treated to lunch from Pizza Hut, while a DJ played music. Cl

GALA Declares April Gay Pride Month at Washington College

Forrest George

This month was declared Gay Pride Month by GALA, the Gay and Lesbian Alliance at the end of March. Several activities have been scheduled for the month. Many occur the week of 18-23, but a few span the entire month, or take place before, or after, that week.

A poster series started at the beginning of the month, drawing comments with pictures of same-sex kissing. It will run until the end of the month, including posters of same-sex kissing, slogans, and information about sexuality. Two other types of posters are scheduled to appear for this month. One is called a lavender sheet posting gay and lesbian news, and the other is a different type of sheet, including biographies of famous or distinguished individuals. The information sheet, if successful, will be continued into the following school year.

Two other activities were scheduled for this month outside of the week of 18th-23rd. A chalking was originally scheduled for Tuesday morning but delayed because of a probability of rain. It was rescheduled for Thursday morning, which had a forecast of sunny weather, in the Martha Washington Square. Then members of

See "Pride," on 9

Do You Want VISA & MasterCard Credit Cards?

REGARDLESS OF CREDIT EXPERIENCE

IAL SERVICES, INC.

VISA

AL SERVICES, INC.

MasterCard

How you can have two of the most recognized and accepted credit cards in the world...Visa® and MasterCard® credit cards... in your name. EVEN IF YOU ARE NEW IN CREDIT or HAVE BEEN TURNED DOWN BEFORE!

VISA® and MasterCard® credit cards you deserve and need for— ID—BOOKS—DEPARTMENT STORES—TUITION—ENTERTAINMENT— EMERGENCY CASH—TICKETS—RESTAURANTS— HOTELS—MOTELS—GAS—CAR RENTALS— REPAIRS—AND TO BUILD YOUR CREDIT RATING!

GUARANTEED VISA/MASTERCARD APPROVAL within seven days

No turn downs! No credit checks! No security deposits!

SEND THE COUPON TODAY YOUR CREDIT CARDS ARE WAITING!

EZ-CARD, BOX 16516, ATLANTA, GA 30321

YES! I want VISA®/MASTERCARD® Credit Cards approved immediately. 100% GUARANTEED!

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY STATE ZIP

STUDENT? Yes No SS#

SIGNATURE

NOTE: VisaCard is a registered trademark of VisaCard Internal Assoc. Inc. MasterCard is a registered trademark of MasterCard International, Inc.

MAIL THIS NO RISK COUPON TODAY

"Pride," from 8

GALA placed slogans and symbols on the bricks outside the CAC. The other event is a Meet-a-Gay day is scheduled for the 28th, the end of the month inside the CAC lobby. That day students can speak to members of GALA, receive information about bisexuality, homosexuality, and AIDS.

The activities of the 18th-23rd include movies, a trip to Fifth Column, and a

'Parents" from 1

Parents' Day. "We've had quite a strong response from the parents so far," he said. "And I really hope to see everybody there. I think it's going to be a lot of fun.

"It will provide a chance for students, parents, and everyone to get together and recognize the diverse richness of our campus and realize how important the Chester River is to us and all of Maryland.

Ken also wishes to send special thanks to Max Walton "for helping to keep the tradition of a great Parents' Day alive." Ω poetry reading. The movies and poetry reading will be taking place in the O'Neill Literary House. Fifth Column is in Washington D.C. The Lost Language of the Cranes is scheduled for Monday. Desert Hearts for Tuesday, My Own Private Idaho for Wednesday, and Torch Song Trilogy for Thursday. All the movies are scheduled for nine o'clock. The trip to Fifth Column will take place Friday night. The Fifth Column is a dance club and Friday night is straight night. The poetry reading is your ten bucks and go see God Street Wine tomorrow so that your grandkids don't think you're a total weenie. This band has played the Wetlands in NYC and charged twenty bucks-tomorrow, we'll get to see them and Urban Blight for only ten bucks! That's a savings of 75 percent! Plus, if you act now, you can get really wasted before hand and yak all over the place absolutely free! Ω scheduled for eight o'clock on Saturday night. It is open to anyone who wishes to read any literature pertaining to any sexuality. Ω putting together a day of enjoyment and education for all. From 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. this Saturday displays by such groups as the Chesapeake Bay Foundation and the Infinity Recycling Group will be out on campus with displays and plenty of information. After that the Earth Day celebration continues down at Wilmer Park with not one, but two bands for the small fee of $10. Posters are all around campus, and I am sure will be recycled after their use is over, telling people more information about the events and tickets are available the day of the event and from students all around campus. Please do not be the one to blame by the future generation, get yourself informed and active. Ω

"GSW" from 8

"Earth," from 5

One of these high-speed, high-performance machines can be yours for low monthly payments. The other one is just here for looks.

Lamborghini Diablo VT with leather interior and wheels and a really, really, really fast engine.

Power Macintosh 6100/60 6100/60 with an Apple® Color Plus 14" Display, an Apple Extended keyboard II and mouse.

Right now, when you qualify for the Apple Computer Loan, you could pay as little as $35* a month for a Power Macintosh! It's one of the fastest, most powerful personal computers ever. Which means you'll have the ability to run high-performance programs like statistical analyses, simulations, video editing and much more. Without wasting time. If you'd like further information on Power Macintosh, visit your Apple Campus Reseller today.

Power Macintosh for $33 a month.

sure to find a dream machine that's well within your budget.

Apple

For more information visit the
WC Bookstore
Casey Academic Center or call x7200

*Monthly payment is an estimate based on an Apple Computer Loan of $1,121 for the Power Macintosh 6100/60 8/350 shown above. Price and loan amounts are based on Apple's estimate of higher education prices as of February, 1994. Computer prices (minus tax and shipping) and loan amounts may vary. See your Apple Campus Reseller for current prices. A 5.5% loan origination fee will be added to the requested loan amount. The interest rate is variable, based on the commercial paper rate plus 5.35%, for the month of February, 1994. The annual rate was 8.74%, with an APR of 10.13%. Your loan term will vary depending on your selected monthly payment. The monthly payment shown assumes no deferment of principal or interest. Deferment will change your monthly payments. The Apple Computer Loan is subject to credit approval. ©1994 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Power Macintosh is a trademark of Apple Computer, Inc.

Shoremen Stop F & M Attack; Will Face Gettysburg Saturday At Home

Matt Murray

Last Saturday, the Washington College men's lacrosse team hosted the Franklin & Marshall Diplomats on Kibler Field. The Shoremen outlasted their Centennial Conference rival, 16-12.

"It was a good win, and we did a lot of things well," Washington head coach Terry Corcoran said. "Franklin & Marshall is a solid team—it's a big school, and they've got a lot of good athletes."

Although it took a while for the Diplomats' athletes to warm up, they found their groove in time to challenge the Shoremen.

Washington jumped out to a 5-1 lead to start the game. Chris Cote opened the scoring in unassisted fashion 43 seconds into the contest to give the Shoremen the early lead.

Bart Jaeger, Jason Paige, and Cote followed in the scoring attack to give Washington a 4-0 advantage with 8:20 remaining in the first quarter. Cote's second goal of the game seemed to ignite the Shoremen after his shot found the upper left corner as a Franklin & Marshall penalty winded down.

With 8:05 left, Don Gervais put F & M on the scoreboard on an assist from Joe Wright. However, Paige quickly answered with his second tally which gave Washington a 5-1 lead with 7:20 remaining in the first period.

Following the Paige goal, the Franklin & Marshall coaching staff attempted to regroup with a timeout, and the Diplomats responded.

Chris Mergaertt scored unassisted to pull within three. After a Chris Sanchez goal made the score 6-2, Franklin & Marshall made its comeback.

In the last twenty seconds of the period, the Diplomats scored twice to build momentum going into the second quarter. Fred Lang found the net first with 13 seconds left, and Wright scored eight seconds later to pull within 6-4.

Washington opened the scoring in the second quarter when Bart Jaeger took a pass at point-behind and found Blair Muneses streaking in front of the net, who dumped it past the F & M goalie for Washington's seventh goal of the game.

However, back-to-back Diplomat goals pulled the visitors within one. Cote extended the Shoremen lead on a Matt Zarinko assist with 1:13 left, but Mergaertt closed out the half for F & M with nine seconds remaining, and the halftime score stood at 8-7.

In the third quarter, Washington sealed the win, as it blew out the Diplomats 5-1 for the period.

Cote opened the scoring 36 seconds into the half with a shot to the upper right corner of the goal.

Paige built the lead with 9:43 remaining. With just under 10 minutes left in the period, Brian Flynn hustled for a loose ball in the backfield. Flynn passed to Jamie Carver who set up the Paige goal.

Jaeger, Zarinko, and Sanchez scored three more unanswered goals over the next five minutes to make the score 13-7.

Franklin & Marshall's John Bloom scored with nine seconds left in the quarter to pull within five.

In the fourth quarter, Franklin & Marshall once again mounted a comeback.

Jaeger opened the quarter with a goal for Washington, but Mergaertt's tally for the Diplomats with 8:40 left was their third unanswered goal of the period and made the score 14-11.

Jaeger answered with a goal to make the score 15-11 before a wild turn of events occurred with four minutes left.

With less than four minutes remaining, and Franklin & Marshall pressuring the Washington defense, the Diplomats' Gervais took a shot from the left side which hit the inside of the right post and kicked out into a Washington defender's stick.

With Franklin & Marshall players and coaches screaming that the ball went into the goal, the Shoremen charged up the field, and Paige finished the sequence with an unassisted goal with 3:01 left.

Instead of pulling within three, the lead extended to five, and for all intents and purposes, the game was over.

Gervais closed out the scoring with 12 seconds left, but it was too late for Franklin & Marshall, and Washington earned the 16-12 victory.

Corcoran credited Muneses and his faceoff play for helping Washington win another contest of offensive streaks.

"It's a game of runs," Corcoran said. "If we get the faceoffs, we score goals. We've been in a lot of momentum' games."

Washington will face Gettysburg tomorrow at 1 p.m.

photo by John Foley

Chris Sanchez (27) helped Washington to another win on Saturday. The Shoremen are gearing up for Gettysburg and Salisbury the next two weeks.

W.C. Softball Swept By Western Maryland, Muhlenberg But Splits With F & M Diplomats

The Washington College softball team travelled to Lancaster, Pennsylvania on Tuesday, and the Shorewomen brought home a victory in the Centennial Conference doubleheader.

In splitting with the Diplomats, Washington improved its record to 5-11. The victory in the second game snapped a six-game losing streak for the Shorewomen.

Washington nearly pulled out a win in the first contest. After trailing 3-0 for the entire game, the Shorewomen rallied in the seventh inning to score two runs on an Amy Swarr base hit, but they fell one run short and lost 3-2.

Freshman Cherie Gallini handled the pitching in the first game, lasting six innings while giving up eight hits and two earned runs.

The Shorewomen avenged themselves in the second game with a dominant performance.

Washington scored three times in the third inning to take a 3-1 lead.

However, Franklin & Marshall returned the favor with four runs in its half of the third to take a 5-3 advantage.

The momentum shifted again when Washington scored twice in the top of the fourth to tie the score, and it remained deadlocked until the final inning when the Shorewomen won the game with a three-run seventh.

Washington notched the victory 8-5 despite being outhit by Franklin & Marshall seven to four.

Povloski took the hill in the second game and surrendered only three earned runs in seven innings pitched.

Gallini was the offensive star with a 2-for-4 performance which included a double and an RBI.

However, last weekend was not a good one for Washingon, as the Shorewomen dropped four consecutive Centennial Conference contests on Friday and Saturday.

Last Friday, the 1993 MAC champion Western Maryland Green Terrors came to Chestertown, and they promptly showed off their championship talent in a 20-0 opening game win.

Kelly Eakin started on the mound for Washington but only lasted one inning after an 11-run first for Western Maryland.

Washington made seven errors over the course of the game.

The Shorewomen fared better in the second game, falling 9-3 to the visitors.

Povloski pitched a seven-inning complete game, surrendering nine runs (six earned) on 12 hits.

Washington stayed close until the fifth when Western Maryland scored six times to turn a 3-2 game into a 9-2 advantage. The Shorewomen scored once more in the seventh to close out the scoring.

The Shorewomen came back on Saturday for a doubleheader with the Muhlenberg Mules.

The visiting Mules made a statement in the first game with an 11-0 victory.

Gallini pitched a seven-inning complete game, giving up 11 hits, 10 walks, and 11 runs (10 earned).

However, Washington earned some respect from its Centennial Conference rival in the second half of the twinbill.

The Shorewomen exploded in the first inning to score four times, and they led 4-3 after one full inning.

Muhlenberg took the lead in the third with two runs which made the score 5-4. The Mules looked to add to their lead in the fourth when they scored four times to take an 9-4 lead. Only Nicole Zemanski's shoestring catch in centerfield prevented the Mules from turning the fourth into a really big inning.

Down 9-4, Washington slowly fought back. The Shorewomen scored three times in the bottom of the fifth to pull within three at 10-7.

Washington closed the gap again in the sixth when it scored twice to make the score 11-9.

However, Muhlenberg's lone run in the top of the seventh close out the scoring and sent Washington to a winless weekend.

Povloski went the distance for the Shorewomen giving up 13 hits and 12 runs (six earned) in seven innings pitched. The freshman from Archbishop Spalding High School in Glen Burnie also went 2-for-4 at the plate with three RBIs.

Denise Hakanson and Melissa Kordula also had strong offensive games for Washington, as Hakanson went 3-for-4 with one RBI and three runs scored, and Kordula had two hits and one RBI.

Washington will travel to Ursinus tomorrow for a 1:00 game.

Correction: The Coxswain for the WC women's novice four is Caroline Jensen, not Robyn Mitchell as stated in "Crew Captures Casperson Cup" last week.

Washington Crews Win Big At LaSalle, Placing Admirably In All Races

By Jeffrey Lee

The Washington College Crews traveled to Cherry Hill, New Jersey last Saturday to compete in the sixth annual La Salle Invitational Regatta. With more than twenty crews competing, both varsity and novice successfully qualified for the finals and dominated the scene by finishing all boats in the top three.

On the men's side, the varsity four, consisting of coxswain Amy Osborne, Doug Peterson, Adam Scholl, James Pitt and Eric Jewett captured the gold medal with a time of 7:06.46 edging out University of Pittsburgh and Villanova University by 0.46 and 7.54 seconds respectively. State University of New York, La Salle University and Manhattan College finished fourth, fifth and sixth place in that order.

The men's varsity lightweight four of coxswain Cindy Dewaraja, Ray Herndon, Michael Beardsley, Leroy Gatell, and Brendon Norris came in second with a time of 7:02.5. Johns Hopkins University narrowly defeated Washington by 2.56 seconds and Villanova took third place with 7:15.97. Additionally, the men's singles consisting of Matt Zimmerman and the men's varsity pair consisting of John Shanahan and Aran Downes both took second place behind Stockton State College(singles) and Hopkins(pairs) respectively.

Moreover, the men's novice four consisting of coxswain Tom Webb, Steve Kim, Regis deRamel, Chris Camillo and Jeff Lee took second place in the 2nd heat and placed third in the finals with a time of 7:45.51. Villanova and Pittsburgh narrowly defeated Washington and took first and second place respectively while Dowling College(8:22.59) and Sarah Lawrence(8:22.57) trailed with New York University(8:23.19) finishing dead last.

On the women's side, the varsity lightweight four of coxswain Eileen Hunter, Melissa Olson, Laura Green, Kathy Mullan and Taber Lucas, Guckert and McCurdy each scored twice for Washington in a game totally dominated by Hopkins.

Jenn Ward and Becca Savage each scored six times for the Bluejays, as Hopkins outshot Washington 46 to 12.

Washington's record currently stands at 0-7. Coach Sarah Feyerherm's squad will look for its first win tomorrow at home at 1:00 versus the Haverford Red Wave. The Shoremen travelled to Widener University yesterday, but the results were unavailable at press time.

Overall were again victorious. The light-weight four captured the gold in a time of 7:46.2 defeating Lehigh University, Saint Mary's College, Manhattan and La Salle.

The women's varsity four consisting of coxswain Karen Wright, Tonya Howell, Mary Bird, Stacey Hammond and Jen Dougherty finished in second place in a bit of an upset. The varsity four came in with a time of 8:17.41. Hopkins came in first with a narrow margin of 4.61 seconds while Drexel University, Lehigh, Pittsburgh and Stockton finished in third, fourth, fifth and sixth place respectively.

Additionally, Women's novice four of coxswain Sarah Kirby, Robyn Mitchell, Erica Wilson, Renee Bykas and Amy Peterson finished in second place in a time of 8:40.00. Pittsburgh came in first with a one second margin and Manhattan trailed at 9:07.00.

Washington's crews will head north to Philadelphia to compete in the Murphy Cup Regatta on April, 23.

Sho'women Drop 15th In A Row With Loss To Hopkins

The Washington College women's lacrosse team dropped two more contests last week to fall to 0-7 on the year.

Last Saturday, the Shorewomen continued their tailspin with a 16-11 defeat at Gettysburg College.

The Bullets scored early and often in their 16-11 victory.

Colleen Dunn and Nicole Moree scored six and five goals respectively for Gettysburg, and the Bullets held a 10-4 lead at halftime. Gettysburg jumped out to a 9-2 lead throughout the first 25 minutes of the contest and never looked back.

Meggie Curdy scored four times for Washington, Kirsten Lucas tallied three times, Renee Guckert found the net twice, and Cristen Albert and Amy Scarlett each chipped in a goal a piece.

Peggy Busker made 13 saves in the goal for the Shorewomen, who were outshot 34 to 20.

On Tuesday, Washington lost its seventh game this season, its 15th consecutive contest dating back to 1993, when the Johns Hopkins Bluejays won 23-6.

Tennis Earns Mixed Results

The men's and women's tennis teams earned mixed results in the past week, as the squads combined for a 3-1 record.

The lone loss came last Saturday against Centennial Conference foe Gettysburg, as the women's team fell by a 8-3 count.

In the Gettysburg match, Diana Clausen defeated Wendy Ward 6-0, 6-0, and Amy Rizzatello beat Cynthia Hoenes 3-6, 6-1, 6-0 for the only Washington singles victories.

Gettysburg won four of the six singles matches and two of the three doubles contests in sending Washington to its seventh defeat of the season.

However, last Thursday, Washington recorded its fourth victory of the season against Bryn Mawr, 5-1.

Pam Hendrickson beat Mary Waibel 6-4, 6-1; Clausen defeated Erin Rutt 6-3, 6-4; Rizzatello beat Alyssa Matesho 6-0, 6-1; Melisa Dillwanger beat Briana Polinor 6-2, 6-2; and Anne Marie Malena beat Vanessa Vanesant 6-2, 6-0.

Washington was also scheduled to play Franklin & Marshall and Johns Hopkins this week but the results were unavailable. The Shorewomen will travel to Western Maryland tomorrow for a 1:00 match.

On the other side of the courts, the men's team continued to cruise with an 8-1 victory over Haverford last Friday and 9-0 win over Gettysburg last Saturday.

The Shoremen faced Ursinus yesterday but the results were unavailable, and Washington will take on Western Maryland at home tomorrow at 1:00.

As the new rankings came out last week, Washington found itself ranked as the number one team in the NCAA South Region.

Also ranked in singles play for the South Region were: Robin Sander, # 1; Damian Rolla, # 6; Max Bilson, # 13, Stephan Berger, # 18; and Miroslav Beran, # 20.

NEWT'S
Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

Just Crew it!

This week's Newt's P.O.W.s do more before 8 a.m. than most people do all day. That's right. This week, we honor those who never met a bed they liked. They enjoy waking up in the wee hours of the morning to go out and row a boat. I don't know about you, but about the closest I get to such a feat is when I sing "Row, Row, Row your boat" when I'm in the shower at 10:30 a.m.

But unlike me, these folks are dedicated athletes, and the Women's Lightweight Four is definitely on a roll. In lightweight races this year, these four ladies are undefeated, and they continued to impress the crowd at the LaSalle Invitational in Cherry Hill, New Jersey.

The team of coxswain Eileen Hunter, Melissa Olson, Laura Green, Kathryn Mullan, and Taber Overall was victorious in a time of 7:46.2.

In earning the win, our lightweight boat edged Division I powers Lehigh, Manhatten, LaSalle and Division III St. Mary's.

Honorable Mentions this week:

Men's Crew: The varsity four also won over the weekend. The team of coxswain Amy Osborne, Doug Peterson, James Pitt, Adam Scholl, and Eric Jewett avenged the previous weekend's loss at Johns Hopkins.

Men's Lacrosse: Brian Flynn did it all for the Shoremen on Saturday. While he didn't score or get an assist, he hustled all over the midfield and even played a little defense. Blair Muneses was also impressive at faceoffs.

Softball: Cherie Gallini and Amy Povloski continue to play well for the Shorewomen. They are both sharing the pitching duties and swinging the bats well, too.

Baseball: Andy "A.P." Parks hit his second homerun of the year against Gettysburg. The Bomber has started to hit the ball well. Plus, he gets the comic relief vote this week. I have seen few things funnier than A.P. rounding first and stretching a single into a double, completed by a head first slide.

W.C. Sports--it could happen so you better watch!

Newt's

Others may try to imitate us, but they can never duplicate us

Extended Hours for Midnight Madness

15¢ Drafts: 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Every Thursday Night

WASHINGTON COLLEGE
SPORTS
THE ELM

SCORES

Men's Lacrosse

Washington	16
F & M	11

Women's Lax

Washington	6
Johns Hopkins	23

Baseball

Washington	9	5
Lincoln	3	0

Softball

Washington	2	8
F & M	3	5

Men's Tennis

Washington	9
Gettysburg	0

Women's Tennis

Washington	3
Gettysburg	6

Chris Cote, a midfielder from the great state of New York, shows off his skills here in a picture taken at last year's Salisbury game. The Shoremen will face Salisbury next week, but a big game also looms tomorrow against Gettysburg. The Bullets defeated Washington last year in the MAC playoffs.

Upcoming Games

MEN'S LACROSSE
Washington vs. Gettysburg
April 16 1:00

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
Washington vs. Haverford
April 16 1:00

BASEBALL
Washington vs. Dickinson
April 16 1:00

SOFTBALL
Washington at Ursinus
April 16 1:00

MEN'S TENNIS
Washington vs. Western Maryland
April 16 1:00

WOMEN'S TENNIS
Washington at Western Maryland
April 16 1:00

INSIDE

•Crew Impresses At LaSalle Invit.

•Shoremen Lacrosse Deals Defeat To Diplomats

•Baseball Sweeps L.U.

•Women's Lax Drops Two

•Softball Wins One At F & M

Newt's Players of the Week: Crew Lightweight 4

The Washington College

ELM

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Volume 65, Number Twenty-five • April 22, 1994

Washington College • Chestertown, Maryland

Middle States Report Arrives on Campus

Scott Koon

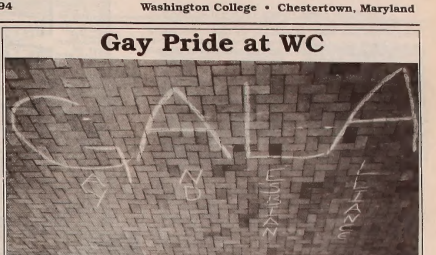
The report of the Evaluation Team of the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools arrived on campus late last week. The report will be evaluated be the administration and members of the Middle States Steering Committee, who will draft a response which is due back to Middle States next week. The Report, which is part of the decennial accreditation process, was drawn up by the Middle States Visiting Team after their visit to Washington College early last month.

The 15 page Report contains a number of recommendations and observations related to the planning, administration, curriculum, governance, finances and student life of Washington College. The Report "represents the views of the evaluation team," and is "a confidential document prepared as an educational service for the benefit of the institution." Overall, while the Report does take note of some of the College's strengths, its function is to assess areas the evaluation team feel need improvement: therefore much of the Report is devoted to enumerating the College's weaknesses and recommending possible solutions to these problems.

One of the most important findings of the team regards the size of the College. The Report questions the wisdom of the way the College has proposed to increase the size of the student body to 1150 students. The Report instead recommends a three phase plan which would first regain "financial equilibrium, including the restoration of funds functioning as endowment," and then work towards achieving "sustainable enrollment growth to existing plant capacity," before finally conducting "a fresh analysis of the need or desire to continue enrollment growth once enrollment has reached plant capacity".

The Report expresses concern that the "the plan to achieve it [financial equilibrium] in one year runs a high risk of negative consequences for the ability of the College to serve its student body." The Report suggests that the Board of Visitors and Governors reduce the mandated provisions for contingency, reserve for renewals and plant maintenance to $350,000 and increase them by $50,000 a year for the next three years. It also suggests that the Board increase the draw on endowment to 6 1/2 percent next year to allow for a cost of living pay increase for College employees, and then to reduce the draw on endowment by 1/2 percent per year over the course of the next three years.

In order to achieve financial stability the Report recommends that "Net Tuition should grow at a rate not less than 2/3 of the growth of increase of Gross Tuition." This would allow for an increase in the College's endowment while simultaneously allowing for some growth with the stipulation that "Endowment assets must increase at a rate not less than the rate of endowment growth."



The Report also takes note of the College's continuing problem with retention of students: "That voluntary attrition exceeds involuntary attrition rates by approximately 2 to 1 in itself may indicate that too many students come to Washington College with unreal or unfounded expectations of what they will be able to study and the kind of community they will join." This problem is attributed in part to a lack of "a clear, strong and enticing self-image." To fix this problem, the Report recommends "the clarification of institutional image, the enunciation of specific institutional goals and specific admissions objectives, and the writing of a clear and concise financial aid policy."

The ongoing internecine struggle between the faculty and the administration did not go unnoticed by the visiting team. The team wrote "Communication between the faculty and administration is a special problem, compounded by a tradition of tension. The present administration has made some strides at addressing these issues by establishing a Faculty Affairs Committee. But problems persist. Of late the faculty has met on at least two occasions without the administration, excluding even the Provost and Dean of the College, their natural advocate. This ingrained pattern of tension and conflict saps time and energy that is urgently needed to address other pressing issues."

Due to "the physical

See "Report," on 4

Gay Pride at WC

The W. C. Gay and Lesbian Alliance declared April "Gay Pride Month." Activities included a chalking of Martha Washington Square, a poster series, and several film shown at the Lit. House. Still to come are a trip to the Fifth Collum in D.C. tonight, a poetry reading scheduled for 8 pm Saturday in the Lit House, and Meet a Gay Day.

Dormitory Maintenance Projects Are Funded

The Board of Visitors and Governors has approved an expenditure in excess of $200,000 for maintenance and repair work at around campus next year. Several dormitories are included in the project list for repairs. In addition, says Gene A. Hessey, senior vice president for finance and management, the Board added $150,000 to the College's replacement reserve fund, enabling the College to continue to address significant replacement costs for the physical plant.

Out of the 1994-95 operating fund, Cecil and Dorchester are slated to get new roofs; Reid Hall is getting a new coat of exterior paint; and the heating system in Queen Anne's is being repaired.

The hot water system for the Hill Dorms will be repaired and the showers in Caroline will be rehabilitated with new lighting, new ceilings, and fresh paint. Also, a handicap-access bridge from the Cater walk to the Miller Library Terrace is being installed.

Mechanical repairs for temperature control and energy conservation are also scheduled to be completed in several dormitories, including Cardinal Dorms, Kent House, Minta Martin, and Hodson Hall. Gibson Performing Arts Center, and Miller Library. Cain Gymnasium is slated to get new energy saving incandescent lighting. These various maintenance work projects will begin this summer and will continue throughout the school year. Two other much-anticipated lighting projects are also in the works, and are being funded this fiscal year. In Tawes Theater, the obsolete dimmer lighting system is being replaced. This project will be completed over the summer.

Also, in response to safety concerns, exterior lighting fixtures are being installed between Minta Martin and Reid Halls. With the preliminary work complete and the lamp posts on order, these lamps are expected to be in place shortly. Until the lamp posts arrive, temporary lighting fixtures have been mounted on the exterior walls of Minta Martin and Reid Hall. Ω

Inside

Hazing	2
Generation Yech	3
WC Crossword Puzzle	4
Glenn wins Beecham	5
Class Officer Supplement	6

It ain't gonna make nobody happy.

The Middle States Visiting Team sent its Report to the Faculty, Administration, Trustees and Students back to campus this past week. It seems to me that it will please practically no one on campus. Some of the Report is just flatout right; some of it is misguided, some of it is wrong and some of it is drivel.

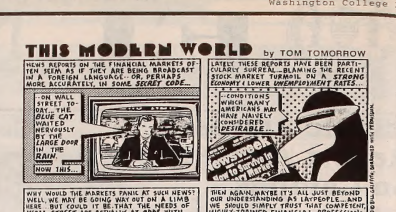
There are ironies in the Report which I'm certain the authors did not intend. The section on faculty recommends that the College 'consider 'redefined scholarship' along the lines suggested by Ernest Boyer and Patricia Cross." The irony in this is that when I tried to find out who Boyer and Cross are at the library I came up with nothing-the library does not have their book. Which actually proves the point made in the Report about the inadequacy of our current library holdings.

It seems to me that some of the Report shows a great deal of common sense. The Report does not refute the desirability of increasing the size of the College up to 1150 students. It does prescribe a highly sensible way to get there, favoring an incremental approach which will enhance the College's financial viability before spending huge amounts of money to accommodate additional students. The Report's comments on the need to improve dorm conditions, enhance residential life and reform the committee structure of the College are also welcome-and are also in total accord with current policy.

Where does this lofty document descend into the realm of drivel? It does do what it takes obeisance to the current fetishes of academia. The Report states, for example, that "In student affairs professional circles 'dorms' have long ago been renamed 'residence halls' to reflect the fact that students not only sleep there but also spend much of the day there." Putting aside the question of how much time students actually spend in dorms, this seems to be a particularly silly bit of academic Newspeak. I prefer the simple honesty of calling a dorm a dorm.

The Report is also delving into a seemingly obscure realm when, in reference to women faculty and staff, it states that "incidents such as remarks, jokes and subtle forms of discrimination have occurred." Oh, my! Remarks and-heaven forbid-jokes? Can you imagine-someone at Washington College is telling jokes! Making remarks! It really gets my goat when I hear of well-paid white collar workers crying about mistreatment when they have it better than 99.9126 percent of people on the entire planet. If people think the situation for female workers is bad here, I'd like them to go visit a factory. Washington College is a nirvana of tolerance and collegiality by comparison. Is this what feminism has come to-dwelling on the trivial problems of the feminine elite while billions of women suffer under truly inhuman conditions? God, I hope not.

The Report also takes note of a "problem of communication" in relations between the faculty and administration. The President has some well formulated objections to this criticism, which I'm sure we'll see when the response to the Report comes out. But given these charges, I'd think the administration would be especially sensitive to communication issues. It was known long ago that the release of the Middle States Report would coincide with the April meeting of the Board. Given the importance of the Middle States recommendations, the nature of the things the Report says in regard to the Board, and the fact that the Board does not meet again until next September, I'd think that the administration would have sent all Board members a copy of the document in time for the meeting-or could have been sent by Federal Express last Friday, along with a short memo explaining some chief objections and explaining that a formal response is in the works. Instead the administration has decided to stick with the timetable handed down to them by Middle States and not release the document until after the response is written. This, I believe, is a mistake. While I have problems with the Report-and not nearly enough space to enumerate them all-I believe that as a whole it is a very useful document which provides an objective, external look at the way the College operates, and is therefore useful to the College as a whole and the Board in particular.



The Washington College ELM
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief	Advertising Manager
Scott Ross Koon	George Jamison
News Editor	Layout Editor
Raquel Fiak	Abby R. Moss
Features Editor	Sports Co-Editors
George Jamison	Matt Murray & Y. Jeffrey Lee
	Photography Editor
	Mary Frion Wick
	Circulation Manager
	Bas Brown
	Office Manager
	Steve Kim

The Washington College ELM is the official student newspaper of Washington College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excluding holidays and exams. Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Open Forum, and Campus Voices do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the ELM staff. Letters to the Editor must be typed, double-spaced, and no longer than 250 words. Letters are due by Monday night at 5 p.m. for that week's paper. Correspondence can be delivered to the ELM office on the basement floor of Hodson Hall, campus mail, placed into Quadboard or placed directly in the ELM file server. Submissions on any basis.

THIS MODERN WORLD

by TOM TOMORROW

Letters to the Editor

What would you do if pledges of a Greek organization approached you and asked you to sign their underwear or one of their body parts? Do you find pledges dressed in seventies garb amusing? What if, by chance, you were walking down High Street and saw a group of pledges doing shots during a scavenger hunt? Is it normal to look outside of a library window to see naked pledges doing push-ups? If any of the previously mentioned questions caused you to feel awkward or uneasy, you are not alone. All of the above questions are explicit examples of hazing in college environments across the country.

Hazing, as defined by Random House Dictionary(1988), is "subject-[ing] newcomers etc. to abusive or humiliating tricks and ridicule." Hazing is wrong! Not only is hazing emotionally, physically, and morally questionable, but it is opposed by thirty-five states.

Of the thirty-five states possessing anti-hazing laws, Maryland considers hazing a misdemeanor punishable by a six month jail term and/or a $500 fine (Anonymous Jet 1993).

If you observe any event that could potentially be defined as hazing, nine out of ten times your instincts are correct. In many cases, the most innocent of tasks can be construed as hazing and punishable by law. Furthermore, acquiescent accept-ance of hazing behavior is passively advocating hazing and also breaking the law.

So Greeks, next time you have that big paddle in hand, ask yourself, "could this be hazing?" There exist other non-hazing options that can strengthen group bonds. The inter fraternity Council and the Pan Hellenic Council can join together to combat the hazing craze and make Washington College a non-hazing community.

Change Your Ways; Don't Haze!!!

Spooge and Banana, Reformed Hazers

Week at a Glance

April 22-28

Film Series: Jacquot

Norman James Theatre, 7:30 p.m. Friday, Sunday, Monday

22 Friday

23 Saturday

24 Sunday

The Spiritual Quest of Thomas Merton
A talk by Michael Mott
Sophie Kerr Room
8:00 p.m.

25 Monday

The Art of Literary Biography
A talk by Michael Mott
Sophie Kerr Room
7:00 p.m.

26 Tuesday

A Student Recital

Norman James Theatre 7:00 p.m.

27 Wednesday

28 Thursday

The Show Off
A play by George Kelly
Tawes Theatre
8:00 p.m.

Generation Yech

Mark Phaneuf

The recent suicide of Nirvana's Kurt Cobain has left me wondering why? Why is he dead and yet Anthony Kiedis of the Red Hot Chili Peppers and Pearl Jam frontman Eddie Vedder continue to live, breath, and, speak and sing. I am left with the feeling of cosmic injustice that I haven't experienced since River Phoenix's overdose while Keanu Reeves is allowed to continue to ruin movies with his bad acting. If God isn't dead he sure as Hell doesn't have an eye for talent.

They called Cobain a voice of our generation but he punned way too much for the average college student. I think a more appropriate voice of "Generation X", as they have termed us, is Conan O'Brien: a marginally talented guy, who inherited a no win situation, then fails miserably all the while maintaining whiny and obsequious tone.

Another benchmark of "Generation X" was the movie "Reality Bites." While enjoyed it's praising of 7-11 Big Gulps, there was all together not enough sex and nudity. I guess we are more turned on by reruns of Planet of the Apes than each other. Besides, as today's headlines point out, that movie missed the boat by not having any of its characters kill themselves. But I guess if everyone doesn't die and lives happy happy lives, reality might really bite.

Another move away from sex to T.V. shows have been those annoying beer commercials where twenty-somethings talk about Gilligan's Island and Family Affair while they are playing pool. Whatever happened to Spuds Mackenzie and the Swedish Bikini Team I ask you? The worst of the commercials is the one where a group of the most incredible durks are playing golf. Decked out in "hip clothes" like white sweaters, shorts, and hi-tops they, like in the movie "Reality Bites," talk about Peter Frampton. I can tell you honestly that this commercial did more than any public service announcement or killer hangover to make me want t stop drinking. I mean if those idiots drank, who would want to touch the stuff?

And why are we named after Billy Idol's old band "Generation X"? I'm thankful that we were not named "Generation Wings" or "The Joe Perry Project Generation?" Did the baby boomers, the ones who had the Smothers Brothers as role models, give us this pathetic name?

But there has never been a better time to be young and dead. Both Phoenix and Cobain made national headlines and cover stories of many magazines. Unfortunately for us Washington College Students, our deaths wouldn't cause so much commotion. The only way we could get the kind of media publicity would be to go out and kill one of these Generational Voices. You could probably get on the cover of Rolling Stone for that. Well at least the cover of Entertainment Weekly. Drive Safely. Ω

Campus Voices

By: Scott Koon

Question: If you could change one thing about Washington College, what would it be?

I'd get a library that has some books in it that were published after 1970. Our library is the most outdated library I've ever tried to work in.

Steve Fuchs
Junior
Baltimore MD

The keg ruled'd legaqltze kegs on campus.

Andre Taylor
Sophomore
Washington D.C.

Allow more open parties- no more of this invite at.

Chris Eaton
Sophomore
Port Deposit MD

They need to have parties- real parties. The social life here sucks.

Spencer White
Freshman
Baltimore MD

I'd have secluded little areas with trees and benches where you could read and no one would notice you.

Alex Baez
Senior
Great Falls VA

We's spray paint all the grass blue, trim all the trees so that they're just trunks, establish a home for wayward wiafs and make the Cove serve fetoosh.

Aaron Pierce — Sophomore
Andy Stone — Senior Kingsville TX — East Coast

Another Time II
Fine Furniture, Collectibles & Antiques
Donna Dukes (410) 778-6525 1-800-310-6525
219 High St. Ext.
Chestertown, MD
BUY & SELL

Chestertown Natural Foods
"Quality natural foods, products & gifts at reasonable prices"
Hours:
Tuesday-Friday 10a.m.-6 p.m.
Saturday 9 a.m.-5 p.m.
Wednesday-Friday
Off-street parking available
101 Spring Ave
Suite 21
Chestertown
410-778-1677

Andy's
22 Friday - Jimmy Landry with Ed Solomon
23 Saturday - Gray, Green & Travers
28 Thursday - August West

Maryland Custom Clothes
Custom Hats
Team Uniforms
Fraternity & Sorority
Apparel
Your Goods or Ours
Special Apparel for Special Events!
Maryland Custom Embroidery
204 High St. 778-9786

Park
778-3181
Shirt Laundry
Carpet Sales
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
CHESTERTOWN, MARYLAND 21620

Only One Chewing Tobacco Tastes Like YAK
Surgeon General's Warning: This product is not a safe alternative to crack cocaine, and may make your lips fall off. Don't say we didn't warn you.

Blub

by Tanya Allen

All of the WC students/faculty/staff/aquatic sea creatures had died and gone to Hell, where they were transformed back into humans in the heat of second semester stress. Miserable and pulsating with the burden of too much last-minute-work-which-they-really-should-have-done-before squished onto them they screamed and cried "Turn us back into fish! Turn us back into fish!" TANYA ALLEN, author of this fish tale, mercifully did. Kahloomayamee! Everyone shrank, lost their feet, and grew scales!

"Ah....." sighed MATHEW WILDERfish after he was turned back into an aquatic sea creature with an unpronounceable name, "Let us remain fish forever...."

"Nothing for us to do...but swim in the blue!" rhymed ERIKA WILSONfish.

"Squid! Squid!" said JOEL BROWNfish. "Squid!"

"Now we'll never have to graduate and go out in the 'real' world...." said MARCELLA DUFFYfish contentedly.

"Or leave Chestertown!" said CATHARINE MEADORSfish.

"Nobody ever does leave Chestertown, though...." said JUSTIN CANNfish.

"I did!" said DAVE CERLESfish.

And then there was a heavy "BUH-BUH BUH-BUH BUH BUH BUH" and PRESIDENT TROUT and DEAN WUBBLES flew overhead—(both in human form)—in a helicopter! "Attention all fish," said PRESIDENT TROUT, shouting into a megaphone, "We have the answer! We know how to save you! We have found what caused all of this aquatic business in the first place! We know how to turn you all back into nice, respectable, conservative, apathetic, J.Crew wearing human college students again! We can save you! Listen to us!"

"But...but...but...we don't WANT to be made human again!" cried CINDI DeWATERSfish, "We'd have to go back to classes if we were human! We'd have to go back to Hell!"

"Shut up!" said PROFESSOR SPILICHfish, "You're just trying to get out of doing your senior obligation!"

"But think about it, PROFESSOR SPILICHfish," said CINDI DeWATERSfish, "if you go back to being human, you're going to have all those tests to grade, and students to lecture, and psych experiments to oversee...Do you REALLY want to be human again? Wouldn't you rather be a fish for the rest of your life?"

"By Golly, you're right!" said PROFESSOR SPILICHfish, "I WOULD like to be a fish for the rest of my life! To Hell with professordum!"

"Listen to me!" shouted PRESIDENT TROUT. "We will make things right again! DEAN WUBBLES and I have the answers! We will change you back into human beings!"

"Once a fish, always a fish!" shouted MICHAEL DOUGHERTYfish back. "To Hell with finals! To Hell with stress!" We want to be fish forever!"

"Blub!" said EDMUND HICKSfish.

"Blub!" said ABBY MOSSfish.

"Blub!" said BRETT SHOWALTERfish.

"Blub!" said KATHY DAYfish.

"Blub!" said DR. NATHAN SMITHfish.

"Blub!" said MELISSA OLSONfish.

"Blub!" said PATRICE STANLEYfish.

"Blub!" said SCOTT KOONfish.

"Blub!" said GEOFF BLEYfish.

"Blub!" said RAMSEY BIGHAMfish.

"Blub!" said JEN SENDAXfish.

"Well, fine." said PRESIDENT TROUT. "I'm a democratic fellow. If that's the way you all want it to be, that's the way it's gonna be. Go on, be fish forever! But you've got to remember one thing: Fish are ALWAYS in schools."

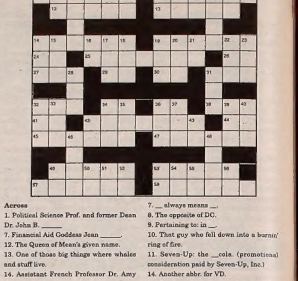
"Hey!" said TYLER STAELINfish.

"Hey!" said ZYLIA KNOWLINfish.

"He's right!" said MARTHA KEMURAfish.

"I don't want to be in school forever!" said JASON TRUAXfish.

"Change us back! Change us back!" said Dr. JOHN B. TAYLORfish.



"Heh, heh, heh." said PRESIDENT TROUTfish. "I have you all in my power! Now, finally you'll listen to me! Now, finally I'll get some respect!"

"Save us, PRESIDENT TROUT and DEAN WUBBLES!" cried EVERYONEfish. "Save us! Please, please, oh please!"

(Tune in next week for the last BLUB ever. Oh, boy.)

WC Crossword Puzzle: Names, Names, Names

Scott Koon

Across

1. Political Science Prof. and former Dean Dr. John B. ____
7. Financial Aid Goddess Jean ____.
12. The Queen of Mean's given name.
13. One of those big things where whales and stuff live.
14. Assistant French Professor Dr. Amy ____.
19. Writing lab expert Geraldine ____.
24. "If you're going ___ San Francisco, be sure to pack some condoms in your bag."
25. Literature or art intended to arouse sexual desire.
26. A Japanese game played with counters on a board that is ruled with 19 vertical and 19 horizontal lines.
27. God spelled backwards.
29. Political Science Prof. Dr. Tsi Sung ___.
30. Nebraska abbr.
31. Dog spelled backwards.
32. What Jack Spratt's wife could not eat.
34. Pennsylvania abbr.
36. Group for drunks who want to sober up.
38. A basic unit of currency in Romania.
41. "The Love Shack, baby that's where it's ___."
42. Followers of Lao-tzu.
44. Nursing abbr.
45. What the Koresh compound was after the guys in 33 Down got done with it.
47. A small bomb used to breech walls: you don't want to be hoisted by your own.
49. They make the best milkshakes in town.
53. Chair of the Political Science Dept. Dr. Dan ____.
57. The College's remaining studio art instructor.
58. Assistant Director of the Center for Career Development Vicky ____.

Down

2. Loser shoe salesman __ Bundy.
3. Mythical (?) snowman.
4. ___ and behold.
5. __ Golden Pond.
6. Egyptian sun god.
7. __ always means __.
8. The opposite of DC.
9. Pertaining to in ___.
10. That guy who fell down into a burnin' ring of fire.
11. Seven-Up: the ___cola. (promotional consideration paid by Seven-Up, Inc.)
14. Another abbr. for VD.
15. Cow sound.
16. Warner Bros. skunk Pepe __ Phew.
17. Common crossword puzzle time word.
18. Hither and ___.
19. Blub blub.
20. Lame rapper Vanilla ___.
21. Nazi group headed by Rohm before his death.(obviously.)
22. Someone with a swelled head has a big ___.
23. Aging rock star/sex symbol ___ Stewart.
28. If you drink too much Beast, you get a beer ___.
31. Shockingly sexist term for a woman.
32. The guys who oversee civilian aviation.
33. Govt. org. that did such a bang-up job at the Koresh compound.
34. Really cool non-stick spray.
35. That guy with the major raven fetish.
36. Cleopatra killed herself with one of these.
37. Past tense of eat.
39. To make a mistake.
40. Japanese tie and.
42. Symbol for the element tantalum.
43. Initials of 57 across.
46. Symbol for uranium.
48. "___ dance-put on your red shoes and dance the blues."
49. A large group of soldiers.
50. Atomic symbol for selenium.
51. All sales __ ie.
51. Maine abbr.
52. Sherry Menten's initials.
53. An addition to a letter.
54. Sec'd Dowa.
55. Erika Wilson's initials.
56. Old English ehbe.

Stor & Lock

Self storage
You store it,
Lock it
And keep the key

1004 Washington Avenue, Chestertown, MD 778-6464

Sophie Kerr Prize

is awarded at

Commencement to the senior deemed by the Sophie Kerr Committee to have "the best ability and promise for future fulfillment in the field of literary endeavor." Students wishing to submit samples of their writing are invited to do so. All submissions must be in the hands of the committee by the last day of classes and may be brought to the office of the Chairman of English Department for convenience and safe-keeping. Manuscripts will be returned to their owners after commencement. All graduating seniors are eligible recipients of the award.

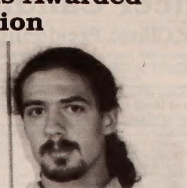
"Report," from 1

distance to supplementary collections," the Report says the College must use "the latest information technology in an expanded or renovated facility." The Report also recommends that the library be more closely integrated into academic programs at the College. The Report also noted that Washington College is "one of the leaders" in using computers for academic purposes.

The Visiting Team "was very impressed with the quality of leadership and staff at all levels of student life at the College," but they also noted that there are only two deans charged with oversight of student affairs, and that this has resulted in a heavy workload for them. Because of this, the team concurred with the Long Range Plan in recommending the appointment of a Resident Director.

The Report also manifests concern that the College's executive committee structure "draws faculty away from their teaching and scholarly agendas in detrimental ways. The number of standing committees of the faculty is apparently 24, an extremely high number for an institution of Washington College's size." The Report takes note of the Faculty Affairs Committee's efforts to reduce the number of committees, and states that "this is an agenda item requiring immediate attention."

The visiting team also recommends changing the way the College examines curricular issues. Currently, the curriculum is within the purview of the Academic Council, but the team feels the Council "does not generally initiate curricular change. Its main function is to react to proposals brought forward from the departments through the appropriate division or from other formal committees or informal faculty groups." The team maintains that this is insufficiently broad, and that "Serious consideration should be given to charging Academic Council or some



See "Report," on 5

Beacham Prize Is Awarded for Student Fiction

The Beacham Prize, supported by Walton and Deborah Beacham of Beacham Publishing, was established to recognize undergraduate writing that reflects both the liberal arts tradition and the importance of language in the expression of ideas. The Prize is named for the Beachams' daughter, who was graduated in 1992.

"When Veryan majored in philosophy and history, it became obvious that the College's prizes recognizing good writing were geared to students of literature," says Mr. Beacham, a former English professor who went to graduate school with Robert Day, professor of English and director of Washington College's O'Neill Literary House. "By establishing this prize we are encouraging students to strive for excellent writing, no matter what discipline they are studying. We hope the prize will acknowledge to faculty and students that good writing, as well as good ideas, will be rewarded."

The Beacham Prize also takes advantage of the letterpress printing facilities at the College — each year's winning manuscript will be published by the O'Neill Literary House in a numbered, limited edition. After his teaching career, Mr. Beacham established his own publishing company to publish reference books for academic libraries. Beacham Publishing also occasionally produces collections of poems or other small volumes to give away to libraries.

Thane Glenn, Beacham Prize Winner

"What sets the Veryan Beacham Prize apart from other awards and gives it an added value is that it encourages all kinds of writing," Michael Mott, a friend of the Beacham family, writes in the foreword. "As a judge, I tried to honor this. I hope in years to come the prize will go to philosophical essays, reviews, groups of poems, interviews. This year the impression I had was that there were some very talented writers of short stories at Washington College."

Thane Glenn '94 is the recipient of the College's first Veryan Beacham Prize, given in recognition of good writing. Glenn's short story, "The Lion's Cage," was selected as the winning manuscript by Michael Mott, a respected writer now teaching at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Virginia.

"The Lion's Cage," Mott noted, is a skillfully constructed story of childhood, told with the impressionistic perceptions of a child. In his story, Glenn explores "the dark corners of childhood" that lend shape to the adult psyche. "There are things children don't understand, fears and misconceptions children experience, that stay with them as they grow up," says Glenn. "I believe that no matter how careful a parent is, some damage to a child's psyche is inevitable. And life is a paradox — humans are driven to be connected to other people, yet independence is also inevitable. 'The Lion's Cage' tries to make some spiritual sense of that."

Thane, a senior English major, also has a novel in progress. It, too, is about growing up. Told in the first person narrative, Glenn's protagonist, and the language of his voice, develop from the time of first memory to early adulthood. "Following the development of the voice, the novel attempts to show a sense of discovery and revelation," says Glenn, adding: "It's also about art, which is about the same thing as life." Ω other standing of (sic) committee of the faculty with the power and responsibility for oversight of the curriculum as a whole and for the consideration of cross department and disciplinary programs on a pro-active basis."

"Report," from 4

The visiting team met with female faculty and staff members to assess the climate of Washington College for its women employees. This climate was characterized in a quote from one of the female employees as "not hostile but not hospitable." The Report said "that incidents such as remarks, jokes and subtle forms of discrimination have occurred," and that there are "few mechanisms in place that either raise awareness of gender and racial sensitivity or provide means for redress of grievances." The team feels the College's efforts in this regard are inadequate: "While a sexual harassment policy has been recently approved, the means for addressing grievances is rudimentary and does not go outside of traditional channels of authority."

Of the Board, the team wrote "The financial base of Washington College urgently needs strengthening. Given the current financial and enrollment challenges facing the College, the temptation to micro manage current operations is great. That energy would be better spent on ensuring the

See "Report," on 9

Bay to Bay Traders

Ray Ban Jansport Great Lakes Mad Dog Sport Rock Shox

207 Cross Street
Chestertown, MD 21620
778-3442

Functional Gear for active sports in all conditions

One More Week
20% Discount on all Patagonia in Stock
Spring and Summer Shipments Have Arrived!!

Need typing/word processing done?

Professional secretary is willing to type and/or edit papers, resumes, etc. . . for a small fee!

Call Lexa @778-7691

Do You Hate Laundry? WE LOVE IT!

Kent Laundry
207 High Street
778-3278
Pick Up & Delivery

China House Restaurant
Kent Plaza
778-3939

Present WC Student ID or WC Work ID and receive a free, small soup or a soda or with a $10 order or receive a free, large soup or two sodas with a $20 order

Custom Hats
Team Uniforms
Fraternity & Sorority Apparel
Your Goods or Ours
Special Apparel for Special Events!
Maryland Custom Embroidery
204 High St. 778-9786

OLD WHARF INN
ON THE CHESTER RIVER
FOOT OF CARROW ST.
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
JOHN & SANDY LINTZ L.P., OWNERS
410-778-3700
FAX: 410-778-3800

All-You-Can-Eat Triple Treat
Salad Bar Taco Bar
Self-serve Sundae Bar
Monday--Thursday 4--9 p.m.

Classifieds

Cruise Ship Jobs!
We will show you how to get on board.
800-303-2700

Cruise Ship Jobs!
Students needed! Earn $2000+ monthly
Summer, holidays, full-time. World Travel, Caribbean, Hawaii, Europe, Mexico. Tour Guides, Gift Shop Sales, Deck Hands, Casino Workers, etc. No Experience Necessary. Call 602-680-4647, Ext. C147.

Class Officer Candidates

Senior Class: President

Tyler McCarthy

Well it's come that time of year again and we have to decide who we want to help run the senior class. I am running for President because I feel that I can make a difference between a good senior year and a great senior year.

I have been very active since I have come to Washington College and everything I have been involved in has made me a better leader. I have been both Vice President and Treasurer for both Phi Delta Theta and the Inter Fraternity Council. I am a member of the All-Campus Judiciary Board, Student Athletic Advisory Council, as well as being a Resident Assistant for two years. In addition to being involved in all of these activities I have maintained a 3.0 in my major and played an active role on the varsity swim team. These are just a few of the things that have made me a better leader.

I feel that the students need someone that they can trust, someone that will be committed to representing them to the best of their ability. I feel it is important to have someone in office that is used to dealing with the faculty and the administration. Finally, I feel that the person you select should be approachable and receptive to suggestions. If elected I will do my best to uphold all of the aforementioned.

I have already begun looking into some commencement speakers and have gotten some great ideas toward throwing a senior class party that won't ever be forgotten.

I have asked Dave Dennehy (A.K.A. Juice) to run with me as Vice President. Dave and I work very well together and are looking forward to the challenges the lay ahead. Dave is currently the President of our fraternity and as I have mentioned before I am the Vice President. If we are both elected I can promise you a two man team that can't be beat.

"I have already begun looking into some commencement speakers and have gotten some great ideas toward throwing a senior class party that won't ever be forgotten. --Tyler McCarthy

Ken Pipkin

My name is Ken Pipkin and I am running for president of the Senior Class. I have been a member of the SGA for three years and ran unopposed last year for this position. The reason I state this is that I took the initiative to work for the SGA, I felt as though it was something I worked hard at.

This year the class of '95 successfully put together a Parent's Day and I feel as though next year the senior class will accomplish a lot more. I have given time, and I am doing this for the class of '95 and so that we enjoy our senior year. I have the ideas and qualifications for the job, on Monday April 25, vote Ken Pipkin.

"When I ran for the position last year, I had to put together a staff of people for the class, even then I thought of the Class of '95."--Ken Pipken

When I ran for the position last year, I had to put together a staff of people for the class, even then I thought of the Class of '95.

Senior Class: Vice-President

Matt Murray

In my two years at Washington College, I've definitely learned that our experiences here can only amount to as much as we want them to. In other words, what we get out of Washington College directly equals the amount of effort we put into it.

I've tried to follow this rule throughout my time on campus. For those of you who are familiar with me, you know that I have been an active participant in campus affairs since the day I arrived in Chester-town. For those of you who don't know me you may be interested in hearing that I have been involved with a myriad of extracricular activities over the past two years including: president of Kappa Alpha, sports editor of the Elm, varsity soccer, Omicron Delta Kappa, and Student Gov-ernment. I have occupied my time with a host of activities while also per-forming as a Dean's List student, and placing myself on line to graduate in three years.

However, for those of you seniors who don't know me, this list of qualifications doesn't really help you make your decision between myself and my very qualified opponent. You don't want to know what I've done in the past, but you want to know why I'm running and what I plan to do in the future as vice-president of the senior class.

First of all, one of the reasons I'm running involves the recently completed S.G.A. Executive Board elections. I was extremely frustrated upon learning that three of the five offices were run unopposed, as I felt it reflected a general sense of apathy among the current student body. Therefore I wanted to make sure that there was competition for the senior class offices, so that regardless of who won or lost, we would both know that there is a great deal of interest among seniors on how next year turns out for all of us.

Secondly, you want to know what I plan to do. As vice-president, I would strongly suggest to the other officers that we plan our year by focusing on three different aspects: 1) Make commence-ment as great as possible by bringing a quality gradu-ation speaker to Chester-town, and making sure everything runs as smoothly as possible. 2) Attempt to inspire more of a class identity among seniors. While it is difficult to bring all of the seniors together since so many of them live off-campus, I believe next year's senior class should have more activities together in order to invoke a sense of class unity. Although it may be a strength of Washington College that all classes are treated equally, I think seniors should feel as though they stand out. 3) Make next year as fun as possible for seniors. Remember, we are graduating, and by inspiring some class identity and having different activities, I believe we can have a good time.

Yes, we can have a good time next year, and now you need to carefully consider who you want to lead you to that goal. Care-fully choose who you want to be your president—consid-ering how involved he/she has been over the past years. But make sure to carefully consider other offices as well. As a class, we can only be as strong as our executive board, and I hope you'll elect me to have a role in our senior year. Thank you.

"Remember, we are graduating, and by inspiring some class identity and having different activities, I believe we can have a good time." -- Matt Murray

David Dennehy

Hello, My name is David Dennehy. I am running for vice president of the senior class. Yes we are going to be seniors and before you know it they are going to hand us our diplomas and tell us we can't come back, oh well it was fun while it lasted. If given the opportunity I would like to make our final year the most memorable yet. I have held various offices in my fraternity and at present reside as president. Other campus involvements includes, IFC (inter fraternity council), and target tutoring, to name a few. Such activities have geared me to be very organized and goal oriented, which I see as important attributes for such a position. As a senior class it is our responsibility to give back a little to a place that has given us so much, along with doing some things for ourselves. I would also like to mention that Tyler Mc-Carthy asked me to run with him, and as officers of the same fraternity we have worked together for two years now and make a very good team. This team I believe would be an added bonus to the senior class. Thank you.

David "Juice" Dennehy

Tyler McCarthy asked me to run with him, and as officers of the same fraternity we have worked together for two years now and make a very good team. This team I believe would be an added bonus to the senior class.

Do You Want VISA & MasterCard Credit Cards?

REGARDLESS OF CREDIT...EXPERIENCE

IAL SERVICES, INC.

VISA

AL SERVICES, INC.

MasterCard

Now you can have two of the most recognized and accepted credit cards in the world...Visa® and MasterCard® credit cards. So your search...EVEN IF YOU ARE NOW REFUSED CREDIT or HAVE BEEN TURNED DOWN BEFORE!

VISA® and MasterCard® the credit cards you deserve and need for: ID—BOOKS—DEPARTMENT STORES—GAS—CAR RENTALS—EMERGENCY CASH—TICKETS—RESTAURANTS—HOTELS—MOTELS—GAS—CAR RENTALS—REMEMBER—AND TO BUILD YOUR CREDIT RATING!

GUARANTEED APPROVAL

No turn downs!
No credit checks!
No secrecy deposits!

SEND THE COUPON TODAY
YOUR CREDIT CARDS ARE WAITING!

EZ-CARD, BOX 16516, ATLANTA, GA 30321

YES! I want VISA®/MASTERCARD® Credit Cards approved immediately. 100% GUARANTEED!

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____

STUDENT? Yes No SS#

SIGNATURE _____

NOTE: MasterCard is a registered trademark of MasterCard International, Inc. Visa is a registered trademark of VISA U.S.A. Inc.

CALL (404) 365-0000 FOR CREDIT CARD DETAILS

Senior Class: Secretary

Jay Derbis

I am running for Secretary of the Senior class for two basic reasons. First, as a Political Science major I am interested in participating on at least some level in the political process on campus. Perhaps more importantly, however, as a rising Senior I am interested in working toward a successful completion of the four years we have spent at Washington College. Considering the myriad events in which we will participate, right up to our commencement in May, it is important to install a set of class officers who can do a good job of planning and executing these events.

Considering the myriad events in which we will participate, right up to our commencement in May, it is important to install a set of class officers who can do a good job of planning and executing these events.-Jay Derbis

In short, I am jumping into the ring for the election of class officers because I believe that with my extracurricular experience and my strong academic background I possess the skills needed to help meet and solve whatever challenges might face next year's Senior class.

Junior Class: President

Mark Reyero

It seems to me that when people run for a SGA position here at Washington College, they always seem to run on the platform of "change". However, the two words that I would like to associate with my re-election bid as next year's Junior Class President are "motivation" and "experience". It would seem silly for me to change any of the approaches that I have taken regarding the SGA. Members of the SGA, whether a class president or a dorm senator can be both motivated and willing to initiate projects. In the past year as Sophomore Class President, I have kept quite busy. In the fall I undertook two very successful projects, Casey Parent's Day I once again had the opportunity to work with Pat Trams and the Alumni Association in coordinating what turned out to be a successful program with various alumni and students. When help was needed to set up for Earth Day, I volunteered. And now, pending President Trout's approval, I am initiating a new project for next fall, "Founder's Day". I have borrowed this idea from Vassar College from my home town of Poughkeepsie, New York. "Founder's Day" would be a celebration of the founding of Washington College in 1787 by William Smith. The day would begin with the Second Annual Casey Tittens, where once again students and alumni would work together in beautifying our campus. The festivities would continue into the afternoon with the games. "Founder's Day" would then come to a close with a "Founder's Day Concert" outdoors. Hopefully, the SGA would be able to attract another quality band such as God Street Wine to rock Washington College. It's events such as "Casey Time", the Birthday Ball, and Earth Day, which Washington College needs to keep life here at Washington College exciting. By Running for next year's Junior Class President, I hope to continue my commitment to those events and establish new events such as "Founder's Day" at Washington College.

The two words that I would like to associate with my re-election bid as next year's Junior Class President are "motivation" and "experience".-Mark Reyero

Junior Class: Vice-President

Erica Estep

My name is Erica Estep, and I am running for the Vice Presidency of the Class of 1996. Through being the current secretary of the sophomore class and working in the Student Affairs office on campus, I have recognized the Student Government Association's influence on social, economic, and political issues pertaining to Washington College students. As students we must be aware of the importance of strong, organized leadership. For leadership has proven to be a useful and effective tool in establishing unity. Washington has a long history of student organizations fall victim to inadequacies due to apathetic students. We must provide the energy and determination to keep the Student Government Association an active part in student life.

Washington College has a legacy of pride in the level of academic and athletic student participation. As your fellow classmate I share that same pride and wish to fulfill your expectations by continuing the trend of excellence that Washington College has grown accustom.

As your fellow classmate I share that same pride and wish to fulfill your expectations by continuing the trend of excellence that Washington College has grown accustom. -Erica Estep

Sophomore Class: President

Joseph D'Urso

Hey, party-party, shwing-shwing! Those of you who know me, know what I have done for our class and what I am capable of. But for those of you who do not, here is a little bit about myself.

I am presently the vice-president and treasurer of the Sophomore class. I was elected treasurer last year, but the vice-president had to step down, which automatically moved my position to vice-president. I am experienced in the formalities of the two offices and with the SGA.

I took an active role in the Sophomore class blood drive, Casey Day, and have helped to bring the band "Godstreet Wine" to Chestertown. Mark Reyero and I have gone over plans for the next Parent's Day, and if I am elected it will be the best Parent's Day ever.

Hey, party-party, shwing-shwing!-Joseph D'Urso

I know that I can represent the Junior class student body exceptionally because I know what people expect from class officers, and I can fulfill that role with experience.

Leticia Lyford-Pike

Hi! My name is Leti. If you've seen my signs around campus, you'll know that I'm running for Sophomore Class President. I've been wanting to do this for a while because I like our class and I think there's a lot I can bring to it. I'm dedicated and outgoing. I know most of the Freshmen and don't limit myself to just one group. I'm not afraid to speak up to make our class heard. We need to show Washington College that our class can also be an important, active part of the school. That is why I am willing to be the Class President. I am willing to dedicate my time next year to work with our class and the SGA.

Things I've Done*

I know what it means to have an important position in school. Although I haven't held an office in student government yet, I have been active in several groups in the past. I was the Editor-in-Chief of my high school newspaper, a position that took a lot of dedication. I spent a week after school every month with my staff to get the paper ready to be printed. My high school's student body and other school newspapers. I was responsible of voicing the staff's opinion in my editorials and served as a link between the student body and the administration. This is all transferable to being class president. I will work with the SGA, the administration, the other classes, the other class officers, and the sophomore class to make our class active and successful.

This year I participated in the school by being part of the crew team, which takes a lot of dedication and pushing myself. Being in Crew taught me discipline which made me able to manage my time so that I can give tours, work at the school catering service, and be on Dean's List.

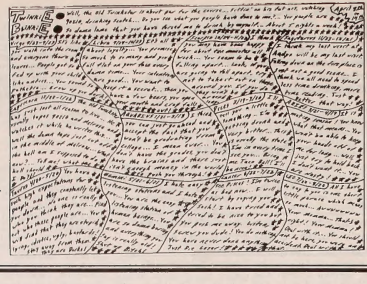
"What I Will Do Next Year*

The sophomore class is traditionally in charge of the annual blood drive. I have helped with blood drives at my high school and given blood myself. I want to keep up with this important event and have two blood drives, instead of just one. We can have one in the Fall and one in the Spring inviting the community to participate.

I also want to keep up the fraternities or sororities, so I think it would be a good idea to have a Sophomore Dance. This dance will be a dance all for us. We will have to raise the money for it, get a band, and do all the preparations necessary to invite someone and have a good time.

We need to start putting money into our treasury and that will take a great deal of fundraising. We can work with the SGA and have SGA sponsored dances, where part of the money will go to the sophomore class. I also want everyone to be involved.

opportunities for students to plant trees at school. We can have a "plant-a-tree day" on earth day next year when it is nice and warm so more students will participate.



Not all of us are in

I know most of the Freshmen and don't limit myself to just one group. I'm not afraid to speak up to make our class heard.-Leticia Lyford-Pike

We all need to work together to make our fundraisers and class activities successful. I plan to send everyone notices of the dates when we will be having class meetings. I want to have one at the beginning of next year to get suggestions from everyone and discuss the plans of the class. I want to have everyone who wishes, to participate. We will have something like dorm senators and have representatives in the class. Anyone who wishes to come to the class meetings and contribute with suggestions, complaints, or questions.

The other students running for office are all dedicated and I look forward to working with them and with you to make next year a better year for the class of 1997. Please remember me when you vote this Monday, 25th.

Class Officer Candidates Continued on Page Eight

Sophomore Class President

Edna Roberts

On Monday, April 25, 1994, Edna Roberts will be on the ballot once again for Class President, but of the Sophomore Class this time around.

My first year of being Class President has been a new experience, just as being a freshman in college. Attending SGA meetings weekly to represent my class was a job that I performed well and want to continue doing. My responsibility was to present the SGA with any concerns of the Freshman Class.

This year I have remained a committed Freshman Class President, as well as a friend to my fellow classmates. I have kept myself available and open to suggestions from anyone and everyone. The key to strong and effective leadership.

Going into our sophomore year we need that leadership and experience to remain as an active part of Washington College life. Next year we have to take it upon ourselves to want to be active and willing to support ourselves and others. Organizing charity drives or developing more projects to beautify our campus, such as Casey Time done this year, should be a goal of ours. In doing so we will be helping others, as well as strengthening the relationships between the Class of 1997.

I would also like to wish with luck to everyone who is running for Sophomore Class offices, for those are and will be the leaders of our class.

So support me and at the same time help us, the upcoming Sophomore Class of 1997, to make something of our experience as Washington College. Re-elect that dedicated and experienced leader. Vote Edna Roberts for Sophomore Class President on Monday, April 25.

Now Open!

SPECIAL WELCOME RAFFLE FOR WC STUDENTS

Present your college I.D. at Moon Bay Outfitters and you will be eligible for a drawing on the following:

1st Prize: Outerbanks Polo Shirt

2nd Prize: Hobie Hooded Fleece Pullover

Contest ends Friday April 22

MOON BAY LOGO HERE

COME CHECK IT OUT!

CASUAL WEAR AND ACTIVE WEAR FOR MEN AND WOMEN

117 S. Cross Street (Corner of Cross and Cannon)

M-TH 9:30 A.M. TO 5:30 P.M.
FRI 9:30 A.M. TO 7:00 P.M.
SAT 10:00 A.M. TO 5:00 P.M.

Sophomore Class: Treasurer

Hi everyone. My name is Dani Heath, and I am running for sophomore class treasurer. I feel I am highly qualified for this position, in many ways I have recently put together and run a fund-raiser for ZTA pledges, and I was in charge of all money taken. With this money we had to buy food to feed the sorority, as well as the sodas for the fund-raiser itself. We were very successful, and have made quite a profit. I feel that although I was busy at the time with softball, pledging and classes, I did a good job and handled everything with great responsibility. I am a chemistry major (for now at least) and a premed student. I would like someday to work for the FBI as a forensic psychiatrist. I am pledging ZTA as well as playing softball this semester, and last semester I was an active member of Hands Out and Target Tutoring, as well as maintaining a job both semesters. Math is my favorite subject, and one also one of my best. I feel that with all this in mind I have the knowledge as well as the responsibility to be treasurer of the sophomore class of the 1994-1995 school year. Thank you :)

Sophomore Class: Vice-President

Christina Chiarchiaro

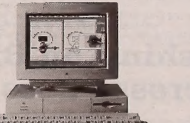
My name is Christina Chiarchiaro and I am running for vice-president of the sophomore class. Recent Student Government Association occurrences have been the basis for my desire to represent the class of 1997, attending the birthday ball and various concerts in the student center have shown me that successful, enjoyable events are accomplished through the SGA. The opening of the Cove, also very successful, has united us as students. Most importantly the current elections of SGA officers has shown me the enormous affect the officers conduct has on the entire Washington College community. As your class vice-president I would have high hopes of using the affective position to support various class activities. The Washington College community has seen the sophomores conduct a blood drive and Casey day. I see us continuing these two events along with creating new ones such as a class dance and a class trip. There also seems to be a need for earlier career awareness among sophomores.

I have been a part of the concerned Washington College community for a year and feel that a positive, assertive, friendly individual is required to hear the voices of the students and direct them respectfully to the faculty. A close interaction with the voices of the students and direct them respectfully to the faculty. A close interaction with the new SGA vice-president and treasurer indicates to me that a responsible, hard working individual willing to put forth the time is also necessary. With your vote I may take the position of vice-president and maintain these qualities in order to create many positive outcomes for us, the sophomore class.

"Report," from p. 5

College's future through direct financial contributions and an active role in securing actual major gifts. The College administration is composed of experienced and effective managers. But the leadership of every institution of higher education needs all the help it can get with fund raising. The visiting team also felt that the Board should become more acquainted with the non-financial dimensions of the College today. In the current circumstances it is all the more important for the Board to remember its role. Act as a collective body, focus on policy and carryout (sic) its responsibility to enhance the institution's resources."

The Report is currently being evaluated by the Washington College Middle States Steering Committee, who will release the Report next week along with a formal response to the Report which will address any disagreement the Committee may have with the Report's content or recommendations. Upon receipt of the response, the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association will act on the report. While it is highly probable that Washington College will be re accredited, there is also the possibility that the Commission would order another visit by an evaluation team in five years to check on the College's progress. Ω



And you thought you could only afford macaroni and cheese.

Macintosh® LC 475 8/160, Apple® Color Plus 14" Display, Apple Extended Keyboard II and mouse. Only $1,680.00.

PowerBook® 165 4/80. Only $1,640.00.

Macintosh Quadra® 610 8/160, Apple® Color Plus 14" Display, Apple Extended Keyboard II and mouse. Only $1,775.00.

Right now, you could take home one of the country's best-selling personal computers for incredibly low monthly payments. By qualifying for the Apple Computer Loan, you can choose from the entire Macintosh® line or grab a PowerBook, the most popular notebook computer. They're all powerful, easy to use and more affordable than ever. It's that simple. So, stop by your Apple Campus Reseller for further information. You'll be amazed what you can buy on a tight college budget.

The Apple Computer Loan.

Apple

For more information visit the
WC Bookstore
Casey Academic Center or call x7200

©Datapoint, 1994. ©1994 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the Apple logo, Macintosh, Macintosh Quadra and PowerBook are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. AppleCD and AudioVision are trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc.

Sho'men Baseball On A Roll After Wins Over Dickinson, Lincoln, Gettysburg

W.C. Sweeps Devils Despite 'Shoddy Fielding'

Erika K. Ford

Going into a game against Haverford on Tuesday , the Sho'men baseball team has improved their overall record to 12-7.

In the Centennial Conference, Washington is 7-3.

Last Saturday the Sho'Men defeated visiting Dickinson College twice by scores of 9-8 and 12-8. Offense carried the team to victory with Rory Conway and Gary Yovanovich both homering. Their late inning runs in the first game provided the winning margin.

Ace moundsman Keith "Whitey" Whiteford pitched six innings for the win. Whiteford has a 6-1 pitching record. Doug Blair earned a save by coming in to pitch the last inning.

Kevin Roland started and pitched four effective innings in the second game.

"Shoddy fielding allowed Dickinson to remain competitive throughout the game," head coach Ed Athey said. "However, Kevin gained his first victory of the spring."

Again Doug Blair relieved and pitched well during the last three innings.

"Hitting accolades in the second game go to many players," Athey said. He listed Dan Coker, Jarrett Pasko, Conway, Tim Pilarski, Whiteford, Andy Parks, Brian Rush, Chris Castello, and Yovanovich as stellar performers.

"The potent Sho'men offense is scoring runs, and that overshadowed an otherwise lack-luster defensive effort," Athey said.

Athey feels "that the defense must improve" in order for the Sho'men to continue to compete for the Conference championship.

"With Conference games beginning to pile up during the last two weeks of the season, the pitching will need better support in order to compete," Athey said.

"Washington has eight Centennial games remaining and cannot afford any letdowns so we can fight Johns Hopkins for the conference title."

This afternoon the Sho'men travel to play Haverford, while tomorrow they host Western Maryland at 1 p.m.

Play continues next week with away games at Swarthmore and Gallaudet on Tuesday and Wednesday. A week from today Washington plays Swarthmore again on home turf at 3 in the afternoon.

Senior Keith Whiteford is the ace of the Washington pitching staff this season.

Shoremen Sweep Lincoln After Hopkins Loss

Erika K. Ford

Washington College's baseball team raised its record to 10-7 with a double header victory at Lincoln University on Monday, April 11th with scores of 9-3 and 5-0.

Freshman pitcher Jarrett Pasko went the distance in the first game, giving up only four hits and striking out ten.

Andy Parks hit his second home run of the year.

Keith Whiteford had a double and single to lead the Sho'men to a win in the first game.

Andy Moore and Doug Blair shared the pitching responsibilities in game two against Lincoln. Blair got credit for the win. Tim Pilarski had two of the three hits registered by the Sho'men.

"We pretty much have to win games here on cut," Pilarski said. "We're in the middle of the Centennial Conference right now, and Gettysburg and Hopkins are still the favorites to win the league."

Said head coach Ed Athey: "Washington missed a golden opportunity to move up in conference standing by failing to hold a two run advantage over Johns Hopkins going into the final inning of the game played last Friday on Kibler Field."

The locals trailed going into the bottom of the eighth inning in the Hopkins game on April 8. After four base hits and two walks, the Sho'men staged a seven-run rally to go ahead 7-5 entering the final inning. The WC relief pitching failed to hold the lead and the Blue Jays scored four times to lead 9-7.

With Washington batting last, two runners once had men on second and third with one out. Unfortunately Gary Yovanovich's hit was converted by Hopkins's second baseman into a double play.

Dan Coker, Rory Conway, and Tim Pilarski were the hitting stars, bring in seven of the team's 11 hits," said Athey of the Hopkins game.

On Saturday the Sho'men had their hitting shoes on and defeated Gettysburg in the first game of a double header at home, 18-3. Hitwise, Conway had four, Pilarski and Brian Rush had two, and Whiteford had three.

Parks and Chad Campbell each had two hits and a homer.

Keith Whiteford registered his fourth win by going the distance and giving up only four hits.

The second game against Gettysburg was a defeat, 4-2.

"The game was a pitching battle between Doug Blair and Gettysburg's Willie Bridge," Athey said.

Whiteford had two hits to lead a Sho'Men six hit attack.

Washington Bites Bullet In First Men's Lacrosse Loss To D III Foe This Season

Ken Pipkin

Four score and six goals ago, the courageous fifth-ranked Shoremen made their run against the fourth-ranked Gettysburg Bullets. Unfortunately for Washington fans, the Shoremen would ultimately fall short to Gettyburg, 18-12.

In the teams' last meeting in May, 1993, Gettysburg also beat the Shoremen in the Middle Atlantic Conference final. Washington headed into Saturday's game determined to avenge last year's loss.

The battle began on Kibler field on Saturday with both teams fighting furiously for faceoffs, and both defenses and offenses furiously using their weapons of war to attack the goal.

The first quarter was closely contested, as the action went back and forth. At the end of the first quarter the Shoremen led 4-3. The second quarter continued to be close, and Washington held a 7-6 lead at halftime.

Those who contributed with goals for the Shoremen's first half effort were Bart Jaeger with three, Chris Cote with two, and single goals from Jason Paige and Blair Maneus. Paige, Jamie Carver, Matt Zarinko, Mike McDermott, and Chris Sanchez all added assists to help contribute to the 7-6 lead at the half.

Those who watched the struggle knew that the game would be decided in the fourth quarter. Unfortunately for Washington, the ball would not bounce its way.

The second half was a turning of the tides for the Shoremen. The Bullets tallied five times in the third quarter to Washington's three goals, giving the Bullets their first lead of the game. Gettysburg led 11-10 at the end of three periods, which it refused to let go.

The Shoremen's comeback attempt was halted by the Bullets in a 7-2 Gettysburg run. When the dust finally settled on the battlefield, and all injuries were assessed, the Shoremen suffered a bitter 18-12 defeat.

Biting the bullet was tough for the Shoremen. Head coach Terry Corcoran had mixed feelings about the final result.

"The team did a great job, and the kids really played their hearts out," Corcoran said. "A few breaks did not seem to go our way and it cost us the game."

With a loss by six goals, Corcoran felt" the team lost a lot of key posessions that were a result of unnecessary calls, and those calls turned into five Gettysburg goals."

"The guys hustled but got stuck with some unchangeable situations," Corcoran said.

The Gettysburg head coach agreed that "there were some key posessions in the game that we were able to convert."

All in all the day was tough for the Shoremen, who will look to avenge last weeks loss to the Bullets against the Gulls of Salisbury State this weekend.

The Gulls and Shoremen will faceoff tomorrow on Kibler Field at 1:30 p.m. in a much anticipated rematch of last year's NCAA First Round playoff game in which Washington stole a victory from the top-ranked team in Division III.

Reading through the paper and looking at the Gettysburg score will m... give you the full impact ... the final result. T... Shoremen's desire to win a... their struggle of superiori... on the filed was all abov... Saturday, but they fell ... little short. The question ... will you be their to roo... root , root, for the home team tomorrow.

Be there tomorrow a... support Washington.

quote a T-Shirt I saw th... other day: "Washington ... College Lacrosse. ... Things Man, Bad Things."

Editor's Note: Many thanks to Ken Pipkin fo... volunteering to give sp... journalism a try in this, h... debut story in The Elm. ... would like to hear... encourage anyone else w... wants to give sports a try ... write for next week's fi... issue of the year, to call Mi... at ext. 8763. Thanks.–MM

Women's Lacrosse Ends Losing Skid

Shorewomen Beat Widener To Snap 15-Game Streak And Record Victory

Matt Murray

The last time the Washington College women's lacrosse team could ring the victory bell was March 25, 1993 when the Shorewomen narrowly defeated Swarthmore 13-12. Washington lost its last seven games of the 1993 campaign and its first eight of 1994 (including a 12-4 setback from the same Swarthmore squad), bringing the losing streak to 15 games.

However, all of that changed on Thursday, April 14, when the Shorewomen beat Widener University 14-13 in a muddy game. Since then, Washington also won its second game of the season with a 9-7 victory over Goucher on Tuesday, and the team's record now stands at 2-3.

The turn of events began on April 14 when Amy Goucher scored on an assist from Beth Hocker less than three minutes into the contest. With succeeding goals from Kirsten Lucas and Renee Guckert, the Shorewomen jumped to 3-0 lead with 28:13 remaining in the first half.

"Right from the moment they stepped on the field, my players knew they were going to win," head coach Sarah Feyerherm said. "That's unusual for a team that's 0-7, and there wasn't any particular reason for it, they just knew."

However, the first half wasn't as easy as Feyerherm had hoped, as Isabell Halpin scored three first period goals to lead the Pioneers and made the score 7-4 in Washington's favor at halftime.

"Talent-wise, Widener wasn't as weak as I thought they would be," Feyerherm said. "But it was nice to finally play a team that has the same problem we have in that they didn't have a lot of depth."

The Shorewomen turned the game into a rout in the second half, scoring seven goals to Widener's one.

Elizabeth Moga, Megan McCurdy, and Hocker each contributed single goals while Lucas and Guckert scored two a piece in the second half.

Washington picked up 62 ground balls compared to Widener's 19 in the 14-5 Washington victory.

"We played as hard as we needed to play to win," said Feyerherm of the team's first victory in its last 16 efforts. "We out-hustled Widener in a messy game, and they started to get frustrated in the end which was when we took off for good."

However, the Shorewomen failed to put together two consecutive wins when they fell to Haverford 13-6 on Saturday.

Guckert scored four goals and McCurdy added two for Washington, but the home team was overpowered by a balanced Red Wave attack.

While Washington did fall by seven, Feyerherm found a couple of positive notes in the game.

"It wasn't an easy win for Haverford," she said. "They beat us 20-4 last year, but we made them work for it this year.

"That's been the trend of the team this year. They're working harder every game. Haverford pulled away at the end, but we wouldn't give up."

Washington kept the game close in the first half, and the score was on ly 8-5 in Haverford's favor at halftime. Once again, Washington got off to a quick start with two early goals, and once again, as has been a trend all season, Haverford came charging back to forge a 7-2 lead.

Feyerherm feels there's a reason her team continually gets off to a good start but is eventually buried under a flurry of goals.

"That's indicative of teams coming out and thinking it's going to be easy against us, and then they realize if they don't get their act together, we're going to beat them," she said.

On Tuesday, Goucher had their act together, but Washington still won in a 9-7 contest. However, although the Shorewomen recorded the victory, Feyerherm wasn't as pleased with her team's performance.

"I don't think we played particularly well," she said. "We knew we were better than them, but they were doing things that shouldn't beat us. At halftime, I wasn't happy."

At halftime, Washington and Goucher were deadlocked at three goals a piece, but Washington came out strong in the second half to earn the victory.

Lucas, Scarlett and Moga began the second half with unanswered goals to take a 6-3 lead with 18:39 remaining.

However, Goucher came back with two unanswered goals before Lucas scored again to make the score 7-5 with 17:14 remaining.

Sherry Malloy scored her third goal of the game for Goucher with 16:24 left to close the within 7-6, but Guckert scored the winning goal with 16:23 remaining to make the score 8-6.

Schultz scored an insurance goal with 10:33 remaining to make the score 9-6.

Now at 2-9, Washington's next game will be tomorrow at Bryn Mawr at 1:00 p.m. The Shorewomen will face Salisbury State in their last home game of the season on Wednesday at 4:30. Washington will complete the 1994 campaign at Muhlenberg on April 30 at 1:00 p.m.

Softball Sweeps Loyola Club

CHESTERTOWN, MD--

The Washington College softball team swept Loyola College's club team on Monday by impressive 16-1 and 7-1 scores.

In game one, Washington's Amy Povloski pitched a two-hitter through four innings, giving up one unearned run, and the Shorewomen coasted to the 16-1 win. Cherie Gallini was the offensive star on her 2-for-3 performance which included a triple and three RBIs.

In game two, catcher Nicole Zemanski handled both Povloski and Melissa Kordula, as they combined to give up only one run on two hits, while striking out four.

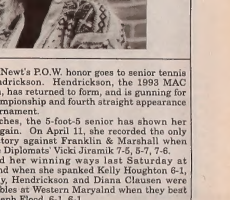
Denise Hakanson had a two-RBI double in the first inning, and Kordula and Leanne Cole were both 2-for-2.

Washington's last game of the season will be tomorrow at home against Dickinson College at 1:00 p.m.

Women's Tennis Defeats Ursinus

CHESTERTOWN, MD--

The Washington College women's tennis team defeated Ursinus College on Tuesday, 7-2.



Pam Hendrickson, Diana Clausen, Vicki Reth, Amy Rizzitello, and Melissa Ellwanger were all victorious in singles.

Additionally, the doubles team of Hendrickson and Clausen recorded a 6-4, 6-3 win, and the team of Anne-Marie Malena and Ellwanger recorded a 6-7, 6-3, 7-6 victory.

They will face Dickison tomorrow at home.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

This week, the Newt's P.O.W. honor goes to senior tennis player Pam Hendrickson. Hendrickson, the 1993 MAC singles champion, has returned to form, and is gunning for a Centennial championship and fourth straight appearance in the NCAA tournament.

In recent matches, the 5-foot-5 senior has shown her strengths once again. On April 11, she recorded the only Shorewomen victory against Franklin & Marshall when she outlasted the Diplomats' Vicki Jiramik 7-5, 5-7, 7-6.

She continued her winning ways last Saturday at Western Maryland when she spanked Kelly Houghton 6-1, 6-1. Additionally, Hendrickson and Diana Clausen were victorious in doubles at Western Maryalnd when they beat Houghton and Steph Flood, 6-1, 6-1.

At home against Ursinus on Tuesday, Hendrickson routed Yvonne Pirwitz 6-0, 6-1. The Hendrickson-Clausen team was once again victorious in doubles when they defeated Pirwitz and Regan McCann 6-4, 6-3.

Honorable mentions this week go to:

Softball--Amy Povloski has been a nice suprise for head coach Lanee Cole in the pitching department. At this point in the season, Povloski is now shouldering the load.

Baseball--Kevin Roland has steadily improved this season, and recently recorded his first victory of the season against Dickinson College last Saturday.

Women's Lacrosse--Kirsten Lucas and Renee Guckert have been handling the scoring for the Shorewomen, who have won two of their past three games after dropping their first eight. The co-captains have both scored in each of the past three contests.

Good luck to all of the team's this weekend. Men's Lacrosse and Crew will be at the forefront of the weekend's action as Lacrosse will face Salisbury at home and Crew will travel to the prestigious Murphy Cup.

Also, softball will wrap up its season tomorrow at home, and women's lacrosse will be looking for its first conference victory when it travels to Bryn Mawr College.

Newt's

Others may try to imitate us, but they can never duplicate us

Extended Hours for Midnight Madness

15¢ Drafts: 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Every Thursday Night

WASHINGTON COLLEGE
SPORTS
THE ELM

SCORES

Men's Lacrosse

Washington	12
Gettysburg	18

Women's Lax

Washington	9
Goucher	7

Baseball

Washington	9	12
Dickinson	8	8

Softball

Washington	16	7
Loyola (Md.)	1	1

Men's Tennis

Washington	9
Western Md.	0

Women's Tennis

Washington	7
Ursinus	2

Kevin Roland hasn't had to worry about too many trips to the mound lately. The coaches and managers have felt quite content sitting in the dugout with Roland on the hilll in the past couple of weeks. He started off a strong run with an impressive performance against Hopkins on April 8, and he recently recorded his first victory of the Spring.

Newt's Player of the Week: Pam Hendrickson

Upcoming Games

MEN'S LACROSSE
Washington vs. Salisbury State
April 23 1:30

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
Washington at Bryn Mawr
April 23 1:00

BASEBALL
Washington vs. Western Maryland
April 23 1:00

SOFTBALL
Washington vs. Dickinson
April 23 1:00

MEN'S TENNIS
Washington at Dickinson
April 23 1:00

WOMEN'S TENNIS
Washington vs. Dickinson
April 23 1:00

CREW
Washington at Murphy Cup
April 23

INSIDE

•Women's Lax Snaps 15-Game Losing Streak

•Shoremen Lacrosse Falls To Gettysburg

•Baseball Sweeps D.C.

•Softball Sweeps Loyola Club

The Washington College

Elm

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Volume 65, Number Twenty-six • April 29, 1994

Washington College • Chestertown, Maryland

President Trout Responds to Middle States Report

Scott Koon

Today the President released his formal response to the Report of the Evaluation Team of the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. The response, which was written in consultation with the Middle States Steering Committee, is to be presented to the Executive Director Commission on Higher Education, who will then determine if the College is to be reaccredited.

While the response acknowledges that "the Report finds much to admire about the College," most of the ten page response is devoted to refuting some of the faults the Middle States Visiting Team found with the College at the time of their visit. Many of the problems cited in the Report are refuted with the argument that these concerns are currently being addressed by recent changes in College policy.

Many of the other flaws the team found with the College are countered by the argument that the team is simply in error in their findings: "The Report is at many points critical of planning efforts at Washington College, and it contends that the College has 'communication' problems to which the administration is 'oblivious.' It argues that the long range plan is not strategic, is naïve about national trends, is devoid of priorities and time sequence, and is widely misunderstood. We believe these characterizations to be only partly true and certainly in need of interpretation."

In his response, President Trout also maintains that the Report also slights many of the College's strengths, including the College's efforts over the course of the last decade in improving the College's facilities. The response also maintains that "in addressing admissions and financial aid, the Report all but overlooks the strengthened qualifications of our entering classes, the increased number of matriculants, and the lowering rate of attrition." The response indicates that the Report overlooked progress which has been made towards improving faculty salaries and diversifying the College's student body.

In the response President Trout also indicates that "communication is a cosmic quality of an organization, the catchall deficiency. . . The Trout administration can best be characterized by its unusual efforts to foster openness, participatory governance, and delegation of responsibility." The response goes on to agree with the Report's observation that the College has too many committees, and goes further in stating "the plethora of committees at the College, legitimately criticized, makes adequate communication a significant challenge: too often, the community is unaware of the work of these bodies."

The Report took note of the controversy surrounding the Long Range Plan's objective to increase the size of the student body, but the President has found fault with this objection: "the alleged confusion concerning the extent of growth envisioned for the student body is not real. While a small number of faculty do not favor growth above 800, we thought it better to give vent to that view than to suppress it. . . We can find no administrators in managerial positions who do not endorse 1150, contrary to the claim of the Report. The Board is absolutely clear on this aim, as evidenced by unanimous votes. I am not certain that we will be able to attract and retain enough students over the next decade to reach 1150, but we intend to try."

The President's institutional response and the Middle States Visiting Team Report will be distributed to the SGA Executive Board, various offices of the College and class presidents today or Monday. Copies of both documents will be placed on reserve at Miller Library for perusal by students and other interested members of the College community. Ω

The "Last Supper"

Tex Andrews Honored by Students and Faculty at Farewell Dinner

Tex Andrews and students

Aaron Blake

Wednesday night a farewell dinner was held for departing Art professor Tex Andrews at the O'Neill Literary House. Students and faculty members began arriving at 6:30 to "pay their last respects." After consuming several Becks and discussing ties and socks on the Lit. House porch, the nucleus of "mourners" followed Andrews inside to devour tortilla chips and a vast selection of dips.

Although the dip occupied Andrews for nearly a half hour, it was soon time to move on to dinner, which consisted of gaspacho and as one attendee described "toastie" enchiladas. After dinner and dessert of angelfood cake and some excellent cookie-type things, Becky Bryant, a junior Art major, thanked the students and faculty who came and described the event as "the last chance we have to party with you [Andrews]." After Tarin Towers thanked those who helped put together the dinner, Andrews was presented with a card signed by his friends and students. Along with the card came a box wrapped in some really wild reflective paper. "My daughter will love this," Andrews was heard to remark. The gift of assorted cigars appeased Andrews, a known cigar fan, and he proceeded to rate each of the brands in the assortment.

The atmosphere was buoyant as Andrews proceeded to "schmooze" with occupants of the different tables. After some discussion of French film at my table, Andrews moved on. The gathering dispersed around 9:00, leaving Andrews to return to the art studio to finish selecting work to be displayed in the Student Art Show. Ω

Honor Code Changes

Rachael Fink

Earlier this month a new version of the Washington College Honor System was released by a committee of students, faculty and administrators. The document, meant to replace the current Honor Code which was established in 1965, was created in response to the need for an up-dated, more effective and efficient Honor Code System. However, a comparison of the two documents reveals some descripancies in the newer version.

The first line of said document orients it in the Student Handbook on page 34 replacing the section, "Campus Disciplinary System. In the 1993-1994 Student Handbook page 34 does indeed contain the "Campus Disciplinary System" section, but the Honor Code itself is found on page 18, under the heading of "Campus Policies and Regulations." The "Campus Disciplinary System" section contains a detailed description of each of the judicial structures established on campus. The new version of the Honor System does not establish, with the same accuracy, the positions and channels of the judicial system.

Turning back to the Honor Code contained in the Student Handbook, serval differances can be noted between the two documents. The new version starts with an explanation of "The Spirit of the Honor Code," which is not spelled out in the current version. The next section of the new Honor Code corresponds roughly to the introductory statements found in the Student Handbook, with the exceptions being the reference to the pledge signed by freshmen Orientation as the Honor Code as opposed to the Honor Pledge, as in the earlier version, and the Elm Staff Meeting '94-'95. If interested please contact next year's Editor-in-Chief (Head Wench) Rachael Fink, ext. 8587, through campus mail or QuickMail.

See "Honor," on 6

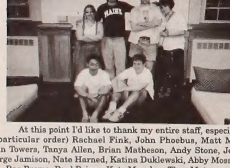
Inside

Letters to the Editor help Scott fill up the Elm with text	3
Generation X??	3
"Dirt" on what WC needs	4
Senior Reading	5
Student Art Show Opens	5

The Chestertown School for the Overprivileged

Way back in Spring of 1991 when I arrived on this campus, Washington College would have been more aptly named The Chestertown School for the Overprivileged. To say that the institution was homogenous would be generous: it had a milky white homogeneity of the sort which one rarely sees outside of Simi Valley.



I came to Washington College fully expecting to be irritated by what I perceived as a bunch of sheltered arrogant little brats who had never had to work for a living. Needless to say, with this attitude I was scarcely able to hold a conversation with someone without finding something to excite my ire. Though I didn't know what L. L. Bean was before I came here, I could immediately diagnose preppiness, and I'd automatically dismiss such people. Conversely, people wearing more proletarian gear were just as bad, as they were inauthentically spiny wacking clean culture in the hopes that they could divorce themselves from their own bourgeois attitudes-yet all the while such persons, operating without true revolutionary self criticism, were in fact devolving to a state of misanthropic self pity.

I have today transcended such narrow mindedness. Yet certain things still get my gost. Like every time I see an eighteen year-old driving an expensive imported automobile paid for with the fruits of their father's exploitation of the international proletariat. Or like when I see a gaggle of bourgeois teenagers singing along to Bob Marley's Exodus. Every time that happens, and it happens fairly often, something inside me snaps and I know that I must leave before I snatch some unfortunate kid up by the collar and berate him thusly: "You don't know where you're going, you don't know where you're from-but it sure as hell ain't Jamaica! You're so utterly duped you don't even see the irony of a little white Republican boy from Connecticut listening to Bob Marley on a two thousand dollar stereo, do you?"

Or what about the lovely "every day is heterosexual pride day" posters on campus? What Nietzsche scholar/ rocket scientist / neurosurgeon thought that one up? Talk about mastering the obvious! If it weren't for the fact that every day at Washington College is heterosexual pride day, we wouldn't need to have a gay pride month. Washington College: we're proud of our bigotry.

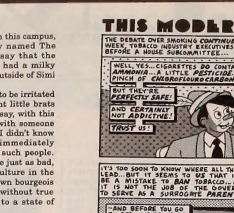
But still, when all is said and done, there have been some marvelous changes here at WC in the period I've been here, changes which have made me proud to be associated with the College. The College has come up with a harassment policy, an affirmative action policy and it has increased minority enrollment. These are small steps to be sure and the College is lagging behind the rest of the nation in taking them. But at least the College has taken them, and even if it lags behind the rest of the nation, it is at least has moved ahead of the rest of the Eastern Shore. Not bad for a town which had segregated public schools well into the seventies.

Good luck on finals, have a nice summer, congrats to the class of '94, etc.

At this point I'd like to thank my entire staff, especially (in no particular order) Rachael Fink, John Phoebus, Matt Murray, Tarin Towers, Tanya Allen, Brian Matheson, Andy Stone, Jeff Lee, George Jamison, Nate Harned, Katina Duklewski, Abby Moss, Steve Kim, Rae Brown, Paul Briggs, Kate Meagher, Thea Mateau, and Eve Zartman. Thanks also to Eva Browning, President Trout, Gene Hamilton, Dean Wubbels and Richard Steiner. Thanks also to Jamie Baker for his help and Richard Harwood for his advice. Special thanks to Tanya Cunic for her expert assistance and especial tolerance.

Congratulations and good luck to next year's Editor-in-Chief, Rachael Fink. El Gordo has enjoyed working with the Head Wench.

As for me, yeah, I'll be back next year but man, I'm really burnt, so don't go looking for my byline too often-except for the occaisional crossword puzzle, that is.



The Washington College ELM
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief	Advertising Manager
Scott Ross Koon	George Jamison
News Editor	Layout Editor
Rachel Fink	Abby R. Moss
Features Editor
George Jamison
Sports Co-Editors
Matt Murrey & Y. Jeffrey Lee
Circulation Manager
Rae Brown
Office Manager
Steve Kim

The Washington College ELM is the official student newspaper of Washington College. It is published every Friday over the academic year, excluding holidays and breaks. Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Open Forum, and columns are those of the author and not necessarily those of the ELM. The ELM welcomes letters to the Editor and Open Forum submissions. Letters must be legible and clearly typed, and must be received by Wednesday night at 8 p.m. for that week's paper. Contributions can be delivered to the ELM mailbox in the basement of Hodson Hall, sent through campus mail, sponsor sent Quicksand or placed directly in the ELM file server. Correspondence should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff. Phone calls are accepted at 778-8444. The ELM does not discriminate on any basis.

THIS MODERN WORLD

by TOM TOMORROW

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

In reading your editorial in teh April 22, 1994 issue of the Washington College Elm, in regards to the report by the Middle States Visiting Team, I was appalled at your comments regarding the obscure realm of the treatment of female faculty and staff. First of all, how you can comment so lightly regarding a subject you can obviously have no first hand knowledge of is completely beyond me. Not to mention the fact that you dare to group all of the female staff and faculty members here as "well paid white collar workers carping about sexual harassment." Did it occur to you that not all of the women on this campus sit behind desks, look out your window Scott and watch the workers who clean up the dorms, who haul out the trash, that clean up after everyone else, that scrub the bathrooms, that srub and polish the floors, that work in all kinds of weather or the ones that work in the Dining Hall kitchen where the temperature outside is 90 degrees and it's 100 or 125 in there. Or how about the ones who do sit behind the desk and accomplish the work of two people because of cutbacks, in one eight hour or more day, and then have to go home and go right back to work at raising a family. Perhaps Scott you should take a bit more time yourself to speak of some of these workers here on camous and find out exactly what their income levels are and how many people they are supporting and how well they can live on their incomes, I think the harsh realization might hit you that a majority of the females on this campus support families, children, and themselves at below poverty income levels. And then they have to put up with what you deem as jokes or remarks in such a lighthearted manner. Tell me Scott have you ever had a male supervisor make a comment to you after you have returned to work after nine months of carrying a baby in your womb and then having to leave that child with someone all day and work so you can put food in their mouth, that you look like you had your clothes

See "Letters," on 7

Week at a Glance

April 29-May 5

Film Series: No film is being shown

29
Friday
The Show Off
A play by George Kelly
8:00 p.m.
Tawes Theatre

30
Saturday
The Show Off
A play by George Kelly
8:00 p.m.
Tawes Theatre

1
Sunday
May Day
Run around buck nekked in Miller Library!
Senior Reading
7:30 p.m. in Phoebe's.

2
Monday
Student Art Show
Gibson Arts Center
Through Graduation Weekend

3
Tuesday

4
Wednesday
Maryland Public Treasures: The State of the Arts
Sophie Kerr Room.
4:30 p.m.

5
Thursday
Last Day of Classes

Open Forum

Who's Losing the Generation Name Game?

Rachel Demma

I've got a bad habit of trying to hang on to things. Usually it's things in the past I tend to cling to. But lately I've noticed I've been latching onto the opposite—my future. I'm trying not to let go of the idea that I've got one. It's hard when we're all constantly being bombarded by our own negativity. Who's responsible for this constantly changing and warped ad-campaign for an entire generation, anyway? We've been billed as the Thirteenth Generation, Generation X, the twentynothings, Baby Busters, and slackers. I'm not sure anymore if we're marketing ourselves or buying into the Baby Boomers' perception of us. And what are we anyway? I'm lost in the double talk. How can I live up to my label while hearing all of the sociobabble coming out of both sides of people's mouths. Am I expected to be green and politically correct or an apathetic mental dropout, spoon-fed by my TV set? Should I be whining that I'm the victim of the Reagan-Bush recession era and cursing my bleak future after graduation, or should I embrace the nihilism, cynicism and laziness that is supposedly my due? Have we grown up too quickly in the shadow of political scandals, increasing violence and the threat of AIDS or are we terminally immature? These generat-ional catch words don't convey any neat and tidy sense of our cultural climate to me. They are confusing terms which encapsulate nothing more than our confusion. I've lost my hearing amidst the babbub and the hype. Will the real Generation X please stand up?

In purely statistical terms we are easily defined. We are the children of the Silent and Baby Boomer generation, born between 1961 and 1981. Ranging in age from 11 to 31, we are the 13 th generation since America's birth, numbering 80 million. We are the first generation since the one born between 1822-1842 to be less college-educated than those of the preceding generation. 40% of us were raised in single-parent homes. At age 16 we had already viewed 33,000 murders in movies and on TV. We have had the highest suicide rates and stress levels of any generation. There is a 40% chance that having left our parents' homes with a high-school education or more, we will move back at least once. We are expecting to earn $30,000 or more by the time we reach 30, yet in reality, the U.S. Census Bureau has informed us that in 1990 there were eight 25 to 29 year-olds with an annual income under $30,000 for every one making more than that.

But, after all the numbers have been totaled and tabulated, the nature of this generation as a collective entity is nonetheless difficult to get a handle on. It seems that no consensus can be reached as to our true identity, our goals, opinions or outlooks. An article in Newsweek's May 1992 issue described "twentysomethings" as "loaded with energy ad creativity" while seven months later in The Atlantic Monthly, Neil Howe and William Strauss discussed at length a "young adult wasteland of academic non-performance, political apathy, suicide pacts, date-rape trials, wilding and hate crimes." The questions arise as to how such widely divergent perceptions of this generation are possible all

See "Demma," p. 6

Campus Voices

By: Scott Koon

Question:

If it were up to you, what would the question be this week, and how would you answer it?

I can't, I'm so burnt out--I have to finish my thesis on Carson McCullers.

Melissa Moorehead
Senior
Hyattsville, MD

Q. Would you like all of your papers cancelled?

A. Yes.

Adriana Somolinos
Junior
Madrid, España

Q. How many times a day do you drink tea?

David Tsipepyuk
Junior
Philly

A. At least twice--herbal.
Chandev Abhayaratne
Senior
Colombo Sri Lanka

Q. Do you like cats, and if not, how do you torture them?

A. I like cats. I don't torture them. Never.

Jennifer Reddish
Senior
Denton, MD
(That place south of here)

Q. Do we care about GALA and why are they approaching us in the CAC?

A. No, I don't care about GALA and they shouldn't be approaching me in the CAC

Jerry Davis
Junior
Houston, TX

Q. What percentage of the campus smokes weed from big bongs?

A. I'd say 65%.

Jon Alexander
Junior
Rehobeth Beach, DE

Nixon, Bosnia and the United Nations

Paul Briggs

It is difficult, even for someone of my generation, to imagine the country without Richard Nixon. I was born not long before the Watergate scandal started appearing in the news. Nixon had been in politics for over a quarter of a century, had been President of United States for five years, and had arguably the most impressive foreign-policy record of any president since Truman.

Twenty years later, he was still highly visible, having recovered from the disgrace of Watergate to become one of America's foremost elder statesmen.

Since Nixon's greatest triumphs were always in foreign affairs, many noted commentators have taken this opportunity to compare his record with President Clinton's. Not surprisingly, Clinton comes up short. The president's initial response to abortive attempt at nation-building in Somalia are often, and rightly, cited as failures. Clinton's greatest problem, however, has been Bosnia. The administration's insistence on the ways-and-means Western European leaders before taking action makes any progress on aggression difficult, and quick response nearly impossible. The current U.S. policy in Bosnia could best be described as consensus brinkmanship.

There is some good news. Serb forces are finally pulling back from what's left of Gorazde, just hours before the NATO deadline. Earlier this year, Sarajevo was freed by a similar ultimatum, and Russian diplomats persuaded the Serbs to withdraw from Tuzla. If the object of our policy is to get Serb forces to withdraw from contested areas prior to a negotiated settlement, then, slowly but surely, it is working.

Unfortunately, it is working too slowly and not surely enough. The same guns that were withdrawn from the hills around Sarajevo turned up in the hills around Gorazde. The economic sanctions against Yugoslavia are wreaking such havoc on the economies of nearby countries like Romania and Bulgaria that there is some question as to how long it will be possible to keep them up.

The only way to force the government of Serb-held Bosnia to the negotiating table is to authorize a much more widespread campaign of air strikes. But Clinton administration has been trying to get NATO to agree to this, with limited success. The United Nations is unalterably opposed to air strikes- in fact, one U.N. general in charge of "peacekeeping" forces in Bosnia was quoted as saying that, while he supported peacekeeping, he was against pesacemaking. Unfortunately for the U.N., there is no peace in Bosnia, and if there is to be any, it will have to be made before it can be kept. The current policy of threatening air strikes against a specific city if the Serbs do not withdraw by a certain date, then carrying out that threat if necessary, places the lives of United States and European airmen in unnecessary jeopardy. It is extremely difficult to carry out a successful air strike and return safely if the enemy already knows you're coming. One British plane has already been shot down, but fortunately no one was killed.

To make matters worse, there is some question as to whether an escalated campaign of air strikes will work. Many people, particularly among Russian officials, believe that they will only make the Bosnian Serbs angrier and more determined. Of course, in theory it does not matter how angry

See "Briggs," on 9

Blub DIRT

by Tanya Allen

PRESIDENT TROUT and DEAN WUBBLES were hovering over the Chester River in a helicopter, speaking to the fish through a megaphone. "We know how to change you all back into humans!" they shouted. "We know how to set you free!"

"How? How?" called all the faculty/staff/students/aquatic sea creatures.

"Join in a circle," said PRESIDENT TROUT. "And hold fins!"

So ERIC HAMMESFAHRfish joined fins with MORGAN GEISSLERfish who joined fins with TERRY TRIBBETTfish who joined fins with MARK STEPHENSfish who joined fins with KRIS CARTERfish who joined fins with LAURE BRADLEYfish who joined fins with SHELLEY BROWNfish who joined fins with CHRISTOPHER SMITHfish who joined fins with JOHN SHANNAHANfish who joined fins with G. THOMAS SHRECKfish who joined fins with LORRAINE TAYLORfish who joined fins with ADRIANA SOMOLINOSfish who joined fins with DR. RICHARD STRINERfish who joined fins with NAMALA MOSSfish who joined fins with DR. GEORGE R. SHIVERSfish who joined fins with TOM SOLTERfish who joined fins with BRIAN MATHESONfish who joined fins with JULIEN GAUDIONfish who joined fins with LEROY GATELLfish who joined fins with JENN BERSHONfish who joined fins with AMY BACHELLEfish who joined fins with RICHARD HARWOODfish who joined fins with PATRICE STANLEYfish who joined fins with MARK MURPHY KING OF WACfish....

"And now," said PRESIDENT TROUT, "Now that you're all holding hands, I want you all..."

"Yes? Yes?" said JOSEPH SUENfish.

"Yes? Yes?" said DAVID MARAVILLAfish.

"Yes? Yes?" said THEA MATEUSfish.

"I want you all..." PRESIDENT TROUT'S voice went down to a holy whisper. "To Love each other."

"Oh, come on!" said EMILY BETH GRUSHfish. "What a corny ploy to end a story! You want us all to hold hands, and love each other, and that's what's going to turn us all back into human beings? Love?"

"Yes," said PRESIDENT TROUT, tears in his eyes. "I have seen the light. It is Love that will make us all human again. Love that will make everything at Washington College right again. Love that will make us all understand, be willing to work with, and tolerate each other again. Love that will make us forgive each other for whatever we need forgiving for again. Love that will make us Love again. Love...Love...Love..."

"This is SO stupid!" MELANIE WENTZELfish. "We deserve a better ending than this!"

"Yeah!" said TARYN VENNERfish. "And until we get one, I'm just going to repeat the word...Blub!"

"Me, too! Blub!" said HEATHER NOBLEfish.

"Blub!" said SKIP GIBSONfish.

"Blub!" said DR. PETER DAPKEfish.

"Blub!" said MITSU HANNUKIfish.

"Blub!" said REX VOGANfish.

"Blub!" said LARA USILTONfish.

"Blub!" said TIM MULLADYfish.

"BlubBlub!" said ANNAIRENE MSELLAfish.

"Ag!" screamed TANYA ALLEN. "I'm really tired and stressed!"

"Yeah, well, so are the rest of us!" shouted MARCIA MOWBRAYfish. "Now come up with a better ending, NOW!"

"Ag!" howled TANYA ALLEN. "No...I can't think...the pressure...the pressure...I can't think of a good ending...ag..."

"NOW! NOW! BLUB! BLUB! BLUB!" shouted MICHELLE NICHOLSfish.

"BLUB! BLUB! BLUB!" shouted SHELLEY O'BRIANfish.

"BLUB! BLUB! BLUB!" shouted KATIE TORNEfish.

"BLUB! BLUB! BLUB!" shouted MARGERY TAWODAfish.

"BLUB! BLUB! BLUB!" shouted KATE SULLIVANfish.

"BLUUU

How to Have Fun at the Senior Reading

Tanya Allen

The Senior Reading is a serious occasion. It's the last chance Senior writers have to air their works in front of the W.C. community. It's the student reading attended by the largest number of W.C. community members—from faculty to family to friends to the frankly curious. It's also the reading imbibed with the most tension, as audience members often leave debating with each other over who is most likely to win the Sophie Kerr Prize. To try and temper some of the tension of this years reading, the writers of my class have decided to hold this year's reading in Phoebe's—the large, cold dark room underneath the Gibson stage—cite of some of WAC's wildest parties. The reading will be held at 7:30 p.m. on this upcoming May Day. If you're sober enough around 7:30p.m. this Sunday, and feel like taking a break from nudity (or else wouldn't mind sitting naked in a large, cold, dark room where everyone ELSE is clothed for an hour and a half) then please join us! Our goal is to make this year's reading as comfortable and enjoyable as the important task on the occasion will allow. To help each audience member throughout the reading, here is a program to clip out of your Elm and bring along.

First, a little "your Senior-Reader-Watcher-Guide:

RACHEL DEMMA: Sociology major. Dark hair, smokes a lot. Watch her walk as she goes up to read: she has one of the best walks on campus, because she's got Attitude. Fiction writer—beautiful attention to detail—her stories often read like poetry. Note: she'll be nervous, so don't yell anything.

SARAH DUFFY: Thin blond. Quiet, except when she talks. Also walks with Attitude. Amazed everyone Freshman year with her poetry. Started the notorious "Thursday Parliament." Disappeared from the literary scene for a year, then reappeared Junior year as a fiction writer.

FORREST GEORGE: One of our most controversial and political writers. Chinlength hair. Glasses. Is mostly known as a playwriting but has been steadily working on fiction and poetry as well. A recent Broadsides poet—"On Asking a Friend (if she's been Raped)." Has an Attitude.

THANE GLENN: Everyone's favorite Jesus-figure. Transfer student. Tall, bearded, with dark corkscrew hair. Winner of Washington College's first "Veryan Beacham Prize." Has been published in the WC Review and was a winner in the "Broadsides Poetry Postcard Contest." Junior year. Friends not to have an Attitude.

MARK PHANEUF: Big guy. Funny. Mild mannered, but has a unique and everpresent gift for sarcasm. Excellent Elm satirist, most known for his piece, "Madonna Must Die." A writer with Attitude. Also writes fiction and is a closet illustrator. (Yes, I think he really did once illustrate his closet—ask him.)

JENNIFER REDDISH: A cat-hating brunette. An editor of Tribal Review, also Student Editor of the WC Review 1993. Jen won a "Broadsides Poetry Postcard" Sophomore year, plus organized the notorious Mystic Harold — an anonymous (oops, sorry,) political organ-ization/publication that had Attitude and was part of "The Bad Poets Society" movement Freshman year.

MIKE TARRANT: Sociology major. Most known for the notorious YA.W.P. poem that will live forever in the annals of Washington College literary history and begins, "I Want You, but not as badly as you want me." Red hair, freckles, Attitude, squint, sometimes wears glasses. Used to lick people.

TARIN TOWERS: Yeah—everyone knows her, so I'm not going to describe her. Poet. Had an internship with Rolling Stone last summer, during which time she became one of the Slam-Queens of New York. Also last year's Elm editor, this year's College editor. A winner of the "Broadsides Poetry Postcard Contest" Sophomore and Senior year. Definate Attitude. Does Dirt. Watch out.

RUDY WEITZ: Tall, red haired, and quiet, but still has an Attitude. Co-fiction editor of Ruffage, winner of "Broadsides Poetry Postcard Contest" Junior year. Highly recommended that we have the Senior Poetry Reading at the CAC. Everyone would sit on divans and drink and readers would stand on the balcony, speaking to the world through megaphones.

JOY YARUSI: Poet. Super Hero. Defender of the meek. Bright eyed brunette. Escape from Bard College. Organized last year's "Parent's Day Reading." Poetry editor of Ruffage—which will be presented at the end of the Senior Reading. Joy is such a nice person you wouldn't expect her to have an Attitude, but she does, she does.

And me: TANYA ALLEN. Light brown hair, freckles. I'll be carrying a fish pocketbook and I'm this year's editor of Broadsides. I have no Attitude.

THINGS TO KEEP IN MIND AT THE SENIOR READING:

First of all, you don't have to wear black to fit in with the WC Literary Crowd at the Senior Reading. If you want, you can wear black in an effort to make fun of the WC Literary Crowd, but very few members of the WC Literary Crowd actually do wear black. If you wear black, you will stand out as a person trying to make fun of the people who other people think wear black, and other people might then wear

See "Reading," on 8

Student Art Show Opens

The annual Student Art Show put on by the Art Department opens today with a reception from 6 to 7 p.m. Exhibits of work by students in art classes and independent studies will be on display from now until commencement, with exhibition hours to be set later.

Senior art majors have the option of taking two days of comprehensive exams, or, if their GPA in art allows it, they can work with Professors Tessem and Andrews to put on a show-within-a-show, displaying work that they have completed in their senior year as a unified exhibit.

Both students who have elected to complete an art show as part of their senior obligation are double majors. Andrew Stone, an art and English major, has drawn images in his figurative work in photography, drawing and painting. His sense of light and line, as well as the air of the odd which pervades his work, promises to show us the familiar body from a different angle.

Psychology and Art major Michelle VanderNat has a flair for color and shape which make her paintings and pastel drawings look good enough to eat. Her food series may have been influenced by her studies in psychology, because the viewer will certainly get at-hungry at this show.

A panel of judges will decide today which student's work displays exceptional technique, content and creativity. The Nielsen Art Award is given to a work or body or work which merits special recognition. Past recipients include Jim Crawford, for his prizewinning exhibit, Andrea Butchart, for her larger-than-life self-portraits; Vico von Voss for his show of sculpture and drawing; and Becca Hutchinson, for the Spam silkscreen.

Both student works from the following classes will be on display: Advanced Drawing, Advanced Painting, Beginning Drawing, Beginning Painting, Ceramics, Photography, Print-making, Serigraphy, Visual Design, and independent studies.

Professor Tex Andrews, who will be retiring at the end of the semester, has had a profound influence on the lives and work of many of his students. He himself exhibits art frequently in Baltimore and Washington, D.C. As he will no longer be teaching at Washington College, this art show in particular is not one to be missed. ☐

Drama Department Presents 1920's Comedy "The Show Off"

As the semester comes to a close the Gibson Fine Arts Center finds itself abuzz with activity. The student art show opens tonight in the gallery and this weekend the theater will be "showing off" its talents. George Kelly's The Show-Off opened last night and will run tonight and Saturday night as well. Directed by Assistant Professor Dr. Jason Rubin, the last show of the semester is a comedy set in the Philadelphia of the late 1920's. Revolving around the Fisher family, the show is "about marriage" says Rubin and foregrounds the differences between the genteel older generation and the younger generations, epitomized in the flappers. Several senior Drama majors will make their last appearance under the direction of Rubin, including Josh Buchman and Steve Brown. Additionally this show, new comers to the main stage are Dahlia Kaminsky and Claire Fid. With its set design by Drama Department Head Timothy Maloney and lighting by Assistant Professor Dale Daigle, The Show-Off is the first "faculty directed comedy on the main stage since I've been here," remarked Rubin. Curtain opens at 8 p.m. and seating is in the house with tickets available to Washington College students and $4 to the public. ☐

778-3181
Shirt Laundry
Carpet Sales

Park
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
101 CROSS ST.
CHESTERTOWN, MARYLAND 21620

Custom Hats
Team Uniforms
Fraternity & Sorority
Apparel
Your Goods or Ours
Special Apparel for Special Events!
Maryland Custom Embroidery
204 High St. 778-9786

OLD WHARF INN
ON THE CHESTER RIVER
POINT OF CAMDEN ST.
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
JOHN & SANDRA LIPPITT, II, OWNERS
410-778-2300
FAX: 410-778-2306
All You-Can-Eat Triple Treat
Salad Bar Taco Bar
Self-serve Sundae Bar
Monday—Thursday 4—9 p.m.

Classifieds
Cruise Ship Jobs!
We will show you how to get on board.
619-300-4704
Cruise Ship Jobs!
Students needed! Earn $2000+ monthly. Summer, holidays, fulltime. World Travel. Caribbean, Hawaii, Europe, Mexico. Tour Guides, Gift Shop Sales, Deck Hands, Casino Workers, etc. No Experience necessary. Call 602-680-4647, Ext C147.

"Honor," from 1

explination of the changes that occured to the Code in the spring of 1987, which are omitted in the introduction to the new Code.

The "Academic Violations of the Honor Code" are listed in the new version are very similar to the old, having been condensed slightly and re-ordered. However, the new Code also includes a list of "Social Violations of the Honor Code," a section not included in the original. This section makes "violating the College's Social Life, Alcohol, Firearms, or Narcotics Policies or any other standing policy of the College; stealing personal or College property; vandalizing or damaging personal or College property; persistently or excessively violating residence hall policy in any way that threatens the academic or social well-being of any individual or group of individuals" into violations of the Honor Code.

The final three sections of the current Honor Code, "Responsibility of the Students," "Responsibility of the Faculty" and "Enforcement," are combined in "How the Honor Code Works," and broken down into "Abiding by the Academic Sections of the Honor Code," "Abiding by the Social Sections of the Honor Code," "Interpretation of the Honor Code," "Guidelines for Honor Board Proceeding" and "Appeals." The first notable change to the Honor Code in this section involves the inclusion of a pledge of honor to be attached to "any credit-bearing work" by the student. "I pledge my word of honor that I have abided by the Washington College Honor Code while completing this assignment." This section goes on to set but simultaneously, and how the term may be applied to such a dichotomous phenomenon.

See "Honor," on 9

"Demma," from 3

The generational name game must be played within its proper historical context. Conceptually speaking, there is no dark without light, no peace without war. Without the Baby Boomers there would be no "Generation X." This generation from which most of our professors hail numbers 69 million. Born between 1943 and 1960, these 32 to 49 year-olds were raised in a time of post-war prosperity and came of age in the civil rights and anti-war movements. In the 1980's they became a movement removed from their hippie past, terming themselves "yuppies" (young upwardly mobile professionals) but the 1990's has seen their reemergence as moral and social crusaders. This time, though, they are not launching their assault on their elders for refusing to open up in necessary and inevitable change, but rather on their children who have failed to live up to their expectations.

Baby Boomers had highly visible focal points around which they could organize and mobilize. They were children in a time of great financial and familial security. These defining characteristics have been all but completely reversed for this generation. Its cultural, political and religious icons have been relatively devoid of scandals as travesties. We have felt the burdens of a constantly growing national deficit and steadily declining incomes. The divorce rate doubled from 1965 to 1975. By whose hands do some feel that we've been dealt an unfair lot? The principle character in X-er Bret Easton Ellis' novel Less Than Zero stares continually at the word "TRUST" on a poster hanging above his bed, symbolic of the fact that fundamental differences between the two generations are aggrandized in the belief that we have been somewhat betrayed by our predecessors.

Don't get me wrong; I'm not whining. I'm trying to point out that to describe something in terms of what it is not is a perfect example of fallacious reasoning. This is the first glitch in the attempts to define our generation. We have yet to be seen in our own light, out from under the shadow of our older critics. Naturally we are not expected to be a repeat performance of what has come before us, yet to describe this generation consistently in terms of how it measures up to the experiences and expectation of the Boomers will not produce a definition, merely a comparison.

Up to the second pitfall of bandying such generational labels about. The variety in the kinds of people described and gathered under simpleminded, but this factor alone undermines any relevance the sum up 69 million people in one or two words. It doesn't take an adolescence to see that separating the cool from the passé anymore to be able to perceive the subtleties of subcultural options extended to youth today. Sure, there have always been the usual groups that have been crowded together under the wider umbrella of youth culture, but no longer is the division merely between the hip and the geeks, or the hoods and the squares. Think of the modern high schooler or young person today. Gotcha. No image dominates and no one band precisely because there is no more typical. It's all been broken down. In the hip nation, the headbangers, the deadheads, the rastas, the mall rats, the jocks, the preps, the freaks, and so on. More often than not, styles of music and dress serve to draw the lines between these various groups. Occasionally an actual underlying ideology creeps in. These distinctions are not serious, the boundaries between them often being petrified by differences in age, locality, race and ethnicity. Just take a look around the next time you're in the dining hall of you doubt this.

Traditional cultural icons such as political, social and religious affiliations are proven unreliable and insubstantial to our generation and the general lack of anything better, organized ourselves around countless permutations of our popular culture. The entertainment industry has cashed in on manipulating musical groups and fashion to become either alternative or mainstream, depending on its marketability. MTV's wish to "transform itself from a 'rock and roll network' into a generational network'," mentioned by Alan Star in the New Republic, says it all.

It's been proposed that among the upper income bracket there are really two halves to the twenty/nothing generation. A letter to the editor in the New York Times this year suggested that there exists a "younger half . . . raised with unlimited TV privileges, with VCRs. . . Their nihilism is true nihilism. . . and the older half. . . the ones who wear clothes from J. Crew and Tweeds. . . [who] wanted to have houses in the Hamptons, Volvos or Saab convertibles in our garages." This is but one perception of the meaning of "Generation X," seemingly defined in this case by varying degrees of materialism. There is no recognition of the term as applied to the residents of urban ghettos here.

It appears that the Boomers are attempting to define a generation that at best may be conceptualize in its inability to be defined. Perhaps universal historical terms were feasible at certain points in American History. As David Kirkpatrick wrote in the National Review, perhaps they were useful "when the nation had shared experiences as a nation: experiences like war or economic depression. We no longer do though." The Baby Boomers have been plagued at every turn by this generation. Their attempts to define it have left them themselves appear to be failing in that we are just not complying to their established standards. They are talking apples and oranges and are left to lament the differences between the generations. A simple cultural designation will not help bridge this gap. It does not provide the cultural and social glue that we as a generation historically is lacking. What the Boomers are not getting is the fact that for better or worse the true identity of the thirteenth generation lies in its fragmentation.

Our generation is incredibly different from that which preceded it. We are contradicted and sidestepped so much that has been handed down from our elders in terms of their traditional goals and values system, and now we defy and redefine their label. The Boomers' repeated attempts to concentrate some kind of group identity on us is serving merely to underscore our non-identity and segmentation. Although I hesitate to quote the social morons, Beavis and Butthead do have an uncanny knack for hitting the proverbial nail on the head. Its just like what Beavis says when Butthead asks him, "Isn't there like a word for when something unexpected happens? Something like ironic?" "No," Beavis replies, "it's like an English word, like, like. . . cool." "Yeah," says Butthead, "Cool." Heh heh, eeh heh. Ω friendship or favoritism.

"Dirt," from 4

I think the RA interviews should be offset by recommendations from other students who are not connected to the RA program. Just because a candidate has a bad interview does not make them a bad RA. SGA officers and senators have to get petitions to be able to run; I think a similar set of written recommendations from non-RA students could add some valuable insight.

Similarly, I believe that the candidate list should be posted in a prominent place, and students should know something, good or bad, about the candidates before they have to make their case. No anonymous responses should be admitted, but names should be removed from the suggestion sheets (by Student Affairs) before discussion.

If a candidate's best friend, for example, knows that the person in question really shouldn't be an RA because he's an alcoholic, or keeps a knife under his pillow, then that important information (which can be easily hidden in an interview) should be made available to the selection committee.

In addition, if a current RA is shown not to be capable of maintaining a good living situation, that person should not be allowed to return. Consistency should be a reward, not a policy.

Washington College Security gets a bad rap. Why? Because they're understaffed, under-budgeted and over-worked. Security Officers are not the ones who prop doors open at 3:00 a.m., leave backpacks in stairwells, or break bottles on the bathroom floors.

The radio relay system has improved appreciably over the past few years — as long as they remember to recharge the batteries. We definitely need officers and more supervisors, and the change is a good one. But there are still things that could make the system a little better.

* Install emergency callboxes on the academic end of campus. Students frequently study hours at Dunning, Gibson or the Art House, for example, are probably at most a danger after dark than those walking near the dorms, but they have less phone access and if they yell, no one will hear them.

Remember that the violent rape which occurred at this time of year in 1991 took place starting in front of the Swim Center and commencing in front of Dunning Hall. Students walking to and from Downtown Cheesetown often cut through this area, and so there will always be the academic buildings has access to a phone at night.

* Security Operations students should be warned about the most popular kinds of theft: bicycles and computers. Someone, perh-aps their RA, should be reminded to tell freshman that locking their room is not just an option — it can save them money all the very least.

* Print up decals for each room (and for public phones) which have Security's extension (7810) on them. The RA should hand these out and encourage students to stick them right on the phone. I can't tell you how many times people have

See "Dirt," on 8

Bay to Bay Traders

Ray Ban Jasport Great Lakes Reid Bomber Bula Atlantis

207 Cross Street
Chestertown, MD 21620
778-3442

Functional Gear for active sports in all conditions

One More Week
20% Discount on all Patagonia in Stock
Spring and Summer
Shipments Have Arrived!!

"Letters," from 2

made at Omar the Tentmakers or "Gee you didn't lose your baby fat very quickly." Or how about those comments where you are made to feel like all you are good for is making coffee and answering phone and there's no way you could be an intelligent thought because you're a woman? Or the instance where the male worker in you office that has the same responsibilities as you do gets paid twice as much as you do, does half his work, and you're supporting a family or you're a single mother with children who recieves no child support or assistance because your income is just over the limits set by the government. Or the male supervisor that lets you know by a remark or a so called joke that if you are willing to give him all favors, your job can become a lot easier or you can make more money. Has this ever happened to you? If is has I feel sorry for you and others in such an inhumane manner. Most women on this campus deal with that on a day to day basis in some form or another.

As for your comparison to female workers in factories and elsewhere, no matter what type of job each of us chooses or can obtain as his or her profession, it does not give anyone the right to harass us in regards to our gender etc. or to pay us less or treat us differently. No one has the right to harass whether it be jokingly or subtle comments, whether you are female or male, and did you ever consider the fact that many of the so called "well paid white collar workers" on this campus come from and still exist in such low-income level brackets that many have not had the opportunity at education that many people do, as a matter of fact there are many in the workers on this campus. They do no have the tools within their grasp to make a case against someone discriminating against them and in many cases they put up with it and endure whether it be that very trivial problem because they do not know how to fight it or feel that because they are from a lower level that they can not fight it and many just decide it's not worth pursuing the long and tedious process for staff members Scott. It is a process that would deter the majority of workers on this campus from filing, not to mention the constant fear of losing your job and having no one to help support your family or children. When the Middle States Team was on campus some of the workers on this campus finally felt like we had someone who cared to listen and not to just try to pamper us and send us on our way and not produce anything positive or concrete in regards to discrimination and mistreatment on this campus. No one should have to tolerate that whether they live in a factory or in the ivory tower of the "elite" but students should exhibit discrimination for any reason. Any mistreatment of workers in regards to their gender or economic status is wrong, no matter if you look at it. Obviously you are looking at it quite one-sided.

And using the word "elite" is complitely absurd, obviously you have no concept of working in the real world much less a female working in the real world. Obviously your perceptions of the job done by many people on this campus is skewed. Perhaps you should take the time to spend several work days with some of the employee's and see what they go through. Perhaps you should then have to go home and handle a family or in some cases to your second job.

I think perhaps before you make comments again in your editorials you should research the basis of your comments a little more thouroughly. Perhaps a good topic for your upcoming editorial would be discrimination and a second part would be the number of workers on this campus that are existing at below poverty level, talk to Maintenence workers, talk to Dining Hall workers, talk to workers in every Department. Perhaps then you won't be so quick to make statements or referrals to "well-paid white collar workers" or the "elite" members of this institutions staff.

I realize that everyone is entitled to their own opinion but aren't we also responsible for gathering all the facts to base our opinions, especially in your position where your opinions can be put in print. Perhaps a little more effort on your part in your research techniques is called for.

Sincerely Yours,
Sra Dadds-Elburn
WC Switchboard

Dear Sara,

Thank you for your letter. No, I have not researched the grievance process, but I have seen it used successfully to resolve an injustice. Perhaps if people stopped whining and actually used the grievance process, many of the problems you point out would be eliminated. If you know of so many people who have been put harrassed, then you must encourage them to use the proper channels and then back them up 100%. We do not have to betray our fellow workers, and makes you a tacit accomplice to the harrassment.

As far as my own work experience goes, I've held 26 jobs in the past 12 years, been blinded with welder's flash in factories as a metalworker and I've been frozen to the bone walking for an hour and a half to work as a dishwasher in Alaska. I've worked in factories and also as a staff member at Pitt. I know from firsthand experience that working on a university or college is better than working in a factory- your bosses are liberal and no one tells you to speed up production. Obviously you have forgotten. Obviously I'll be working a turret lathe at Dixon.

Dear Editor,

I graduated from Washington College in 1993, and as a student I was ALWAYS sympathetic to you, and others like you who were interested enough in the college's workings to be involved in and comment on its proceedings. I'm still interested enough. No I am a staff member, and as such am even MORE concerned with his institution's policies and processes. It is these policies and processes, like the Middle States study, that affect me in a very direct, precise, way, living. I am in a position where I have seen both sides of the coin, and in a way that few people have. And speaking purely as a staff worker (as opposed to as a female staff worker), I am absolutely appalled by your editorial of 4/15, and the issue of the Elm. You don't know how correct you were when you titled the piece "It ain't gonna make nobody happy". Because it won't. I don't know any staff workers who would be happy with any, especially the reference to the "obscure realm" of female faculty and staff maltreatment.

Bypassing your insensitive comments concerning "rental cars" and heaven forbid—jokes" as forms of discrimination, I'd like to focus on your assessment of my job position. Maintenance, to me, and those like me, as "well paid white collar workers" engaging in discrimination when they have it better than 99.91263 percent of the people on this campus? First of all, Mr. Koon, more than half the staff employed by the college are "well paid white collar workers. Have you noticed that we have a maintenance staff, dining hall staff, housekeeping staff, mailroom staff, a part-time maintenance staff, deli staff and security personnel that make federal minimum wage? For what these folks do, they are far from "carping white collar workers." Did you know that some security staff make $5.00/hr to protect you, your property and this entire campus? Would you face a fist-fight or be put in charge of a thousands of dollars worth of equipment for $5.00/hr? There are also some dining hall staff who WALK to work from towns as much as 20 miles away (one way by car) because they can't afford transportation.

Myself am leaving my position in Central Services, partly because I cannot afford to live on my own in Chestertown on my salary. I am $3,000 below poverty level. One month's rent (not excluding utilities) is an ENTIRE paycheck for me. I am well aware that a non-profit organization like the college cannot afford to pay me, and others like me, $50,000 a year. But remember, we are NOT better off than "99.91263 percent of the people on the entire planet." A co-worker of mine lives in low-income housing, raises a child alone, and makes less per year than 50% of those in her complex. Another co-worker, an employee of 15 years, has raised two children alone—and to this date only makes (white collar my foot) $14,000. And that's counting overtime. Do your math, Mr. Koon. And while you're at it, consider the recent insurance cuts which have given those same workers to pay $250 deductibles for EACH of their family members.

So point your finger, Mr. Koon, at Miss Erma and Miss Becky in food service and call them "the feminine elite." Point at Mr. Steve or Mr. Rusty in maintenance and thell them that their problems are trivial." Whether or not these issues are labeled under "sexual discrimination" is the study, whether they are labeled "female" or "maltreatment" is not the point. These issues are real. They DO exist. I have seen them for myself. "Truly inhuman conditions" are relative, Mr. Koon. And I don't think it's carping to bring them to this college's attention, if it helps Miss Erma feed herself, Miss Becky take care of her child, gives Mr. Steve a way to pay his medical bills, or allows Mr. Rusty to send his child for an eye exam.

After reading and considering this new information—from someone who's seen and lived on BOTH sides of this institution's walls—I hope you will engage your mind, Mr. Koon. If you don't, and you still insist on labeling these issues "obscure" and "white collar," then I will have to change my assessment of you, and re-evaluate your level of sympathy for this institution. I think Washington College can be a "nirvana of tolerance and collegiality." I think we'll be closer to that ideal if you look a little more carefully, comment a little more carefully, and think before you toss "trivial problems" like these into the "obscure realm" of your editorial page.

Sincerely,
Tina Dayhoff
Printing Clerk

Dear Ms. Dayhoff,

Thank you for your letter. I regret I don't have the space to reply to both letters at length. I have been aware of the cuts affecting workers here-in fact I always ran stories about them in the front page. I have at every turn sought to heighten awareness of difficulties faced by workers here, when, I could have just as easily written something trivial. If you compare the number of stories we've run on workers issues and concerns then to Elms of the past, we come out way ahead. Never did I get a letter of thanks-but that's understandable.

As for Security protecting my property and me-myself I can take care of. As for my property, I have nothing of value, but you had no way of knowing that.

If you'd really like to improve the lot of workers here, unionize. I've some experience in this arena, as if you need an extra warm body to man the pickets, or contribute to the strike fund, I'm there. Any action short of this is trivial indeed.

My apologies for the 7 point typo.

To the Editor:

I realize that Washington College's finances have seen better days, and I understand that the administration has done everything it can to cut costs elsewhere so that tuition hikes have been kept to a minimum. What I fail to understand is why the administration, presumably as a cost-cutting measure, has decided to let the condition Miller Library for the two weeks when it receives the most student use.

I can recall other occasions when fans have been set up in the Fishbowl and walking in the front door is like stepping into a sauna, so hopefully the climate inside Miller over the past few days was merely a result of unex-pectedly hot weather. Nevertheless, I hope that the air conditioning will be turned on May 1st, but I sort of doubt that it will. However, I have no doubts that Miller Library, as with dorms with in-house heating, will be cool and comfortably air-conditioned for graduation weekend.

It is possible that putting on a good show for the Board members and tuition-paying parents is in the College's best interests, but I think that it is not. When they visit, explain to them that Miller is overly warm because otherwise tuition would have to be raised by X amount to cover air-conditioning costs. I am sure they would understand.

Sincerely hoping for a viable working environment,
Sherry Ann Menton

Chestertown Natural Foods
"Quality natural foods, products & gifts at reasonable prices"
Hours:
Tuesday Noon-6 p.m.
Wednesday-Friday 10a.m.-6 p.m.
Saturday 9 a.m.-5 p.m.
Call-ahead parking available
101 Spring Ave
Suite #1
Chestertown
410-778-1677

Solution To Last Week's Crossword Puzzle

T	F	A	S	Y	L	O	P	E	N	A	P	E	U	M
H	L	E	O	N	A		O	C	E	A	N
S	M	I	L	E	Y		F	I	S	H	E	R
T	O		E	R	O	T	I	C	A		G	O
D	O	G		A		N		E		G	O	D
F	A		M	P	E		A		A
A	T		T	A	C	I	S	T	S		N
A	F	F	L	A	M	E		P	E	T	A	R	D
		E
P	S	S	A	M	S		P	R	E	M	O
T	E	S	E	S	E	M	S	A	W	Y	E	R

"Reading," from 5

black to make fun of you as you make fun of other people who are commonly supposed to wear black, and soon everyone will be wearing black, and then the room might become so dark that the readers will not be able to see their audience. This might make them nervous and confused, and they might start freaking out, screaming "CAW...FEE! CAW...FEE!"

Second. If you are male, you must nudge your fellow male friends and whisper sarcastic comments to make them giggle every time a female reader reads a piece that mentions penises, boyfriends, fathers, tigers, a friend who's been raped, anger, bananas, and so on. Remember: all female people who mention male people in their poems are manbashers.

Third. If you really want to blend in with the Literary Crowd, (Note: "Literary Crowd" does not necessarily mean "Literary House Crowd." Some members of the "Literary Crowd" actually tend to avoid hanging out at the Literary House, for reasons suspicious and unknown.) Anyway, if you really want to blend in with the Literary Crowd during the reading you must sometime during the reading make a comment to a friend about at least one of the readers. You should use one of the following phrases:

"So-and-so always reads the same poems."

"So-and-so reads all poems in the same voice."

"So-and-so is good, but not as good as she/he thinks."

Even if you haven't written a poem or piece of fiction since Junior High, sometime during the reading you must tell yourself, "Hmph! I think I'm a better writer than ALL of them!"

Another good thing to do while at the Senior Reading, or at any student reading, is to divide everyone up into "Good Writers," "Mediocre Writers," and "They Suck! Writers."

"They Suck! Writers" are any writers you dislike, or who have bad fashion sense.

"Mediocre Writers" are writers who are vague.

"Good Writers" are your friends, unless you are another writer. If you are another writer, then there aren't any "Good Writers" reading up there, including your friends. If you are another writer, then everyone up there is either a "They Suck! Writer" or Mediocre. If you are a "Nice Writer" you will keep your opinions to yourself, or at least keep them out of the earshot of your Senior Reader friends.

If you follow these rules, you should have a throughly good time. Remember: catiness is fun! Jealousy is good! Have an incredibly happy May Day! Come to the Senior Reading at 7:30p.m! Ω asked what the number is — what would they do in an emergency situation? This is particularly important at the beginning of the year, before campus directories are out.

"Dirt," from 6

• Keep a supply of party request forms in more than one place on campus. The people who plan parties are usually busy people — I can attest to the fact that, in the midst of planning a party, registering it with Student Activities is a high priority, but one which is difficult to remember to do.

The registration forms, along with instructions, and complete and current information on the Senior Reading should be included with the packet of information which clubs receive from the SCA when they request funding. The packet of information should also be available in Student Activities and Student Affairs, and it should include tips on having successful functions (and safe parties which do serve alcohol).

• Health Services is also under-budgeted, but they do it right with what they have. If the stork comes to some money on the college, the ideal place to spend it would be on weekend staff or longer hours in general. Sick people don't keep the same hours as the doctors do.

In addition, it is recommended by the Task Force on Gay Men and Lesbians at Washington College, a counselor trained in matters of sexual orientation should be available to both to counsel people troubled by harass-ment or by coming out, and to give seminars to residence halls on tolerance.

Academics is too broad a subject to adequately cover, and the faculty and administration consider it of every faculty and committee meeting. However, I have a few pet concerns I'd like to share.

• Institute year-long preparation for the Senior Obligation. Several professors have suggested that comprehensive exams be held earlier in the year, so that the college career doesn't seem to culminate in a single exam which can make or break four years of hard work.

Other faculty would rather drop the obligation altogether, or have these function only as honors projects. While I am of the mind that the Senior Obligation is indeed worthwhile as a capstone, I think some revision to the process would be advantageous to both students and faculty.

The end-of-year work-load of the entire college is too great, too stressful to be healthy for anyone; adjusting the process so that the end of the year provides, for the large part, a rubber stamp to graduating seniors, would make everything run more smoothly. No one benefits from cramming professors included.

• Advisors should be advised. I'm not sure what goes on in the sessions before orientation, but I'm guessing that it's assumed that faculty know all about distribution requirements and senior obligations in majors not their own.

Although ignorance of requirements may not be an excuse, faculty advisors should not spread that ignorance, particularly regarding freshmen who rely completely on their faculty advisor to arrange their plan of courses.

• Faculty advisors should also stress the

See "Dirt," on 9

CASUAL WEAR AND ACTIVE WEAR
FOR MEN AND WOMEN

SWIMWEAR NOW IN FOR MEN AND WOMEN!

MOON BAY
OUTFITTERS
CHESTERTOWN, MD
COME CHECK IT OUT!
117 S. Cross Street
(Corner of Cross andCannon)
HOURS
M-TH 9:30 A.M. TO 5:30 P.M.
FRI 9:30 A.M. TO 7:00 P.M.
SAT 10:00 A.M. TO 5:00 P.M.

'Honor," from 6

down a 48 hour period within which a violator of the Honor Code must inform either "the appropriate faculty member or the Academic Dean." This 48 hour period also applies to any student who "knows of an academic breach of the Honor Code." In this case, the student-in-the-know must inform the violator of his/her knowledge, and when the 48 hour period is over, must check with the faculty member or Dean to make sure that an admision has been made. Faculty members are also bound to report, within 48 hours, any violation of the Honor code to the Academic Dean or the Chair of the Honor Board. One student, Jennifer Dougherty a junior English major, expressed concern over the vagueness of this particular part. She wondered about issues of "hearsay or withness," and what constituted "knowing." The next section follows along the same lines as the previous, granting a 48 hour period to the violator of the Social Sections of the Honor Code to report self-report, and outlining the procedures whereby students and other members of the community deal with knowledge of a violation. The "Implamentation," "Guidelines," and "Appeals" sections correspond roughly to the "Campus Disciplinary System" section to the Student Handbk, the most notable difference being the new versions brevity in comparison.

Bridgette Avant, a junior Music major and current chair of the Student Conduct Council, says that she is very pleased with the new version of the Honor Code, stating that "I don't believe that it is anything unreasonable for students to follow." She hopes everyone appreciates the time and energy put into the drafting of the new document which, in her words, "helps define some of the vague areas found in the current code, whild instiling a stronger and more efficent lefistative system." She encourages everyone to read the new document so as to understand the changes made. Ω or determined they are if NATO cripples their ability to prosecute the war effort. However, given the terrain and the will to keep fighting, this may prove more difficult than anticipated. It does, will Clinton be able to persuade either himself or NATO to continue?

'Briggs," from 3

To end on a somewhat more uplifting note, South Africa's first non-racial elections take place this week. I'm being amazed at how much patience, resilience and flat-out courage the people of that country are showing. I'm not just talking about De Klerk and Mandela, although their achievements are truly remarkable. I mean the ordinary people, black and white, who have repeatedly shown that they realize their future is in each other's hands, frustrating the efforts of racial demagogues on both sides. This, at least, is one place where (to paraphrase W.B. Yeats) the center has held too well for things to fall apart, and if this country is now full of passionate intensity, the best have shown that they do not lack conviction.

An article in Wednesday's Washington Post asks why Americans find South Africa so fascinating, since we have neither regional interests nor historical ties. South Africa has had the race-relations problems the United States ever had in this century, without any factor of ten. The U.S. merely had to implement the Constitution- South Africa had to abandon it and write a new one. Consider all the debates that have arisen in this country over affirmative action and other efforts to economically empower twelve percent of the population, and recall that South Africa now has to empower the vast majority of its citizens. The scope of the violence around the time of the civil-rights movement in America such as the Birmingham church-bombings and the police attacks on demonstrators, as well as the Los Angeles riots of two years ago, are all dwarfed by the violence which has gripped South Africa in the past few years, including the clashes between Inkatha and the ANC in Natal, the fighting in Bophuthatswana and the terrorism practiced by extremists on all sides. Literally thousands of people have died, yet the peace process has not been stopped. If the people of South Africa can pull themselves out of the hole that history has dug for them, then no other people on earth- whether in Northern Ireland, the Middle East, Bosnia or even the Unites States- have any excuse to do otherwise.

"Dirt," from 8

importance of the Writing Lab; it should also be an option for interested students to complete the Sophomore Writing Obligation in the initial year; it's sometimes difficult to make an appointment when a paper is actually due (such as the flood times of midterm and the end of the year).

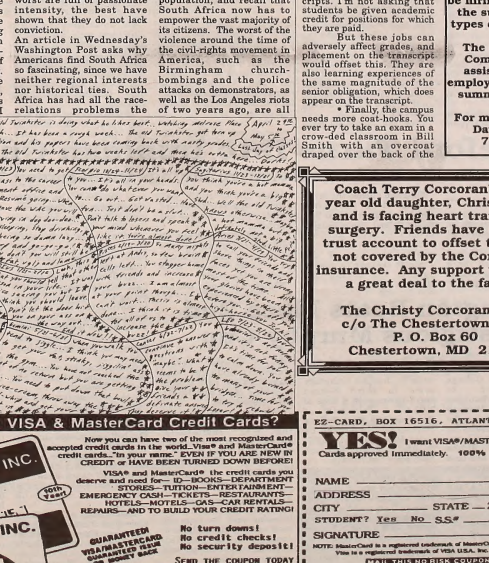
• Academic credit should be available for internships which are inter-disciplinary.

• The titles of Student Government President and Editor-in-Chief of the Elm and Pegasus should appear on student transcripts. I'm not asking that students be given academic credit for positions for which they are paid.

But these jobs can adversely affect grades, and placement on the transcript would offset this. They are also learning experiences of the same magnitude of the senior obligation, which does appear on the transcript.

• Finally, the campus needs more coat-hooks. You ever try to take an exam in a crow-ded classroom in Bill Smith with an overcoat draped over the back of the chair?

Those of you who are also (hopefully) graduating, I wish you the same luck I hope for myself. For those of you, students and professors, staying behind, I hope things get better rather than worse. Thanks to everyone who I have learned from these past four years. It's been wonderful. And if you're in Iowa City this summer, I make the best Bloody Mary you'll ever have. Ω



Summer Jobs Notice

Job Fair: Ocean City, MD April 30, 1994 9 a.m. -2 p.m.

To assist job hunters in meeting employers who will be hiring workers for the summer in all types of businesses.

The Chamber of Commerce also assists summer employees in finding summer housing.

For more info, call Dawna Baker, 778-7888

Coach Terry Corcoran's twelve-year old daughter, Christy, is ill and is facing heart transplant surgery. Friends have set up a trust account to offset the costs not covered by the Corcrans insurance. Any support will mean a great deal to the family.

The Christy Corcoran Fund c/o The Chestertown Bank P. O. Box 60 Chestertown, MD 21620

Do You Want VISA & MasterCard Credit Cards?

REGARDLESS OF CREDIT EXPERIENCE

AL SERVICES, INC.

VISA

AL SERVICES, INC.

MasterCard

10th Year!

Now you can have two of the most recognized and accepted credit cards in the world...Visa® and MasterCard® credit cards...in your name. EVEN IF YOU ARE NOW IN CREDIT or HAVE BEEN TURNED DOWN BEFORE!

VISA® and MasterCard® the credit cards you deserve and need for—TO—BOOKS—DEPARTMENT STORES—TUITION—ENTERTAINMENT—EMERGENCY CASH—TICKETS—RESTAURANTS—HOTELS—MOTELS—GAS—CAR RENTALS—REPAIRS—AND TO BUILD YOUR CREDIT RATING!

GUARANTEED! VISA/MASTERCARD GUARANTEED ISSUE OR MONEY BACK

No turn downs! No credit checks! No security deposit!

SEND THE COUPON TODAY YOUR CREDIT CARDS ARE WAITING!

EZ-CARD, BOX 16516, ATLANTA, GA 30321

YES! I want VISA®/MASTERCARD® Credit Cards approved immediately. 100% GUARANTEED!

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY STATE ZIP

STUDENT? Yes No S.S.#

SIGNATURE

NOTE: MasterCard is a registered trademark of MasterCard International, Inc. Visa is a registered trademark of VISA U.S.A. Inc. and VISA International

MAIL THIS NO RISK COUPON TODAY

Salisbury State Sinks Shoremen In Annual 'War On The Shore' 13-8

Matt Murray

The Washington College men's lacrosse team fought the annual "War on the Shore" last Saturday against shore-rival Salisbury State University.

The last time the two teams had met, Washington bounced back from a regular season loss to upset the top-ranked Sea Gulls in the first round of the 1993 NCAA tournament.

However, Salisbury took advantage of several Shoremen miscues on Kibler Field last Saturday on its way to the 13-8 victory over the home team.

"We made too many mistakes," Washington head coach Terry Corcoran said. "We played hard but not exceptionally well. We had chances, but we didn't finish them."

It didn't look like Washington would have too many chances at the start of the game. The Sea Gulls played like they wanted to prove something in the opening minutes, taking an early 2-0 lead and quieting the home crowd.

Chris Cote (two goals, three assists) opened the scoring for the Shoremen with 8:30 remaining in the first quarter when he carried the ball from left goal line extended and dove and shot from four feet away.

Salisbury reversed the momentum with two quick goals, making the score 4-1 in its favor with 4:05 left.

Washington scored its second goal of the game with 2:40 left in the first quarter. Greg Miller picked up a loose ball in the backfield and streaked upfield. Just as he was hit by the sideline, he gave the ball up to Jamie Carver, who would assist Jason Paige for the goal.

However, Salisbury started its surge with 55 seconds left in the first period when it scored its first of four unanswered goals (of which Paul Smith scored three) over a two-minute span.

Cote scored his second goal of the game for Washington with 8:50 left in the half to make the score 8-3, but Smith notched his fourth a minute later to extend the Sea Gull lead to six.

Down 10-3 with 2:36 left in the half, Washington changed the momentum and started on a streak in which it would score five of the next seven goals.

Paige scored back-to-back goals at the 2:20 and 1:20 marks respectively. After a Salisbury turnover forced out the half, Bart Jaeger scored less than two minutes into the second half to make the score 10-5.

Sean Radebaugh answered for Salisbury, but Paige's tally with 11:04 left in the period and Jaeger's acrobatic goal with 3:44 remaining closed the gap to 12-8.

After the Jaeger goal, the Shoremen went on the offensive attack again, only to be thwarted by Salisbury goalie Erik Miller. Smith's score for Salisbury on the counterattack with 2:26 left in the third quarter demoralized Washington and proved to be the final goal of the contest.

The two teams went scoreless over the final 17:26.

Freshman Marc Taylorson from Dulaney, Maryland, is the heir apparent to faceoff specialist Blair Muneses. Taylorson has seen time in the faceoff circle this season against some of the best teams in the country including Johns Hopkins.

Photo by Stephanie Schmidt

"We had a chance to make it 12-9, but we didn't get it done," Corcoran said. "[Salisbury's] got great goal tending, and the controlled the faceoffs."

However, Corcoran was happy that his team didn't give up.

"If Salisbury gets up 8-2, they have a chance to go up 20-2," he said. "But we came back—they didn't make it 20-2."

The Shoremen travelled to Haverford on Wednesday, but the result was unavailable at press time. Washington will play at Washington & Lee tomorrow at 2:00 p.m. before completing its season at home on May 7 with a 1:30 p.m. contest against Western Maryland.

Whiteford Turns Into Ironman On Mound

Senior Hurler Pitches 17 Consecutive Innings On Saturday To Set Record

Erika K. Ford

Athletic history was made last Saturday afternoon on the baseball diamond at Washington College (16 -8) when senior Keith "Whitey" Whiteford pitched both games in a double header against Western Maryland.

Whiteford pitched the seven innings of the first game which the Sho'men lost 3-1. Kevin Roland was scheduled to pitch the second game but back spasms while he warmed up caused the athletic trainer to advise against his taking the mound.

Since Doug Blair had pitched against Haverford the day before, he was not available.

"I asked Whiteford how he felt about pitching the second game, and told him to go as far as he could," head coach Ed Athey said.

Whiteford took over and not only pitched the entire second game, but three extra innings when the score was tied 2-2.

Brian Rush's double with Chad Campbell on second base won the game for Washington 3-2.

"In all of the years that I have been connected with the college, and upon investigating the records that preceded me, there has never been a pitcher at W.C. that pitched two complete games in one day," Athey said.

"Keith helped his own cause on the mound by fielding his position flawlessly."

In the sixth inning with the bases loaded and only one out, Western Maryland attempted a squeeze play. The ball was bunted into the air in front of home plate.

Whiteford made a diving catch and also picked the runner off third base. He gave up just two earned runs during the 17 innings he pitched.

Last Friday pitcher Doug Blair went 9 innings to get a win over Haverford 12-4. Whiteford and Rush both homered.

On Tuesday Washington was victorious over Swarthmore 6-2. At the end of six, Swarthmore led 2-1. The locals tied the game in the seventh 2-2 and won the game in the ninth by scoring four times. Gary Yovanovich and Whiteford doubled, while Rory Conway got an RBI single.

"Pitchers Whiteford and Blair have teamed to register 13 victories of the team's 16 wins," Athey said.

Washington's record following Tuesday's game against Swarthmore is 16-8. The Sho'men's Centennial League record is 11-4.

Leading the Sho'men hitting parade are Whiteford (.437), Tim Pilarski (.421), Rory Conway (.397), Jarrett Pasko (.344), and Andy Parks (.315).

The Sho'men meet Swarthmore again today at 3 p.m. at home.

Tomorrow they travel to Collegeville, PA to play a double header with Ursinus. Next Wednesday they will finish up their season when they host Wesley College for a double header starting at 1 p.m.

Washington Boats Place 2nd At Prestigious Murphy Cup

Y. Jeffrey Lee

The Washington College Crews traveled to Philadelphia last Saturday to compete in the Murphy Cup Regatta. Entering the race as the defending champion, Washington came up short against Johns Hopkins University and both the varsity boats settled for second place finishes.

On the men's side, the varsity light-weight four, consisting of coxswain Cindy Dewaters, Ray Herndon, Michael Beardsley, Leroy Gatell, and Brandon Norris came in second place with a time of 7:03.00. The Bluejays narrowly defeated Washington by 2.50 seconds while St. Joseph's University came in third behind Washington with a time of 7:05.00. University of Delaware(7:07.00), Villanova University(7:13.00) and La Salle University(7:43.00) finished fourth, fifth and sixth place respectively.

On the women's side, the varsity's open four consisting of coxswain Maria Jerardi, Tonya Howell, Mary Bird, Stacey Hammond and Jen Dougherty also placed second with a time of 8:01.00 behind Johns Hopkins. The Bluejays defeated Washington with a time of 7:52.00 while Drexel University(8:09.00) and Navy(8:22.00) both trailed finishing third and fourth place respectively.

With three races left in the season, Washington will host the W.C. Invitational Regatta tomorrow. The races will begin at 9:30 a.m.

Following the Invitational, Washington's crews will travel to Occoquan, Virginia on May 8 for the Mid-Atlantic Championships.

Additionally, during the following week, the team will head north to Philadelphia to compete in the Dad Vail Regatta which will be held on Saturday, May14.

Men's Tennis Wins Conference Title

Victory Over Dickinson Clinches First Centennial Championship

Matt Murray

The Washington College men's tennis team clinched the first ever Centennial Conference Championship last Saturday with a 9-0 victory over Dickinson College.

Robin Sander, Damain Polla, Miroslav Beran, Carlos Nuno, and Andrew Moffat were all straight-set singles winners, while Michael Kember was victorious 5-7, 6-0, 6-0.

Additionally, the doubles teams of Sander-Polla, Beran-Nuno, and Kember-Moffat were all victorious.

The win against the Red Devils gave Washington a 7-0 conference mark and a 14-2 overall record. The Shoremen's only losses this year have been to Penn State and Furman.

"We've only lost one point to Division III opponents this year," head coach Tim Gray said. "Every other match has been a shutout—I think we've had nine 9-0 shutouts this year."

Currently ranked third in the latest NCAA Division III poll behind the University of California at Santa Cruz and Kalamazoo (Michigan), the Shoremen will now prepare for the Centennial Conference tournament on May 6-7.

The Centennial tournament is only played for individual honors, and Gray expects his players to do quite well.

Sander, Polla and Beran will represent Washington in the singles bracket. Sander is currently ranked 10th in Division III, Polla is ranked 24th, and the doubles team of Polla-Beran is rated as the second best in the nation.

"Any three of these guys has a chance to win the (Centennial) tournament," Gray said. "It will be one of these three guys who wins, and it will be an all-Washington College final."

Washington will send one doubles team to the Conference Championships, and Stephan Berger and Kember will represent the Shoremen.

However, Gray and the Shoremen are more excited about their upcoming appearance at the NCAA Division III Tournament in Redlands, California from May 16-23.

Ranked third in Division III, Washington will be one of the favorites to win the national championship.

"We're a little young, but I think we have a good shot," Gray said. "It's tough to win a national championship, but they're going to be ready."

At the NCAAs, the top four seeds get first round byes, and then must win three matches to win the national title.

However, Gray is still concerned with one match remaining on its schedule. Washington travels to Washington & Lee tomorrow, and the Generals are on a roll.

"They just beat the number five team in the country," Gray said. "And they're going to be trying to play giant killer and take us down."

Men's Tennis Results

WC	6	George Mason 1
WC	5	Furman 'B' 2
WC	4	Clemson 'B' 3
WC	3	Furman 4
WC	6	U.S.C.-Spart. 0
WC	9	Emory 0
WC	9	Muhlenberg 0
WC	9	Haverford 0
WC	9	Univ. of South 0
WC	8	Haverford 1
WC	9	Gettysburg 0
WC	9	Western Md. 0
WC	9	SUNY-Bing. 0
WC	9	Hopkins 0
WC	9	F. & M. 0
WC	9	Dickinson 0
WC	AT	Washington & Lee

May 5-6 Centennial Tour.
May 16-23 NCAA Tour.

Women's Tennis Beats Devils

Matt Murray

The Washington College women's tennis team defeated Dickinson College last Saturday to improve its record to 6-10.

Pam Hendrickson, Diana Clausen, Vicky Roth, Amy Rizzitello, and Melissa Ellwanger were all straight-set singles winners.

Additionally the doubles teams of Hendrickson-Clausen and Anne-Marie Nelesen-Ellwanger were victorious in straight sets.

"We're having a pretty good year all things considered," head coach Tim Gray said. "We're 4-4 in the Conference now.

"Pam (Hendrickson's) having a good year at number one and there's a lot of bright spots with some of the younger girls."

Washington will finish up its season with a match at Johns Hopkins on Tuesday. The Shorewomen played at Swarthmore on Wednesday, but the result was unavailable at press time.

"We have a chance to finish top four, five in the conference," Gray said.

Women's Lax Falls To Bryn Mawr In Overtime In Centennial Match

The Washington College women's lacrosse team had another rough outing last Saturday when the Shorewomen lost to the Bryn Mawr Mawrtyrs in overtime, 14-13.

Megan McCurdy scored five times for Washington, but it wasn't enough to power Washington to the Centennial Conference win of the season.

The Shorewomen trailed 6-4 at halftime, but they outscored the home team 4-3 in the second half to send the game to overtime.

Kirsten Lucas took a 12-11 lead for Washington with only 5:41 remaining in regulation, but Bryn Mawr's Jenny Hazen scored her third goal of the game to tie it at 12.

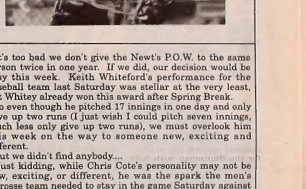
Farah Hilley scored the first goal of the extra period for Bryn Mawr to take a 13-12 lead, but Renee Guickert tied the score with 1:19 left.

However, 10 seconds later, Edina Rheem scored her eighth goal of the game to give Bryn Mawr the 14-13 win.

Softball Splits With Dickinson But Falls To Ursinus In Doubleheader

The Washington softball team revealed its dramatic turnaround last Saturday when it split with Dickinson.

Amy Povloski and Melissa Kordula teamed up in the first game for a nine-hit, four-run pitching effort.



While Povloski and Kordula wouldn't allow the Dickinson offense to get started, Cherie Gallini, Leann Cole, Michelle Chin, and Irish Lewis all jump started the Washington offense to win 6-4.

Washington lost the second game of the doubleheader to Dickinson, 4-3.

The Shorewomen were swept by Ursinus to close out their season, but finished with a much-improved 9-15 record.

NEWT'S
Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

It's too bad we don't give the Newt's P.O.W. to the same person twice in one year. If we did, our decision would be easy this week. Keith Whiteford's performance for the baseball team last Saturday was stellar at the very least, but Whitey already won this award after Spring Break.

So even though he pitched 17 innings in one day and only gave up two runs (I just wish I could pitch seven innings, much less only give up two runs), we must overlook him this week on the way to someone new, exciting and different.

But we didn't find anybody....

Just kidding, while Chris Cote's personality may not be new, exciting, or different, he was the spark the men's lacrosse team needed to stay in the game Saturday against rival Salisbury State.

Cote scored two goals and dished out three assists in the 13-8 loss. His incredible performance on the midfield line topped off a fine year for the senior from New York state.

Honorable Mention--

Baseball--Obviously Whiteford, whose 17 innings pitched in one day is a Washington record.

Softball--Amy Povloski earned the win against Dickinson with 5 and 1/3 innings pitched.

Crew--Both boats did a good job on Saturday, earning second place finishes at the Murphy Cup.

Women's Lacrosse--Megan McCurdy scored five goals against Bryn Mawr. Her offensive explosion came at the right time, but Washington still fell short.

Men's Tennis--Robin Sander, Damain Polla, and Miroslav Beran have all played their hearts out and are nationally ranked. Sander is ranked 10th in Division III, Polla is ranked 24th, and the doubles team of Polla-Beran is ranked 2nd.

Women's Tennis--Younger players Vicky Roth, Amy Rizzitello, and Melissa Ellwanger continue to win in a productive season for the women's tennis team.

Newt's

Others may try to imitate us, but they can never duplicate us

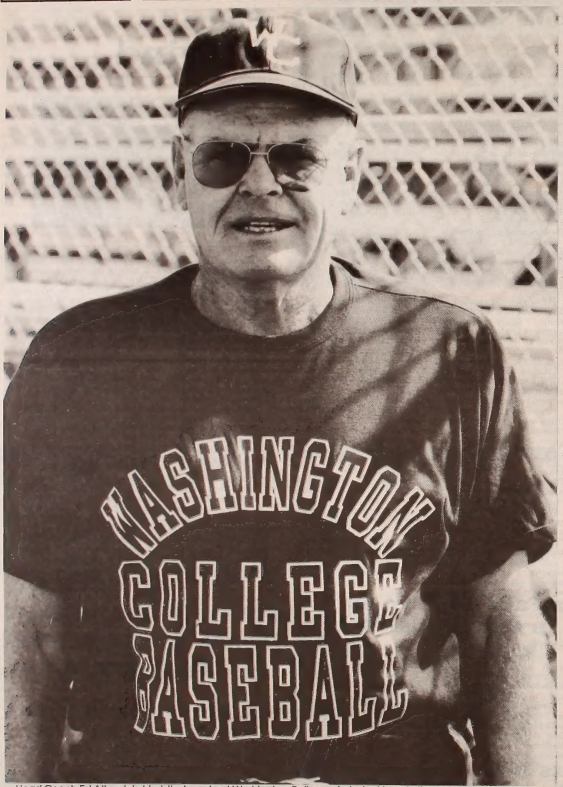
Extended Hours for Midnight Madness

15¢ Drafts: 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Every Thursday Night

WASHINGTON COLLEGE
SPORTS
THE ELM

SCORES

Men's Lacrosse
Washington 8
Salisbury 13



Women's Lax
Washington 13
Bryn Mawr 14

Baseball
Washington 6
Swarthmore 2

Softball
Washington 0 4
Ursinus 9 12

Men's Tennis
Washington 9
Dickinson 0

Women's Tennis
Washington 7
Dickinson 1

Head Coach Ed Athey is in his sixth decade at Washington College. A student here in the 1940's, Athey has been affiliated with the baseball program for nearly forty years. Athey has a strong squad this year, as the Shoremen currently sport a 16-8 record, including an 11-4 mark in the Centennial Conference.

Newt's Player of the Week: Chris Cote

Upcoming Games

MEN'S LACROSSE
Washington at Washington & Lee
April 30 2:00

Washington vs. Western Maryland
May 7 1:30

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
Washington at Muhlenberg
April 30 1:00

BASEBALL
Washington vs. Swarthmore
April 29 3:00

Washington at Ursinus
April 30 12:00

MEN'S TENNIS
Washington at Washington & Lee
April 30 11:00 a.m.

CREW
Washington Invit.
April 30 9:30 a.m.

INSIDE

•Men's Tennis Wins C.C.

•Shoremen Lacrosse Falls To Salisbury

•Whiteford Pitches 17 For Baseball

•Softball Splits With Dickinson

The Washington College

ELM

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Extra • Extra • Extra • Extra • Extra • Extra

Volume 65 • 5 May 1994 Washington College • Chestertown, Maryland

First Row (left to right) Jerry Crossley, William 'Buddy' Pinder; Bryant, Dave Reihl, Michael Worth

Faculty Votes No Confidence in Dean

Rachael Fink
Scott Koon

At Monday's faculty meeting, the final one of the semester, a resolution of no confidence in Dean and Provost Dr. Gene Wubbels was passed by a vote of 38 to 27 with 12 abstentions. The resolution comes after months of increasing tensions between the faculty and the Dean.

Following the meeting the ELM conducted interviews with Dr. Amt, Dr. Clarke, Dr. Cousineau, Professor Day, Dr. Hamilton, Dr. Scholz, Dr. Nate Smith, President Trout, and Dr. Tatum to get a sampling of diverse views on the issues surrounding the faculty's vote of no confidence in Dean Wubbels.

The no confidence vote was prompted by widespread dissatisfaction among faculty with the Dean's performance. Dr. Tatum, one of the signatories of the resolution, said that there has been "a good deal of feeling building that the Dean was being unsuccessful in dealing with the faculty." She stated that one "couldn't really rely on his truthfulness." Dr. Amt, another signatory, said this "isn't something that started suddenly but is the cut-growth of informal discussions that have been taking place for some time.

Dr. Hamilton, who also had a hand in drafting the resolution, said of the Dean's trustworthiness "I first had my doubts about the Dean last summer when his version of the events at the June 12 Long Range Planning Committee meeting differed substantially from the version which other members of the committee had one."

There has also been widespread discontent about the Dean's performance in other faculty related matters. President Trout said that faculty have "voiced a range of concerns about the Dean." When asked why this has been the case, the President responded "The Dean is a natural lightning rod for everybody's discontent. ... A subset of the former Dean Search Committee met with me on the 9th of February [to voice their concerns about Wubbels]."

Dr. Nate Smith, a member of the self-reconstituted Dean Search Committee, said "The former Dean Search Committee reconstituted itself on the basis of experiences of individuals. The recommendation was that there be an evaluation of the Dean's Office - we didn't request resignation or no confidence." Smith added that as far as he could tell the meetings between the Committee, the Dean and the President did not result in a cogent response by the Administration to the faculty's grievances.

Dr. Tatum, also a member of the Dean Search Committee, said "None of these efforts to work with him have been very successful." This perceived lack of responsiveness was for Tatum a major factor in the group's decision to introduce the resolution. She stated that there was a consensus that they "couldn't use ordinary means of discussing problems."

Dr. Amt, Dr. Clarke, Dr. Hamilton and Dr. Tatum met with President Trout on Friday, April 22 to inform him of their intention to introduce the no confidence resolution. At that meeting Trout "... tried to say then that I didn't think that this was the appropriate place or time to do this." The group did not hear from Trout again on this issue until Thursday, April 28 when he requested more specific information.

"Our impression was that he wanted more information," said Dr. Amt, and this resulted in the penning of a letter to President Trout which he received on Friday, 29 April at about noon. The group "did not intend it to be public," it was simply "meant to explain why" the group of faculty members intended to bring the resolution to a vote.

The letter was circulated to the entire faculty by President Trout hours before the Monday faculty meeting with a cover letter which reads "The attached letter came to me last Friday afternoon some 45 minutes before I had to leave for a 1782 [Society- Ed.] event in Baltimore. I assume that this letter from Professors Amt, Clarke, Hamilton, and Tatum is a 'bill of particulars.' I am unaware of what the process was that led to this letter." Regarding this Dr. Hamilton said "We notified Trout about ten days in advance that we would move that a vote of no confidence would be called on Monday. The truth is he did not ask for a more detailed letter until the following Thursday, and we got it to him the next day."

None of the signatories of the resolution felt that the letter was intended to be a 'bill of particulars,' but was only sent to the President at his request for more information. Dr. Clarke said that the matter before the faculty was simply the confidence question; "I said in the faculty meeting that this is one sentence. Obviously the four people who were willing to put this letter that there is a very grave problem at this College right now and they think that this sentence reflects our painful conclusion on this matter."

Dr. Scholz, who feels that due process was not observed in dealing with this matter, nevertheless agrees that "The letter was not of the quality of [The charges in the letter] are not charges which are the result of a public debate - they represent their private feelings."

President Trout defended his circulation of the letter, arguing that he circulated the document so Wubbels' "detractors wouldn't have to talk about it at the faculty meeting."

At the faculty meeting discussion centered around the merit of the Dean, but rather the propriety of the question itself. A motion was introduced to refer the question to a faculty assembly. Dr. Nate Smith said the motive behind the substitute motion was to avoid a call for a vote on the faculty meeting." The motion to defer the matter failed.

The other major issue of contention centered around due process. Dr. Scholz was among those arguing against the no confidence vote, of which he said "I consider a vote of no confidence a very serious matter which ought to be dealt with most carefully and every suspicion of undue process ought to be avoided. I saw no due process in the proceedings. I understand that the faculty openly debates the issue, that clear and specific charges are brought as a result of that debate, and that the Dean has a chance to respond to these charges in writing - none of which happened."

Concerning the issue of due process President Trout said when one is "cavalier about the rights of one person, everyone's rights are waved. .... There is a grievance process and an AAUP procedure for the evaluation of administrators. (the proceedings were) inconsistent with AAUP standards of process."

Dr. Tatum said in regards to the issue of procedure that "this is not something that there are rituals to take care of." Dr. Nate Smith feels the matter has been handled properly as "It is not a due process matter at all. This is not an impeachment - confidence is either something you have, don't have or don't have enough information to answer."

While most discussion centered around this issue, two faculty members did voice their support of and confidence in the Dean. Professor Day offered his support, saying "I do have confidence in Dean Wubbels. ... He has handled the matters of the business of the House and the Faculty Affairs Committee with competence."

The secret ballot resulted in 38 votes for no confidence, 27 against, and 12 abstentions. It has been suggested that the 12 abstentions be considered along with the 'yes' votes. Dr. Clarke said "This simply shows how numbers can be manipulated badly and inaccurately." Dr. Cousineau said "There was an expectation that this was a vote that would unify the faculty." Dr. Cousineau indicated that the vote, in fact, "shows a divided faculty. ... The unity that was expected did not develop."

The success of the no confidence resolution could result in several different outcomes, which Dr. Tatum said "could be handled by the executive of the College in a private or public fashion." President Trout, who has charged with bringing the matter to the attention of the Board of Visitors and Governors, said "I did business with Gene Wubbels as Dean of the College today and I plan to do business with Gene Wubbles as Dean of the College tomorrow."

Dr. Clarke hopes the matter will be resolved by the Board expeditiously: "Something has to be done - it's as simple as that. The Dean probably earnestly believes that things are working beautifully in his office and in his relationship with faculty and staff-alas, this, for the most part, is not the case." ❑

The Faculty of Washington College has no confidence in the ability of Gene Wubbels to function as Dean and Provost.

- text of the resolution passed Monday

Help," on 4

...n happy and excited about the group," said Roderick. "The patrol ... excited to see the students re-

...e Elm will run a bi-weekly column, ...d "Cop Talk," discussing the pro- ...s and services offered by the ...tment of Public Safety and deal- ...th the issues that concern the ...of the Washington College com- ...f. ❑

...could contribute to it. I saw a lot ...ple who came in with me as fresh- ...ve up their identity to be a part of ...p. I thought I could help them ...heir identity a little longer."

...e peer advisers are sources of in- ...tion that could prove to be invalu- ...y students making their first plunge ...the multi-colored world of ...ington College. And the pink ...s them stand out so nicely.

...ident Assistants

Row: Megan Ward, Elizabeth ...nson, d. Scott Steinmuller, Matt ...ederico Da-Pieno, Ryan Vigent, Rob ...Ponder, Jennifer Doughtery, Sue ...pton, Christian Thornton, Charles ...y, Ken Pyskin, Laura Heidel, Erica ...ght

...or many students, leaving home ...oving into a college dorm is an ex- ...change from home, and it is often ...ry event.

...nsuring that dorm life at ...ington College is pleasant and or- ...is the job of the resident assistant.

...ning Spear speared ...on, and he liked it

...first installment of Dropped ...hole Degree, Notes From ...evening With Burning Spear: ...at the Bayou, Georgetown, ...is an account of Aaron's transcendental experience at the Burning Spear concert.

in the Chesapeake Bay.

2 3 5 7

Elm Interview With Wubbels

Scott Koon

ELM: Dr. Wubbels, at Monday's faculty meeting the President and several others raised the question of whether you have been accorded due process. Do you feel that your right to due process has been abrogated?

Wubbels: That's certainly true. Also, a lot of people have advised me to go much more slowly than I have in responding-that in the legal world, at least, a person has thirty days to respond and legal advise is advised.

ELM: Do you see this vote of no confidence as a stab in the back?

Wubbels: Well, I came here to try and help the College and the faculty. I'm still here to do that, so this came as a big surprise. I regret that these people have taken this action. It greatly complicates doing good things for the College.

Since I think the bill of particulars [the letter by four faculty members dated 29 April to the President Trout-Ed.] is extremely vague - as my statement says - I think this has little to do with a substantive review of my work as Dean. The message of my response is that the grounds on which confidence has been lost by these people are not at all clear.

ELM: It has been suggested that since twenty-seven faculty voted against the no confidence measure and twelve others abstained that this has been something of a victory for you. Could you comment on that?

Wubbels: I would like to interpret it in the most favorable light. It was certainly better - from my point of view - than they had predicted.

ELM: It has also been suggested that, since the members of the Dean Search Committee which selected you went to see President Trout earlier this year to voice some objections to your performance as Dean, this vote should come as no surprise to you.

Wubbels: I thought that the matters on their minds were vaguely communicated.

Incompetence is alleged, and yet I get feedback from many sources inside and outside the College to the contrary. The Middle States Association was very complementary about our self study design and in fact used it as a model. Many foundation officials and outside experts on planning have commended in effusive terms the quality of our Long Range Plan. I think the young faculty I've had a hand in recruiting are extremely high in quality-and that's a major part of the Dean's job. We've seen evidence of improvement on many curricular fronts of the College, we've greatly improved our procedures for handling personnel matters, and I was strongly involved in the development of the affirmative action plan. All of these are evidences that the Dean's job is being done well-though I'm not trying to take credit for the things, these are things which are a part of the job which I've been involved with.

It makes me very sad that these people have chosen to express themselves in this way, for it makes the maintenance and betterment of the College more difficult.

ELM: Do you think you've been the victim of a witch hunt?

Wubbels: That's a tough question. . . . Let me put it this way- I don't know that I'm yet a victim, but I do think this has been a witch hunt. Ω

Excerpts From Faculty Letter To President on Dean

April 29, 1994

Dear President Trout:

Over the past few months, a number of faculty members have shared with you a variety of concerns about the ability of Gene Wubbels to function effectively as Dean of Washington College. Many of these faculty members, as well as others, have also voiced these concerns to Dean Wubbels. We firmly believe that the Faculty has done all it can to try to assist Gene Wubbels in becoming a successful dean. And as all our efforts have failed, we are now left with only one option: collectively to state our lack of confidence in the Dean. This is an extremely painful step to take, yet one which we believe is absolutely necessary for the future of Washington College. ...

First, we believe that the Dean has demonstrated persistent incompetence in the performance of his job. After nearly two years, he still has not familiarized himself with the College's policies, procedures, traditions, or curriculum. Because of this, he has insinuated himself into inappropriate, unnecessary matters, while failing to perfom needed functions. He has failed to understand co-governance as it works here. He has overstepped the authority of his office, refusing to accept legitimate, long-standing areas of faculty authority, such as the curriculum, or matters of departmental or individual faculty autonomy, such as catalog course descriptions. He insisted, for example, on complete control of the Long Range Plan, overriding faculty concerns about the curricular aspects of the Plan and resisting faculty attempts to have genuine input. ...

He shows poor judgement in selecting the projects on which he spends his time and energies, to the exclusion of other necessary tasks. He is disorganized. He frequently calls meetings with little warning, expecting colleagues to rearrange their schedules to accommodate him; in addition, he often provides meeting agendas late (if at all), making it impossible for other to prepare. He himself is frequenly unprepared for meetings. ... He often fails to acknowledge mail; when he does respond, it is sometimes excessively late. All of these habits harm the work of the College, and in particular the teaching and scholarly work of the Faculty.

His mishandling of faculty personnel reviews has been particularly damaging. He has been inattentive to review procedures and has conducted some review without preparation; some paperwork has not been passed on to the Appointments and Tenure Committee. ... He has even failed to carry out some reviews, including crucial third year reviews mandated by College policy. The end result is that both junior faculty and the College are now vulnerable to future problems.

In addition to his inability to function effectively, the Dean also seems, to a great degree, unwilling to do so. Not only is he unfamiliar with College policies; after nearly two years on the job, he is apparently uninterested in learning them. He operates instead on preconceived notions of what is right for Washington College based on his personal experience in one discipline and at one other institution. ... He is obstinate and inflexab le, and often becomes hostile and contemptuous if others do not agree with his ideas. He is authoritarian and condescending, especially toward women.

Finally, he has not inspired confidence in his integrity. On several instances he has misled Academic Council on facts relevant to its deliberations. In the case of the Math Department external review he told and outright lie and later defended that lie as College policy. ... The frequent mistakes in the numerical portion of the Long Range Plan indicate, if not dishonesty, at least serious incompetence. These and other incidents have created an atmosphere of distrust. ...

None of these incidents in in itself damning; the overall record, however, is. Nor do we see any evidence that he has grown in the job or will be able to do so in the future. Therefore we will regretfully place a resolution of no confidence before the Faculty at its meeting on Monday, May 2.

Sincerely yours,
Emilie M. Amt, Garry Clarke, Gene Hamilton, Nancy Tatum

Excerpts From Wubbels' Response to Letter

May 4, 1994

The letter of 29 April from four colleagues to President Trout concerning my alleged flaws certainly merits a response. The document is polemical and so vague, however, that any response is difficult. It follows the classic pattern of propaganda in that it makes massive charges across a broad front. The reader tends to conclude that some of it must be true even though none of it is clearly supported. Let me comment on it.

In the second paragraph I am accused of willful ignorance of College procedures, etc., that causes me to invest my time inappropriately and to intrude onto the turf of others. In fact, I have labored to get the faculty to take more not less responsibility for the curriculum and to account for it, as the Bylaws say I should. That may be what lies behind the irritation of some of these people.... Many persons would be quite surprised by the claim that the Dean has ill-represented the Faculty to its constituents and the Board. Among other things, the Dean has worked hard to prevent the imposition of mid-year salary cuts....

The fourth paragraph alleges mishandling of faculty personnel matters, an area in which I have received almost no complaints. In fact, the procedures have been remarkably regularized under my administration, even though it took a while to establish who was responsible for what. I admit to missing the notification deadline for the second year reviews during my first year here, but that deadline was also overlooked by my trusty secretary and many other people. Careful attention to notification deadlines is in itself somewhat novel in this College....

The questioning of my integrity is particularly galling. I know of no evidence for the first claim of deliberately misleading Academic Council. I admitted publicly the matter of misrepresenting in my first two weeks on the job the secret personnel section (authorized by my predecessor) of the Math review to the Chair of the Math Department. I did not permit the fiction to stand, have atoned openly for this error, and have succeeded in getting the document in question released to the Department....

The group indicates that an approach was made to President Trout in February by the self-reappointed Search Committee that unanimously recommended my initial appointment. The Committee consisted of Nancy Tatum, Juan Lin, Tom Pabon, Sean O Connor, Nate Smith, Kathy Mills, Gene Hessey, Frank Creegan, Maureen McIntire, and President Trout. A sub-set of the Committee told the President that they had been moved by persistent complaints from colleagues about me to try to get the President to intervene to modify my behavior. Following a conversation on this with the President, I let the "search committee" know that I wished to meet with them to hear their views. After much difficulty over scheduling, an evening meeting was arranged on March 2 with Smith, Pabon, McIntire, Hessey, and Creegan, at which I listened carefully to their views and took notes....

During the meeting and at its close, I reiterated what I had heard, and asked if I had heard correctly. I said that I had certain blind spots, and that I may not have had a good sense of how to carry and use the authority of my office. I told them that I wished to do better, and I asked for their help and feedback on my attempts to improve, and also to help clear the air of bad feelings. I was asked how I felt about things, and I admitted to feeling challenged. A member of the group told me a day later that he thought I had responded well to the concerns. I have had no followup contact from other members of that group since. (Moreover, none of the four signatories of the letter has talked with me about their alleged concerns during many months of selective discussion elsewhere.) I thought I was proceeding with the attempt to live up to the commitments of that meeting when the "no confidence" bombshell struck. Of course it is possible that I was perceived as so incorrigible in March and April that communication with me would be useless. If so, the abandonment of hope was too facile. There is either more or less here than meets the eye. Ω

The Washington College
ELM
Serving the College Community Since 1930

Extra • Extra • Extra • Extra • Extra • Extra

Volume 65 • 5 May 1994 Washington College • Chestertown, Maryland

Faculty Votes No Confidence in Dean

Rachael Fink
Scott Koon

At Monday's faculty meeting, the final one of the semester, a resolution of no confidence in Dean and Provost Dr. Gene Wubbels was passed by a vote of 38 to 27 with 12 abstentions. The resolution comes after months of increasing tensions between the faculty and the Dean.

Following the meeting the ELM conducted interviews with Dr. Amt, Dr. Clarke, Dr. Cousineau, Professor Day, Dr. Hamilton, Dr. Scholz, Dr. Nate Smith, President. Trout, and Dr. Tatum to get a sampling of diverse views on the issues surrounding the faculty's vote of no confidence in Dean Wubbels.

The no confidence vote was prompted by widespread dissatisfaction among faculty with the Dean's performance. Dr. Tatum, one of the signatories of the resolution, said that there has been "a good deal of feeling building that the Dean was being unsuccessful in dealing with the faculty." She stated that one "couldn't really rely on his truthfulness." Dr. Amt, another signatory, said this "isn't something that started suddenly but is the out-growth of informal discussions" that have been taking place for some time.

Dr. Hamilton, who also had a hand in drafting the resolution, said of the Dean's trustworthiness "I first had my doubts about the Dean last summer when his version of the events at the June 12 Long Range Planning Committee meeting differed substantially from the version which other members of the committee told me."

There has also been widespread discontent about the Dean's performance in other faculty related matters. President Trout said that faculty have "voiced a range of concerns about the Dean." When asked why this has been the case, the President responded "The Dean is a natural lightning rod for everybody's discontent. ... A subset of the former Dean Search Committee met with me on the 9th of February [to voice their concerns about Wubbels]."

Dr Nate Smith, a member of the self-reconstituted Dean Search Committee, said "The former Dean Search Committee reconstituted itself on the basis of experiences of individuals. The recommendation was that there be an evaluation of the Dean's Office - we didn't request resignation or no confidence." Smith added that as far as he could tell the meetings between the Committee, the Dean and the President did not result in a cogent response by the Administration to the faculty's grievances.

Dr. Tatum, also a member of the Dean Search Committee, said "None of these efforts to work with him have been very successful." This perceived lack of responsiveness was for Tatum a major factor in the group's decision to introduce the resolution; she stated that there was a consensus that they "couldn't use ordinary means of discussing problems."

> The Faculty of Washington College has no confidence in the ability of Gene Wubbels to function as Dean and Provost.
> - text of the resolution passed Monday

Dr. Amt, Dr. Clarke, Dr. Hamilton and Dr. Tatum met with President Trout on Friday, April 22 to inform him of their intention to introduce the no confidence resolution. At that meeting Trout "... tried to say then that I didn't think that this was the appropriate place or time to do this." The group did not hear from Trout again on this issue until Thursday, April 28 when he requested more specific information.

"Our impression was that he wanted more information," said Dr. Amt, and this resulted in the penning of a letter to President Trout which he received on Friday, 29 April at about noon. The group "did not intend it to be public," it was simply "meant to explain why" the group of faculty members intended to bring the resolution to a vote.

The letter was circulated to the entire faculty by President Trout hours before the Monday faculty meeting with a cover letter which reads "The attached letter came to me last Friday afternoon some 45 minutes before I had to leave for a 1782 [Society- Ed.] event in Baltimore. I assume that this letter from Professors Amt, Clarke, Hamilton, and Tatum is a 'bill of particulars.' I am unaware of what the process was that led to this letter." Regarding this Dr. Hamilton said "We notified Trout about ten days in advance that we would move that a vote of no confidence would be called on Monday. The truth is he did not ask for a more detailed letter until the following Thursday, and we got it to him the next day."

None of the signatories of the resolution felt that the letter was intended to be a 'bill of particulars,' but was only sent to the President at his request for more information. Dr. Clarke said that the matter before the faculty was simply the confidence question; "I said in the faculty meeting that this is one sentence. Obviously the four people who were willing to sign this letter felt that there is a very grave problem at this College right now and I think that this sentence reflects our painful conclusion on this issue."

Dr. Scholz, who feels that due process was not observed in dealing with this matter, nevertheless agrees that "The letter was not part of the debate. ... [The charges in the letter] are not charges which are the result of a public debate - they represent their private feelings."

President Trout defended his circulation of the letter, arguing that he circulated the document so Wubbels' "detractors wouldn't have to talk about it at the faculty meeting."

At the faculty meeting discussion centered not around the merit of the Dean, but rather the propriety of the question itself. A motion was introduced to refer the question to a faculty assembly. Dr. Nate Smith said the motive behind the substitute motion was "to avoid at all costs a vote at that faculty meeting." The motion to defer the matter failed.

The other major issue of contention centered around due process. Dr. Scholz was among those arguing against the no confidence vote, of which he said "I consider a vote of no confidence a very serious matter which ought to be dealt with most carefully and every suspicion of undue process ought to be avoided. I saw no due process in the proceedings, I understand that the faculty openly debates the issue, that clear and specific charges are brought as a result of that debate, and that the Dean has a chance to respond to these charges in writing - none of which happened."

Concerning the issue of due process President Trout said when one is "cavalier about the rights of one person, everyone's rights are waved. ... There is a grievance process and an AAUP procedure for the evaluation of administrators. ... [the proceedings were] inconsistent with AAUP standards of process."

Dr. Tatum said in regards to the issue of procedure that "this is not something that there are rituals to take care of." Dr. Nate Smith feels the matter has been handled properly as "It is not a due process matter at all. This is not an impeachment - confidence is either something you have, don't have or don't have enough information to answer."

While most discussion centered around this issue, two faculty members did voice their support of and confidence in the Dean. Professor Day affirmed his support, saying "I do have confidence in Dean Wubbles. ... He has handled the matters of the business of the Lit. House and the Faculty Affairs Committee with competence."

The secret ballot resulted in 38 votes for no confidence, 27 against, and 12 abstentions. It has been suggested that the 12 abstentions be considered along with the 'nay' votes. Dr. Clarke said "This simply shows how numbers can be manipulated badly and inaccurately." Dr. Cousineau said "There was an expectation that this was a vote that would unify the faculty." Dr. Cousineau indicated that the vote, in fact, "shows a divided faculty. ... The unity that was expected did not develop."

The success of the no confidence resolution could result in several different outcomes, which Dr. Tatum said "could be handled by the executive of the College in a private or public fashion." President Trout, who has charged with bringing the matter to the attention of the Board of Visitors and Governors, said "I did business with Gene Wubbles as Dean of the College today and I plan to do business with Gene Wubbles as Dean of the College tomorrow."

Dr. Clarke hopes the matter will be resolved by the Board expeditiously; "Something has to be done - it's as simple as that. The Dean probably earnestly believes that things are working beautifully in his office and in his relationship with faculty and staff-alas, this, for the most part, is not the case." Ω

WASHINGTON COLLEGE

SPORTS

THE ELM

Elm Interview With Wubbels

Scott Koon

Since I think the bill of particulars [the letter by four faculty members dated 29 April to the President Trout-Ed.] is extremely vague -- as my statement says - I think this has little to do with a substantive review of my work as Dean. The message of my response is that the grounds on which confidence has been lost by these people are not at all clear.

ELM: It has been suggested that since twenty-seven faculty voted against the no confidence measure and twelve others abstained that this has been something of a victory for you. Could you comment on that?

Wubbels: I would like to interpret it in the most favorable light. It was certainly better - from my point of view - than they had predicted.

ELM: It has also been suggested that, since the members of the Dean Search Committee which selected you were to see President Trout earlier this year to voice some objections to your performance as Dean, this vote should come as no surprise to you.

Wubbels: I thought that the matters on their minds were vaguely communicated.

Incompetence is alleged, and yet I get feedback from many sources inside and outside the College to the contrary. The Middle States Association was very complementary about our self study design and in fact used it as a model. Many foundation officials and outside experts on planning have commended in effusive terms the quality of our Long Range Plan. I think the young faculty I've had a hand in recruiting are extremely high in quality-and that's a major part of the Dean's job. We've seen evidence of improvement on many curricular fronts of the College, we've greatly improved our procedures for handling personnel matters, and I was strongly involved in the development of the affirmative action plan. All of these are evidences that the Dean's job is being done well-though I'm not trying to take credit for the things, there are things which are a part of the job which I've been involved with.

It makes me very sad that these people have chosen to express themselves in this way, for it makes the maintenance and betterment of the College more difficult.

ELM: Do you think you've been the victim of a witch hunt?

Wubbels: That's a tough question. . . . Let me put it this way- I don't know that I'm yet a victim, but I do think this has been a witch hunt. ☐

Excerpts From Faculty Letter To President on Dean

April 29, 1994
Dear President Trout:

Over the past few months, a number of faculty members have shared with you a variety of concerns about the ability of Gene Wubbels to function effectively as Dean of Washington College. Many of these faculty members, as well as others, have also voiced these concerns to Dean Wubbels. We firmly believe that the Faculty has done all it can to try to assist Gene Wubbels in becoming a successful dean. And as all our efforts have failed, we are now left with only one option: collectively to state our lack of confidence in the Dean. This is an extremely painful step to take, yet one which we believe is absolutely necessary for the future of Washington College. ...

First, we believe that the Dean has demonstrated persistent incompetence in the performance of his job. After nearly two years, he still has not familiarized himself with the College's policies, procedures, traditions, or curriculum. Because of this, he has insinuated himself into inappropriate, unnecessary matters, while failing to perform needed functions. He has failed to understand co-governance as it works here. He has overstepped the authority of his office, refusing to accept legitimate, long-standing areas of faculty authority, such as the curriculum, or matters of departmental or individual faculty autonomy, such as catalog course descriptions. He insisted, for example, on complete control of the Long Range Plan, overriding faculty concerns about the curricular aspects of the Plan and resisting faculty attempts to have genuine input.

He shows poor judgement in selecting the projects on which he spends his time and energies, to the exclusion of other necessary tasks. He is disorganized. He frequently calls meetings with little warning, expecting colleagues to rearrange their schedules to accommodate him; in addition, he often provides meeting agendas late (if at all), making it impossible for other to prepare. He himself is frequently unprepared for meetings .... He often fails to acknowledge mail; when he does respond, it is sometimes excessively late. All of these habits harm the work of the College, and in particular the teaching and scholarly work of the Faculty.

His mishandling of faculty personnel reviews has been particularly damaging. He has been inattentive to review procedures and has conducted some reviews in consideration; some paperwork has not been passed on to the Appointments and Tenure Committee. He has even failed to carry out some reviews, including crucial third year reviews mandated by College policy. The end result is that both junior faculty and the College are now vulnerable to future problems.

In addition to his inability to function effectively, the Dean also seems, to a great degree, unwilling to do so. Not only is he unfamiliar with College policies; after nearly two years on the job, he is apparently uninterested in learning them. He operates instead on preconceived notions of what is right for Washington College based on his personal experience in one discipline and at one other institution. . . . He is obstinate and inflexsb le, and often becomes hostile and contemptuous if others do not agree with his ideas. He is authoritarian and condescending, especially toward women.

Finally, he has not inspired confidence in his integrity. On several instances he has misled Academic Council on facts relevant to its deliberations. In the case of the Math Department external review he told and outright lie and later defended that lie to College policy. ... The frequent mistakes in the numerical portion of the Long Range Plan indicate, if not dishonesty, at least serious incompetence. These and other incidents have created an atmosphere of distrust. ...

None of these incidents in in itself damning; the overall record, however, is. Nor do we see any evidence that he has grown in the job or will be able to do so in the future. Therefore we will regretfully place a resolution of no confidence before the Faculty at its meeting on Monday, May 2.

Sincerely yours,
Emilie M. Amt, Garry Clarke, Gene Hamilton, Nancy Tatum

Excerpts From Wubbels' Response to Letter

May 4, 1994

The letter of 29 April from four colleagues to President Trout concerning my alleged flaws certainly merits a response. The document is polemical and so vague, however, that any response is difficult. It follows the classic pattern of propaganda in that it makes massive charges across a broad front. The reader tends to conclude that some of it must be true even though none of it is clearly supported. Let me comment on it.

In the second paragraph I am accused of willful ignorance of College procedures, etc., that causes me to invest my time inappropriately and to intrude onto the turf of others. In fact, I have labored to get the faculty to take more not less responsibility for the curriculum and to account for it, as the Bylaws say I should. That may be what lies behind the irritation of some of these people. Many persons would be quite surprised by the claim that the Dean has ill-appreciated the Faculty's role in curriculum and the Board. Among other things, the Dean has worked hard to prevent the imposition of mid-year salary cuts. ...

The fourth paragraph alleges mishandling of faculty personnel matters, an area in which I have received almost no complaints. In fact, the procedures have been remarkably regularized under my administration, even though it took a while to establish who was responsible for what. I admit to missing the notification deadline for the second year reviews during my first year here, but that deadline was also overlooked by my trusty secretary and many other people. Careful attention to notification deadlines is in itself somewhat novel in this College. ...

The questioning of my integrity is particularly galling. I know of no evidence for the first claim of deliberately misleading Academic Council. I admitted publicly the matter of misrepresenting in my first two weeks on the job the secret personnel section (authorized by my predecessor) of the Math review to the Chair of the Math Department. I did not permit the fiction to stand, have atoned openly for this error, and have succeeded in getting the document in question released to the Department. ...

The group indicates that an approach was made to President Trout in February by the self-reappointed Search Committee that unanimously recommended my initial appointment. The Committee consisted of Nancy Tatum, Juan Lin, Tom Pabon, Sean O Connor, Nate Smith, Kathy Mills, Gene Hessey, Frank Creegan, Maureen McIntire, and President Trout. A sub-set of the Committee told the President that they had been moved by persistent complaints from colleagues about me to try to get the President to intervene to modify my behavior. Following a conversation on this with the President, I let the "search committee" know that I wished to meet with them to hear their views. After much difficulty over scheduling, an evening meeting was arranged on March 2 with Smith, Pabon, McIntire, Hessey, and Creegan, at which I listened carefully to their views and took notes. ...

During the meeting and at its close, I reiterated what I had heard, and asked if I had heard correctly. I said that I had certain blind spots, and that I may not have had a good sense of how to carry and use the authority of my office. I told them that I wished to do better, and I asked for their help and feedback on my attempts to improve, and also to help clear the air of bad feelings. I was asked how I felt about things, and I admitted to feeling challenged. A member of the group told me a day later that he thought I had responded well to the concerns. I have had no follow-up contact from other members of that group since. Moreover, none of the four signatories of the letter has talked with me about their alleged concerns during many months of selective discussion elsewhere.) I thought I was proceeding with the attempt to live up to the commitments of that meeting when the "no confidence" bombshell struck. Of course it is possible that I was perceived as so incorrigible in March and April that communication with me would be useless. If so, the abandonment of hope was too facile. There is either more or less here than meets the eye. ☐

Head Coach Ed Athey is in affiliated with the baseball pro sport a

Newt's Player of the Week: Chris Cote

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number One

Serving the College Community Since 1930

The faces of the Department of Public Safety:First Row (left to right) Jerry Roderick, Darrold Smith, Jr., Joe Gladu, Wayne Crossley, William "Buddy" Pinder, Second Row (left to right) Ken Haines, Douglas Bryant, Dave Reihl, Michael Worth

"Security" gets a face lift

Rachael Fink

Security has had a facelift.

In fact, Security is no longer Security.

It is now called the Department of Public Safety. But the change of name is not the only thing to have changed about the department concerned with the safety and welfare of the College community.

The name change came about due to the expanded nature of the department.

"There was a feeling that the name of Campus Security limited what we do in this office," said Jerry Roderick, Director of Public Safety.

According to Roderick, the nature of the department has changed from simply enforcement of college rules; to a "much more proactive" role. Roderick has high hopes for the current Public Safety staff and program. They are planning many activities to involve the students in their own safety and to educate the community about the issues surrounding the safety of the campus.

In addition to the name change and the increased involvement, the six full time patrol officers, several of whom are new to the department, now wear uniforms to make them more visible on campus.

The decision to go with uniforms as opposed to the more casual look of last year came about as a result of discussions between Public Safety and the Student Government Association. Roderick indicated that the SGA expressed a "need for a uniform presence on campus."

The new name, the new threads and the new faces all will take a little getting used to, but Roderick has high hopes for the Department of Public Safety.

"I'm happy and excited about the new group," said Roderick. "The patrol staff is excited to see the students return."

The Elm will run a bi-weekly column, entitled "Cop Talk," discussing the programs and services offered by the Department of Public Safety and dealing with the issues that concern the safety of the Washington College community. Ω

Students helping students:

Mindie Kaplan

Peer Advisers

Peer Advisers: (left to right) Front Row: Skip Gibson, Thea L. Matev, Lisa M. Braun, Siu-Yee Ng; Second Row: Curtia Arnold, Curtina Arnold, Kristin Smith, Amanda Kirby, Robyn Mitchell; Third Row: Liza Whayland, Rachel Roll, Angela Panton, Stacy Hammond, Amy Rizzitello, Allison Wentworth, Vicky Ruth, Robin Woollens, Aaron Blake; Fourth Row: Mary Schrider, Krissie Callahan, Elizabeth Barlow, Chris Watkins, Todd Lineburger; Fifth Row: Richard McKee, Steve Fuchs, Reuben M. Stump, David George, Chris Downs, Derek Walsh, Sixth Row: Jenny An

Bright pink shirts have invaded the campus.

They have come from far and wide to become the symbol of the Peer Advising program.

Every peer adviser has a bright pink shirt, and every freshman or transfer student has a peer adviser.

It is the job of the peer adviser to help the incoming students become acquainted with the layout of the campus, the social life, and academic support systems such as the library, the Writing Center and tutors, the Math Workshop, and the Study Skills programs.

This year is seeing a new emphasis on year-round support that goes beyond the former plan where the job of the peer adviser for all intents and purposes ended after the first week or so of school. Also new this year is the utilization of each peer educator's academic specialties. An English major, for example, will be available to tutor students in that area.

Dean Beverly Wolff is in charge of the peer advising program this year. She explained the expanded responsibility of the peer advisers, saying, "Sometimes we don't realize (academic) weaknesses until after the first semester." She also expressed the desire that this year's peer advisers will continue to go on to be RAs or leaders in other areas.

Black Elk Speaks by John Neihardt was the title of this year's required summer reading for freshmen and transfers. This continues in the vein of previous years which emphasized multi-culturalism and relationships.

Rachel Roll, a second semester sophomore majoring in International Relations and German with a minor in gender studies, is one of the many peer advisers to grace the campus in a bright pink shirt this year.

Roll indicated she became a peer adviser because "you have influence on people. I want the chance to help people their first year, I'm glad to help out, meet new people."

Another new member to the peer advising group is Aaron Blake. A junior political science major, Blake chose this job because "I thought there was something I could contribute to it. I saw a lot of people who came in with me as freshmen give up their identity to be a part of a group. I thought I could help them keep their identity a little longer."

The peer advisers are sources of information that could prove to be invaluable to students making their first plunge into the multi-colored world of Washington College. And the pink makes them stand out so nicely.

Resident Assistants

Resident Assistants: (left to right) Front Row: Megan Ward, Elizabeth McLaughlin, Douglas Beckworth, Shrylnee Johnson, J. Scott Steinmuller, Matt Distler, Ty McCarthy, Jill Schultz; Second Row: Federico Da-Pieno, Ryan Vigent, Rob Moran, Amy Draper, Elizabeth Likens, Sharla Ponder, Jennifer Doughtery, Sue Czechowski, Bill Griffen, Chris Freisheim, Brian Tipton, Christian Thurston, Charles Buchnor; Not Pictured: Sonja Wilson, Paul Kenny, Ken Pipkin, Laura Heidel, Erica Estep, T.D. Albright

For many students, leaving home and moving into a college dorm is an exciting change from home, but it is often a scary event.

Insuring that dorm life at Washington College is pleasant and orderly is the job of the resident assistant.

See "Help," on 4

Inside This Week

Introduction to The Elm

Editor-in-Chief Rachael Fink introduces herself and the Elm staff, and welcomes contributions.

2

Thinking through ...

the Hatian refugee problem, Paul Briggs comments on the nature of the U. S. involvement with third world countries.

3

Dirty freshmen

Pre-orientation trip takes two groups of freshmen to wallow in the mud. Nine participants share their experiences at Fox Island in the Chesapeake Bay.

5

Burning Spear speared Aaron, and he liked it

The first installment of Dropped a Whole Degree, Notes From An Evening With Burning Spear: Live at the Bayou, Georgetown, is an account of Aaron's transcendental experience at the Burning Spear concert.

7

Introduction to The Elm

Three months ago, when I decided to put out an orientation issue of The Elm , I had visions of a paper filled with all the necessary information and useful hints to help ease the tension that I am convinced all freshmen and transfer students feel when coming to this, or any, institution of higher education.

A long summer and many hours in The Elm office later, I think we have managed to come very close to my original vision. I cannot take all the credit for this, of course. I have some very dedicated and capable staff members who helped ease the stress of putting together this issue. Hopefully, I can convince them to stick out the year with me.

It is my goal to make The Elm an active part of campus life, rather than simply a chronicle of events. The people behind the article and columns are just as important as the text itself. Because I feel that The Elm should not be just about text, pictures and putting it all together in a readable format, I have asked each of my section editors and managers to write a short piece about themselves.

So now, I would like to introduce most of the 1994-95 Elm staff ... take it away, guys.

News:

My name is Kate Meagher, and I am the News Editor for the Elm this year. I am not a vegetarian, a feminist, or an environmentalist. I am not campaigning to save the whales or the womyn or the bay. I am merely a potential English major in my sophomore year of college, trying to pass my classes and meet my deadlines. I also like potatoes.

Features:

Mindie Kaplan is the new features editor for the Elm this year. She is a junior English/philosophy/education workaholic who also works part time in the Computing Center. Her other activities include the Dance Club, Hillel, GALA, Philosophy Club, Writer's Union, Friends of the Library Group, and working with the Lithause Press.

Arts & Entertainment:

My name is Martha Kimura. I hate writing about myself because I never know what to say, but here goes ... I am a Psychology major, and a senior this year which means that I will probably be spending a lot of time looking confused and stressed. In past years I have been involved with the Drama and Music Departments as well as the International Relations Club, and I hope to be able to continue my involvement in these clubs. I love to do anything that I can think of as fun, whether that is dressing up and going out to dinner with friends, or playing in the play ground in the middle of the night. I enjoy meeting new people and I often will walk up to strangers on the Cater Walk and say "Hi." Most of all I am pretty much apolitical, and I will try to listen to all sides of an issue. Other than that, I am just another stressed-out college student. So, if you have any flicks for a review or you just want some advertisement for an event that you are planning, give me a call (X 8657), and I will try to work something out. And if I say "Hi" to you, say "Hi" back; I promise not to bite.

Circulation:

Hi. My name is Charles Bucknor, I'm a Senior Business Management major, and this year I'm going to be the Circulation Manager for The Elm. Basically my job is to distribute the paper to different locations on campus. Along with this job I'm also the Resident Assistant for Middle Hall, a student worker for the Audio Visual Department, as well as Senior Class Treasurer. I'm also a KA and just recently I've become a member of the club volleyball team.

Advertising:

My name is Richard Thomas McKee Jr. I'm a drama major and a psychology minor here at the wonderful world of WAC. I'm a perfectionist who really doesn't care. I want to help as many people as I can as long as it doesn't take up too much of my time and they don't get on my nerves. I'm always here to help anyone who needs it as long as they don't bother me. I'm really excited about being the ad manager! think. Thankyou. This was just a joke I really do like people.

Unfortunately, not all of the staff was able to come back to campus early to work on this issue. We will be running bits about each of the staff members as they join the team. We are still short a few positions, so if anyone is interested in working on the paper in any capacity please call the office at X 8585, or drop by. We are in the basement of Reid Hall every Wednesday night and for most of Thursday as well. If you cannot work on the paper, stop by anyway. We always like visitors and are happy to hear what the college community thinks about The Elm. If you have any suggestions concerning possible story items, let us know.

Now that you know a bit about the staff, I should tell you a bit about myself. I am a senior English major, with a double minor of Art and Gender Studies. Having worked on The Elm for most of my three years here, I decided to try my hand at editing. I spent this summer working for the Kent County News here in Chestertown, and gained invaluable knowledge about the workings of a small newspaper and the writing of news stories. I will take a minute now to thank Trish and Bill for the help and support and to wish the entire Kent County News staff a wonderful year.

As far as outside involvement is concerned, I am an active member of the Gay and Lesbian Alliance here at WC, and will most likely be president of that organization again this year. I am also a member of the Writer's Union and the Visual Artist's Union. If all goes well, by this time next year I hope to be enrolled in an English Ph.d program at some southern (read snowless) university.

In order for the office to run smoothly, it is essential that we meet all of our deadlines. In other words, staff writers, people contributing letters to the editor, advertisers and clubs wanting notices published have to get the material to us in a timely fashion.

Deadlines:

The deadline for letters to the editor, photos, advertisements and announcements is Tuesday evenings at 5 p.m. for that week's issue. All articles should be turned in to the entire staff by 5 p.m. on Wednesday. Any of these items can be sent through campus mail, queued over Quickmail or dropped off at the office. The editorial staff reserves the right to edit all submissions for length and clarity.

To the Editor:

Letters to the Editor are always welcome and encouraged. The Editor reserves the right to edit letters for lenght and clarity. The deadline for To the Editor is Tuesday at 5 p.m. for the upcoming issue. Letters can be sent through campus mail, queued over e-mail, or dropped off at the Elm office in the Reid Hall basement.

Student tired of losing students

To the Editor:

In the past few semesters I have noticed that more and more students from WC are not returning because they can't make the minimum grades that are required here at Washington College. At first I thought this was an exceptional move on the part of the college considering how our academic rank and reputation among other colleges has fallen, now I'm not so sure. This semester WC has lost some very well respected and valued members of its community, because of poor grades. I do not think that their dismissal from college was a mistake, I know it was. Some of these former members of our community served the college to the degree that their presence here will surely be felt for the entire year. These members were role models and highlighted the best of what WC had to offer. This brings me to the conclusion that Washington College needs to reexamine the procedures by which they decide who goes and who stays. College is supposed to be the learning experience of a lifetime, not just academically, but socially and personally as well. People come here not only to learn English and Psychology, but to learn about themselves. To discover their limits, their place, and who they are. In many aspects this part of the college experience is more important than any other. This is not to down play the education factor at all. Learning is the primary reason to be at college, but not the only. It's a place to explore and grow. If we allow students who are on this exploration of discovery and who do care about the college and their education to leave us, then we as a college community are not living up to our promises. The ones that say we are here to help you succeed and push your potential to the limits. I am in no way condemning the faculty or the deans at the college. In fact I feel that Dean Wolff is doing an exemplary job correcting many of the problems with the academic questions that plague the college. What I am saying is that grades should not be the only factor looked at when deciding the fate of a college student, because the education of our community does not end when classes are over.

-Richard McKee, Senior, Drama Major

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan
Arts & Entertainment Editor
Martha C. Kimura

Layout Editor
Rachael S. Fink
Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Richard McKee, Jr.

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams. Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and Crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff. The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be addressed to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or delivered over Quickmail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-4565.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

This Week on Campus: August 26 - September 1

Film Series Student Center

Endless Summer
1968 classic film

Special film for orientation

Friday 26 Film 9 p.m.

Co-Curricular Opportunities: Deans of Students explain what WC offers, 3 p.m., Student Center

Saturday 27

Arena Registration, Lifetime Fitness Center, 4:30 p.m.

Video Dance Party, Student Center, 9 p.m.

Sunday 28 Film 7:30

SGA Club Fair, Cater Walk, 1 p.m.

All-College Picnic, Front Lawn, 4 p.m.

Monday 29

First Day of Classes

Tuesday 30

Wednesday 31

Thursday 1

Student Government Association NEWS

Kate Meagher

The Executive Board of the Student Government Association is preparing for the task of leading the student body into the second half of the 1990s.

The new Honor Code is in place, and the SGA hopes that it makes a strong impression on the freshman class. The SGA Constitution will be undergoing some revision, and both new and returning students will be encouraged to participate in Student Government.

New students will attend an Honor Code meeting on Saturday, where the code will be introduced and its key points stressed.

"We're going to make this hit harder than the last one," said SGA President Jamie Baker. He believes that the switch from the old code to the new one put into effect last year will take some time. Starting with this year's freshmen will begin the changeover process and within a few years, the new code should solidly be in place. The new Code will be presented to the students by other students, and this, according to Baker, is "a good way for students to hear about the Honor Code ... rather than have some dean put it in their face."

Some projects planned for the SGA include internal restructuring of its committees and a revising of the SGA Constitution. Parliamentarian Ken Pipkin will be working with the constitution to bring it up to date.

The SGA hopes to "develop the initiative and leadership of the Senate and students in general," said Baker. "We're looking into tapping into the enthusiasm of the huge freshman class. What we're going to try to do over the next couple of weeks is get out more information regarding who we are and what we do," so that students who are eager to get involved with the SGA know that it is open to them.

According to Article 9, Section 3 of the SGA Constitution, visitors may sit in on all open Senate meetings, "but they are subject to the rules of the Chair. Visitors may suggest or recommend motions to the Senate or to a Senator and they may participate in the discussion upon recognition of the Chair." Whether a student holds a Student Government office or not, he or she may be actively involved in Senate meetings.

The Executive Board of the SGA this year consists of President Jamie Baker, Vice President Sonja Wilson, Secretary Sharla Ponder, Treasurer Elizabeth Likens, Honor Board Chair Douglas Beckworth, and Parliamentarian Ken Pipkin. The Student Life Chair also sits on the Executive Board, but the position is currently vacant, due to the resignation of Carey Hargrove.

Hargrove resigned due to an unexpectedly heavy work load for the coming year. He will still be involved in planning activities, and has already suggested some ideas that the SGA plans to carry out.

"He'll be sort of a consultant," said Baker. "His capacity with the SGA is about the same as it was last year." Hargrove was instrumental in the planning of the Birthday Ball last year.

The SGA Constitution states that it is the Presidents duty to appoint a successor to Hargrove. Baker and the other members of the Executive Board are considering possibilities for his replacement.

"And that's going to be a tough call," said Baker. Once a new Student Life Chair is chosen by the President, the decision must get the Senate's approval. Because the Senate will not be established until mid- or late September, a Student Life Chair will not be in place until then, though this delay "shouldn't negatively affect much," according to Baker.

Last semester there was increased cooperation between the SGA and Security, Student Affairs, and Student Activities, resulting in successfully planned and executed events.

"The cooperation is something we're looking forward to keep things moving" in this year, said Baker. Ω

Local News & Briefs from the State

Concerned citizens in Chestertown have organized to create a Citizens On Patrol group in an attempt to cut down on crime in certain high risk areas.

The organization patrols Chestertown in conspicuously marked cars. The patrol cars maintain radio contact with a home base, and report any suspicious activity to the home base. The person stationed at the home then decides if the police should be notified.

The COPs are not connected to any law enforcement organization, but they have received the enthusiastic approval of Chestertown Police Chief Wayne M. Bradley. So far the COPs patrol only on the weekends, with an estimated 25 volunteers involved.

The COPs have garnered some insults from young people on the street, but most of the time, people naively wave as they pass by when they spot the conspicuous vehicles.

In the news statewide, the right to free speech for beggars on the street has been defended by a federal judge in Baltimore.

U.S. District Judge Frederic N. Smalkin found the law banning aggressive panhandling in Baltimore unconstitutional.

It is legal for individuals to solicit aggressively for other causes, and Judge Smalkin finds the only difference between these people and panhandlers to be "the content of their speech."

A suit filed by the American Civil Liberties Union, which has a trial date of September 12, claims that the law violates rights to equal protection, travel, free speech, and freedom of expression. The ACLU was pleased with the federal ruling.

Thinking through ... the refugee shuggle

By Paul Briggs

"Thinking through ..." is a bi-weekly commentary on national and international politics.

Ever since the then-Soviet Union stopped sending aid to Cuba, the situation there has been steadily getting worse. Last year the Clinton administration and Congress tightened the economic embargo in hopes of "putting more pressure" on the Castro regime. In the past few weeks, the results have been emerging, and they are not pretty.

With thousands of refugees pouring off the Cuban coast and headed for Florida, the Clinton administration reversed one of the cornerstones of U.S. Caribbean policy- the acceptance of Cuban refugees as political exiles with virtually no questions asked. Now, Cuban refugees are being sent to Guantanamo Bay for the time being, and the administration has asked twelve nations in the region to provide temporary "safe havens" for the refugees.

This policy was long overdue for a change. The inconsistency of forcibly returning Haitian "boat people" allegedly because of the dangers involved in traversing the Caribbean in unseaworthy vessels, and welcoming Cuban "boat people" from an equally dangerous trip, was a national embarrassment. The unconditional acceptance of immigrants from Cuba has been described as striking a blow for freedom, yet it is universally acknowledged that in the greatest refugee influx of all- the Mariel boat lift of 1980- the U.S. lost its shirt, as Castro emptied the prisons and mental hospitals and sent the inmates off to Miami, where the state was too overwhelmed to sort them out. The exodus has also served as a safety valve for the country as its economy shrinks and jobs vanish. Moreover, with Castro's domestic opponents residing in South Florida, there has been no chance for any domestic opposition to organize itself. Clinton's policy shift was made just in time to prevent Florida from being overwhelmed by another mass exodus.

The new policy, unfortunately, has a rather short half-life. The U.S. holding at Guantanamo Bay is not large, and may soon be filled to capacity. Just how many "safe havens" will ultimately materialize is not yet clear, but between the Cubans and the Haitians, there isn't likely to be enough space to go around there, either. The simple fact is that no Caribbean or Central American nation is even remotely capable of handling as many refugees as Florida, even on a short-term basis.

Then, too, there is the question of whether this is really going to be a short-term situation. In the case of Haiti, the implication has always been that if General Cedras, the current dictator, does not step down, the U.S. will invade, overthrow him, and restore Aristide. Right now this doesn't seem likely- neither the administration nor Congress is prepared to enter into anything that looks like a Somalia-type entanglement. As for Cuba and U.S. demands for democratic reform there, Fidel Castro has thus far outlasted eight U.S. presidents. Tomorrow he may get Colin Powell like Kim Il Sung, be overthrown like Nicolae Ceausescu, or see the light, step down and hold national elections. It would be most unwise, however, to develop a Cuba policy dependent on any of these possibilities. The last President to bet the farm on a sudden uprising against Castro was Clinton's role model, John F. Kennedy, and the result was the Bay of Pigs fiasco.

Ultimately it will probably be necessary to return almost all of the refugees to their respective countries, whether or not there is any democratic reform there. The alternative is for the refugee camp to become a permanent fixture of Caribbean life. This is already becoming the case in places like Rwanda and Zaire, but it doesn't have to happen in our backyard just yet. Ω

Mathematics Workshop

- Personal help in overcoming a weak math background
- Computer assisted instruction
- Printed programmed materials
- Problem books
- Math anxiety reduction discussions

Fall Hours

Monday, Wednesday, Friday:	9:00 -9:30 10:30 - 11:30 1:30 - 2:30
Tuesday:	9:00 - 12:00 1:30 - 2:30
Thursday:	9:00 - 12:00

William Smith Hall, Room 32
(410) 778-7862, Mr. Wantling

The Workshop is provided to help students who need remedial work in mathematics. It is not a place to do one's homework. Under normal circumstances, a professor will refer a student for specific remedial work necessary for the successful completion of theof the course in question.

Notes on Telephone Use

Calling Cards

The Switchboard Office, located in the basement of Bill Smith, is open from 8 am to 5 pm, Monday through Friday. The Switchboard can be reached by dialing 0 from any campus extension, and by dialing 778-2800 from off campus.

The campus calling cards can be purchased at the Switchboard office for $25. The cards can be used from any phone on campus, and bills will be sent out monthly to the address on file in the business office. Local calls are free. Students are responsible for any charges made on the card. Repoit the loss of your card immediately to the Switchboard. To use the card, simply dial your card number followed by 9 and the number you are calling.

Once a caling card is issued, it remains with the student as long as he/she iscontinuously enrolled at WC. Students wishing to discontinue this service must notify Sara Elburn at the Switchboard Office.

Personal calling cards can also be used from on campus phones. Dial 9-10288-0-the area code and the number you are calling. At the prompts enter your calling card number.

International calls can be made from any campus extension by dialing your campus calling card number, followed by 9 - 011 - Country Code - City Code and the number you are trying to reach.

"Help," from 1

These students have been trained, in the words of Dean Maxcy, as "facilitators and role models for the students." Dean Maxcy and Dean McIntire are jointly in charge of the RA program.

The 27 resident assistants are the result of a selection process which requires that the students have experience living in residence halls, "outstanding personal conduct," and recommends that the applicant have a 3.0 GPA.

They are familiar with the many support services of the college and can direct students towards any aid they might need. The RA also acts as a liaison between the students and campus administration including the Office of Public Safety and Housekeeping. As a part of this responsibility, the RA's either answer questions regarding school policy or direct the student towards where that information can be found.

"They are employees of the college," remarked Dean Maxcy. "Their responsibilities are divided between ensuring the safety, security, and discipline of their halls (as college employees), and being people who help new and returning students establish themselves comfortably and happily in their residences. ... They are not policemen (and) are not driven by the faculty."

The new and returning RA's have received extensive leadership training and preparation for their role in smoothing the potentially strained situation between roommates and monitoring other personal problems which may arise from the demands of dorm and college life.

"It's a lot to ask students to do with other students," Maxcy admitted, but expressed confidence that this year's RA's were equal to the task. Maxcy claims that the use of student RA's is a great "show of trust in the students" in contrast to some other colleges which have graduate students or professional (read: significantly older) resident assistants.

"It's one of the key responsible positions in the campus," said Maxcy.

Collectively, the students selected to be RA's reflect the college's efforts to diversity.

"It's a nice cross section of the college population," said Maxcy. There are RA's from all over the country and even from other countries such as Ireland and Peru. Their differing backgrounds, interests, and majors will help them to better relate to the student body.

"It's a good opportunity to help people on campus," said senior Sociology major Sharla Ponder when asked why she became an RA. She also saw this as an opportunity for self growth.

"When I'm active on campus, it helps me to be a better student. I like doing things with the community; I guess that's why I'm a Soc major." This is her first year as a resident assistant.

When asked why she chose to become an RA, Sue Czechowski spoke of the problems she experienced as an incoming freshman from Long Island, New York.

"My RA was the greatest thing," she said, smiling. Czechowski enjoys the sense of community in the residence halls and wants to "make everyone have as much fun as I'm having." She also spoke of the respect between RA's and their halls; "You show them respect and they show you respect." This will be Czechowski's third year as a RA.

Another RA is a junior Business Management major. This is her second year in the job. Shyrlene Johnson became an RA "because I consider myself a people's person. I like helping people and the job just comes naturally to me." She feels that she puts people at ease and they don't see her as a policeman, but as a friend. Johnson, a Phi Mu, is the RA of third floor Minta Martin, a sorority dorm.

"I have a very personal relationship with everyone of the floor, even those who aren't sisters. Everyone is an equal." She doesn't see any conflict between the sorority and her position as RA. Ω

Important information regarding Washington College's Clifton M. Miller Library

Source Locations

Main Floor
- Reference Collection
- Main Book Collection Q-Z
- Current Periodical Room
- Abstracts and Indexes
- Maryland Room
- Maps and Atlases
- Children's Literature
- Reserve Collection
- Library Computing Services

Lower Floor
- Oversize Books
- Government Documents
- Main Periodical Collection
- Computing Room
- Microfilm Reader/Printer
- Curriculum Center
- Back Newspapers

Upper Floor
- Main Book Collection A-P
- Listening Room/Viewing Room
- Sophie Kerr Room
- Reference Office
- College Archives

Resources

Miller Library has a collection of over:

- 127,000 books
- 800 periodical titles
- 1,900 audio - visual items
- 40,000 government documents
- 116,000 microforms

The online catalog provides easy access to bibliographic and location information on the collection. In addition to the eight terminals in the library the catalog is also available from any Macintosh on the campus network.

There is also a public telephone and copy room on the main floor of the Library. Copies cost 10¢ each and a debit card may be purchased at the main desk so the student never has to search for spare change.

Miller Library also features several dedicated computers in addition to those used solely for the automated card catalog. One of these specialized computers contains the Maryland Catalog. Using it, a student may locate books in libraries across Maryland. These books can be requested by students through inter-library loan. A second machine, InfoTrac EF enables a search for materials that contain key words. A third dedicated computer contains government censuses and statistics. Still another computer contains government documents on CD-ROM. While computers for the online catalog are located throughout the library, the other dedicated computers are located on the main floor. The locations for general use computers are listed in the tables above.

Hours of Service:

Open Hours: Mon - Thu 8:15 - midnight; Fri 8:15 - 10 pm; Sat 10 am - 10 pm; Sun noon - midnight.
Reference Hours: Mon - Thu 9 am - 4:30 pm, 7 - 10 pm; Fri 9 am - 4:30 pm; Sun 2 - 5 pm, 7 - 10 pm.

Hours of Operation

Bookstore

(x. 7751)

Mon.-Fri.	8:30am-4:30pm
Sat.	10:00am-1:00pm

Casey Swim Center

(x. 7241)

Mon.-Fri.	7:00am-9:00am noon-2:00pm
Sat.-Sun.	1:00pm-5:00pm

The Cove

(x. 7251)

Mon.-Thu.	9:30am-11:00pm
Fri.	9:30am-12:45am
Sat.	noon-12:45am
Sun.	noon-11:00pm

Dining Services Meals

(x. 7250)

Monday-Friday

Hot Breakfast	7:30am-8:30am
Continental	8:30am-9:30am
Lunch	11:15am-1:30pm
Dinner	4:45pm-6:45pm

Weekend Meals

Saturday
Brunch	10:30am-12:30pm
Dinner	5:00pm-6:00pm
Sunday
Brunch	10:30am-12:30pm
Dinner	4:15pm-5:45pm

Johnson Lifetime Fitness Center

(x. 7256)

Mon.-Thu.	11:45am-9:00pm
Fri.	11:45am-7:00pm
Sat.	noon-5:00pm
Sun.	2:00pm-9:00pm

Miller Library

(x. 7292)

Mon.-Thu.	8:15am-midnight
Fri.	8:15am-10:00pm
Sat.	10:00am-10:00pm
Sun.	noon-midnight

Student Center

Sun.-Thu.	8:00am-midnight
Fri.-Sat.	8:00am-2:00am

Study Skills Services

(x. 7883)

Mon.	12:30pm-4:00pm
Tue.	9:30am-12:30pm
Wed.-Thu	12:30pm-4:00pm

Writing Center

(x. 7262)

Mon.-Fri. 8:30am-4:30pm (by appointment)

Health Services

(x. 7261)

Mon.-Fri. 8:30am-12:00pm
1:00pm-3:30pm

Doctors' Hours
Dr. Gottfried Baumann
Mon.-Fri. 2:00pm-3:00pm
Dr. Susan Ross
Mon. & Thu. 9:00am-10:00am

Health Services Counseling
Mon.-Fri. 8:30am-4:00pm
Emergency counseling is obtained by calling Security (ext. 7810).

Computing Center

(x. 7205)

Mon.-Thu.	8:30am-11:00pm
Fri.	8:30am-6:00pm
Sat.	1:00pm-5:00pm
Sun.	1:00pm-5:00pm

"Survivors" on the electronic super-highway

Mindie Kaplan

In addition to the Counseling Services offered by Washington College, there are several discussion groups on the Internet where victims of rape or other abuse can find support. The following BBSes contain a group called "Survivors" which can only be accessed by survivors of abuse. This is not a replacement for professional help, but it is often helpful for survivors to communicate with each other and learn that they are not alone. A member of this group does not have to reveal his/her name or school; it is completely anonymous and confidential. In the tradition of the BBS, each member chooses a "use name" by which he/she wishes to be known. As a further safety measure, members can "post" messages anonymously and avoid even the identification of a use name. Survivor groups welcome abuse victims of all ages and stages of recovery.

These BBSes are easily reached by using the Telnet function on any campus or personal computer. The largest group is ISCA BBS located at the University of Iowa; its address is isca.uiowa.edu. A second choice is Skynet BBS located in Grimstad, Norway; its address is hpx6.aid.no. Login as "skynet." Another one, Brinta BBS, is located in Rotterdam, the Netherlands. The address is brinta.ptt.hro.no. Login as "bbs." A fourth BBS, Prism, is located in the United States; its address is bbs.fdu.edu. Ω

Freshmen get down and dirty:

Pre-orientation trip to Fox Island

Lite Meagher

Twelve freshmen spent 3 days camping through a marsh, covering themselves in mud, and generally being dirty together on a small island on the Chesapeake Bay.

The group left for Fox Island on Monday morning, while another group departed for Smith Island. The lodge in which they stayed on Fox Island was completely run by solar energy, and there were no showers and no flush toilets.

This is the second year for the pre-orientation program. The program was designed in order for the students to get to know each other and the area in which they will spend their college years. It is also meant to increase environmental awareness. The Chesapeake Bay Foundation runs the lodge on Fox Island, and shows the participants different aspects of the Bay, and how their actions affect it and the animal life in the Bay.

Accompanying them to Fox Island were two members of the faculty, Dr. Dave Russell, of the Biology Department, and Jeff Chaffin, Director of Reader Services in Miller Library; two Resident Assistants, Ken Pipkin and Laura Heidel; and two Peer Advisers, Lil Lyford-Pike and Josh Lawrence.

Several students relate their experiences on Fox Island:

Allison Suttle: We went for a sunrise canoe out to Bird Island to watch the sun come up. Only three of us, Ken, Laura, and myself, made it out there.

Pete Torigoe: Camouflage was incredibly fun. It's a game where one person stands and represents the predator. They stay in one spot and try to see other people and the other people have to hide, which means covering yourself in mud, grass, and small crustaceans.

Barbaranne Mocelis: The canoeing together really brought us together. You're out on this big body of water and that's it. I mean there's nothing out there to distract you. It was very peaceful.

Devon DeMeritt: I liked the bat and moth game. It took place at night by the edge of the bay where we gathered around in a circle and two people were placed in the center blindfolded and one became the moth and one was the bat. They would each call out "bat" and "moth" and then the bat would hunt the moth using only sound. This was all interrupted by the wind and the waves so you learned how to trust everyone being blindfolded with everyone protecting you from ...

Pete: ... falling into the bay.

Howie Kronthal: The house that we stayed in was owned by the Chesapeake Bay Foundation and it was operated by its own solar system-

Barbaranne: Solar power, wasn't it?

Allison: Yeah, solar power. It was a city in one house.

Paul Thomas Bayne: It was a self-contained eco-unit.

Hilary Rainey: There was a well, and you had to pedal a bike to bring water up to the sink.

Leti Lyford-Pike: But it had a high salt level so you couldn't drink it.

Howie: We went out on the island and we experienced how the island is like a sponge and soaks up tons of water. So we got in two lines and one line would jump up and down and the other side would feel the island move.

Paul: They decided we should all have dates for the second evening. The women drew names out of a hat to select their dates. The men prepared the dinner and the women served it to their dates. We had to be in costume. Some of the different costumes included Howie in a grass skirt, Leti was a crab ... togas were popular.

Pete: Yeah, there was a nice pastel flowered toga.

Paul: We concluded the evening by giving gifts and the gifts were made from natural things like a painted horseshoe crab, origami flowers, marsh grass ... a bunch of dead stuff.

Leti: On the second night, I convinced several people to sleep outside on the dry part of the marsh. There was no tide, but we decided to split up into three smaller groups to find different ways out to the marsh edge. We did that, and Paul and I ended up in marsh up to our waists. But we made it to the shore. At three in the morning I suddenly woke up. I saw Paul and Allison, our CBF guide, but the others were gone. And then I noticed that I was really cold and drenched.

Paul: And it wasn't raining. I was awakened, and saw I was lying in three inches of water. The tide had come in. We realized everyone had left us high and dry - or low and wet.

Leti: We were abandoned. So I woke Allison up.

Paul: She, strangely enough, had the only dry spot.

Leti: We had to pull together to make our way back.

Paul: It was a true bonding experience.

Leti: We got back-

Paul: ...barely alive, clinging to the last thread of life, and we passed out there on the dock. In the morning we told everyone, "See what you missed?"

Devon: Carolyn, tell about your birthday.

Carolyn Fuss: Even though I thought it would be one of my worst birthdays-

Pete: Oh, nice vote of confidence ...

Carolyn: No, because I was with strangers. It turned out to be one of the best. I can't remember any other birthday when I've been able to be at a bonfire on the beach watching shooting stars or wake up in the middle of the night to find out that we were floating in water. I really appreciate the way everyone pitched in to make this such a memorable experience for me.

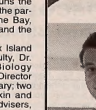
All who participated seemed to agree that the trip was a memorable experience. The school hopes to expand the pre-orientation program to include more freshmen in the future. Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Rachael Fink

Photos by Rachael Fink

Question: What are the top three reasons you're happy to back on campus?



1. Freshmeat
2. A class with Beth McCoy
3. Stealing toilet paper from dorms

Thea L. Mateu, Junior

1. being an RA in Caroline? (Sonja's old room)
2. rebuilding our fears
3. a challenging academic year!

Paul Kenny, Sophomore
(Paul is the RA for Caroline 1st floor but was not available for the RA photo)

1. faculty
2. washer machines
3. the new bathrooms

Gene Vassel, Sophomore

1. I moved out of Caroline
2. I'm finally legal
3. Great new Academic Dean

Sonja Wilson, Senior
(Sonja is the RA for Cardinal but was not available for the RA photo)

1. I eat more often
2. I use less gas
3. I see more people

Sarah Kirby, Sophomore

1. May Day
2. watching Elm staffers slowly go insane
3. getting my picture in The Elm

Purple Pedro, Elm Mascot

Changes in the Campus-wide network underway

Windie Kaplan

An important change in the campus-wide network is in the works.

QuickMail is in the process of being replaced by BlitzMail.

Aside from a more interesting graphics format, BlitzMail is simply easier to use on a campus like WC where students frequently access their electronic mail from various computers across campus.

The features are fully customizable and the new preferences are resident on the mail server, so a BlitzMail user does not have to modify the functions on each computer.

Filed mail can also be accessed from any computer on campus. A personalized address book can also be saved on the server and accessed from anyplace on campus.

A user will not, however, be able to send a cute cartoon or other graphic alongside the message. "Unsend" and "QuickConference" will also not be available in BlitzMail.

However, every student on campus will automatically have a BlitzMail account. A quick visit to the Computing Center is all that is required to learn the starter password on the account.

BlitzMail is opened by double clicking on the icon, just as any other program. If your name doesn't appear in the login dialogue box, then type it in. Then simply click on "OK" or press "Return." Once you have logged into BlitzMail, you will see a window labeled "Blitz" on the left hand side of your screen. Menus appear at the top of most BlitzMail windows as well as in the main BlitzMail title bar. Menu choices in the open window affect that window. Menu choices on the main menu bar affect the whole program.

To send a message, click on the "Compose" button, then type the name of the person you're sending the message to on the "To" line. Press return, then you may add a subject line and type in the body of your message. To send, choose "Mail Message" from the Compose window's Sending Menu.

The Blitz Mail will make Off Campus Access much more reliable. The connection to the Internet is more stable and the mail goes out immediately.

All folders in BlitzMail have expiration dates which can be set per folder or per message. This is particularly useful for sent mail. You set how long before each message expires. Then it automatically goes away. You don't have to go in and delete old sent mail to keep space free. And you control how long things stay around in any folder.

The ability to resize all windows and to change font and size in any type of window will be an added feature.

There is also the possibility for some added features in the future. Bulletins may be implemented, as well as the ability to print mail sent to non e-mail users.

In addition to the loss of the graphics, several other standard QuickMail features will be missing from the BlitzMail program. Users will not be able to unsend a message once it has been sent. Quick Conference has also been relegated to the dark ages, along with the "Public" folder on Quick Mail.

Despite all the time and energy put into changing from Quick Mail to BlitzMail, the amount of administrative hassle should be greatly reduced. The server automatically nags users using more than a set amount of disk space (currently 1800K). BlitzMail runs on the UNIX machine which is easier to manage. The program also contains a built-in virus detection, and the disk does not need defragmenting.

The interlibrary loan form that was being used through the Quick Mail program is no longer accepted by the ILL folks in the Library. They require a paper form with a signature.

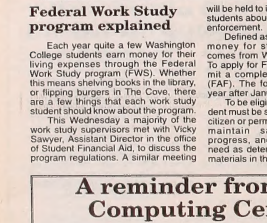
BlitzMail has a fairly extensive help menu that can be accessed to help the unfamiliar student work his/her way around the new system. Ω

Net Surfing

Mindie Kaplan

"Net Surfing" is a bi-weekly column devoted to the electronic superhighway and all the other keyboard/mouse driven aspects of our lives. Specifically, this column will be geared towards what you can do from campus with your Mac or IBM compatible (PC) computer. While PC users will not be able to use some of the college's services from their machine at this time, the Computing Center is working towards finding software which will enable PC users to connect to the campus network. In the meantime, PC versions of many campus Internet programs are available and a PC can be connected to the Internet via modem. Further information on programs discussed in this column can be obtained by contacting the Computing Center.

Please direct all comments/criticism and topic suggestions to the Elm Features Editor.



This first installment will provide a general overview of three of the programs found in the "Internet folder" on most of the general access computers scattered around hall lounges, Hynson Lounge (located under the dining hall), the Computing Center (located in Ferguson) and Miller Library. PC users will not be able to access these specific programs from their machines.

Telnet is one of the most popular ways to access the Internet. It allows your computer to directly access programs found on another computer. Most frequently, Telnet is used to connect to either a Bulletin Board System (BBS) or a Multi-User Dungeon (MUD). BBSes are accessed by users across the world to exchange information, gossip, and meet people with similar interests. MUDs are role-playing environments similar to Advanced Dungeons and Dragons. The game is ongoing and players can join in at anytime. Players from across the country are able to interact real-time in the same game.

In order to use Telnet, you must know the IP address of the computer you wish to connect to. This information can be obtained by selecting the "anoff" Lost text file found on some computers or by visiting the Computing Center where a student or staff member can offer assistance. It is also possible to access another computer using a pre-set icon. The icon looks like a computer screen with two arrows pointing in opposite directions on the right hand side. The most complete and expensive way to obtain addresses is by purchasing a book such as Harly Hahn's The Internet Complete Reference (BBS).

News Watcher is an Internet Newsgroup Reader. Unlike a BBS, Newsgroups are not resident on any one computer. (Iowa BBS, for example, is located at the University of Iowa). One advantage of this is that a serious Newsgroup tends to attract more professionals and other knowledgeable people (via college BBS which tends to be more recreational). A Newsgroup is a series of "posts" from readers across the world on a specific subject. There are countless Newsgroups (countless because the number keeps growing) discussing topics with names ranging from misc.invest.canada (investments in Canada) to sci.bio.ecology (ecology) to soc.culture.native (Native American religion), and even rec.humor.d.die.die.die (no explanation needed).

Turbo Gopher (also found as Gopher Telnet Session) allows you to access gopher servers across the country. A gopher server does not have the social interaction with other users found in Newsgroups or BBSes. Instead, it offers factual information which does not require commentary. WC is proud to offer its own gopher server which features Campus Information (a menu containing the college calendar, handbook, and telephone directory among other useful information) and Experimental (a menu containing on-line campus newspapers from 24 states and 5 countries as well as ongoing computing projects, Weather reports, software, and even song lyrics to your favorite songs can also be obtained through gophers). Very shortly you may even be reading this college's on-line as the WC Gopher Server continues to expand. Ω

Federal Work Study program explained

Each year quite a few Washington College students earn money for their living expenses through the Federal Work Study program (FWS). Whether this means shelving books in the library, or flipping burgers in The Cove, there are a few things that each work study student should know about the program.

This Wednesday a majority of the work study supervisors met with Vicky Sawyer, Assistant Director in the office of Student Financial Aid, to discuss the program regulations. A similar meeting will be held to inform all of the work study students about the regulations and their enforcement.

Defined as Federal Work Study, the money for student wages actually comes from Washington College itself. To apply for FWS, a student must submit a completed Financial Aid Form (FAF). The forms are available every year after January 1.

To be eligible to recieve FWS, a student must be seeking a degree, be a US citizen or permanent resident of the US, maintain satisfactory academic progress, and demonstrate financial need as determined by the application materials in the FAF Packet.

Eligible students are assigned by the Financial Aid Office to one supervisor/work site. Students are not permitted to work for more than one supervisor, or at more than one work site. Students will only be paid for the hours worked for their assigned supervisor.

Students are expected to work an average of 12 hours per week. The student's earnings must be monitored so that they do not exceed the amount of FWS awarded. Department accounts will be billed for any amount that exceeds the FWS award.

Prior to beginning their work assignments, FWS students are required to complete the Student Personnel Information Form, a W-4 form, Maryland Withholding Exemption Statement, and the Department of Human Employment Eligibility Verification form. Payroll checks will not be issued until all payroll forms have been completed.

Special color coded FWS time sheets are provided to each supervisor at the beginning of the academic year. The FWS hours must be entered on these sheets provided. Time sheets are due in Doris Oakley's office by noon on Monday of each pay week.

For more information contact Vicky Sawyer or Sandy Brown at ext. 7214.

Horoscope

for the week of August 29 - September 4

Virgo (8/23 - 9/23): To find an outlet for your overflowing creativity, you will write for The Elm. Libra (9/24 - 10/23): You'll decide that working for the school paper is the perfect way to meet fascinating, beautiful, and subtle people. Scorpio (10/24 - 11/22): Your roommate is going to be getting mighty annoying soon. You can avoid him by writing for The Elm. Sagittarius (11/23 -12/21): Your parents think you're a real bum. Show them they're seeing them, a copy of The Elm with your name atop a brilliant and savvy article. They'll love you more and send you lots of money. Capricorn (12/22 - 1/20): The week's project turned out wonderfully, mostly due to your unparalleled ability. Aquarius (1/21 - 2/18): You need to shower more often. Folks are beginning to look at you funny. Pisces (2/19 - 3/20): You'll either start up an art farm in your room, or start writing for The Elm. It could go either way. Aries (3/21 - 4/19): Your week will go on for seven full days, each with a length of 24 hours. Taurus (4/20 - 5/20): Giving out tiny mushrooms to everyone you meet is not the great idea you think it is. Gemini (5/21 - 6/20): Fighting with adorable little fuzzballs can get you into trouble. Your time is better spent on more literary endeavors. Cancer (6/22 - 7/22): You've been dreaming of getting journalistic experience here at Washington College. If you beg the editors of The Elm, they just may, out of the kindness of their hearts, let you write something. Leo (7/23 - 8/22): Didn't your mother ever tell you not to eat paste? You'll find out why.

Horoscope by Roy

A reminder from the Computing Center

1 Caroline, Kent, Queen Anne, and Minta Martin now have direct fiber-optic connections. To make any IP based service (gopher, Newswatcher, Mosaic, Blitzmail) work, connect through Apple Share to Head Mac as "guest." Drop the Mac Tcp into your system folder and read the "read me" file. This notice affects all MAC systems newer than Mac Pluses.

2 Each room has only ONE telephone jack and one or two network connections which are marked by a yellow sticker. Only ONE telephone can be plugged in to a room; if your phone doesn't work, try another jack. The phone systems ARE operational at this time. See the Switchboard in Central Services (located in the basement of Bill Smith) if you need a phone card.

Washington College Staff Profile

Betty Starkey, better know as Ms. Betty, is a veteran member of the Washington College Staff. She has been the housekeeper for Reid Hall for all of her 13 years with the college. Her husband of 35 years, Donald, is also a part of WC staff and works with maintenance. Ms. Betty has three daughters, Donna, 34, Mary, 31, and Jonie, 28. Also in her large family are 7 grandchildren, the eldest at 14 is Dawn and the youngest is 4-month old David.

The housekeeper's job entails keeping the building clean, vacuuming the hallway carpets, sweeping out the steps everyday, and keeping the bathroom spotless. Ms. Betty even waxes the floors once a month. The Housekeeping staff rotates on weekends. They will come in and have two buildings to do, which is why one sometimes sees an unfamiliar face Saturday mornings.

"I come in here one Saturday a month and I have to go to Caroline. Sometimes ..." Ms. Betty said, trailing off with a teasing grin. "I've always had a great bunch of girls in here," Ms. Betty commented when asked what students could do to make her job easier. "I can't complain."

Dropped Whole Degree

Notes From An Evening With Burning Spear: Live at the Bayou, Georgetown

Aaron Pierce

I saw God peeking out at me from a corner of Heaven on a drizzly summer night in Georgetown. He had a scraggy gray beard and half-lidded Buddha eyes that never quite seemed to acknowledge the presence of an audience of mesmerized apostles. He momentarily broke from his trance to sing out in the voice of a great drunken lion, "Talk to me people!" The god before us was Winston Rodney. The band was Burning Spear. We were enraptured.

And this is where I found myself on what would have been a dull summer night. Thanks to the boundless generosity of our fearless leader Rachael Fink, I was able to attend the D.C. leg of Burning Spear's twenty-fifth anniversary tour. Any serious fan of reggae should not be without a few of Spear's discs sitting fashionably around his or her living space. The band is quite simply one of the tightest outfits around; its members so finely tuned to the spirit of its leader, Mr. Winston Rodney.

Rodney is an old man with a voice that really does resemble the ramblings of a drunken lion. His lyrics drift along lazily, possessed with a regal sort of spirituality, among the heroes and legends of the Rastafarian movement. To see the band live is a religious experience. You have entered a world where life is difficult, but that difficulty is, in itself, healing. In this, Burning Spear's music is closely akin to the spirit of the blues. It has the power to heal and empower those who listen to it.

The live show is astounding. A smoky rainbow shines down from above the stage as Rodney flows along with the music, eyes closed, oblivious to everything but the music that rolls along inside him. The band glides along seamlessly, with a smooth intricacy that blends in with Rodney's vocals. It's an ethereal connection that ties the lyrics and the music together. Something primal and inspiring. Bop! The horns pop off one of the tightest licks you'll ever hear, and then go right back into their synchronized strut like nothing's happened. The songs never build; they start off strong and just keep rolling along, carrying you off with them. That night, with Rodney at the helm, dancing and singing even when the music stopped, Spear jammed long after song into the wee hours of the morning. And after the third encore, we were still begging for more.

Anyone who is interested in hearing some really fine reggae should make a serious effort to hunt down some Burning Spear. This is some of the coolest music you will be able to pull out of your collection and claim as your own. Their album list is extensive (they've been around for twenty-five years!), so you shouldn't have problems finding their stuff. Some albums to check out are Harder Than the Best, and Jah Kingdom. These are two of my favorites and many of their grooviest songs can be found on them. Listen especially to songs such as "Man in the Hills" (the bird calls you hear are done by Rodney), "Civilize Reggae," (both on Harder Than the Best), "Jah Kingdom," and a cover of the Grateful Dead song "Estimated Profit," (both on Jah Kingdom). Also look for a live album to be released, hopefully, soon.

Note: this first episode is dedicated to Brian and Rachael. Thanks for the summer guys! Ω

Martha Kimura

Chestertown's Entertainment Value:

There is no McDonald's, remember Dan's wisdom and survival is yours

As a freshman, I remember driving up to the college and being horrified that there was no McDonald's in Chestertown. With that initial scare, I spent most of my first month wondering what I was thinking when I decided to go to this college. But my Peer Advisor, Dan, growled - "You'll get nothing out of place if you sit on your butt," so armed with that pearl of wisdom, I began my fateful college career. Now, after being in Chestertown for three years, I have come to realize that Chestertown is not the scary "Wasn't this the place they filmed Deliverance" place that I had thought it was.

On campus there actually are many things to do. Dennis Berry, who is the Student Activities director, worked hard this summer to put together lots of events for the newly renovated Cove, which is located under the Dining Hall. The Cove itself is equipped with table tennis and pool tables, chess boards, and an air hockey game, as well as two large screen televisions. All of this crawling distance from our snack bar that offers a pretty decent menu of munchies and sandwiches.

Washington College is obviously not a large school, but it does have many clubs and organizations. There is Target Tutoring, Terra Firma, International Relations, Amnesty International, the Historical Society, Gay and Lesbian Alliance, the Ice Hockey Club, the Campus Christian Fellowship, the Writers Union, and the list goes on and on. In addition there are several bands on campus and many publications that are begging for people to get involved. There is a club or combination of clubs that could suit almost anyone. There are also easy procedures that can be used to form new clubs. The Student Government Association funds most of the clubs and has traditionally given new clubs a decent amount of financial support.

Washington College also has a great sports program, both for the serious sports enthusiast and the not so serious. The sports teams have enjoyed a good reputation, particularly the Crew team. For those of us who do not participate in sports actively, the home games for all the teams are a lot of fun to watch, and the teams appreciate the show of support. There is also a REC sports program offered for intramural sports teams. Usually not as serious, but a great way to get exercise and meet people.

Bottom line ... Even without the McDonald's, Washington College can be a fun place to be, just remember what Dan said. Ω

Washington College Department of Music

First Rehearsal

of the College Community Chorus

Thursday, September 1, 1994
7-9 p.m.
Norman James Theatre
in preparation for

A Concert of Holiday Music

featuring American Christmas music and its European and African sources: Folk songs from Trinidad, Nigeria, and England; carols, hymns and spirituals

Concert Date: Friday, December 9

The College Community Chorus rehearses Thursdays from 7 - 9 p.m. in Norman James Theatre. Contact Kathy Mills in the Music Department at (410) 778-7837

Popcorn & Jujubees:

Even if the movie is bad, it is not a total waste

A review of The Color of the Night by Ines Walter

"The Color of the Night" is a must-see for fans of either thrilling movies or of the brilliant actor Bruce Willis. Focusing on how "civilized" society deals with psychologically disturbed people, the plot of the story centers around two psychologists who have a group of five people in therapy. Each person in therapy must learn to cope with his/her special mania or phobia. They seem to have absolutely nothing in common until one of the therapists is killed, then they collectively begin to fear for their own lives, and unite their efforts to persuade Bruce Willis to take over the group. With his acceptance, the situation deteriorates rapidly. A member of the group is killed in a very cruel way and Willis is threatened to be the next target of the murderer.

Details as well as different character traits of the people in therapy may be confusing, and what definitely seems to be the obvious solution one minute turns out to be utterly wrong in the following minute. Except for a very violent and painful "denouement," which can be appreciated or disregarded, the movie is worth watching and discussing.

However, if you like tension mixed with comedy, you will enjoy this movie. It is a thrilling experience that makes you shiver and think with moments of comedy, presented by excellent actors. It is a journey into human abyss!

W.C. Academic Calendar 1994-95

August	29	Classes begin for undergraduates
September	1	Fall Convocation
	5	Labor Day (no classes)
	6	Graduate classes begin
	7	Last day to drop/add
	9-10	Meeting of Board of Visitors & Governors
	19	Last day to change course to pass/fail
October	14	Fall Weekend (no classes)
	21	Mid-term grades due in Registrar's office
	29	Parents' Day
November	1	Last day to withdraw from class
	3	1st advising day (no classes)
	9	2nd advising day (no classes)
	11	Program cards due
	18	Arena registration
	24-27	Thanksgiving weekend
December	2-3	Meeting of Board of Visitors & Governors
	9	Last day of classes
	9-10	Senior comps
	12-17	Final xaminations
January	17	All students return
	18	Undergraduate classes begin
	27	Last day to drop/add
	30	Graduate classes start
February	9	Last day to change course to pass/fail
	17-18	Meeting of Board of Visitors & Governors
	18	Washington's Birthday Convocation
March	9	Mid-term grades due in Registrar's office
	13-17	Spring Break (College closed)
	22	Last day to withdraw from course
	30	1st advising day (no classes)
April	5	2nd advising day (no classes)
	7	Program cards due
	17	Arena registration
	21-22	Meeting of Board of Visitors & Governors
May	4	Last day of classes
	5-6	Senior comprehensives
	8-13	Final examinations
	16	All grades due in Registrar's office
	21	213th Commencement

Missing the Sports Section?

So are we!

Actually, the sports section is not all that we have had to do without this week. There is always a need for dedicated staff writers, columnists, cartoonists, photographers, and anyone interested in working on a small college paper. We are currently looking for sports editors and a layout editor for paid positions on the staff.

If interested, please attend our Sunday night Editors' Meeting, this Sunday at 6 p.m. in the Elm office, located in the basement of Reid Hall.

If unable to make the meeting, please contact Rachael Fink in the Elm office at x. 8585 or x. 8505, through campus mail, Quick Mail or stop by the office for a visit.

Impress your friends!

Thrill your parents!

Join the Elm staff!

No experience is necessary. The Elm does not discriminate on the basis of race, gender, religion, sexual orientation or shoe size.

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Two

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Charles H. Trout enjoys the All-Campus picnic just days after his resignation as President of the College

Trout resigns:

President to leave in June

Rachael Fink

The rumors have been flying for months.

Some said December, some suggested sooner.

They were right.

Washington College President Charles H. Trout announced his decision to step down from the presidency in a two-hour, closed-door meeting with the trustees last Friday.

Trout, who came to W.C. in the summer of 1990, told The Elm that there was not just one thing that prompted the decision, but that he had been thinking about and questioning his position and role here for some time.

"I kept thinking, is Washington College a place that I can unify?" said Trout. "I wasn't so sure that the answer was yes."

Trout went on to indicate that with much effort, he thinks W.C. could be unified, "but I didn't think it was something that I was confident that I wanted to do because the price might be too great."

Effective June 30, 1995, Washington College will have a new president, although from the beginning of January to the end of his term, Trout will be taking a sabbatical leave.

In the meantime, Trout intends to work to "leave this place in the best possible condition for any successor," although who that successor will be is still an unknown.

With his time off in the spring semester, Trout said he "will make a concerted effort to improve my golf game."

As for the future beyond W.C., Trout has not given it much thought. He is considering a "more contemplative life," possibly outside of education.

Of his time here at W.C., Trout is very pleased. Citing the growth of programs in Chesapeake Regional Studies, Neuroscience and Gender Studies, as well as the invitation to be a charter member of the Centennial Schools and the increased diversity of the student body, Trout said he was pleased with the work he has done here.

"I've said many times that if my presidency stands for anything, it's making the student body look more like America," Trout told The Elm. In point of fact, the minority and international representation among the student body has gone up 10% since the 1980s, something about which Trout is very happy.

Trout had high hopes for the future of W.C., as well as a few suggestions. Citing the Long Range Plan, Trout said "1,000 to 1,150 (students) is really something we need to get to."

He also expressed the need for the faculty to address curricular matters, such as "what the freshmen need to know, and how they need to know it," as well as "an evolution toward greater independence in the senior year."

Of the things that Trout wishes he had seen happen during his tenure here, he spoke of the College becoming more musical.

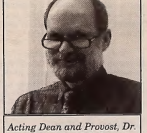
"Hopefully, the next president will find a song for the College, and it will be a song I would like to sing," said Trout.

On the whole, and in spite of the controversy over recently resigned Dean and Provost Gene Wubbles and some dissension within the faculty concerning the office of the president, Trout said he "had a really grent time" here at W.C.

As for the new president, Trout was unable to give any indication as to who that person would be, but did say that he would like to see "strong consideration be given to a woman." ❑

Scholz named Acting Dean and Provost

Kate Meagher



Washington College has a new Acting Dean of the College and Provost.

In a memorandum to the Washington College Community dated August 27, President Charles Trout announced the appointment of Professor Joachim Scholz to the position left vacant by the resignation of Dean Gene Wubbels.

Dean Scholz, a German professor, was named Chairman of the Modern Language Department in June, and was also the Director of the Humanities Program. As Acting Dean, he will perform all of the duties of the Dean and Provost for one year. Meanwhile, a national search for a permanent replacement for Wubbels will take place.

Scholz taught here last semester, following a two-year leave of absence during which he was the director of an archive in Germany.

The Acting Dean and Provost is responsible for curricular and faculty matters, while the Assistant Dean handles students' concerns, including academic standing. Dr. Beverly Wolff was named to the position of Assistant Dean just last spring.

Acting Dean and Provost, Dr Joachim Scholz

In an interview last week, Scholz outlined his objectives for the coming year.

"On the one hand, I have to consider myself an interim dean," Scholz said. "I don't think it's really a time to reinvent the wheel." He pointed out that President Trout has committed himself to an active semester and that he intends to do the same.

Though he has no concrete goals as yet, his tentative plans include "curricular review and possibly reform." A full agenda exists in these areas, according to Scholz.

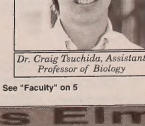
A project on which the new dean will be concentrating in the future is the "freshman experience." Members

See "Scholz" on 3

New faculty members at Washington College

Kate Meagher and Leticia Lyford-Pike

There have been several additions to and changes within the faculty of Washington College this year. With faculty members being promoted or away on sabbatical, and with a very large freshman class this year, it was necessary to bring new faces to the faculty and shuffle positions.



Craig Tsuchida is the new Assistant Professor of Biology. Coming from California, Tsuchida has experienced a transition in his move east. He grew up in Southern California, and got his Bachelor's Degree from UCLA. He worked as a technician in the Immunology Department at the UCLA School of Medicine for approximately two years. He remained at UCLA to get his Master's Degree. In 1987 he began work on his Ph.D. at the University of Santa Cruz. Finishing his Ph.D. work this summer, Tsuchida came to Washington College in early August.

Tsuchida came to Chestertown to take over the classes as well as the office of Dr. Rosemary Ford while she is on sabbatical this semester. In the spring semester, Tsuchida will replace Dr. Dave Russell who will be on sabbatical.

Tsuchida specializes in Marine Ecology. His focus is on symbioses, which are the relationships between different organisms. He also studies clonal organisms, which reproduce asexually, such as lizards and dandelions.

The classes which Tsuchida will teach this semester are Bio 100, the course designed for students who are not going to major in Biology; and Bio 305, Genetics, which is a required course for Biology majors.

"Washington College is different from anything I've experienced," said

Dr. Craig Tsuchida, Assistant Professor of Biology

See "Faculty" on 5

Inside This Week's Elm

Convocation
Musicians and students receive recognition as the year officially opens.
4

Police on campus
Dorchester visited by town police over the weekend.
6

Education reform
Task force recomends changes in tearcher certification requirements in Maryland.
6

Press workshop
Kaylor explains the Lit. House Press Workshop, to begin next week
8

To the Editor:

An open letter to Richard McKee, Senior, Drama Major:

It pains me to see you in such pain. The loss of personal friends from your setting is indeed tragic. However, Richard, you're supposed to visit and to socialize with "well-respected and valued members of the community" during the summer, whereas you should hit the books during the semester. At this evening's Convocation, all speakers made reference to the academic excellence vital to our community and its growth. If any organization allows a select membership to be deluded by members who do not meet the standards, then excellence and growth cannot follow. Because you are here, you have obviously met the standards. If those who did not were also here, your efforts would be mocked. Whereas, contribution to the total program is admirable, it can only be accepted by those who meet the minimum standard of this institution and the degrees it awards are to be taken seriously. Surely you do not wish to water down your future for social purposes.

Sincerely,

Carlton W. Laskauskas,
Interested Parent

To continue with last issue's introductions to the Elm staff, here are Kelli, Peggy, Miro and Carolyn:

Photo Editor:

Hi all. I'm Kelli Youngblood. I hold the Elm's most coveted position; I'm paid to shoot people. Unfortunately, I'm then forced to atone by spending hours locked in a dark room with spiders and Scott Koon's dirty laundry, inhaling harmful chemicals other than nicotine. Aside from this, I also perform vigilante acts for the drama department (just say the word, Dale), the Writers' Union, the Collegian (if all works out), and the powers that be at the LitHaus. If you spot me and my Canon around campus, remember: you can smile, but you can't hide. (Hi Mom.)

Co-Sports Editors:

Peggy Busker hails from Silver Spring, Maryland. She is the product of a private Quaker High School in Olney, Maryland. A junior at W.C., majoring in Biology and minoring in History, Peggy is also earning an education certificate to one day hopefully teach Biology at the middle school level. When not on the Field Hockey or Lacrosse Fields she can be spotted giving tours, singing, in lab, or vegging in her room in West Hall. At home she dabbles in community politics and is a genealogy research assistant to her mother. She is excited about working with the Elm staff this year as Sports Editor. Keep smiling W.C.!

Miro Beran came to the U.S. in 1989 with his family from Slovakia. He is a sophomore at W.C. Miro's majors are Math and Computer Science. Last semester he was a member of the tennis team that won the national championship. Miro is very happy to be back at W.C. He loves his tennis coach and his teachers at W.C. His roommates, Robin Sander and Damian Polla play No. 1 and No. 2 on the men's tennis team.

Layout Editor:

My name is Carolyn Fuss and I'm the new Layout Editor for The Elm. I'm a freshman from Catonsville, Maryland. I'm a rather liberal, idealistic vegetarian who is interested in all sorts of things ranging from camping to baseball to drama. I spend as much time as possible by the water and my goal for the near future is to visit my friends all over the world.

At home in Georgia it is possible to walk into any gospel church any Sunday morning and hear the voices of the choir and congregation singing "Wade in the Water," a popular gospel song in the deep south. The events of the my last three years here at W.C. have brought this song to mind more than once.

"Wade in the water / It's gonna really be troubled water."

The budgetary problems, the controversy over the Long Range Plan, the dissension between the faculty and the administration, the in-fighting between faculty members, the resignation of more than one top and middle administrator, and now the resignation of the president of the College; all of these things have made the past several years here at W.C. rather definitely troubled.

"Wade in the water / My God's gonna trouble the water"

The song is about change, welcome or not. In a short preface to the song on Sweet Honey in the Rock's Live at Carnegie Hall version of "Wade in the water," one of the members of Sweet Honey explains that if you are looking for change, you must wade into the water, but if you are looking for change and you avoid the water "you can forget it."

"Look like I've got to wade in the water / God's going to trouble the water."

Coming to W.C. right now is definitely wading into troubled water, regardless of your position as a student, faculty, staff or administrator. But not all trouble ends in pain. Change, as has been proven right here in the last several years, can be good or bad.

"Wade in the water, children / God's gonna trouble the water."

The administration is talking of a balanced budget for the first time in many years. An end to the budgetary problems could be in sight, despite the pain caused by trying to achieve just that. The overall cost of attending Washington College has increased in the past several years by quite a lot, forcing more and more students to take out larger loans, find bigger grants, or postpone the completion of their education until funds are available. Hopefully, a balanced budget will mean that fewer students have to go to such extremes to finish their degrees here at W.C. There is also a new Vice-President in charge of finance, replacing retired Gene Hessler. Gwen Gottlieb will be joining the College community next week. It is the hope of all the members of the community that she will be able to make this promise of a balanced budget a reality, and keep the budget balanced in future years.

Wade in the water / Wade in the chiling water / God's gonna trouble the water."

Many programs have been expanded or added, increasing the options for faculty and students alike. Curricular changes can often cause tension between faculty members, students and administrators, but changes like the addition of the Gender Studies minor and the Chesapeake Regional Studies program benefit all. Liberal-arts educations rely on exposure to a variety of subject matters, courses of study, and possibilities.

Wade in the water / Come on and wade in the water / My God's gonna trouble the water."

There is a new acting Dean and Provost, Dr. Joachim Scholz, Director of the Humanities Program and professor of German. The position of Dean of any college is not enviable. The Dean is often the scapegoat for the faculty, administration and student body. The position that this faculty cannot work with any dean will be tested once again, and this time against one of their own.

"Wade in the water / Wade in the water, children / God's gonna trouble the water"

The students have a new Assistant Dean to turn to in time of trouble or triumph. Dr. Beverly Wolff has moved from the classroom to the Buntagon where we all hope her commitment to and connection with the students will continue.

"Come on and wade / Wade in the water/ God's gonna trouble the water."

A number of new faculty have been given contracts for the semester or year. Each of them brings something new to the academic and social atmosphere of Washington College, and I, for one, would like to see some of them stick around for a while. New viewpoints, ideas, and influences are essential to an institution that promises to provide a place to learn about life and from life.

"Come on and wade / Wade in the chilling water / 'Cause my God's gonna trouble the water."

There are several social changes that have taken place on campus recently. For example, Mrs. Dee's is now The Cove, Newt's is now Spider's and cigarettes are not kosher anywhere on campus. Freshmen do not remember Dee's, and soon Newt's will be nothing more than small reptiles in the salamander family. The flavor of the campus is changing as seniors graduate and freshmen matriculate. Something that should not change about the College, regardless of the make-up of the student body, is the atmosphere of closeness and exchange that make small colleges preferable to being simply a number in a computer at a larger institution.

"Wade in the water, children / Wade in the chilling water."

As a community all sharing common goals, those of perpetuating the liberal arts tradition and of gaining an education, the distance between us should be small. Small enought to foster personal relationships that cross artificial boundaries of student / teacher, professor / administrator, administrator / staff and all of the other possible combinations that can be found. As an institution of higher learning, Washington College is about education; education of everyone connected to and involved with the College. Chilling water can be deadly, but it can also be refreshing. Those of us who came to W.C. to educate ourselves according to the liberal arts tradition want to be refreshed.

"See those children all dressed in black / They've come a long way and they ain't turning back."

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

News Editor Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor Mindie J. Kaplan
Arts & Entertainment Editor Martha C. Kimura
Co-Sports Editors Peggy Busker & Miro Beran
Editor-in-Chief Rachael S. Fink
Layout Editor Carolyn Fuss
Circulation Manager Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager Richard McKee, Jr.
Office Manager Steve Kim

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and Crud do not neccesarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued overBlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

This Week on Campus
Sept. 9 - 15

Film Series
Farewell My Concubine
Norman James Theatre, 7:30 p.m.

Friday 9
Last day to drop/add

Saturday 10
Kent & Queen Anne's Alumni Chapter's Flea Market
Campus Lawn, 9:00 a.m. - noon

Sunday 11
Elm Editors' meeting,
7:00 p.m., Elm office, Basement of Reid
All Welcome

Monday 12

Tuesday 13

Wednesday 14

Thursday 15
Dance on Film
Carmen with Baryshnikov and Jeanmaire
CAC Forum, 6:30 p.m.

Thinking through ...

by Paul Briggs

Much of the debate surrounding the recently passed crime bill centered on the issue of gun control- specifically, the ban on the manufacture, sale or possession of nineteen different types of assault weapons. Democrats led by Delaware Senator Joe Biden, charged that the real issue in the procedural vote to block the bill in the House, and the attempt to do so in the Senate, was Republican opposition to the assault-weapons ban. Republicans in the House and Senate insisted that their efforts were aimed at the money being spent in crime prevention. This marks a major change in the tone of the gun-control debate - never before has it been seen in Congress as good politics not only to distance oneself from the NRA and its supporters, but to associate one's enemies with them.

What sort of impact will the ban have on crime? The weapons in question are not much use either for hunting or self-defense, and the only law-abiding citizens inconveniences will be hunters and collectors whose who already own such weapons will be permitted to keep them.) The law will mainly serve to provide another offense to charge violent, armed criminals. It will probably also have an impact on the black-market supply of assault weapons, since guns which are no longer manufactured will become more and more difficult to get hold of at all. The effect on street crime, however, is likely to be rather minor, incremental and overshadowed by that of other demographic and economic shifts.

The real breakthrough, in both this measure and last year's Brady law, is that the laws are finally being made at the federal level. Until recently all gun-control laws, including the Firearms Act being proposed in Maryland this year, have been made by state and city governments. Anti-gun-control advocates have long argued that, since criminals can easily purchase guns illegally, these laws only serve to make life more difficult for honest gun owners.

They have a point here. Restrictions on guns passed at the state level are in fact completely worthless from a law-enforcement perspective. The reason for this is simply that states cannot and do not police their own borders. Anyone can shop around for guns in a state with little or no restrictions, drive across the state line, and sell them on the street in a city where they are illegal. This is one reason why the police have no power to control the flow of guns into the cities.

(There is, of course, another source of illegal guns - the ones stolen from factories, stores and homes. There isn't much that can be done about this, but if the traffic described above could be somehow curtailed or reduced, this source would not be able to make up the difference.)

Virginia is a case in point. For a long time the state government was opposed to gun control, and guns purchased legally from its stores ended up in the hands of criminals all over the East Coast, particularly in the District, just across the Potomac. This caused such embarrassment in the state that the legislature finally passed a law limiting handgun purchases to one per month, effectively preventing gun-runners from keeping themselves legally supplied in Virginia without interfering with legitimate dealers. This law may have eased the conscience of the Old Dominion, but it did nothing to slow down the gun traffic. Now the District's black-market gun dealers just have to drive to West Virginia. If necessary, they will drive to Texas, Idaho or any of a dozen other states that cannot be expected to pass any much restrictive laws in the foreseeable future. In short, all such laws must be at the national level to be of any real use. (Ideally, what with the difficulty in intercepting international smugglers, they should be international. Realistically, however, this is not feasible at present.)

This does not mean, however, that they are not necessary. You don't have to be an expert in firearms design to realize that experts are not sitting around tables discussing ways to make guns less effective. Within the next few decades guns even more powerful, accurate and dangerous than the ones available today will be built. These weapons will have to be kept off the streets. Ω

At home and in the state ...

Thea Mateu explores local and national issues

Taking Responsibility

Living in Chestertown you cannot help but notice our Fire Department's siren calling volunteers to the rescue.

The siren that sounds amazingly like some kind of Air Raid warning, as members of KAs can testify, has been going off with alarming frequency lately. Apparently there have been quite a few cases of arson in our area, but that's not what I'm here to talk about.

The latest and most destructive blaze was on August 24 in Worton. Those of us who did Peer Advising work drove by the remains of a building that burnt down in the CFF receiving plant on our way to Echo Hill. Other than obstructing traffic the fire did a great deal of damage to the one affected building, so that will now have to be almost completely rebuilt. CFF, which is operated by a German firm intends to turn recycled paper into road filler. Originally, dates were set for late summer but the opening of this state-of-the-art service has now been pushed back to the fall, for obvious reasons. Ironically enough, the recycling service that CFF provides is also partially and partially the cause of this fire. The fire started when a spark from a welding torch being used to install fire sprinkler systems in the ceiling fell on a bag of shredded paper.

I spoke to several people associated with CFF about the incident. A friend of mine works at the plant and luckily remained unharmed as did the other workers. She was armed pretty composed by the whole deal saying only that she will have a lot of paperwork to do. The Builder's Risk Insurance covers the damage because the building was still under construction. When I asked someone who worked with Annapolis Construction Company his opinion, he too seemed only vaguely annoyed.

Now, the reason I mention this is because it disturbed me. These were not interviews for the Elm or any sort of official reports, I was simply curious. They too told me the story of the spark smoldering in shredded paper for a couple of days at least, until August 24 when the blaze was reported by a passing car at 5:20 a.m. I was shocked and appalled when I heard the stories.

To me, this particular fire seems to scream of negligence and incompetence. The CFF suffered little financial damage because the BRI covers it and the construction company is safe as well. This seems like another case of passing the blame.

Just to give you an idea of why I'm disturbed I'll quote some more facts. The building was 65 by 180' 2 stories high and it took 50 members of the fire departments of Chestertown, Betterton and Kennedyville 30 minutes to put out the blaze. The damage was estimated at $115,000 by the fire department. This was obviously not some smoldering food on an electric burner type fire. This is a major event as far as the County is concerned. Not once have I heard the word negligence used in the same sentence with the CFF fire. I've heard about the delays in the plant, and how the building wasn't vital and how it won't affect the company image, but has it occurred to anyone that maybe it was a bad idea to leave that shredded paper there when there was welding being done? This seems like oversimplification, and it very well may be but I believe a lot of our county's problems, the state's problems, and the world's problems could be solved if we didn't overlook the obvious.

I was reading an ACME flier and it said that any typographical errors etc. were not their responsibility. I've seen it on several other fliers and printings. Whose responsibility are all those errors? Whose responsibility was the fire at CFF? Negligence and failure to perform are indeed someone's responsibility, as a company as a group or an individual. The BRI waited on in for this one but I think maybe the whole fire could have been avoided if everyone had been more careful and if more people took responsibility for their mistakes. Ω

Washington College names Gottlieb its chief financial officer

Anita F. Gottlieb, former Senior Vice President for Operations at Defenders of Wildlife in Washington, D.C., has been named Vice President for Finance and Administration at Washington College in Chestertown, Maryland. Gottlieb, who will join the College's senior administration on September 1, succeeds Gene A. Hessey, who retired in June.

As Washington College's top financial officer, Gottlieb will oversee a $23.7 million annual operating budget and will be responsible for budget and fiscal operations, plant facilities, and personnel management.

At Defenders of Wildlife, Gottlieb was responsible for the fiscal and administrative operations of a national non-profit conservation organization. In her two years there, she developed the first budget system that related program plans to budgets, created a development department, handled contract negotiations, restructured the computer operation, and moved the organization to a new location.

She previously served as Assistant Vice President of University Relations at The American University. During her nine-year tenure there, she was responsible for overall planning and implementation of the entire communications program for the University, including public information, production of all publications — including recruitment materials and fundraising publications for a $100 million capital campaign, alumni relations, special events, and a major national public radio station, WAMU-FM.

Gottlieb also worked on Capitol Hill, where she was staff director of the Subcommittee on Human Resources for the U.S. House of Representatives' Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. She has been on the faculty of Empire State College - SUNY, Old Dominion University, and the American University. As co-chair of the Education Task Force of the Democratic National Committee in 1982, she initiated fundraising efforts for Democratic women candidates. She has been a consultant to the Center for Women in Government at the State University of New York and has made various presentations to policy makers on labor and women's issues.

Gottlieb holds a doctorate in public administration as well as an undergraduate degree in sociology from the George Washington University, and a master's degree in business administration from Old Dominion University.

"I have been familiar with Washington College for many years, because I have had a house in Rock Hall, Maryland, for more than a decade," remarks Gottlieb. "With my involvement with the selection process, I have become aware of the unique constellation of attributes of the College. I am excited about becoming a part of such a vibrant and stimulating college."

"We are fortunate to have found in Anita Gottlieb a capable financial manager with broad experience in business, governmental, and educational issues," said College President Charles H. Trout. "She will be a valuable addition to the Washington College community."

The Elm will have an interview with Gottlieb when she arrives on campus shortly. Ω

Delaware businessman named to Washington College Board of Visitors and Governors

David G. Burton, president of the I. G. Burton & Company, Inc. auto dealership in Milford, Delaware, has been appointed to serve on the Board of Visitors and Governors of Washington College in Chestertown, Maryland.

Burton has been involved in the family business since 1959 and is an active in the community. He is past chairman of the Delaware Business Roundtable and is on the board of the Milford Memorial Hospital. He currently serves as chairman of Delaware's Advisory Council on Public Health and is a member of the Delaware State Health Care Commission. He recently spearheaded a successful drive for Milford Memorial Library's new facility.

A graduate of Georgetown University, Burton earned a master's degree in history from Washington College in 1984, the same year in which his son, Irwin, earned his undergraduate degree there. David Burton and his wife, Ann, have three other grown children. Ω

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

The Executive Board of the Student Government Association is focusing heavily on planning and coordination at the outset of the fall semester.

The Board, comprised of President Jamie Baker, Vice-President Sonja Wilson, Treasurer Elizabeth Likens, Secretary Sharla Ponder, Honor Board Chair Douglas Beckwordh and Parliamentarian Ken Pipkin, met Tuesday night to discuss a multitude of issues it faces in the coming weeks.

There are currently over 50 openings for student positions in various standing faculty committees on campus, which oversee different aspects of the College such as food service and the Honor Code. These positions need to be filled as soon as possible, and Baker encourages anyone interested to contact the SGA at x8500 or via BlitzMail. Once the vacancies are filled, projects such as another Honor Code forum will be set in motion.

Before the Standing Committees undertake any projects, a new Senate must be established. The Senate supervises the operations of the Faculty Committees. Each residence hall is represented by a certain number of Senators, the number of Senators being proportional to the number of residents in the hall. All students may vote, but only for Senators from their own residence. In order to become a Senator, one must obtain a petition and the requisite number of signatures. Petitions are available from the Student Affairs Office starting September 12 and completed petitions must be submitted by the 16. The election will take place on September 21.

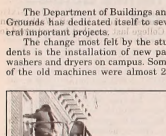
The first open Senate meeting will be on September 27. At this meeting new Student Life Chairperson Rob Moran will be confirmed. According to Baker, Moran will serve in a "part-time capacity" until confirmed by the Senate.

The SGA calendar for the coming days includes a karaoke event on Friday and an SGA-sponsored party at the Dorchester/Talbot/Cecil Quad on Saturday. The party, which will feature performances by student musicians, is scheduled to end at approximately 10:30. Afterward, students are invited to go to the Student Center, where a disc jockey will be performing.

Freshman class elections will take place October 5. Petitions are available beginning September 26 and will be due the 30th. All candidates wishing to submit campaign essays to be published in the September 23 issue of The Elm should get their essays to the Elm office (located in the basement of Reid Hall) by Wednesday, September 21 at 5:00 p.m.. Candidates may turn in their essays on disk in person, via BlitzMail or the newspaper's file server.

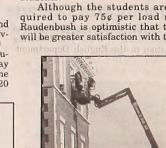
This year's Executive Board intends to educate as many students as possible about Student Government and its functions. One of Baker's primary goals is "increased publicity through The Elm and [the SGA's] own correspondence." He adds that "anyone anywhere with concerns about anything" is encouraged to contact the SGA or any of the Executive Board members. Ω

Maintenance improves life on campus



Buildings and Grounds makes several changes over summer

Leticia Lyford-Pike



The Department of Buildings and Grounds has dedicated itself to several important projects.

The change most felt by the students is the installation of new pay washers and dryers on campus. Some of the old machines were almost 20 years old. The Maytag Corporation surveyed the school and proposed an offer to the school that was, "much better than the system we had before," said Earl Baudenbush, Director of Physical Plant. Maytag has installed new machines in the residence halls. The machines will be serviced by a representative from the Eastern Shore. The machines were distributed throughout the school so that there is a washer and a dryer for every 20 to 24 students.

Although the students are required to pay 75¢ per load now, Raudenbush is optimistic that there will be greater satisfaction with these machines than with the ones which were "always breaking down" last year.

Contracters pianting the window frames of Bill Smith

High above the ground, contracters paint Bill Smith

Although years ago Washington College did charge for the service of laundry machines, Raudenbush said that according to Maytag research, W.C. is one of only two colleges that have not been charging for it in recent years.

In consideration of the Americans for Disabilities Act (ADA) requests, the department of Buildings and Grounds has redone the vanity and mirror in the second floor of Minta Martin so that a person in a wheelchair may have easy access to them. It has also built a ramp outside of Hodson Hall, installed lower water fountains in the student center, and made more handicapped parking spaces for the physically disabled.

Minta Martin dormers were painted as well as the outside of Reid Hall and other sites on campus.

Lights were also set up between Reid and Minta Martin for the improvement of safety.

Among the improvements in the residence halls were all of the bathrooms in Caroline House, and a new "prototype" kitchenette in Cecil 223-225 with a new sink, cook-top, and microwave. Maintenance plans to expand that project to the whole dorm and to install kitchenettes in Talbot and Dorchester in the future. Ω

Musicians honored at Convocation

Kate Meagher

The Washington College Community came together for Fall Convocation this week, with musicians David Zinman and Charlie Byrd honored during the ceremony. Several students received awards for academic achievement during the 1993-94 school year.

W.C. officially opened the year on Wednesday, September 7, with Reverend William M. Plummer of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Chestertown leading the Invocation. Following the blessing, Reverend Plummer added a few strong words about gratitude.

"There is a saying that gratitude has a short memory," said Plummer. "I would like to make the observation and the hope that gratitude has a long memory for President Charles Trout. You can call me out of order," he said, but "if you tell me, I will tell you what you can do."

President Trout graciously refrained from calling Reverend Plummer out of order.

Trout followed the Invocation with a speech, in which he reflected on his years at Washington College.

"It is with a twinge of sadness that I realize that this, my fifth Convocation, is my last," Trout said. He was impressed with the large number of students in attendance.

"I think your presence here tonight speaks volumes," he told the students. "We have a paradigm here at Washington College that others may wish to emulate. Let us celebrate our sense of common purpose," he said.

The Honorable Louis L. Goldstein, Chairman of the Board of Visitors and Governors, greeted the audience. He welcomed returning students back to W.C. for "another successful year," and gave new students "a warm welcome to the Washington College family."

Goldstein praised the liberal arts, saying that they allow one to reinvent oneself. Though the school has changed with the times, Washington College has not strayed from the liberal arts, Goldstein said.

Jamie Baker, President of the student Government Association, then spoke of the changes that have occurred during the last year.

"The college as a whole has been asked to reconsider what it is we do and what it means to be a part of Washington College," Baker said. The Student Body "has created opportunity for much growth and improvement."

David Zinman was then conferred the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Fine Arts. Zinman has been the Music Director for the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra for nine years. President Trout described him as having "broken the barriers of formality" in classical music.

Zinman was grateful to be invited to attend Convocation and to receive the Honorary Degree of Fine Arts. He warned against worldly values, saying that they "are not enough to sustain you between now and your full years of maturity." He shared with the students some advice that he gave to his son, who started college this fall. He advised them to give, rather than take, and to make decisions with the heart, rather than with the head.

Charlie Byrd was given the Award for Excellence, for his contributions to te world of music. A guitarist who is a master at both classical and jazz, Byrd gave a special performance for the Convocation audience.

Dean Scholz presented the academic awards. The Fox Freshman Scholarship Medal went to the rising freshman with the highest average, Kelli Youngblood. The Alumni Medal, for the highest cumulative average for a sophomore, went to Theresa Senn. The Visitors and Governors Medal, given to the sophomore with the highest average, was awarded to Amanda Kirby. Kirby and Tod Hall both received the Visitors and Governors Scholarship Award, for the junior and senior with the highest cumulative average. David George, Jason Myers, and Megan Ward were named Middendorf Scholars. The Interfraternity-Sorority Loving Cups, for the organizations with the highest average, went to Zeta Tau Alpha and Theta Chi.Ω

From "Scholz" on

of the faculty have been debating about the orientation program, and Scholz "would like to begin there - to recharge the faculty in a way to begin making progress with this."

Concerning freshman orientation and abroad programs, both subjects of debate among faculty members, Scholz hopes to act as a moderator.

"It is important that any of these reforms or reviews or debates can be facilitated by the dean, but not dominated by the dean," he said. "The faculty has to find its own agenda with this regard."

He wants the faculty "to develop an agenda that seems reasonable and feasible to it." Ω

New minority scholarship fund established

A new scholarship fund at Washington College will make it a little easier for minority students to afford a Washington College education.

With a grant of $35,000 to college, The Hearst Foundation of New York established the William Randolph Hearst Minority Scholarship Fund.

The scholarship will be awarded to an academically qualified student demonstrating financial need.

Although no formal commitment has been made, it is the Hearst Foundation's intention to consider further funding toward an endowment goal of $100,000.

"I am delighted with this latest affirmation of the efforts of the university to the Washington College student body," says President Charles H. Trout. "The William Randolph Hearst Minority Scholarship Fund will play an important role as we strive to attract qualified students to Washington College."

This latest gift is the fourth minority scholarship to be established within the past five years in support of Washington College's efforts to diversify its student body. Ω

Andy's

Friday, September 9 - Pete & Maura Kennedy (We think they got hitched) If you haven't seen them together before, do so NOW. Guitar wizardry, folk-rock-n-roll alternative …

Saturday, September 10 - Greg Greenway "Major talent, powerhouse performer, stunningly assured … melodic folk / rock"

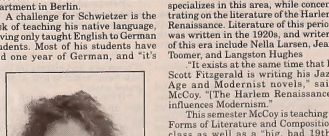
Must be 21 and show ID

"Faculty" from 1

André Schwietzer and Jeff Vahlbusch, Professors in the Modern Language Department



Tsuchida. "The chance to go to a small liberal arts college to do some teaching was a big incentive." Having attended only very large universities, Tsuchida was surprised by the feeling of community on campus. He was particularly impressed by the all-campus picnic and the dinner at the President's house for all Peer Advisers.

André Schwietzer is a new face in the Language Department. He has come to Washington College from the German capital of Berlin through the Fulbright Exchange Program, a one-year program in which an American teacher trades places with a colleague from another country. Dr. Lida Baldwin went to Germany to teach English in the Gymnasium where Schwietzer teaches. German students attend Gymnasium from seventh to 13th grade. In order to go on to college in Germany, a student must complete his years in Gymnasium.

Schwietzer decided to participate in the Fulbright Exchange Program for the opportunity to see America as more than just a tourist. He wants to see what American life is like and to increase his knowledge of English.

Not only did Schwietzer take over Dr. Baldwin's classes, but he and his wife have also taken her apartment in Chestertown while she lives in his apartment in Berlin.

A challenge for Schwietzer is the task of teaching his native language, having only taught English to German students. Most of his students have had one year of German, and "it's amazing to see what the students have learned in one year."

Devon Miller-Duggan, Visiting Professor of English

Dr. Louise Amick retired from Lincoln University in Pennsylvania, six years ago, after 13 years teaching there, to raise her newly adopted South American son. Two years later, her plans changed.

Amick did her undergraduate work at Washington College, and Dr. Briggs, Chair of the Math Department, read of her retirement from Lincoln in a W.C. alumni publication. Briggs asked Amick to work part-time in order to replace Gene Hamilton for one semester while he was on sabbatical. At the end of that semester, there was a resignation in the department which Amick was asked to fill. Every semester thereafter, there was a vacancy in the department for Amick.

Now that her son is in school, Amick is able to occupy a permanent position.

"I had two years to be a full-time mom," she said. "It really worked out perfectly."

In the spring of this year, Amick was named an Assistant Professor of Mathematics. Amick prefers to teach Abstract Algebra and Complex Analysis, but will be teaching Precalculus and a class for students majoring in math, Theory of Numbers. In addition to these classes, Amick is excited about teaching a Math Methods course for student teachers.

Beth McCoy is a Visiting Lecturer in English who was rehired this year. This will be McCoy's third year at Washington College. She came to Chestertown from the University of Delaware because "basically they needed somebody to teach courses in African-American Literature." McCoy specializes in this area, while concentrating on the literature of the Harlem Renaissance. Literature of this period was written in the 1920s, and writers of this era include Nella Larsen, Jean Toomer, and Langston Hughes.

"It exists at the same time that F. Scott Fitzgerald is writing his Jazz Age and Modernist novels," said McCoy. "[The Harlem Renaissance] influences Modernism."

This semester McCoy is teaching a Forms of Literature and Composition class as well as a "big, bad 19th-Century African-American Literature course, which," she tells her class, "means reading lots of things that are very long."

"What keeps me coming back [to W.C.] are the students," McCoy said. When asked how long she will stay at W.C., McCoy replied, "As long as they'll let me. It's difficult to say whether Washington College will need me back."

Dr. R. Reece Corey works as the lecturer of two labs in the Biology department. He received his Bachelor of Science in 1948 from Washington College, where he was a Theta Chi; his Masters in 1951 from the University of Maryland; and his Ph.D. in 1955 from the University of California Davis in Genetic Transformation in Bacteria. He has been teaching since 1950 and retired in June from his previous job as a civilian professor at the Naval Academy. He decided to work at Washington College because, living in Chestertown, he will no longer need to commute to work.

When asked why he still teaches, instead of just taking some time off, Dr. Corey said, "It keeps my brain from atrophying. I also hate to waste all of those years of experience." He says that Washington College has changed a lot since he was here. When he attended Washington there were only about 500 students. Dr. Corey is restoring the farmhouse where he grew up. He enjoys living close to his three grandchildren, who live in Easton.

Dr. Melissa Mowry, Lecturer in English, grew up in upstate New York and is now living in Newark, Delaware. She received her Bachelor of Arts degree at Boston University in 1985, and both her Masters and Ph.D. at the University of Delaware in 1988 and 1993, respectively. Dr. Mowry is on campus Tuesdays and Thursdays teaching two sections of Freshman Forms of Literature and Composition. Her position here is only for a year, and she is currently searching the job market for a full-time position. When not teaching at W.C., she teaches at the University of Delaware. Since her doctorate specialty was the early English novel and she is fascinated with the cultural and literary theory found in the novel, Dr. Mowry has her students study how cultures produce meaning. Aside from teaching and leading an "academic life," Dr. Mowry also writes conference essays dealing with topics ranging from 18th century culture to Feminism.

Devon Miller-Duggan came to Chestertown for a one-year lecturing position in the English Department. She teaches two sections of Forms of Literature and Composition on

Dr. Reece Corey, Lecturer in Biology

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. She studied at the University of Delaware and Mount Holyoke for three and a half years, then got married and went to live in Europe. She then received her Masters degree in 1978 from Johns Hopkins. She is currently working on her Ph.D. and hopes to finish by December. She spends the other days of the week with her two daughters, "running errands," and working on her dissertation. She is both a Feminist and a big Star Trek fan. She thinks it shows an optimistic outlook for society and that the characters are like the knights or heroes of romantic novels. Also, "Patrick Stewart is just about the sexiest thing on two legs," she said. One of her most outstanding odd jobs in the past was being a professional "Ecclesiastical Vestment Maker." She both designed and embroidered the robes priests wear.

Beth McCoy, Melissa Mowry and Katherine Varnes, Professors of English

Dr. Louise Amick, Assistant Professor of Mathematics

Jeff Vahlbusch is a returning German professor. He received his Bachelor of Arts in 1979, and his Masters in 1982 from the University of Michigan. He is finishing his dissertation, the Historical Study of Orthodox Marxist / Nietzsche Criticism, also for the University of Michigan. This will be his sixth semester here. He left Washington College last year but has returned to replace Dean Scholz. Vahlbusch teaches German 411, 201, and 309 this semester. He is married to Audrey Yeasler, English Department, who was the first one of the couple to get a job at Washington College in 1991.

His class is "a controlled chaos," says Vahlbusch. Instead of concentrating on grammar during the first semester, he tries to keep the energy level high, making gestures and funny sounds to get students to get over embarrassment. He wants them to concentrate on speaking and works by the German saying, "Mit Händen und Füßen," which basically means "to use any means of communication to get one's point across."

Katherine Varnes is another one-year part-time English professor here at Washington College. She teaches two sections of Forms of Literature and Composition on Tuesdays and Thursdays. She received her Bachelor of Arts Degree in Literature from the Creative Studies College of the University of Santa Barbara in 1986. Varnes then went on to receive her Masters in Creative Writing at the University of San Francisco in 1988. She is now working on her dissertation in Modern and Contemporary poetry, which she hopes to finish for the University of Delaware. She is doing a study of feminism and of how feminism reads poetry. When she lived in Santa Barbara, she worked in a variety of odd jobs which include painting names on the sides of boats, and singing in clubs. ◻

Dorchester visited by police

Paul Bayne

This Labor Day weekend was relatively quiet from a Public Safety standpoint. The only problems the campus officers had to deal with involved students who lost their room keys. The Dorchester dorm saw some excitement when local law enforcement officers came knocking Saturday evening. The presence of the officers was not due to an emergency response. The officers were investigating a case from the previous year now that the students had returned.

Incidents like these are often the cause of rumors about security on campus. It is these rumors that damage the relationship between students and security personnel, whether campus officers or local officers. "Miscommunication is our worst enemy," says Jerry Roderick, Director of Public Safety here on campus. Students need not be alarmed about the presence of local police on campus. Their presence does indicate that there has been an emergency call. Local police are free to come on campus for such reasons as follow up on previous problems or to coordinate efforts with the college's own Public Safety Department.

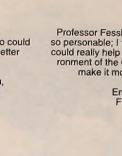
Local Police and the Public Safety Department are constantly linked by means of the county dispatcher. Police are able to monitor the campus security network and thus are able to respond more quickly if their presence is warranted.

Students should keep in mind that the local police is only a secondary option of total campus security. If there is ever a potential problem students should always notify Public Safety first before involving the local police. Emergencies need not be the only reason for contact between campus officers and students. The entire Public Safety department including the main office of Mr. Roderick is always open to student questions and concerns about safety on campus.

The Department of Public Safety is one of the many resources on campus to facilitate the purpose W.C. education. Mr. Roderick realizes that there is more to campus life than books and class. Social activities are a major part of a students life. The Public Safety department "...does not want to discourage these activities...", however the department is here to make sure that these activities are carried out in a manner "...safe and appropriate..." for the students. Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Kelli Youngblood

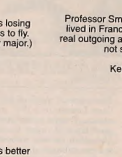


Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: If you could choose anyone to replace Trout as head of the College, who would it be?

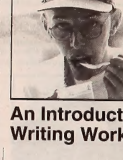
Dr. Munson. Who could run this school better than Munson?

Christy Belliveau, Junior



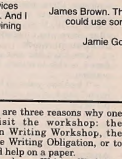
Professor Fessler. She's so personable; I think she could really help the environment of the College - make it more lively.

Erin Wade, Freshman



Lane Staley. He's losing his soul: he wants to fly. (I'm a philosophy major.)

Eric Dalessio, Senior



Professor Smiley. She lived in France; she's real outgoing and she's not stuck up.

Kelly Scott, Junior

I'll do it. The pay's better than Central Services ...ooo! the house. And I could eat in the Dining Hall for free.

Steve Brown, '94 Staff

James Brown. This place could use some funk.

Jamie Goodman, Junior

An Introduction: Writing Workshop

Jeff Frank

Located on the third floor of William Smith Hall, the 12 year old Writing Workshop is where to go if you have writing problems.

The walls are adorned with posters of impressionist paintings, the shelves are littered with grammar books, and a solar meter waits patiently on the window sill. The decorating is done not by some expensive service, but by the three women that run the Writing Workshop: Alice Baldwin, Gail Tubbs, and Gerry Fisher.

There are three reasons why one might visit the workshop: the Freshman Writing Workshop, the Sophomore Writing Obligation, or to get needed help on a paper.

The Freshman Writing Workshop takes place in the Spring Semester, one session a week for five weeks, and it takes a look at some of the common problems in writing. The Freshman Workshop is open to all freshmen, but necessary for those referred to it by a first semester professor. The Sophomore Writing Obligation is required for all students in the first or second semester of the sophomore year. The SWO requires 3 hours of going over drafts with the Writing Workshop.

According to Gail Tubbs, who has worked in the Writing Program for 10 years, The biggest problem that freshmen have with their work is trying to find a focus ... and yes, the Writing Workshop can help with that. The ladies at the Workshop will not write your paper for you, rather by asking you questions, and telling you what they get out of your paper, you still have total control and you learn how to improve your writing skills.

"There's no quick fix to becoming a writer," says Fisher, who is in her tenth year with the Writing Program.

One might ask: "What are their qualifications?" They have masters degrees in English, teaching backgrounds, and they write articles for respected journals and newspapers. The Writing Workshop is there to help you, and best of all, it's free!

Call in advance for an appointment at ext. 7262. Tell them: "Jeff sent me!" and get 10% off your free consultation. Ω

Changes proposed for Maryland's teacher education requirements

Kate Meagher

Maryland's education system has been the subject of debate during the last few months. The Maryland State Department of Education and the Maryland Higher Education Commission have been meeting to review the current program and offer recommendations for reform.

The joint committee has determined that the undergraduate Education major should be eliminated and that teachers should first receive a degree in a specific subject-area. A fifth year of education, in the form of an internship program, would take place under the guidance of a regional Professional Development School.

The State Board of Education has already given the plan a vote of confidence, though there remain some concerns about its implementation. In order for the plan to be adopted in Maryland, it must be approved officially by the Maryland Higher Education Commission. This final step prior to implementation is not expected before the end of November.

Sean O Connor, Head of the Education Department at Washington College, served on the joint commitee and is ambivalent about the recommendations that have been made.

"Nothing in life is simple," said O Connor. "The guiding principles [behind the proposed reform] are very good indeed, and it would be very hard to argue with them. What concerns me is the application - how this is going to be worked out - for I fear that only one model, one way of carrying out these principles will be allowed or encouraged. The principles are excellent, but some of the language is not defined and has several meanings."

O Connor feels that while the commission seems to be working toward a style of teacher education that emulates the liberal arts model, there is a possibility that liberal arts colleges will suffer in the process.

"In the liberal arts colleges," said O Connor, "we fear narrow, bureaucratic control and the homogenization of teacher education. I believe there should be multiple paths to becoming certified as a teacher, with each college, in collaboration with local school districts, being held accountable for helping the student achieve and demonstrate the characteristics which we in Maryland decide marks a good teacher."

One recommendation which may be misleading to some is the elimination of the undergraduate major in Education. Only one college in the state of Maryland, College Park, offers the major for secondary education. Among the schools which offer the Elementary Education major, often the prospective teacher must take more courses in his or her specialized field than are required for a major in that field.

O Connor also voiced concerns about the process by which the recommendations were formed.

"The whole process has been lengthy, but there are aspects of it which appeared rushed, closed, and, to me, who comes from another country with a great admiration for democracy, as undemocratic," said O Connor. "I never saw participants [in the joint task force] asked to look at the integrated whole."

O Connor is not the only educator who finds problems with the recommendations. The Maryland Association of Small Teacher Education Programs, voiced is concerned with several aspects, including "the threat to institutional autonomy" presented throughout the report; the proposal of one path to teacher certification; the lack of attention to hiring practices of teachers and the effect of the program on students and potential teacher candidates; and the cost of the program which may not be the most effective way to achieve reform in teacher education."

MASTEP offered its own recommendations regarding reform. Along with institutional autonomy and multiple paths to teacher certification, MASTEP requests that professional development programs exist under the control of individual institutions, and that these institutions may decide if professional development program will be required. MASTEP also recommends that the effectiveness of the reforms proposed by the joint task force be tested before they are implemented. Ω

Earth Notes

BY Andrea Nolan

Welcome to all new and returning students. I will be using this space, in a biweekly fashion, to scribe various thoughts and ravings on environmentally centered topics.

In this, the first column, I would like to take the opportunity to formally welcome you to school, and establish, in the bio-regional scheme of things, where it is that we all now live.

Before a sense of place is defined, it is important that the idea of bio-regionalism is understood. It is a relatively recent phenomena in the environmental movement, although its maxims were intuitively obeyed through much of our aboriginal history. In essence bio-regionalism is a movement towards the redrawing of boundaries, a movement away from political lines towards natural lines. Any sort of environmental action, or political movements would then be initiated within these natural boundaries — thereby grounding people, and their political efforts, into a tangible area (an uncommon achievement in these days of the abstract global community).

One of nature's great unifying, and defining, forces is that of the watershed. Gary Snyder, in a November 1993 Outside magazine article on the Nobel prize winning poet, was quoted as saying of the watershed that "it is a good organizing unit" and that it represents for him "a kind of familial branching, a chart of relationship." A watershed is in essence a primal unit, being an area in which all the water that falls from the sky and flows across the land is heading towards a common destination.

Just as Snyder, one of the grandfathers of bio-regionalism, sets his home in the Yuba River Watershed, we live within a watershed as well, that of the Chesapeake Bay — Washington College being 104 acres of a watershed that covers 64,000 square miles. For 64,000 square miles we are all connected by one primary element — water. Any of us come from Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, lower New York, or Eastern West Virginia, and therefore are year-round residents of the Chesapeake Watershed. But within this larger watershed we are also, more importantly, members of the Chester River Watershed, joining with the 4,000 residents of Chestertown, the 1,600 residents of Rock Hall, and with the countless others that make their way in the small towns and farms that freckle the landscape along the water.

The College has been here since 1782, having settled its foundations firmly into the ground, and thereby becoming yet another dynamic of the Chester River Watershed. We are as much a part of the Chester as the ducks that frequent the public dock, or the watermen who work her water.

Therefore, when someone asks you where Washington College is, answer them truly, doing justice to your home, and reply: "It's on the Delmarva Peninsula, in the Chester River Watershed, a tributary in the greater Chesapeake Watershed." If they wish to know more, you can add that "The school is west of the river eighteen miles northeast of where the Chester joins the Chesapeake. The campus is on a rise of 42 feet elevation, dropping to 22 feet at the Chester. It lies under a major waterfowl flyway, and the falls are crisp, the winters mild, and the springs gentle." While this answer may take longer to say than a conventional answer, it is an answer that is true.

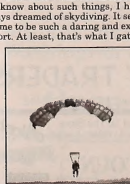
So, welcome to the greater Chesapeake Watershed, and welcome to the Chester. Get to know your surroundings, establish a sense of belonging, for you now form part of the natural dynamics of the Chester River Watershed, just as students have for the last 213 years. Despite how different you may feel you are from your peers, the town residents, or your professors, you share one vital thing with them — your place — and in that, you have found a common source of identity. Ω

Ready! Set! Jump!

Freshman trying to organize Skydiving Club on W.C. campus

Ben Walrath

Having been plopped into the college scene after a wild and crazy summer vacation, the first thing I wanted to do after moving in and getting used to the pace was to search out some people with similar experiences and interests. And because I had, during my summer vacation, discovered the one thing that was more fun for me than anything else I'd ever done, the people I chose to sniff-out were fellow skydivers.



I had accurately guessed that W.C. didn't have a skydiving club, so I decided to start one. I put flyers up anywhere I could find space, I asked around, and I was surprised to hear from several interested people. But I didn't generate quite the storm I had hoped to. My impression of W.C. was that the students were bright and hard-working, but still physical and always in search of a good time. Why didn't anyone want to skydive?!

I guess my purpose in writing this article is to convince someone, ANYONE, that what they really need to do is go skydiving. So, that's what I'm going to try and do.

To begin with, I'd like to give a little background, and to do that, I thought chronicling my first jump might be helpful.

I didn't have job this summer because I wanted to have a little relaxation time before diving into college. Needless to say, I soon became completely and utterly bored.

Ever since I was a child old enough to know about such things, I had always dreamed of skydiving. It seemed to me to be such a daring and exciting sport. At least, that's what I gathered from television. And then, one July day, the idea hit me like a bullet: "Why not go skydiving?" I scoured the Yellow Pages looking for skydiving adds. I found two, called both, and soon found that only one of the two skydiving clubs was still in existence. "Skydive Chambersburg PA," it was called.

Ben makes a perfict landing.

Being fully aware of the liability-conscious society in which we now live, I was pleasantly surprise by how little capital and training was really necessary to jump out of an airplane at 10,500 feet. Only $365.00—that, by the way, is the charge without the benefit of either the group or the college student/military personnel discounts — and seven hours respectively.

One evening, about a week later, my dad and I left Bel Air for the three-hour drive to Chambersburg, Pennsylvania. We spent the night in a local motel, but I hardly slept at all because I knew that in twenty-four hours of so, I would be skydiving for the first time. When we got the wake-up-call at 5:30 a.m. the next day, my adventure began. After a quick McDonald's breakfast, we were off to the Chambersburg Municipal Airport. And although I was very excited, my hopes for skydiving that day were dashed as I looked out the car window and saw only darkly overcast skies and a light mist falling everywhere.

We got to the airport about fifteen minutes early, and I waited impatiently to begin ground school, and to find out whether there was any chance of a jump later that day. Shortly everyone who was going to show up did, and ground school began. All of us — myself being the youngest by far — signed the necessary paperwork and release forms and went through the after drill, learning all the while how to skydive. The weather did clear that afternoon, but we had to wait out a holiday air-show. The wind picked up immediately after the air-show ended, and we again had nothing to do but wait.

The day finally ended with only two of our group of eight having jumped.

Very disappointed, my dad and I decided to take a chance on the next day's weather and spend one more night in Chambersburg. I waited practically all day the next day; but, at long last, my time came. I suited up, went through one last "dirt-dive" (dress rehearsal) and then climbed aboard the tiny Cessna 182 with the two jump-masters I had been assigned and a camera man

Ben and his jump instructors soar through the air on their way down!

When my jump master was satisfied with our position over the airfield, all four of us climbed out on the step, began the exit count, and jumped!

The routine I had learned on the ground took over, and I proceeded through forty-five glorious seconds of free-fall doing what I had been told to do.

Then, at the pull-altitude of 4,500 feet, I pulled the rip-cord, and felt the smooth deceleration from 120 m.p.h. to the canopy's fall-speed of ten feet per second. I was flying without an airplane!

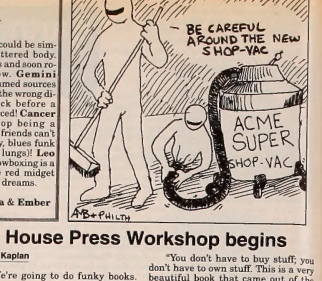
For four minutes, I circled over the landing zone, and then made a perfect landing under the radio directions of a jump-master on the ground. I simply couldn't believe what I had just done!

I've jumped three times since then, and have become hopelessly addicted. Hopefully, I have teased someone into giving it a shot. I know that a first jump is an expensive proposition; but that's why I want to get a club together.

If a group of five signs up together, all five members get a substantial discount. That's in addition to the discount you'll get simply because you're a college student.

I also believe that skydiving is the most thrilling experience life has to offer, and I think everyone should try it at least once. Keep in mind that in the Accelerated Free-Fall Program — in which I participate — only the first jump costs so much. It gets cheaper and cheaper as you progress through the seven jumps necessary to complete the program. After that, you can jump solo (in other words: without the financial burden of an accompanying jump-master). And that kind of air-time goes for only dollars-a-day.

Some people may argue that skydiving is a very dangerous sport; but I'm living proof that it's safe, and I have a multitude of statistics to back me up: My instructor, Aiden, has jumped over 40,000 times, and he's still alive and well. And he's no exception to the rule.



In closing, I'd just like to ask that you give skydiving a thought. If you're interested, please give me a call (x. 8870) because I'd love to tell you more and share with you any information which I can. BLUE SKIES!!! Ω

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

HOROSCOPES

Virgo (8/23-9/23) • Slow down. If you keep up this pace, your fairy godmother will take a six-month vacation ... in Tijuana. Libra (9/24-10/23) • Take a break from counseling those on your hall. Go Rollerblading. Scorpio (10/24-11/22) • The heat indicator is at its peak. Your lover's back is sizzling. Turn on the sprinklers before they are left with permanent scars. Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) • Your leadership skills are needed, assert yourself. Capricorn (12/22-1/20) • Relax! Stop over-analyzing. Let the situation evolve naturally. Aquarius (1/21-2/18) • You're struggling to overcome past experiences and it seems you're getting nowhere. Use your persistence to open the doors that keep slamming in your face. Pisces (2/19-3/20) • Ignore everyone around you. Shut yourself in your room, light some candles and incense, and let the music vibrate those bed springs. Aries (3/21-4/19) • Speak your mind; you know you're right. Taurus (4/20-5/20) • Your head's been in the stars too long. If you're not careful, your fate could be similar to Pluto's battered body. Take more chances and soon romance will follow. Gemini (5/21-6/21) • Unnamed sources are leading you in the wrong direction. Turn back before a body part gets pierced! Cancer (6/22-7/22) • Stop being a moody b*tch. Your friends can't handle your smoky, blues funk (neither can your lungs)! Leo (7/23-8/22) • Shadowboxing is a waste of time; the red midget walks only in your dreams.

Horoscope by Luna & Ember

Net Surfing

Mindie Kaplan

The Washington College Gopher Server is not the famed campus pet that burrows around making the pipes burst in Queen Anne and Reid Hall or severing the Network connections deep in the bowels of the Lit. House.

The WC Gopher Server houses those hard-to-find pieces of college information that you didn't know you needed until after your roommate used your phone directory to light a cigarette. The Gopher is also where you can now find both current and back issues of The Elm.

It is easy enough to get to our Gopher. Just select the "TurboGopher" icon in the Network folder on nearly any campus computer. The "Home" Gopher Server is automatically selected. If the WC Gopher is not the home gopher, then under "setup," select "configure gopher" and set it to martha.washcoll.edu port 70. You can also get to a gopher through Telnet. (FC users can access gopher servers in this manner by dialing into Washington College to use Telnet. (As always, contact the Computing Center during business hours for dial-in information.) Alumni can also access the Gopher through Sailor at their local library.

One of the newest (and best, in the humble opinion of an Elm writer) features of the W.C. Gopher is the ability to read current and back issues of (what else) The Elm from your computer screen. It is almost as easy as picking up the paper in the Dining Hall and much more environmentally sound (you don't have to recycle electronic screen-blips). Select the folder entitled "The Washington College Elm." Next, select "94-95" for this year's issues. If you continue to select "09.09.94," "features," and "surfing," then you will be reading this very article from the privacy and convenience of your very own dorm room.

The W.C. Gopher is just one of the many Gopher servers awaiting your inspection. A popular gopher is the "MTV Gopher" which is still surviving an upcoming lawsuit to offer students like you up-to-the-minute concert information, music news, and other music-related features. The MTV Gopher hopes to soon add a user-supported chart of the top hits. In the words of Adam Curry, creator of this Gopher, "Why compile weekly when computers can update the chart every second?" You can access the MTV Gopher by the address mtv.com or metaverse.com.

A second must-see on the Gopher lists is the University of Iowa's "Panda Server." Accessed through panda.isca.uiowa.edu, Panda has been called "a gopher on acid." This server does pretty much everything including (as we UseNet newsreader, an E-Mail reader, an FTP client, a Gopher client, BBS Systems, and even IRC chat. Most useful to the WC student will be access to the National Weather Service through Panda's easy-to-use menus. By selecting MD and "Baltimore," you will receive that day's weather report and even an extended four-day forecast for our area. The "Panda News" folder gives you NASA, the national wire service, Vice of America News and English Broadcasts service, a literary magazine called "InterText," and even a French language press review. Chesterton isn't isolated from the rest of the world any more!

And do not forget the Gopher that started it all, the University of Minnesota Gopher. The address is: consultant.micro.umn.edu and inside you can find (under the folder "Fun and Games") recipes, an extensive collection of movie reviews from 1987 to today, jokes and funny stories, access to MUDs, and even a list of local bookstores (as well as the not-so-local bookstores all the way to Europe.) You can also find electronic books for everything from Moby Dick and The Federalist Papers to The King James' Bible and The CIA Fact Book. Explore Hypertext (a type of choose-your-own-adventure book written for computing adults) or browse electronic journals on topics ranging from AIDS; to homicide; "an electronic fanzine dedicated to Death metal, thrash, and the support of the underground in the US and beyond"; Or how about soccer news (both the American and the European kind)?

Stop complaining about cabin fever and explore the worlds hidden inside your computer screen. Have you hugged your Gopher lately? Ω

Lit. House Press Workshop begins

Mindie Kaplan

"We're going to do funky books. That's what we're going to do this year; everybody's going to make a book," Mike Taylor said with a grin, stating one of the main features of his workshop.

Inside the Literary Press Room, surrounded by hand run presses and dozens of boxes filled with tiny pieces of type, you do not question Taylor's statement; anything becomes possible in that place.

What would think that on a modern, computerized campus one could find a room filled with the smells of fresh inks and good tea, and where classical music filters down from speakers hidden in the back of the workroom?

The Press Room is a fascinating place, filled with history, containing five presses dating from 1914 to the 1960s and over 700 cases of type. Taylor carefully "locks up" type for printing as he begins to explain his workshop.

There is no charge and no credit for this 8-10 week workshop, although Taylor admitted to accepting interns from other colleges who study with him for credit.

"This is a workshop, not a course," Taylor emphasized. Under his tutelage, the small group of students will learn all the basics of printing on hand-run presses. This includes setting type, locking it up for printing, and the actual running of the press. In addition, students learn about design, typography, different types of paper, book structures — in short, everything there is to know about the making of books. By the end of the first session, everyone will have printed some type on the press and will have an example of their newly won skills to take home.

In the second session, students learn how to make a hand sewn book. That skill will become the basis for the main project of this year's workshop, making your own book. Kaylor pulled some books from his shelf as examples of what could be done.

One book was bound with a tie-dyed cover and had a twig and thick rubber bands on the spine.

"You don't have to buy stuff, you don't have to own stuff. This is a very beautiful book that came out of the trash can," Kaylor said, proudly showing another book. The book to which he was referring had a cover made out of blue matteboard. Decorating the cover was a creative arrangement of splattered paint.

"You learn to see pieces — books out of scraps of colors (and) shapes. I'm going to take you out of your preconceived book-notions, whatever they are," continued Kaylor.

The workshop consists of one two-hour session a week and two hours during which the student chooses to come in and work on his or her own projects as well as to aid Kaylor in other ongoing projects. There are always many of those; the Press prints for the Freshman Colloqu in addition to the Washington College Christmas cards, various presents, and other outside jobs. Taylor grinned, "There's always something going on."

"We start from the assumption that everyone here is a book person," he continued, lovingly opening a book with an accordion bind. "You don't get to college without some intimacy with books ... You don't have to be wild, you can make traditional books if you want, (but I) want to spark your imagination to a new level."

This workshop is about how words have gotten into print throughout history, yet the Literary Press is not limited to the centuries-old techniques of the past. Taylor has published three books from photo polymer plates and computer-generated typography. The new technology fascinates the printer, but he refuses to let the use of modern technology supplant older methods of printing.

Taylor strongly believes that "it's good to learn the fun stuff before you go out into the world to make a living as a printer, writer, or designer. (You learn skills) that you can use your entire life; it makes you a better person."

Due to the overwelming interest shown at the Writers' Union Meeting, the workshop will be held from 7-9 p.m. on Monday and Thursday. Contact Mike Kaylor at extension 7896 for more information. Ω

BROADSIDES

Now accepting submissions of poems, prose poems, and short stories (up to one page in length) for publication.

BROADSIDES is a W.C.-based publication funded by the Writers' Union. Submission is open to any WC undergraduate. All published works are automatically entered in the Poetry Postcard Contest for Fall 1994. The three winning student works (as judged by a professional poet) are to be published as hand-set postcards at the Literary House Press by Mike Kaylor.

Submissions should be sent by campus mail, Lit House mail, Quickmail, Blitzmail, or any other mail to Katie Degentesh. Up to two submissions by any one author may be published in the same semester.

SUBMIT NOW.

BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442
Ray-Ban Off Street Parking Next To The Store
Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm
patagonia Columbia Sportswear Company REEF Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks
10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS
WITH STUDENT I.D.
Barrecrafters Car Racks

Feast or Famine

Restaurant reviews made-to-order with Jeff and Kevin

One Hundred and Fifty Bears, Two Hungry W.C. Students, and One Wilma
A Restaurant Review of Wilma's Kitchen

150 bears are being kept in the storage area of at 107 Cross Street in Chestertown.

The only reason animal rights activists have not started up the protest is because the bears are not real. They are stuffed animals, and part of the unique decor of the locally popular cafe, Wilma's Kitchen.

Wilma's Kitchen was recommended by a nice old couple sitting in matching lawn chairs. They own the nearby shoe store/newsstand.

We were not sure what to expect. What we got was reminiscent of our time spent in the womb.

We placed our orders at the cash register : a cheese melt (with bacon) and a Mocha Cooler for Kevin, and the day's special (a Mediterranean chicken and vegetable salad) plus a bowl of Maryland crab soup for Jeff.

Jeff scooped out "The Cross Street Crock," Wilma's own self-published news magazine, while Kevin conducted the following interview, live at the scene:

Kevin: Alright, we have two customers at Wilma's Kitchen, they're about to dig into some milkshake-looking, pink thing. I'm not quite sure what it is. We're going to get their reactions in a minute. Could you please state your name?

Customer #1: Richard.

K: What was that?

C1: Richard. My name's Richard.

K: What kind of accent is that? Are you from England?

C1: I'm from England, yes.

K: Did you come here for Wilma's Kitchen or is there something else in the States that you're looking at?

C1: Well, I didn't come here for, what's it called, 'Wilma's Kitchen?

K: Alright. How about you take a sip of that and we'll see how it turns out.

C1: It's very nice. I think next time I come back, it will be for Wilma's Kitchen.

K: How does this compare to an equivalent product back in England?

C1: We don't have this.

K: This is unique to the United States? Perhaps unique to Wilma's Kitchen?

C1: Yes, Probably to Wilma's Kitchen. (takes another sip) Yes, its very nice.

K: And you?

Customer #2: Mary.

K: How would you describe it?

C2: Its sweet and tart at the same time, 'cause its Strawberry and Kiwi.

By this time, our meals were ready for consumption. Jeff rated the Maryland crab soup as excellent. He noted that it was a little too spicy, but conceded that it could just be a regional difference. Jeff was very happy that there was absolutely no pieces of crab shell in the soup. This is good. At Wilma's Kitchen, you get the soup, not the shell. Jeff said the special of the day was alright, but that he's just not a Mediterranean chicken and vegetable kind of person.

Kevin thought that the grilled cheese as good as the sandwiches his mother used to make. The bacon topping was considered an added bonus, since Kevin's vegetarian mom was stingy with the pig meat back home. The Mocha Cooler was like a chocolate Slurpee with a caffeine aftertaste. That's a compliment.

After the eating was done, we requested an interview with the woman who had made it all possible: the one and only Wilma. This is what happened:

Kevin: Could you please state your name?

Owner: Shirley Maase.

K: So, who's this "Wilma" that I keep hearing about?

O: She's a mythical character. There is no Wilma.

K: What does she look like?

O: There is no Wilma.

K: But ...?

O: She's your mother. She's your grandmother. She's the woman who bakes you the apple pies and the homemade cakes and when your stressed during exams and you come down here she'll give you coffee and feed you all afternoon, and get you through it all. She's your mother.

K: So Wilma's kind of like an every woman?

O: No, every woman wouldn't do that. (laughing) Most of them don't.

K: Do you get a lot of students from Washington College in the restaurant?

O: Yeah, we treat them well.

K: I've noticed a bear motif, kind of, where did that come from?

O: Wilma, when we started it up. Wilma, being the grandmother that she was, wanted to have it be comfy and homey and she had a hundred and fifty bears that she had in a bear collection, so she put them in the window.

K: I'm getting a little confused. I thought Wilma was a fake person.

O: She's every woman. Remember?

K: Oh yeah. Now, what if someone was caught, I don't know, trying to get one of the bears out of the store ... shoplifting a bear. What would happen?

O: We'd probably point out that it was not a good idea to take things that didn't belong to you and then give the person the bear.

K: The Flintstone movie came out, and with that, there's got to be inevitable comparisons between Wilma, and Wilma Flintstone. Has there ever been any trouble with that?

O: Yes, everyone wants to know, where's Fred?

K: What about Wilma? Where's Wilma? Is she available for comment?

O: Wilma only answers questions from letters.

K: If someone had a problem on campus about their roommate, their life, boy trouble, is it possible to write to Wilma?

O: Yes, Wilma would answer all their questions, and also help them out in any way she could.

K: How about these cupcakes? Are these free?

O: No, actually these are for sale. But for you ... because you're Washington College students, you can each have one to take home, because that's what Wilma would want you to do.

K: Alright, thanks. I think that concludes our interview.

From now until the end of the year, mention this article at Wilma's and get a 10% discount on food and a steal of a deal for Wilma's Kitchen t-shirts. Ω

The Washington Ballet gives repeat performance in Chestertown

Professional ballet is coming to Chestertown.

For the second consecutive year, Washington College's 1782 Society is sponsoring "An Informal Evening with the Washington Ballet."

The program, featuring highlights from four ballets in a lecture / demonstration format, begins at 6:30 p.m. on Saturday, October 8th, in Tawes Theater of the Gibson Performing Arts Center.

Included on the program are George Balanchine's Allegro Brillante with music by Tchaikovsky, the last movement of Choo-San Goh's Fives, which is set to the music of Benjamin Britten, and two pas de deux.

Tickets are $20 for adults and $10 for children and students. Proceeds from the event will support the 1782 Society scholarships, awarded to more than 70 students at Washington College.

The 1782 Society is a club of benefactors committed to the stewardship of Washington College. Through annual gifts of $1,000 or more, 1782 Society members stimulate greater awareness of Washington College's role in education and provide a base of continued gift income to support the basic needs of the College, particularly financial aid.

Joyce Huber Cafritz of Chestertown and Washington, a member of the Board of Visitors and Governors in her third term as Chairperson of the College's principal donor club, arranged for the repeat performance.

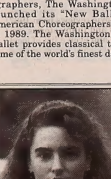
A ballet troupe of international stature, The Washington Ballet presents a diversified repertoire, combining the classic and the contemporary. Committed to commissioning new works and nurturing emerging choreographers, The Washington Ballet launched its "New Ballets from American Choreographers" program in 1989. The Washington School of Ballet provides classical training to some of the world's finest dancers.

"The Ballet was an enormous success last year," says Cafritz. The townspeople and members of the College community really appreciated the rare opportunity to see professional dancers up close, and to learn about the mechanics and artistic techniques of dance. It will be a real pleasure to have the Washington Ballet come back."

For ballet ticket information, or for more information about 1782 Society memberships, call the Washington College Development Office at 778-7797. Ω

Cleopatra's Daughters

Cordially Invite the Ladies of Washington College to our



Open House

Friday, September 9 at 7:00 p.m. in Cardinal M.

Come and see what we're all about.

Refreshements will be served.

Washington College Staff Profile

This week's Staff Profile is of Kristin McMenamin, Assistant Supervisor in the Cove.

Congratulations to Kristin McMenamin, the W.C. Cove's newest Assistant Supervisor! This is Kristin's fifth year working for the college's food services department. As a freshman, she worked, as she put it, "in the old snack bar," which some upper classmen still remember as a far cry from the shiny new grease Mecca we have in the Student Center today.

In her newly acquired position, she acts as the student's link to the management staff, being an embodiment of that transition, herself: working full-time while simultaneously finishing her major in Psychology with a minor in Sociology.

Originally from Radnor, PA, Kristin has experienced almost every area of our dining services, from the Main Dining Hall to the Summer Conferences, and Catering, as well. When asked about her work, she smiles and says, "The people are so much fun; it's basically like a family instead of people you work for."

crud

creative ranting under duress

by Amy Peterson

Welcome back to WAC!

I hope all of you out there had a good time this summer because it's now officially over!

The best reminder that life on Campus has begun is the food. Now people tell me the food here isn't all that bad compared to other schools, and who am I a penniless college student to complain about a meal. I am definitely not yet ready to eat bagels and cereal with salad for dinner, and I almost had to do that the other night.

Then again, you have to love the noon line outside the dining hall, everyone on campus must eat at the samet time. It was almost a twenty minute wait just for the privilege of entering. Once inside, it then becomes apparent that all the food has been eaten and you have to wait yet again for them to heat up more if there's any left; it made me feel as if I truly had not escaped the clutches of the Bookstore line.

The bookstore is the one place on campus that should have a Surgeon General's warning: People who wish to retain the ability to think should not enter this mess; the Dept. of Health has proven in lab tests on rats at NIH that inordinately large amounts of time spent in a line moving less than a foot an hour will have a lasting affect on the sanity and mental capacities of people with more than four brain cells left. So people who plan on entering the world caps championships can wait in the bookstore line without any harmful side effects.

The average speed of that line worked out to be a foot every five minutes; that is one step forward for every minute stuck in the bookstore. In other words, people had gray hair by the time they reached the register.

The scariest part of returning is the first second you walk onto campus, when you feel like you've never left ... because nothing changes in Chestertown.

Warning to freshmen: there is a time warp involved, you never can truly leave here no matter how much you want to. It is not up to you.

Standing in line at the Bookstore.

Look how many grad students are here, or people who just graduated and are still working on campus. All of them once said to themselves (and anyone else that would listen) that they couldn't bear life here and as soon as they graduated, they'd leave ... leave WAC and Chestertown. Were they ever wrong!

There are some good things about college life to look forward to, like the weekend.

Note to freshmen: don't be discouraged by this, life can be interesting at Washington College, like last winter when the ice that coated campus made for an entertaining couple days, and if you want to be enlightened about things, ask someone to explain May Day to you sometime. ☐

Cary Kelly and Richard McKee Present Auditions for

Neil Simon's The Good Doctor & García Lorca's Blood Wedding

Passion, Passion, Passion (with just a touch of passion in it). This is Blood Wedding, by Garcia Lorca. The play centers around a love triangle between a man, his fiancé, and her ex-lover. Richard McKee cordially invites you to come and audition for this most passionate play.

There is the need for at least 12 people, preferably 6 guys and 6 girls.

Thursday & Friday September 8 and 9 In the Greenroom at 6 p.m.

The Good Doctor, by Neil Simon is a comedy based on Checkohov's short stories. The writer is the central figure of the play who leads the audience through a number of various stories. Most of the stories are insightful, as well as humorous. There is a need for 6-8 people, preferably an equal ratio of men to women.

Music, food and fun at the Kent and Queen Annes County Alumni Chapter All-Campus Picnic

Amy Peterson

Washington College students were given the opportunity to make fools of themselves during orientation this year.

To welcome all the students back to campus and in an attempt to get people to mix and socialize with new people, the college had a picnic dinner Sunday night. Like last year, they had musical entertainment though the DJ/karaoke combination proved to be more entertaining and more of a crowd pleaser than last year's band.

Students have been heard commenting on that picnic all week, with questions of "Who was it who sang [illegible]" and comments like, "I thought the four girls who sang (insert song here) were really good, do you know who they were?" That, along with the laughter and entertainment of these so good singers, made it a memorable if slightly infamous experience.

This year they also opted not to provide tables, forcing everyone to eat on the ground. This seemed to work as it didn't force complete strangers to sit next to or across from one another, it allowed freer mixing between groups and a lot less hassle with trying to fit people crammed around tables. ☐

Tents provided shelter from the sun at the All-Campus Picnic.

Spider's

(Formerly Newt's)

Hillside Bar

Special Draft Night

Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Midnight Madness

Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Must be 21 or older

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

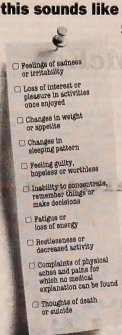
Notes on the performance of Charlie Byrd: Wow, only two songs!?!

All right, so they finally got hip. So they finally gave us someone that we knew (well, o.k. I'll admit that not everyone knows who Charlie Byrd is...or maybe they do...). And I'll also admit that I didn't really care about the rest of the Convocation ceremony. The only reason I came was to hear Charlie play (well, that and to hear our new Dean speak...and man, they didn't give him any time either!). So now I'm sitting here two songs later, enlightened, empowered, excited...

But maybe you didn't see Charlie Byrd play Wednesday night at the Washington Collage Fall Convocation. Maybe you stayed home and did whatever. In that case, I suppose that it's my job to inform you. That is the purpose of this here column, isn't it? To inform and so on?

Well o.k. here we go. Charlie Byrd is a jazz/classical guitarist who's been around for more years than any of you have known. He has dabbled in jazz, classical, and Latin rhythms and so on. Schwas, schwas, schwaa. You understand. (This is the part of the column that I hate the most. If you don't know who I'm talking about, then I don't think my ramblings are going to help.) What you should know about him, however, is that he is brilliant.

We started off with a brief and extremely humble introduction. Someone supposedly suggested that he should play a song instead of making a long (and boring) speech. He took the suggestion into consideration and decided that it was worthwhile.



Bam!

We've got not one, but two songs. Mr. Byrd started off with a medley of Ellington tunes. Sliding from "Do Nothing Till You Hear From Me" into "Mood Indigo," and then right into "Satin Doll" with an, admittedly, not-too-easy grace. (Allright, I'll concede that, despite my intention to give Byrd a sterling review, I was unhappy with his intro) The first few bars of "Do Nothin'..." didn't quite jive. He was off. He was warming up. There were a few times where my inherent ageism got the better of me. "He's old." "He's stiff." These were the kind of phrases that ran through my mind. But, thankfully, Charlie proved me a short-sighted dork. Once he got into what he was doing, he showed his mastery of the guitar. A truly mesmerizing performance. From Ellington to Antonio Carlos Jobim, Byrd gave us a musical treat. Any man who can go from the stately swing of "Satin Doll," to the Latin rhythms of "The Girl from Ipenema," has got to know what he is doing.

As Carlton Laskauskas said, "It was the best speech I've ever heard." I whole-heartedly agree, Carlton.

If you're looking for Charlie Byrd albums, I really can't help you. I won't pretend to be a great Charlie Byrd fan. I know who he is and that's about it. The bio that they gave us suggested Blues for Night People as a good album to pick up. He worked with Stan Getz...find something that he did with him and I guarantee that it will please. Byrd's performance Wednesday night was, I believe, just a taste of what he is capable of. Do yourself a favor and pick up some of his music. Ω

If this sounds like you, don't ignore it.

Seeking help on National Depression Screening Day™ could change your life.

If you have several of the symptoms on this list for two weeks or more, you could have clinical depression. It's a medical illness that can be effectively treated in four out of five people who seek help.

On Thursday, October 6, 1994, depression screenings by mental health professionals will be available free of charge in communities across the country.

For Depression Screening locations in your area, call us at 1-800-262-4444 (after September 1).

The International House is traveling!

To D.C.

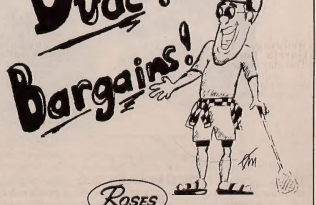
October 7

9:00 a.m., $10 per person

To New York

October 22

$20 per person



Contact Ryan (x. 8758) or Angela (x. 8759)

Chestertown Natural Foods

"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"

101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1677

10 % off with student ID

ROSES DISCOUNT STORES

"WELCOME BACK TO COLLEGE"

THIS CERTIFICATE ENTITLES BEARER TO 10% OFF YOUR TOTA PURCHASE

Good at any Roses store until 10/1/94. Does not include layaway purchase or pay
*Discount does not apply toward purchase of alcoholic beverages or tobacco prod

20 years ago this year in The Elm

January 24, 1974

Deanship undetermined

The Dean Search Committee, whose review of over 400 apli cants proved fruitless, has disappeared entirely from the Washington College scene. However, President Joseph McLain is not worried.

"We've got an Acting Dean," said McLain, referring to Dr. Nathan Smith. But Smith has expressed hesitancy about a possible erasing of the prefix "Acting."

McLain has asked Smith "to consider the Deanship as an applicant." Smith, in turn, has asked for some time to consider it." He has indicated that he will stay on in his current role until the Deanship question is settled.

Of those over 400 original applicants, Smith was not one of them. Whether or not there is another Committee will be influenced by Smith's application Decision.

Fee increase possible

Whether Washington College will raise its fees next year is still an open question according to College Business Manager, Gene Hessey.

The Board of Visitors and Governors, which meets in the Sophie Kerr Room of the Miller Library Saturday, will recieve a report from the College finance committee on a proposed budget for next year. The Board will decide on hiking costs after receiving the budget report. Potentially, a decision could be rendered at the meeting.

Hessey expects that any fee increase which is authorized will affect room and board costs, not tuition. Last year tuition was increased by $150 to $2,250 and room and board was increased from $1,000 to $1,050. "Naturally we want to hold costs down," the business manager exlained, "but on the other hand I don't know what we are going to do about cost increases. There is going to have to be an adjustment somewhere."

February 7, 1974

Applications to College increase by 11.5 percent

Reversing a trend which in recent years has seen applications to liberal arts colleges drop nationwide, Washington's admissions office reports that applicants for September admission have increased by 11.5 percent over last year's figure.

The admissions office in 60 applicants ahead of last year as of Feb. 1, an increase which did not seem possible in December when applications were sharply behind. Admission Director Bud Andrew attributes the recent surge of applications -- "They have been piling in here everyday," he says -- to a variety of factors, prime among them that attitude of high school seniors "that just wasn't a big crunch to get into college." Students, he claims, shopped harder and longer before they applied this year and they submitted their applications later.

Andrew also credits his staff for the upturn. "They've been working superhard."

Although the department has not collected data on the quality and geographical distribution of the applicants, Andrew suggests that applicants hold about the same scholastic record as this year's freshman class. "Just from reading the applications," the director said, "the quality seems consistent." He also noted "an increase in New England applicants, an encouraging increase," and a sharp jump in transfer applications, which have doubled.

The College is anticipating a freshman and transfer class of about 250 next September and the admissions office is instituting a number of plans to realize the goal.

February 14, 1974

Board to consider Smith for permanent deanship

Pending the approval of the Board of Visitors and Governors, Dr. Nathan Smith, who has served as the College's acting dean for the past year, soon will assume his current position on a permanent basis.

The nominations of Dr. Smith for the deanship came Monday as the ad hoc Dean's Search Committee voted unanimously to recommend the acting dean for the post. President Joseph McLain accepted the committee's decision and will present Dr. Smith's candidacy to the Board at their March 23 meeting.

Dr. Smith, in recent months, had hesitated in submitting his candidacy for the post. His decision to be nominated was made February 4, he sa "after a sleepless night."

March 28, 1974

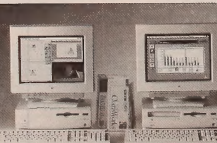
Resolved deanship question now coming unglued

The search for a permanent de of the College, apparently ended l month when the dean's search co mittee nominated acting dean N Smith for the post, now might co tinue.

The Administration disclos Tuesday that the acting dean th weeks ago requested that his na not be submitted to the board Visitors and Governors for permane appointment. The trustees were or nally to finalize the outcome of search process with a vote on D Smith at their meeting last Saturd

Dr. Smith informed presid Joseph McLain that personal reas would prevent his acceptance of nomination. The acting dean recen suffered a relapse of a gastro-intes nal ailment which had bothered hi in previous years.

The president's office released announcement Tuesday morni McLain wrote:



"The Board of Visitors a Governors of Washington College not act upon my recommendation confirm Dr. Nathan Smith as dean the College, in accordance with h Smith's own request. Citing perso reasons, Dr. Smith had informed that he was not now able to accept position and to convey his regret the Board."

"The Board decided to ask D Smith to continue to serve as acti dean for the time." Ω

Two of the most popular bundles on campus this year.

A distinctively fragrant assortment of wool, denim, rayon and polyester blends.

Macintosh Performa 636 w/230, 4gbHD Color Plus 14" Display, 8gbSwapr keyboard and mouse.
Only $1,232.00. Or about $21 a month!

Macintosh Performa 636 w/250 with CD-ROM, 4gbHD Color Plus 14" Display, 8gbSwapr keyboard and mouse.
Only $1,563.00. Or about $25 a month!

Now you can really clean up when you buy a select Macintosh® Performa® For a limited time, it comes bundled with a unique new student software set available only from Apple. It's all the software you're likely to need in college. You'll get software that takes you through every aspect of writing papers, the only personal organizer/calendar created for your student lifestyle and the Internet Companion to help you tap into on-line research resources. Plus ClarisWorks, an intuitive, integrated package with a spreadsheet, word processor, database and more. Buy a select Performa with CD-ROM, and you'll also get a multimedia library of essential reference tools. And now, with an Apple Computer Loan, you can own a Macintosh for less than a dollar a day.* It's the power every student needs. The power to be your best.

Apple

POWER through IT.

For more information visit the Computing Center in Ferguson Hall or call x7712.

Offer expires October 17, 1994, available only while supplies last. © 1994 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the Apple logo, Macintosh, Performa and "The power to be your best" are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. AppleSwapr is a trademark of Apple Computer, Inc. ClarisWorks is a registered trademark of Claris Corporation. *An estimate based on an Apple Computer Loan of $1,567.39 for the Performa 636, and $1,836.00 for the Performa 636 with CD-ROM system shown above. Price and loan amounts are subject to change without notice. See your Apple Campus Reseller or representative for current system prices. A 2.5% loan origination fee will be added to the requested loan amount. The interest rate is variable, based on the commercial paper rate plus 3.25%. For the month of August, 1994, the interest rate was 10.19%, with an APR of 11.56%. 0% and loan terms with no prepayment penalty. The monthly payment shown assumes no deferment of principal or interest. Students may defer principal payments up to 4 years, or until graduation. Deferments will change your monthly payments. The Apple Computer Loan is subject to credit approval.

Sports over the summer

Crew crushes the competition

Jennifer Dougherty

This past season was perhaps the finest the Washington College Women's Rowing Team has had to date.

Head Coach Mike Davenport decided early in the spring season to break down the women's standard eight into four — a lightweight four and an open weight four.

Women's assistant coach Kara Wiesenbaugh observed, "We had two women's varsity four that were competitive—very competitive. What was exciting was that at any given race the women stood a good chance to win."

The lightweight women's four, (from bow to stern: Kathy Mullan, Taber Overall, Laura Green, Melisa Olson, with coxswain Karen Wright), were medalists in virtually every spring race. The lightweight women had an exceptional season, despite illness and injury, which incidentally plagued the lightweights throughout the spring. Their season ended on a positive note as they took second behind North Carolina at the regional championship race. Their final race at the Dad Vails was not as successful as prior races, but their determination and teamwork exhibited throughout the season still rendered them one of Washington College's finest crews. Congratulations ladies!

The open weight women's four, (from bow to stern: Jennifer Dougherty, Mary Bird, Stacey Hammond, Tonya Howell, with coxswain Maria Jerardi), had an exceptional season as well. The open four began the season in a line-up that would eventually be completely reversed (with the exception of the coxswain). Although it took the women what seemed like weeks to establish a good boat connection through various line-up changes and rigging styles, the women eventually found that boat connection imperative for competitive rowing. That connection would take them all the way to the Champion International Collegiate Regatta held on the Occoquan River in Fairfax, Va. This was the first crew in Washington College Rowing history to receive an invitation to this prestigious regatta, on which the crew's fingerprint boats from the country completed. The open four, thrilled at the very prospect of being at the regatta, met the challenge with the same drive and determination as they had previously exhibited, but with an added edge.

Among the toughest competitors they had faced to date, they rowed the best race of their lives. Deservedly, the women won the petite final, thus ranking them seventh out of the 18 crews in the race. As Crew looks ahead to this fall season, the whole rowing team will miss their graduated seniors, but is looking forward to a successful and positive season with many returning oarsmen. The captains for this year's women's team are Jennifer Dougherty and Tonya Howell. Ω

We asked the players on the team how they felt after winning National Championship.

"Many people, especially in California, were against our foreign team," said Robin Sander. "This fact made our victory even better. But all in all, many people respected and honored our achievement. We had the best team spirit of all the teams and so we won."

Damian Polla said, "I had a great semester, but the ultimate experience was winning the Nationals with my teammates, especially 'Pijo'. We were hundred percent visitors in California, it was just us against all those California Colleges that wanted the foreigners and the token American out of the tournament. I'd like to thank all my W.C. faculty and friends."

This fall, the team is going to tear it apart with Head Coach Tim Gray and a new Assistant Coach, David Paschal. Returning players are Robin Sander, Damian Polla, Miro Beran, Michael Kember and also Andrew King and Andrew Moffat who were a huge part of the team. The first fall tournament is The Rolex, in which last year Stefan Berger took first place in singles, and Miro Beran and Carlos Nuno took the first place in doubles.

There is going to be a tournament here at W.C. on October 8, where many schools including Navy, Georgetown, Haverford, and George Mason, are going to play against our best players. Tear it up Dudes, leave everyone far behind. Ω

First national champs at W.C.

Miro Beran

The basketball team was third in 1980.

So was the tennis team.

The lacrosse team was runner-up to Hobart six times.

But never had Washington College won a national championship in any sport until the men's tennis team stunned Claremont College in the tournament final to capture the NCAA Division III title on May 19.

The third-seeded Shoremen captured the NCAA Division III Men's Tennis Team Championship with a dramatic 5-4 win over fourth-seeded Claremont in Redlands, California.

With the team score tied 4-4, Washington's first doubles team of Damian Polla and Robin Sander lost its first set 6-3, and were down 3-0 in the second set, but then recovered to win the second set in a tie breaker that sealed the National Championship with a 6-4 victory in the third set.

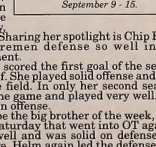
"This has been the most exciting sporting event I've ever been associated with. Playing on a national-caliber team was very big, but these past few days have made everything else pale in comparison," Head Coach Tim Gray said in an interview after the team came back from California.

Against Emory on May 17, Washington clinched the match in singles and therefore doubles play was unnecessary.

Robin Sander, Damian Polla, Miro Beran and Stefan Bogado all won their matches in straight sets.

Sander at No. 1 topped Travis Saacke, 6-3, 6-1; Polla at No. 2 swept Todd Getz, 6-2, 6-3; Beran at No. 4 dismantled Aaron Cohen, 6-3, 6-2; and Bogado at No. 6 put away Jessie Litvak, 6-3, 6-3.

In a marathon of a match that included two tie breakers, Michael Kember at No. 5 came through to defeat Craig Mersky, 6-7(7-3), 7-6(7-5), 6-4.



In the semifinal match against UC Santa Cruz (CA), Robin Sander defeated Dave Mudlawer (3-6, 6-1, 6-3) in a tough match which took over three hours. Damian Polla and Emilio Bogado also went three sets against players from Santa Cruz, and they both came through to win their tough three set matches. Miro Beran, after winning the first set, lost the second set in a tie breaker and the third set 6-4. Stefan Berger and Michael Kember both lost in straight sets. So it was 3-3 going into doubles. Santa Cruz had the best doubles teams in the nation, but not anymore thanks to Robin Sander and Damian Polla at No. 1 doubles, and to Miro Beran and Carlos Nuno at No. 2 doubles. The first victory came from Miro and Carlos, who won in straight sets, 7-5, 7-6(8-6) after being down 4 set points. To win the match, Robin and Damian beat the No. 1 team in the nation in three sets, winning the third set 6-2.

In the final match against Claremont, who beat the four time champion Kalamazoo in the semifinal, the Shoremen were unstoppable. Robin Sander defeated the Rookie of the Year, Ramsey Gerber, in a three set match with an impressive (6-1, 6-1) in the second and third sets. Miro Beran and Michael Kember at No. 4 and 5 destroyed Claremonts 4 and 5 in straight sets. It was again 3-3 going into doubles. Miro Beran and Carlos Nuno lost in straight sets at No. 2 doubles. Stefan Berger and Emilio Bogado crushed their No. 3 doubles from Claremont in straight sets. It came down to the first doubles, where Robin and Damian were down a set and a break in the second set.

"It was an unbelievable sight," said Gray. "If Claremont was there pulling for Santa Cruz, Pamona and all the other California schools. There were probably 100, 200 people at that match going absolutely ballistic pulling for the California schools. And there was me, Danny, and Todd. They showed so much heart in that match, it was just unbelievable. They sucked it up. Robin was hurting. He could hardly walk and Damian just played unbelievable doubles. Everybody just stepped it up."

POW

Washington College's Player (s) of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

Helen Pitts and Chip Helm, Washington College's POWs for September 9 - 15.

This week there are two athletes who deserve POW (player of the week). For an outstanding field hockey game against Wesley on Tuesday, Helen Pitts has been chosen. Sharing her spotlight is Chip Helm (soccer) who led the Shoremen defense so well in the Washington-Wesley Tournament.

Helen Pitts, a sophomore, scored the first goal of the season against Wesley in the first half. She played solid offense and hustled to get the ball down the field. In only her second season, Helen has kept her head in the game and played very well. She is an asset to the Shorewomen offense.

Chip Helm, who can also be the big brother of the week, kept his cool in a tough game on Saturday that went into OT against Wesley. He played the ball well and was solid on defense. On Sunday against King's College, Helm again led the defense well as well as making an assist on a goal made by Andrew King.

From a freshman point of view ...

Three freshmen explore W.C. sports and pre-season practices. Emily Kessler talks about the prankless Volleyball team. Todd Barto sings the praises of the Soccer team. And Nicole Mills adjusts to collegiate Field Hockey.

Volleyball

Emily Kessler

Being a freshman on the volleyball team is not what I expected it to be.

Besides having to deal with three long practices a day, I was expected to have to put up with all the comments and pranks the upperclassmen sometimes have a tendency to pull on innocent freshmen.

I was surprised at how easily the team accepted the freshmen. There were no pranks, as I had anticipated, and instead of feeling like I had committed a great sin by being a freshmen, I felt welcome.

The team has a lot of talent this year and I believe that the friendships we have built can only add to our success as a team.

Our team captains are the same as last season, Beverly Diaz and Michelle Chin.

The team is excited and ready for its second season in the Centennial Conference and is ready to win. Everyone should attempt to make our evening games. Check The Elm or ask one of us about our home matches.

See freshman responses to W. C. Field Hockey and Soccer on 15.

SHOMEN

Field Hockey shows Wesley how it's done

Nicole Mills

After a restful weekend the Shorewomen defeated Wesley 2-0.

On Tuesday afternoon the W.C.Field Hockey team had their first real contest of the season against Wesley. The earlier scrimmage against Cecil Community College was more of a practice and the team really did not get challenged. The Shorewomen came out to meet Wesley ready to play well and win. This year the team has a very fast starting lineup with juniors Cindy Matalucci, Jill Schultz, Kouri Coleman, sophomores Helen Pitts and Marcia Flinn and freshmen Nicole Mills and Sarah Sobon on the attack. Sophomore Amy Scarlett and juniors Jen Hanifee and Shannon Metcalf compose a tough defense that is rarely penetrated.

In the first half the Shorewomen played with a nervous energy which allowed them to control the game and set the pace. Helen Pitts cashed in on one of the 12 penalty corners and found the boards, scoring the first goal of the season for the shorewomen.

In the second half, freshman Nicole Mills received the ball and fought around the goalie to make the final score 2-0. The team, in the words of Coach Sarah Feyerherm, really "gelled" well for being the first game.

The ball remained on the Wesley side of the field for most of the game. There were several shots on the W.C. goal but sophomore goalie Stephanie Self only needed to make a save once. The Shorewomen outshot Wesley 33-5 and the Wesley goalie, Tracey Sentner came up big with 18 saves. Feyerherm noticed that the Shorewomen offense is more planned and built up this year and it is reflected in the high amount of shots on goal.

The Shorewomen came out excited and ready for this game and it worked. Feyerherm commented, "This team is five games ahead of where it was last year. Once we are in game shape physically this team will surprise a lot of other teams in the conference." Both coaches agree that the team is playing well together. Last year was a building year for the team and now with all the returning players and the talented freshmen the team can take off from here and shake up the conference. This year the 5-3-2 system of play is understood and very workable by the players and that means more goals for the shorewomen.

Nicole Mills wacks the ball while Leanne Cole jumps to safety.

This Saturday the Shorewomen travel to take on the women of Gettysburg. This will be the first Centennial Conference game of the season for theShorewomen and they are excited and ready to play well. If you can make the drive, the game will be well worth the trip. The women's Field Hockey team is ready to win. Not only is the team ready to win and excited but second year coaches Sarah Feyerherm and Samantha Emmet are as well. Ω

Soccer loses in OT to Wesley then kicks butt in Penn

Peggy Busker

This weekend while you were sitting in beach traffic, the W.C. soccer team co-hosted the 1994 Washington-Wesley Soccer Classic. On Saturday the Shoremen took on Wesley. The game was very fast paced and exciting for both teams. W.C. Coach Todd Helbing started six freshmen along with senior Greg Miller in the goal, Chip Helm and Tommy Hiebler on defense, Brian Rush and Andrew King on the offense.

In the first half both teams had scoring opportunities but neither could find the net. Both goalies, Wesley's Dan Martin and W.C.'s Miller had huge saves as the offenses found the rare hole in the defense. The Shoremen defense played well and very solidly as well. At half time the game was scoreless and neither team was going to give it up.

The second half was even more aggressive than the first as the clock ran down and the conditioning had broken through and scored. This was evident as Helm and Rush received yellow cards, along with several members of the Wesley team. There were several nerve-racking moments for the Shoremen when Miller had come out to make a tackle and the ball had gotten lose in the goalie box. However, the shoremen defense directed by Helm backed up Miller successfully. The Shoremen offense had several breakaways where Freshman Long Le or sophomore Andrew King had great shots on goal. Once again Wesley got lucky and their goalie made big saves.

Coach Helbling is positive about these scoring chances and is pleased the team had such control of the game and so many opportunities to score.

In the first fifteen minute period of overtime Wesley got lucky. The Wesley offense cashed in on a corner kick that actually went out but was missed by the referee, resulting in a low hard shot to Miller's left. The Shoremen did not score in the remaining overtime and Wesley went on to win the game 1-0. Greg Miller came up with 7 saves to Martin's 8, and the shoremen took 14 shots on goal to Wesley's 18. In the stat book the game was very evenly matched. Neither team dominated the ball. Washington played confidently, especially for their first really challenging game.

On Sunday, Washington traveled to King's College in Pennsylvania and everything clicked for the Shoremen. They slowed their game down and cashed in on their scoring chances. Halfway through the first half Brian Rush scored off of a corner kick from freshman Chris Daily. Then with ten minutes left, on the game Helm crossed the ball to King who headed it into the goal. The Shoremen defense were as ruthless as ever and only let Miller touch the ball twice, whereas King's goalie made six saves. Unlike Saturdays game, the Shoremen dominated the game much more and the stats reflected that. King's college had 4 shots on goal to W.C.'s 13. The Shoremen went on to beat King's College 2-0. When asked if the weekend tournament was good for the Shoremen, Coach Helbling commented, "It was successful. The team played well together and we have seen what needs to be worked on." Come out to see the Shoremen take on their first Centennial Conference team this season as they play Muhlenberg on Saturday at 1:30. Ω

The Elm Sports Page needs writers!!!

Love sports?
Love to write?
We need you!

Contact Peggy Busker, Miro Beran, or Rachael Fink at the Elm office (x. 8585)

V-ball attacks Arundel

Miro Beran

The Volleyball Team is back in full attack!

They had their first scrimmage against Anne Arundel. The team played unbelievably in the first two games. They killed their opponent (15-13), (15-6).

Every combination was a winning one. Hard hits were winning well-deserved points for the Shorewomen. Michelle Chin and Beverly Diaz came up big, and showed a lot of heart and team leadership. Quick reactions by Becky Stephens and Courtney Myers gave the Shorewomen the winning edge in the first two games. In the last three games the Shorewomen got outplayed by the other team.

For their first game of the season, the Shorewomen showed a lot of enthusiasm and confidence, playing hard until the end. With the hard work that the Volleyball Team has put in at their practices, they will rock the Centennial Conference this season. Ω

SPORTS

New faces in W.C. Athletics

Bryan Matthews, Director of Athletics

Bryan Matthews, Director of Athletics

Coming to Washington this year is Bryan Matthews as Director of Athletics.

Matthews is not new to this campus. He received a B.A. in Political Science in 1975, then in 1985 completed an M.A. in Psychology, both from W.C.

Matthews has plenty of experience on and off the field. He coached the nationally ranked W.C. Men's Lacrosse team. In 1982 Matthews was chosen as the National Division III Coach of the Year. It was in 1982 that Matthews went to coach the Division I Midshipmen's lacrosse team at the Academy in Annapolis. He also did a lot of behind the scenes work at the Academy as well. Matthews also found time to run several lacrosse camps with as many as 975 campers and staff.

As Bryan Matthews returns to W.C. he has high hopes for the athletic program. Matthews knows that change is inevitable. He is astonished at how much positive change has occurred in W.C. Athletics in 12 years alone. For example, when Matthews was a student here, there was nothing on the other side of the railroad tracks and now there are several fields and a new one on the way. He will work to please the coaches by listening to them and doing what he can for them. Matthews will also pay attention to the student athlete. He will try to upgrade as many facilities as possible when possible and keep the athletes comfortable. Matthews recognizes that athletes need good fields and equipment so they can feel good about themselves and play better as a result. Matthews is very pleased at the way Athletics at W.C. have become a part of the daily life on campus. Matthews admits that his favorite sport to watch is basketball but he will try to make it to all competitions as often as possible. As a coach he rarely had that opportunity and he is looking forward to it at W.C.

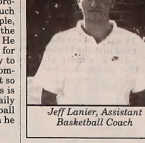
Amy Osborne and R.J. Eldridge, Assistant Crew Coaches

If you thought Amy Osborne and R.J. Eldridge were gone you were wrong. This year they are back and involved in what else: W.C. Crew.

R.J. graduated in 1993 with a B.A. in Modern Languages (Spanish). After graduation he moved to Philadelphia for a year and among other things he coached high school rowing there and, of course, had a successful season including the City Championships and Stotesbury Cup Regatta.

However, R.J.'s heart was in Chestertown. He did not like the City of Brotherly Love. Also, he felt that rowing at W.C. did so much for him as a person he had to give something back to the sport.

Amy was a member of the class of '94 with a B.A. in Political Science. She hails from Marietta, Ohio and rowed there in high school as well as being the men's and later women's coxswain at W.C. Many people will recognize her name for coxing many successful boats at W.C. Some of these include the men's 1992 and lightweight boats at Dad Vails, and the bronze winning men's lightweight at IRAs in '94. Amy is doubling this year as the Assistant Rowing Coach and the statistician for Sports Information. Unlike R.J., Amy is wondering if she will ever leave Chestertown.



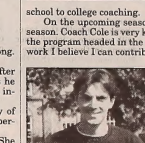
John Haus, Men's Lacrosse Coach

John Haus, Men's Lacrosse Coach

To lead the Shoremen Lacrosse team to a Division III Championship this spring is new coach, John Haus. Haus comes to W.C. from Division I Johns Hopkins where, for seven years, he was the full time Assistant Coach for the men's lacrosse team. Haus graduated from University of North Carolina in 1983 where he played defense for their stickmen. Haus, at UNC, was a part of the team that was the National Champion for two years in a row '81 and '82. As a part of the Hopkins staff Haus met W.C.'s new athletic director, Bryan Matthews, then Navy lacrosse coach, on several occasions.

John Haus is very excited about heading the Shoremen this spring and has great plans to work with his players this fall to really build up his plans and create a solid, confident and winning team.

Jeff Lanier, Assistant Basketball Coach



Jeff Lanier, Assistant Basketball Coach

I grew-up in North Dakota and began my college career in International Falls, MN. After completing two years in IF, I moved on to New Haven CT. where I graduated from Southern Connecticut State University with a B.S. in physical education.

I've spent the last year substitute teaching and coaching girls Varsity Basketball at Emmett O'Brien High School in Ansonia, CT. My other coaching experience includes a year as a volunteer assistant at the University of New Haven and a year as head coach at New Haven Junior High.

I came to W.C. because it provides an ideal setting to further my education while allowing me to make the transition from high school to college coaching.

On the upcoming season: I am very excited about the '94 - '95 Basketball season. Coach Cole is very knowledgeable about the game of basketball and has the program headed in the right direction. With her guidance and a lot of hard work I believe I can contribute to this team's continued success.

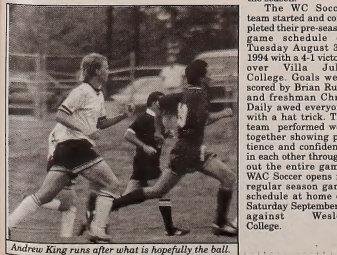
Chris Dax, Assistant Soccer Coach

Chris Dax, Assistant Soccer Coach

Hailing from Kalamazoo, MI, I have spent the last six years in Fort Wayne, IN coaching for local youth teams at Canterbury High School, Canterbury Middle School and for a girl's Select-Travel Club team. I played three seasons at Division I Big Ten Conference Michigan State University and before that at Gannon University in Division II. I graduated with a B.S. in Physiology in December of 1992.

I came to W.C. because I was looking to make a step to the "next level" and W.C. would provide the ideal experience for me. At W.C., under the direction of Coach Helbling, I am given the opportunity to learn every aspect of coaching soccer at the Division III level. At a larger school I probably wouldn't be given the same opportunity. Coach Helbling is a man I respect; he has done a lot to bring this program to a new level and I am excited to hopefully aid him in his overall plan to turn this program around and make it a prominent, successful team.

From a freshman point of view continued



Soccer

Todd Barto

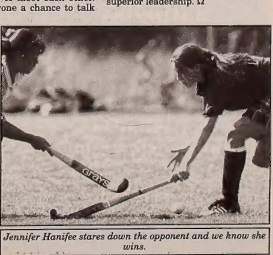
Washington College Soccer is back!

Head Coach Todd Helbling and Assistant coach Chris Dax lead the team onto the field with enthusiasm and Shoremen pride.

The team's top returning players include team captains Chip Helm and Greg Miller. Also included are Andrew King, Brian Rush, and Tommy Hiebler. The freshman class will make a big impact on this team as well. Six freshmen have earned starting positions. These players are Erik Dahlin, Chris Daily, Matt Schnal, Shane Bates, Rodney Roman, and Scott Helm. This year's team has a lot of depth in its line-up, which will help late in the games. Overall, the team outlook is positive. The combined skills and experience of the upperclassmen on the team, and the freshmanability of the newcomers will pull the team through the season.

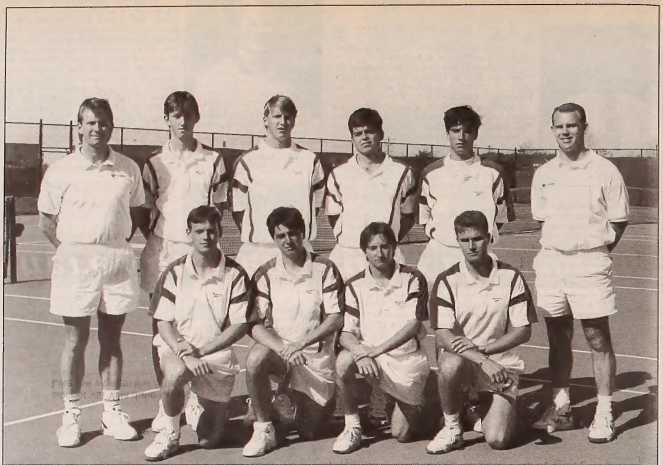
Andrew King runs after what is hopefully the ball.

The WC Soccer team started and completed their pre-season game schedule on Tuesday August 30, 1994 with a 4-1 victory over Villa Julie College. Goals were scored by Brian Rush and freshman Chris Daily awed everyone with a hat trick. The team performed well together showing patience and confidence in each other throughout the entire game. WAC Soccer opens its regular season game schedule at home on Saturday September 3 against Wesley College.



Field Hockey

Nicole Mills



Playing collegiate sports is a big adjustment for a college freshman to make. This year, pre-season at Washington College began on Monday, August 22. As a freshman entering college, there is always a sense of anxiety about meeting new people and being accepted.

This year, during pre-season, the freshmen on the field hockey team were welcomed by a game that allowed everyone to meet each other. This gave everyone a chance to talk about their summer and to tell something about themselves, which was helpful for the freshmen, and created a camaraderie with the team.

For the next couple of days everyone got to know each other on and off the field. Although the team had never played together, it certainly did not appear that way. The upperclassmen played and talked with the freshmen as if they had played last fall. The pre-season also included early morning conditioning and running. At every practice we all encouraged each other. Personally, I believe that pre-season could not have started or ended better. Pre-season has built a strong team that looks as if it will give many Centennial Conference Teams wake up calls. The four freshmen, our transfer and a new sophomore are welcomed additions to the young team. This year we lack seniors but captains Jennifer Hanifee and Jill Schultz are proving their energy and superior leadership. Ω

Jennifer Hanifee stares down the opponent and we know she wins.

Division III National Champions: Kneeling from left: Robin Sander, Carlos Nuno, Miro Beran and Stefan Berger. Standing from left: Head Coach Tim Gray, Michael Kember, Andrew King, Emilio Bogado, Damian Polla and Assistant Coach Todd Helbling. Not available for photo: Assistant Coach Danny Canwell, and Andrew Moffat.

Scrimmage Stats:

Field Hockey vs, Cecil Co. C. C.
The game was dominated by the Sho'women with an estimated score of 12-0

Soccer vs. Villa Julie College
Like the women the Sho'men hustled and came out on top 5-1

Volleyball vs. Anne Arundel C.C. lost 3-2

Game Stats:

Soccer vs. Wesley L 1-0 OT

Soccer vs. King's College W 2-0

Field Hockey vs. Wesley W 2-0

Volleyball game too late to appear here

Where you need to be this week

Saturday

Soccer vs. Muhlenberg, 1:30 p.m.

Volleyball @ Haverford, 9 a.m.

Field Hockey @ Gettysburg, 1 p.m.

Tuesday

Volleyball@ Dickinson, 7 p.m.

Thursday

Soccer @ Gallaudet, 4 p.m.

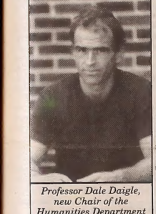
Field Hockey @ Western Maryland, 4:30 p.m.

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Three

Serving the College Community Since 1930



Faculty Committee Elections

Kate Meagher

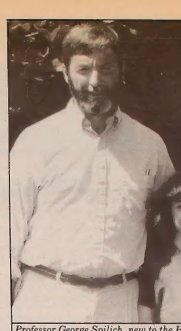
The faculty of Washington College held elections for membership on various faculty committees as well as for department chair positions this week.

Six positions were filled, including that of Chair of the Humanities Division. The two professors nominated for Chair were Professors Audrey Fessler and Dale Daigle. The members of the Humanities Division elected Daigle, Assistant Professor of Drama, to the position.

The Humanities Chair is chosen from among professors of Art, Music, Drama, Philosophy, and English. He or she represents the division to Academic Council, "which deals most specifically with curriculum and curriculum changes," according to Daigle.

GEORGE SPILICH

Professor Dale Daigle, new Chair of the Humanities Department



"I think any college needs to constantly consider whether the present curriculum is appropriate and effective," the new Chair said. "It should be a continuing process."

The Faculty Affairs Committee had three vacancies to be filled. This committee consists of seven people. Three are faculty members elected by division, two are faculty members elected at-large (one of whom is untenured), and the committee is rounded out by the President and the Dean of the College. All members of the faculty can vote for these positions. Elected this week from the Humanities was Professor Kathy Mills. Professor Nate Smith was elected from the Social Sciences, and Professor Louise Amick was elected from among the untenured faculty.

The Faculty Handbook states that the committee "recommends to the Faculty policies pertaining to the general welfare of the faculty — loads, compensation, working conditions, leaves, faculty enhancement. The Committee also recommends to the Faculty policies on faculty appointments, faculty tenure and promotion, grievance procedures, affirmative action, academic freedom and all matters pertaining to professional standards and ethics."

According to Mills, the idea of a committee to deal with particular concerns of the faculty was President Trout's. The function of the committee is to study the faculty committee structure and to streamline if necessary.

"Everyone is burdened by so many committee memberships," said Mills.

GEORGE SPILICH

Professor George Spilich, new to the Honors Program Committee, and daughter Joanne

Amick describes the Faculty Affairs Committee as "very active." It proposed the Affirmative Action plan that was approved by the faculty last year. Its members are working on the tenure procedure, the final version of which will be included in the Faculty Handbook.

Professor George Spilich was elected to the Honors Program Committee as a one-semester replacement for Rosemary Ford, who is on sabbatical.

"Our function is to solicit proposals from the faculty to teach Honors courses," said Spilich. They urge professors "to submit proposals for special and delicious courses - intellectual truffles." Funding requests go through the committee, which would provide money to a Shakespeare class if Bill himself were going to be lecturing in D.C., according to Spilich.

Some courses which have come out of the Honors Program include an Ancient Greek Literature course taught by Professor Jeff Vahlbusch, and a Chesapeake Bay course led by Professors Don Munson and Beverly Wolff. Many courses are the result of students' requests.

"Good ideas for Honors courses come from students ..." Spilich said. "[They] have much more power than they realize."

Robert Day was elected to the Student Aid Committee as a one-year replacement for Lida Baldwin, who is teaching in Germany. The committee's function is "giving students aid," said Day, who learned of his election through an interview with The Elm.

"I don't mind helping out," he said. "It might be fun giving out Student Aid." He added that the money will not come from his own pocket.

In addition to electing faculty members to committees, it was necessary to eliminate one position at this week's meeting. Under the previous Honor Code, violations were sent to the All-Campus Judiciary Committee, which included four faculty members. The new code includes some changes in this area. Violations will now be put in front of the Honor Board, which includes only three members. George

See "Elections" on 3

Administration evaluations proposed

Kate Meagher

The future President of Washington College may be subject to a performance evaluation by the Board of Visitors and Governors in which all members of the faculty will be contacted. There is a policy pending regarding evaluation of the Dean and Assistant or Associate Dean of the College.

The official presidential policy proposal was unanimously approved by the AAUP on August 31, and approved by the faculty at Monday's meeting. The faculty is recommending the following policy to the Board of Visitors and Governors:

"The Board will evaluate the performance of the President of the College at three-year intervals, beginning with a review during the President's second year in office. As part of the process of information-gathering for the evaluation, the Board will solicit the opinion of all faculty members through questionnaires and selective interviews."

A second proposal presented at Monday's meeting is that of evaluation of the Dean and the Assistant Dean. It is proposed that there be an evaluation every three years, beginning in fall of his or her second year in office.

"The purposes of the evaluation are: (1) to improve the performance of the administrator, and (2) to assist in decisions about the retention of the administrator in office.

"The evaluation will be conducted on behalf of the President in the case of the Dean of the College, or on behalf of the Dean in the case of the Assistant/Associate Dean, by a specially appointed review board..." This board will include three faculty members elected by their peers, and one administrator appointed by the President. The Chair of the board will be elected by the board members from among the three members representing the faculty.

"The review board will solicit the opinions of the following constituencies on the performance of the administrator: faculty members; students (through the Student Government Association); the supervising administrator (the President in the case of the Dean; the Dean in the case of the Assistant or Associate Dean), who will be interviewed by the review board or a subcommittee; administrators who work with the person being reviewed; staff members reporting to the person being reviewed. Representatives of external organizations with which the Dean deals on behalf of the College should also be interviewed."

According to the proposal, the faculty would be the most influential of all those involved in the evaluation process because the deans in question deal mainly with curricular and faculty matters. A confidential questionnaire will be sent to all those who fall under the definition of "faculty" which includes "full-time faculty members whose primary role at the College is teaching, Category I part-time faculty, and librarians and physical educators with faculty status."

Under the proposal, the Dean or Assistant/Associate Dean would be made aware of and consulted about the evaluation, retain the right to compose 25% of the faculty questions, and be allowed to submit a self-evaluation.

The review board will present its results to the supervising administrator, who will in turn present to the faculty a summary of the results along with tabulated results of the questionnaire and a statement of any actions taken as a result of the evaluation. Ω

Trout addresses students

President Charles Trout addresses a letter to the student body.

2

Maintenance report

Despite electrical problems and angry insects, maintenance gets the job done.

3

Dropped a Whole Degree

Aaron refuses to be kosher in this week's music review.

4

When a Man Loves a Woman

Kelli actually liked this one ... read all about it.

5

A letter to students from President Charles Trout

When a number of people nominated me for the presidency of Washington College, my initial response was diffident. "Why go south of the Mason-Dixon Line?" I asked. "Why not head for more settled territories?" Then Katherine and I visited. We met lively students, a caring faculty, and a Board of Visitors and Governors that struck us as intent upon moving Washington College into what my predecessor, S. Douglass Cater, was fond of calling "a higher orbit."

In addition, we were much taken by the landscape — geophysical, social, political, environmental, cultural, historical. We saw the Chester River, and it was love at first sight. (We came to call our special place a "Water College.") We walked the campus late at night after a round of exhausting (and exhaustive) interviews, and we were taken with the place at second sight. As we enter our fifth year, none of this has changed. We suspect this is equally true for almost every student at Washington College.

I believe that the College is headed in promising directions. Conversations about curricular change have begun, a Long Range Plan is in place that calls for eventual growth to 1,150 undergraduates, and fundraising is going well not only for a new classroom building but for additional scholarship endowment as well. I foresee no turning away from our diversity initiatives or from the many, many things that attracted you here.

I believe that each and every student at Washington College should be encouraged by the directions that have been charted. At last we have, mirable dictu, a student body that looks like America; we have any number of new courses and programs; we are privileged to be a Charter member of the almost-new Centennial Athletic Conference; we have a wonderful physical plant and an aesthetically pleasing campus; we have a dedicated faculty.

I have long understood that a college such as ours is a blend of continuity and change. To get from 1995 to the Year 2000 will be little different. The core of what we do — that is, a commitment to the liberal arts — will remain, but around the edges of this central mission there will be alterations. This is inevitable and is to be welcomed. Presidents come and presidents go, but institutions endure. Washington College will not only endure, but it will move from its present solid condition to ever-greater achievements. In fact, many of you will participate actively in this process. You should — and I wish you every success.

In making what has been a very difficult decision, I have been mindful that many of you have been attracted here by the institution's academic reputation. I see no reason why the quality of what we do will decline. Quite the contrary. My sense is that the Faculty is ready to move in several promising directions and that the Board of Visitors and Governors stands ready to ratify these changes. There are immense opportunities here, and my wish for all of you is that you take maximum advantage of the important things Washington College has to offer.

I myself intend to work very hard this fall to do everything in my power to make sure the College is in the strongest possible position to be entrusted to my successor. With your help, I am confident we will succeed.

Charles H. Trout, President

P.S. On September 19th there will be a President's Forum at 7:30 p.m. in the Commons Room, and I invite you to attend. Ask any question. Make any suggestion.

Students at Washington College, or any college for that matter, are periodically reviewed in terms of their performance in their classes. The system of review is an old one, entrenched in the culture of education from the very beginning.

Professors are also evaluated on a periodic basis, until they earn tenure.

At W.C., the only members of the community who are not subject to periodic review are the top administrators, specifically the President and Dean of the College.

This may change.

The faculty has just passed a resolution, to be taken to the Board of Visitors and Governors, that will make it mandatory for the Board to periodocally review the performance of the President. Another resolution, dealing with reviewing the Dean and Provost, was remanded to the Faculty Affairs Committee for further discussion.

The evaluation of the President will involve a review by the Board every three years, starting in the President's second year in office. The Board will be required to solicit the opinion of the faculty. The Board will not be required to solicit the opinion of the student body. In fact, the student body is not mentioned anywhere in the proposal for evaluation of the President.

Due to the size of the institution, Washington College students are in a unique position that enables us to know and understand the various positions, policies, and persons that make up the administration, faculty, and staff that run our College.

Regardless of this, we are not part of any evaluation process currently in place, nor will we be part of the evaluation of the President, assuming that the resolution passes through the Board.

This seems to be a trend here at Washington College. Despite the amount of time and energy that several dedicated students put into the research and writing of a student life section for the Long Range Plan, this work was largely thrown to the wayside, and did not appear in any form in the final version of the LRP. Students have very little official say in the changes in curriculum, or curricular policy. We do not even have final say in the administering of justice to peers, as the controversy created last year when Trout overturned an All-Campus Judiciary Committee ruling proved.

A liberal arts college is about education, a broad, all-encompassing education designed to prepare students for the rigors of living in a complex and demanding society.

When we graduate from these rolling lawns and brick walkways, we should be prepared to assume the roles of adulthood and the responsibilities that they imply. We are no longer children. We are adults, forming our own moral systems, philosophies and concepts of the world that surrounds us.

We are not here to be treated as children. We no longer need constant parental supervision as we shape ourselves and our world. We need to be granted the freedom to make choices, and the chance to acquire the knowledge that the consequences of those choices must be accepted.

College cannot be reduced to spending several hours a week in class. It is not simply a place to learn the classics, to play the sports, or to socialize with our peers.

College is a community of people, and each member of that community is important to the survival of the whole. Each member of that community should have some part in making changes that affect the whole.

Nashville, Indigo Girls

as i drive from your pearly gates i realize that i just can't stay all those mountains they kept you locked inside and hid the truth from my slighted eyes i came to you with a half-open heart dreams upon my back illusions of a brand-new start nashville can't i carry the load is it my fault i can't reap what i sow? nashville did you give me half a chance with your southern style and your hidden dance? all those voices they whisper through my walls they talk of falling fast they say i'm losing it all they say i'm running blind to a love of my own but i'll be walking proud i'm saving what i still own i fell on my knees to kiss your land but you are so far down i can't even see to stand nashville you forgot the human race you see with half a mind what colors hide the face nashville i'd like to know your fate i'd like to stay awhile but i've seen your lowered state today i'm leaving but i've got all these debts to pay we all have your dues i'll pay in some other place i never ask that you pay me back we all arrive with more i left with less than i had your town is made for people passing through a last chance for a cause well i thought i knew nashville tell me what you gonna do with your southern style it'll never pull you through nashville i can't place no blame but if you forget my face i'll never call your name again i fell on my knees to kiss your land but you are so far down i can't even see to stand nashville you forgot the human race you see with half a mind what colors hide the face nashville i'd like to know your fate i'd like to stay awhile but i've seen your lowered state today i'm running away

Advertise in The Elm

For information concerning placing an ad in The Washington College Elm, contact Richard McKee or Rachael Fink.

2 X 4	$12.50
3 X 4	$17.50
3 X 2	$8
3.5 X 4	$19
4 X 4	$25
5 X 4	$30
6 X 4	$35
3 X 10	$45
8 X 10	$110

Classified Ads $2 per line
Special offers are available.
All non-profit campus organizations receive free advertising, depending on available space.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan
Arts & Entertainment Editor
Martha C. Kimura
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Buaker & Nicole Zemanski
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

Layout Editor
Carolyn Fuss
Circulation Manager
Charles K. Buckner, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Richard McKee, Jr.
Office Manager
Steve Kim

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and Crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or opened over BitcMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8586.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

This Week on Campus
Sept. 16 - 22

Film Series
When a Man Loves a Woman
Norman James Theatre, 7:30 p.m.

Friday 16

Saturday 17

Sunday 18

Monday 19
Last day to change course to pass/fail

Tuesday 20

Wednesday 21
Gender Studies reception
CAC Commons, 4:30 p.m.

Thursday 22
American & European Interests in Middle East Peace panel discussion, CAC Forum, 7:30 p.m.

Thinking through ...

Overpopulation

by Paul Briggs

Considering that most of the coverage of the nine-day international conference on population in Cairo focused on the incessant wrangling between the Vatican, Islamic leaders and Vice President Al Gore, there was a remarkable amount of consensus at its close. The document which ultimately emerged from the conference emphasized meeting the basic needs of the population and empowering women economically.

This marks a major shift in thinking about how to restrain rising birth rates. At one time many people believed that unless drastic measures were taken, population would increase out of control until resources ran out, resulting in worldwide catastrophe. Today, the low growth rate of the developed world and the increasing availability of contraceptives in the developing world make a Malthusian catastrophe increasingly unlikely.

Estimates of the ultimate population- the number of people there would finally be when, for whatever reason, zero population growth had been reached - used to range from an optimistic eight billion to an apocalyptic 30 billion. According to the best, most recent data, there will most likely be six billion people in the world by the year 2000, eight billion by the year 2030, and ten billion by 2060. The population will finally level off between eleven and twelve billion sometime in the early twenty-second century.

This is assuming that current trends continue. The aim of the Cairo conference was to alter those trends in such a way as to slow population growth and make it level off sooner, ideally somewhere around eight billion (although no specific numerical goal was ever adopted).

What do these numbers mean? Precisely how would life in a world of eight billion be different from life in a world of twelve billion - or, for that matter, from the world of five and a half billion today?

To begin with, the problem is not one of overcrowding. Millions of people live in what many of us would consider to be overcrowded cities, and like it just fine. For that matter, many of the most prosperous places in the world - Japan, the Netherlands, Taiwan - are also the most densely populated. New Jersey, which has by far the highest population density in the United States, is also a close second in terms of per capita income.

The problem is one of resources - basic necessities like food, water and medicine. Any given nation or region must have either the ability to provide these within itself or the economic clout to import them from elsewhere. On a global scale, of course, these resources have to come from somewhere. (This is assuming that, for the foreseeable future, the resources of space will not be used in amounts large enough to be significant.) The question is, will there be enough to go around?

Focusing on food production, one finds that among the experts there is no consensus at all. For the past few decades, the amount of food per capita available has increased everywhere except Africa, but no one is sure how long this can continue. Some have gone so far as to say that we could feed ten billion people now, simply by making use of existing and emerging technologies on a global scale. Others, particularly Lester Brown of the Worldwatch Institute, believe that it may not be possible to increase foodstuffs much beyond current levels, and that, indeed, there may be a decline in the food supply as a result of soil degradation. Imagine, for a moment, that you are the pragmatic leader of an impoverished and underdeveloped nation with a population growing much faster the economy (or worse, faster than the food supply) and that you had to make your decisions based on these conflicting prognoses. How would you do it?

Nor is it simply a matter of increasing the food supply. Even with grain surpluses and farmland lying fallow in the United States, people in many parts of the world still die of starvation simply because they cannot afford to buy food at international prices. Some have called this "maldistribution," while others point to the stagnant economies in much of Africa and Latin America as the culprit. Most of the major famines of the twentieth century have been largely the result of political failures and unwise land use in the countries affected. The problem is that maldistribution and political failure have been with us since the dawn of human history, and even the most successful economies leave somebody out. One should not base one's plans for the future on pragmatism, efficiency and justice sweeping the world. Then there are other necessities like water (which is definitely a limited resource), medicine (denser populations are more vulnerable to disease) and housing.

It seems to me that it should be possible, with a great deal of effort, for the world to sustain as many as twelve billion people. There would, however, be no margin for error, no room for whatever crises might result from deforestation, soil salinization, erosion, desertification, disappearing aquifers, new pests and diseases, global warming, or simple human incompetence. The danger here is not the Apocalypse, but that does not mean it should not be avoided. Ω

Middle East Symposium

Two noted international statesmen will share their views on Middle East peacemaking at the first in a panel discussion at Washington College on Thursday, September 22. The Society for Junior Fellows and the 1792 Society have invited Paul Findley and Rodney Wilson to discuss "American and European Interest in Middle East Peace."

The panel discussion begins at 7:30 p.m. in the Casey Academic Forum.

A former U.S. Congressman from Illinois who served 21 years on Capitol Hill, Paul Findley now heads the Council for the National Interest, a Washington-based organization advocating Middle East policies that serve American national interest. In 1974, he rescued a constituent from prison in Aden, People's Democratic Republic of Yeman, and secured the later release of two other U.S. citizens imprisoned there. During the mission he became the first member of the House of Representatives to interview President Assad of Syria after the 1967 diplomatic break. In 1978, he met twice with Palestinian Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat in Damascus, eliciting from him a pledge that the PLO would live at peace with Isreal if an independent Palestinian state were established on the West Bank and Gaza.

His book, They Dare to Speak Out: People and Institiutions Confront Israel's Lobby, spent nine weeks on the Washington Post bestseller list and went into ten printings. He is a frequent lecturer and media spokesman on Middle East affairs, and he has recently released Deliberate Deceptions, a book about the U.S. decision-making process on Middle East policy.

Rodney Wilson, an international political economist specializing in Northern Africa and the Middle East, is chairman of the board of studies in economics at the University of Durham in England. A noted authority on banking and finance in the Arab world, he edited two volumes, Islamic Financial Markets and Politics and the Economy of Jordan, and collaborated with John Presley on Banking in the Arab Gulf.

His latest book, Economic Development in the Middle East, is being published in early 1995 by Cambridge University Press. His work has appeared in the Times, the Guardian, Financial Times, International Herald Tribune, the Wall Street Journal, and others. He is a regular reviewer of books and referees papers for the Economic Journal, the Journal of International Development, Middle Eastern Journal, and Middle Eastern Studies.

Shower talk and bee stings

Sarah Bell

It's Monday morning.

You've just woken up and you are looking forward to that nice, relaxing hot shower.

You turn on the shower and you are blasted by freezing cold water.

If you haven't awaken before, you sure are now. If you were like me, you spent most of the time in the shower pinned against the wall, trying not to let the cold water spray you too much. But one day without hot water was nothing compared to Minta Martin's four days.

I'm sure you're all wondering, "Now why exactly was there no hot water?" Well, let me tell you. You see, the hot water is normally provided through the central boiling house but the main boiler had to be shut down for emergency repairs.

Each dorm has its own oil-fired hot water heater which went on after the main boiler shut down. They took awhile to start up so that is why the water remained cold for most of the day. In Minta Martin's case, there was a transformer problem and their hot water heater never came on at all.

Maintenance came over and fixed Minta Martin's heater but not long after they left did it go on the blink again.

Tuesday came along and the main heater was fixed and everyone was happy.

What? You want to hear more about maintenance?

Well, they are painting the William Smith building. (If you haven't already noticed the big blue cranes and that delightful smell that the paint gives off.) Not one class goes by in the Smith building where we are not interrupted by a loud whir or a booming voice yelling, "A little more to the left!" All eyes stare out the window as if a pink elephant just flew by outside.

Maintenance says that one of their biggest challenges when painting the building is the bees. There are a lot of nests that are disturbed and quite a few painters who get stung.

We thank maintenance for restoring our hot water and risking death (by bee stings) to preserve our buildings. Ω

"Elections" from 1

Shivers, a member of the All-Campus Judiciary Committee, graciously stepped aside.

The Chair of the Nominating Committee John Taylor informed him of the situation and asked if he would be willing to resign from the committee. Shivers is currently Acting Chair of the Modern Language Department, and a member of Academic Council, and had served on the ACJ for several years.

"I have plenty to occupy my time," said Shivers. "Frankly, I thought I'd rotated off [the All-Campus Judiciary] anyhow." Ω

BY KELLI YOUNGBLOOD

Kathy Mills, new member of the Faculty Affairs Committee

BY KELLI YOUNGBLOOD

Louise Amick, new member of the Faculty Affairs Committee

Andy's

ANDY GOLDBARD, MGR 837 N. HIGH STREET
410 779-8677 CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620

Friday, September 16
Bird Dog & The Roadkings Honkytonk-country rock'n roll .... Let's dance!! The Dog is back and barking!!
Saturday, September 17
Derryberry and Alagia Simply one of the best roots-rock duos you will ever hear.
Thursday, September 22
August West Our favorite new alternative-folk-rock duo. 2 guitars. 2 voices. No Cover. No Wharf Rat.

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

All right, I'll admit it.
I am distrustful of the mainstream, I am distrustful of what is popular on the charts.
So, if this column seems slanted, if you don't see your favorite bands reviewed here, mea culpa, baby!
But what is it that I'm trying to do here if it's not inform you on what you already know about the Dead or whatever the hell else is popular on this campus? What's the point, you say? Well I guess it's time to bust out with a mission statement: Dropped a Whole Degree is here to give you some new with a smile, to suggest possibly new and different musical alternatives, and above all, to not be condescending to you, the reader. Sound good? Bearing all this in mind, I guess it's time to get started with this week's review.
Les Claypool, the lead man and bass player for the inventive and hard rocking band Primus has a new band that he's been playing around with. This mastodon of funk has thrown together the original Primus lineup, including Jay Lane on drums, and Todd Huth on guitar, and added a bit of jazz weirdness to produce a widely varied and enjoyable album.
The band goes by the nom de plume Sausage, and their album is titled "Riddles are Abound Tonight."
It is hard to come up with the right words to describe Sausage's music. Everything's complex. Very complex. Lane puts down rhythms that are hard to follow. He sounds like two or three people playing on four or five drum sets. It almost becomes necessary to just sit back and listen to one element of the drums at a time in order to get a full appreciation of what the man is doing back there.
On top of this is Claypool's unmistakable bass thumping. Weird, unthinkable things done to an instrument that's not used to playing more than one note at a time. In his hands, the bass becomes less of a rhythm instrument and more of a continuous funky flourish. He's always doing something bizarre to the damn thing. Whether it's just laying down something sharp or playing a string of notes that would make John Coltrane envious, Claypool is the king.
And finally, way up on top is Huth's dense and scattered guitar work. Against the rock solid intricacy of the rhythm section, the guitar seems awkward and almost uncertain. But what else could have gone up against the complexity of the drums and bass? Huth comes off as being in total control of the situation. His solos and rhythm (or is it anti-rhythm?) add a surreal quality to the album. The machine chugs along, led by an insane driver who forgot the map, if you know what I mean.
"Riddles are Abound Tonight" is one hell of a fine album. In fact, I consider it one of the best buys of last year. Follow my advice, go out and buy it, steal it, beg it, whatever. Give me a blank tape and ask me nicely and, who knows, maybe I'll even tape it for you. However you do it, get a copy of Sausage and just dig it. Listen to it the first time to get used to the sound of three mad geniuses in love. Then go back and listen to the album again, only this time pay attention to the drums. Cool aren't they?
Note: This one's dedicated to Andy. If you hadn't been Pork Soda that one day, I wouldn't have found Sausage.Ω

Alumni Council on campus

The Washington College Alumni Council will hold its annual planning meeting on campus tomorrow, September 17. The Council is the steering committee for the 7,500 member W.C. Alumni Association and its members are considered to be some of our College's most important ambassadors. The Council is charged with sharing the good news and lively spirit of the current students with those who went before them. Last year the Council supported school-spirited student efforts such as Casey Tune, Washington's Birthday Mardi Gras Masquerade Ball, and the Parents' Day forum "Choice and Consequences," a cooperative panel discussion about undergraduate majors and career opportunities. Alumni also brought you Orientation karaoke because, according to Alumni Director, Pat Trams '75, "we are always looking for volunteers with courage and enthusiasm as well as those with dignity and diplomacy."
The President of the W.C. Alumni Association is Ed Athey '67. Ed, whose father is Coach Athey, grew up in the sidelines of Kibler Field, has coached Sho'men wrestling and lacrosse, and has supported our Admissions program by sending his daughters, Carolyn '93 and Lisa '96 to W.C. Nine decades of alumni are represented on the Council and these include three SGA officers from the '90s: Steve Attias, Kevin "Sparky" Kelly, and Brooke Frank. Eight geographical populations of W.C. alumni are also represented as Chapters on the Council. These are Boston, New York City, South Jersey, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Mardel, Kent & Queen Anne's Counties, and the National Capital Area. The Council invites undergraduates and their families to participate in alumni events in their neighborhoods.
President Trout will address the Council at 3:30 on Saturday afternoon in the CAC Forum and this will be followed by a reception for faculty, staff, and students on the upper terrace of the CAC from 4 - 6 p.m. All students are invited to come to introduce themselves to the Council and share light fare, drinks (please bring your ID if you would like to have a cocktail), and W.C. spirit. Please call or e-mail Carolyn Athey in the Alumni Office if you plan to join in this occasion. Ω

So anyways, I was slaughtering vagabonds ... Huh? What do you mean I'm on? Oh the article, right! Ok, so anyway, I'm being held under duress right? And you should see these guys. One of them resembles something out of Buck Rogers, more serpent then not. Another has a Glowing stomach that he attributes to drinking Hawiian Blue Punch, but the worst, Oh my Lord, the worst is short, squatt, bent-up, and she has a Koosh ball that whenever I deviate, I get whacked with. They also won't allow me to use $%*&ing profanity. Ouch, hey quit it! Oh all right. Thank you sir, may I have another?
So how is everyone's Roommates getting along? I thought I'd enter that because my Roommate is CRAZY! He stays up until 2:00 in the morning drinking with the rest of my dorm. Then he doesn't wake up until noon the next morning. He thinks it's real funny when he opens the door and collapses onto the floor. He plays his heavy metal way too loud and when I ask him to stop, he laughs (Just kidding, Joe). I don't think anyone else has this problem, but if you do, let's merge forces and rid the campus of its horribly evil curse. There is an evil, and it is roommates. Ha, Ha, Ha. When my roommate reads this he's definitely going to bring back his pump-action, double-barreled, 12-gauge shotgun. Maybe I can Mack trucks with and I don't think I'll be here too long. Maybe if I stayed on topic? Too late.
And if you were wondering, yes I am taking donations for the Save the Hatman from the Evil (oo and I mean evil, suuka) Tyrants and My Crazy Roommate. Nope, no Warnings to Freshmen, No Notes to Freshmen. I think it is demeaning, and we should find out everything for ourselves without some upperclass-person telling us. As a veteran of the Hour-And-A-Half line, I can tell you to experience it yourself. And Kitchen? Hey this stuff's good for you. Filled with anger, it rises from the Swamp that is, the oven! (Organ Chords ring out!) Play life to your least, and just remember ... Why Vote for the Lesser Evil, Vote for Cthulhu! S.M. signing off now ... and no one would notice when they would scream ... Why is this light on? This thing won't shut ... Ω

Notice of Auditions

Church Hill Theatre will be holding auditions for Love Letters by A.R. Gurney, directed by Sylvia Maloney, on September 17 and 18 from 1-3, and September 19 from 7-9. Production dates are November 3-12. Call Sylvia Maloney (778-3783), Mary Wood (758-0235) or the theatre (758-1331) for more information.

Gender Studies Reception

Wednesday, September 21, at 4:30 p.m. in the CAC Commons room.

All are welcome to attend this gathering of those interested in Gender Studies.

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442
Off Street Parking Next To The Store
Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm
Ray-Ban Patagonia Columbia Sportswear Company REEF Old Towne Canoes & Kayaks Merrell Lands End
10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS
WITH STUDENT I.D.
Barrecrafters Car Racks

Stacy Hammond • Gene Vassel• Chris Camillo • Christina Chiarchiaro • Paul Kenny • Liz Mangano • Dan Woodall

Do you know these people?

These are sophomores who are to serve you. They are being raffled off on 9-21 and will serve on 9-22, our Sophomore Servant Day. Tickets are 1 for 50$ or 3 for $1
Let them serve you!

What's Shakin'?

A rewiew of five local vanilla milkshake makers, on a scale of one to ten.

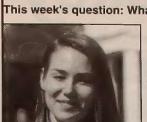
by Darrold Smith

Stam's Drug Store
Great flavor, so thick you can eat it with a spoon. I give it a nine.

Downeys
So thick you have to eat it with a spoon. You can get any possible flavor. I give this one a nine.

The Cove
Good flavor, could be a little thicker. They taste even better when "Lil' Bit" makes them. I give it a seven.

Burger King
I only gave this a one because there is no zero. This sucks. Imitation milk, not even real ice cream. They shouldn't even sell them.



Roy Rogers
If it's possible, this is even worse than Burger King. I think their cokes are thicker. This one gets a one, too.

Campus Voices

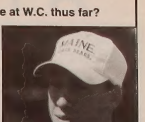
Question by Philip McQuade

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What has been your most memorable experience at W.C. thus far?

Oh my God, your are not writing this! Great! Hmmm ... I never did May Day ... the Birthday Ball was O.K. ... I guess I have many.

Amie Wiseley, Senior



Oh, I don't know, um, I would have to say breaking my foot with Jamie Baker.

Stacey Hammond, Senior

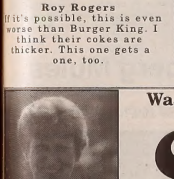
Running naked through the halls of Minta Martin. Drunk.

Mark Reyero, Junior

Learning about the traditions of this school, specifically Benjamin T. Hinkle, the Great Pharaoh.

Dave Kraft, Junior

First fraternity party, Dorchester. That's kind of cheesy, isn't it?



Kurt Sommer, Freshman

Let me think for a second. A couple of moments I can't say ... I guess pledging.

Kouri Coleman, Junior

Washington College Staff Profile

Diane Larrimore is the woman with her finger on the pulse of Student Affairs. Nevertheless, she was "embarrassed" to be singled out by The Elm for her efforts, preferring to remain behind the scenes, answering phones and acting as the right hand of both Deans Maxcy and McIntire.

With a blush that belied her answer, Ms. Larrimore admitted that she's been working for the College for twenty-eight years, always in the same capacity. "In the first three years, though, the office was divided between the Dean of Men and the Dean of Women; I worked for the Dean of Men," she said.

A native of Chestertown, she's been married to her husband, Francis, for twenty-seven years. Having lived here all her life, she said, makes her work with students from different regions of our country and our world a wonderful learning experience for her.

When asked about the office's fairly recent move to the CAC, she said, "Well, we like it, of course, for its newness, but we don't like it as much as when we were in Bill Smith because there we had so much more contact with the students. We saw them coming and going to class and could get to know them better."

Popcorn & Jujubes:

Even if the movie is bad, it is not a total waste

A review of When a Man loves a Woman by Kelli Youngblood

Most people I know like Meg Ryan. Her movies are entertaining; she's good-looking. She dresses well. What more can one ask of Hollywood? Yet in this film, Meg Ryan acts. And so well.

In fact, I've never seen a more stunning portrayal of what utter Hell it is fighting a socially-unacceptable disease: in this case, alcoholism.

Don't get thrown off by the sappy title. This is a serious film with scenes worth witnessing and dialogue worth hearing. Though it's more commercial and less "arty" than most in our film series, it's nothing to scoff at or to forgo. In fact, I found its very immersion in our own culture—its nearness to me—made it unavoidably more touching than the foreign films over which I love to cry. And, yes, I cried at this one. Six different times. As did my boyfriend. I know (and, unfortunately, everyone in the theatre with us knew) because he had knicked himself shaving that morning and his tears kept running into the cut, which made him howl in addition to his otherwise silent tears. But don't misunderstand; I'm not saying it's a good film because it'll make you cry. Actually, it's the other way around; that is, it'll make you cry because it's such a good film.

Go see it!

A talk by Ruben Ruiz from Guatemala

"El Calendario Maya"
(in Spanish)

Wednesday, September 21, International House, 7:30 p.m.

Chestertown Natural Foods

"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"

101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1677

Spider's
(Formerly Newt's)
Hillside Bar
Special Draft Night
Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Midnight Madness
Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Must be 21 or older

A Field Hockey first

The Washington Field Hockey Team outplayed and stuck it to Gettysburg and where were you?

Peggy Busker

This past Saturday the Shorewomen traveled to Gettysburg to play their first Centennial Conference game of the season. Coming off of the Wesley victory, Shorewomen hopes and energy were high. Last year, the Sho'women were 0-8-1 in the Centennial Conference and 3-9-1 overall. This year things are going be different.

Washington started the game the way they were supposed to; aggressively. Gettysburg was surprised at the team whom they had beaten last season 3-1. Washington controlled the ball very well and played their game. The starting line-up was the same as the game against Wesley. Gettysburg spent most of their time chasing the ball and trying to catch up to Washington.

The shots on either goal in the first half were few and far between and in Washington's favor. Both teams could not really get many good shots off in the circle. Washington's goalie, Stephanie Self and the defense power house of Shannon Metcalf and Jen Hanifee kept Gettysburg from scoring. It seemed like Washington had control of the game. At half time the score was 0-0. The Shorewomen knew they had some great chances to get on the scoreboard. There were several penalty corners where Jen Hanifee and freshman Sarah Sobon had excellent shots on goal that just missed by inches.

The second half was the longer half of the game for the Shorewomen. With 30:16 remaining in the game, Helen Pitts received a perfectly placed leading pass from Sarah Sobon and on a one-on-one with the Gettysburg goalie. Helen dodged her then put the ball in the goal. The score was Washington 1 and Gettysburg 0. For the first time, Washington Field Hockey was leading a Centennial Conference game. The bench went crazy and the Gettysburg team was in shock.

The Shorewomen really showed their strength after the goal. Gettysburg began an attack on the Washington goal. The defense held its ground. Marcia Flinn, on a Gettysburg breakaway, sprinted to make an awesome block tackle and stopped the Gettysburg player in her tracks. Shannon Metcalf had a defensive save on the Shorewomen goal line and therefore stopped a goal. Then to add to the defense, goalie Stephanie Self had an amazing game. She was pulling saves out of her hat. Nothing could get past her. Near the end of the game, the Gettysburg offense was on top of the Washington goal. Stephanie made a diving save but was unable to get up without letting them score. By rules, the Gettysburg team got a penalty stroke. The entire Washington bench held their breath as the Gettysburg player took the shot and Stephanie made a diving save. The game belonged to the Shorewomen. As the clock wore down and the score was still 1-0, Washington knew they were going to ring the Victory Bell. Coach Feyerherm agrees, "We dominated play throughout, but they had spurts which lasted five minutes."

This was a great opening to conference play at W.C. Everyone is excited and ready to win more conference games this season. Coaches Sarah Feyerherm and Sam Emmit were speechless about the level of play on Saturday. On Thursday the Shorewomen travel to Western Maryland to play their second Centennial Conference game and it should be a winner as well. Ω

In a cloud of dust, Jill Schultz fights for her goal.

GOODMONDSON LYNN '94

Shoremen Soccer bows to the Muhlenberg Mules

The Sho'men played hard but just could not win against the nationally ranked team, Muhlenberg

Peggy Busker

The men of the soccer team took on Muhlenberg this past Saturday at home. Muhlenberg is 4-0 this season and they are ranked 16th in the nation. Needless to say, the Shoremen had a tough game ahead of them.

The Shoremen came out strong and confident in the first half. They did what they wanted to do defensively. The Shoremen defense did not allow Muhlenberg to play their long-ball style of play in the first half.

It was the same starting line up from the previous games. The six freshmen and the experience of the five upperclassman gave Muhlenberg a challenge. Many people came out to see the game and to cheer on the Shoremen.

The Sho'men had a lot of scoring opportunities, resulting in two shots on goal in the first half, the Muhlenberg goalie having to make some tough saves. Washington's counter-attacks were aggressive enough to please Coach Helbling.

Muhlenberg challenged the Shoremen defense seven times and Greg Miller came up with three saves in the first half. Chip Helm, Matt Strohl, Tom Heibler, and Shayne Bates are playing better every game. They sent the Muhlenberg offense packing many times. The connections between defense and offense are more solid. The Shoremen looked strong in the first half and the score reflected it. It was 0-0 at the half.

In the second half Muhlenberg got lucky, as the Sho'men let their guard down. They scored two consecutive goals and the Shoremen had a rude wake up call. Muhlenberg's Eric Ervin and Joshua Winneker scored Muhlenberg's two goals. The Shoremen continued to play strongly and had five shots on goal compared to Muhlenberg's four. Miller came up with two more saves for a game total of five. Muhlenberg's goalie Ron Moser had a total of four saves.

Tom Heibler takes it like a man while Shawn McMahon provides support.

GOODMONDSON LYNN '94

Brian Rush dares someone to challenge him as he takes the ball downfield.

GOODMONDSON LYNN '94

In the remaining ten minutes of the game, the Shoremen made a run on the Muhlenberg goal and with an assist from freshman Chris Daily, freshman Kevin Myers made his first goal of the season and the only W.C. goal of the game.

Muhlenberg came away with the win, 2-1. There were several close shots on the Muhlenberg goal in the remaining few minutes but the Sho'men just could not get it in.

On the books, however, the Shoremen looked impressive against Muhlenberg. In the second half the Shoremen outshot Muhlenberg and really out-hustled them. in the first half Muhlenberg was more dominating and in the second half the Shoremen played more of their game.

Coach Helbling feels good overall about the game. The first goal was a fluke and the second was a breakdown of the defense. The players, consisting of six freshmen, have the speed and skill to dominate this season. Helbling feels that the team will have to make its own breaks this season and develop a style of play that suits its talent.

Saturday the Sho'men take on another Conference team, Franklin and Marshall at home at 1:30. The Sho'men hope to play their fast game and really stun the Franklin and Marshall Diplomats, coming up with the victory. The Diplomats had their first win after losing three in a row at their tournament this past weekend. They have a strong line up as well with several players receiving Conference recognition. Their goalie, Dan Mendoza has a 69% saving average whereas Washington's Greg Miller has a saves percentage of 83%. It should definitely be an exciting match and possibly the start of a winning streak for the Shoremen. Ω Making Waves ...

W.C.'s Gatell to Row in World Championships

Washington College rower Leroy Gatell will represent his native Puerto Rico at this year's World Championships in Indianapolis, Indiana.

Gatell, a senior captain for Washington's Men's Crew, will compete in the lightweight doubles division in Puerto Rico's first trip to the World Games. The races began on September 11 on Eagle Creek in Indianapolis.

Gatell won a silver medal for the Shoremen last year at the Dad Vails in the lightweight-four race. At the Intercollegiate Rowing Association(IRA's), Gatell earned a bronze medal in the open division as a member of Washington's lightweight four entry.

Courtesy of Sports Information

Turf Report

Watch out! Sue Brown shows no mercy.

by KARLA TOOMEY-LOOMIS

Sue Brown

The new women's competive field hockey and lacrosses field has been completed. Yes, we have added another athletic field across the bridge. The project was possible through gift monies. A large portion came from the Shrivers (Eleanor Shriver '93). The field will be called the Shriver Field.

This is our first field graded to perfection, with a laser grader. A slope is determined for the field. Then a beam of light grades the height of a blade as the machine moves across the field. The women will no longer need to run up a hill and through corn rows.

Shriver Field will not be used for one year. This will allow the turf to establish a strong root system.

POW

Washington College's Players of the Week are chosen by the coaches as athletes displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

Not only have we decided to choose two players of the week, but they are both from the volleyball team since they have been coming out with victory after victory. The Centennial Conference definitely has something to look out for this year with senior co-captain Beverly Diaz slamming kill after kill down the throats of opponents and sophomore Becky Stephens taking her game to another level by intimidating the other team with her aces. These two P.O.W.s have taken their team to new heights in the Centennial Conference.

Becky Stephens from Hagerstown, Maryland is a starter for Coach Fall's team this year and was named to this week's Centennial Conference Honor Roll. During the first full week of competition, Stephens had 40 kills and 42 blocks for the Shorewomen. She also is among the leaders in the Centennial Conference in service aces with 18. Stephens replaces Jen Dixon (who transferred to UMBC last spring) and is doing an excellent job by improving her level of play each and every game.

Beverly Diaz is the senior co-captain for the Sho'women this season. Diaz is the foundation of the team with her leadership and communication skills providing the groundwork for the team. Not only has Diaz been co-captain since her sophomore year, she constantly is "taking her game to a new level," comments Coach Penny Fall. She leads the team in kills with 47 and makes her opponents feel faint whenever she gets near the ball.

Stephens and Diaz are on their way to taking the Shorewomen to the top of the Centennial Conference.

Centesnial Conference Honor Roll

The Shorewomen dominate this week in sports

Nicole Zemanski

Becky Stephens was recognized for her contributions to the team's second place finish at the Haverford tournament. Stephens has 48 kills, 18 service aces, 54 digs and 31 blocks in nine matches. Way to go Becky! In the conference, the Sho'women netters moved up one notch in the standings from 1993 at this year's Haverford Tournament.

Stephanie Self from Pokomoke City, MD was the difference in the Sho'women's triumph at Gettysburg. She had 15 saves, including a key penalty stroke with 5 minutes remaining, to post her second shutout of the season and a grand total of 16 saves. As a whole, the team made some heads turn in the Conference with their 1-0 victory over Gettysburg. Sophomore Helen Pitts, from Old Fields, was one of the heroes as she scored the winning goals in both games last week. Ω

Sho'women show what they can do on the road

Nicole Zemanski

The volleyball team has been on what seems to be a never-ending road trip the past week. Not only did they play volleyball for ten straight hours on Saturday at the Haverford tournament, but they also played at the Goucher Quad and at Dickinson on Tuesday. But they came away with far more than just endless miles in a W.C. van.

After deciding on which starting lineup to chose, Coach Penny Fall went with co-captains Beverly Diaz and Michelle Chin, junior Courtney Myers, sophomores Becky Stephens and Tina Smith, and the lone freshmen, Emily Kessler. After losing a tough match, St. Mary's College came away with the win (15-13) (15-11) (15-13). W.C. then went on to face Goucher College which Coach Fall calls, "an extremely solid team." The Shorewomen battled it out but came away with a loss (15-9) (15-13) (15-4). Coach Fall commented, "The team really got their feet wet and got their act together."

On Saturday, the Shorewomen improved their level of play with each game at the Haverford Invitational. Their first opponent was FDU-Madison and was their most important match because they showed a "never say die" attitude by taking the first game, losing the second game by two points, and then rallying to win the third game (15-11) (13-15) (15-7). After playing inconsistently through the morning games, W.C. was ready for the test.

"Catholic University and Washington College have become friendly rivals on the volleyball court over the last couple of years," comments Coach Fall. After beating the Shorewomen last year in the semis, Catholic met W.C. again in the semis this year with our team coming out on top (15-13) (5-15) (15-11). This match was an extremely well played game with the extra effort coming from everyone on the court. By beating Catholic, the women showed everyone that they are not a team to mess with this year.

In the championship, W.C. had to go up against the strong New York University in a harsh match but simply "ran out of steam". Coach Fall was extremely proud of her team. Diaz stepped up her level of play through her leadership and intense desire to win. Becky Stephens added the extra punch through her excellent play during the tournament. Overall, the team played like champions and took second place out of ten teams.

On Tuesday, the team traveled to Dickinson and beat them in five games to win yet another road victory. The team's expectations are high this year so keep an eye out for the results against Scranton on Saturday. Their first home game will be on September 21 against Centennial Conference rival, Swarthmore, who are 1-1 during the first week of competition. So come out and cheer the Sho'women on during their first home contest! Ω

Introducing...

Nicole Zemanski

Get to know the new sports co-editor

I am Nicole Zemanski and I will be the sports co-editor along with Peggy Busker this year for The Elm. I am a junior psychology major in which my concentration is clinical and sports psychology. I live in Glen Arm, Maryland which is right outside of Towson. I am a catcher for the softball team for which I also am a co-captain and a SAM (Student-Athlete Mentor). I am a sister of Zeta Tau Alpha fraternity and hold the office of First Vice President. I work for Student Activities and the Department of Entertainment. I currently live in Minta Martin's Fourth floor and enjoy listening to Nine Inch Nails with Liza, Heather, Becca, Kelly and the rest of the floor.

GOODSOUL LTD'S AM

Andrew King shows pure skill and athleticism as he maneuvers the ball.

Scores

Volleyball

St. Mary's	13	15	18
Washington	15	11	15
Goucher	19	15	15
Washington	15	13	4
Notre Dame	15	15
Washington	5	6
Ursinus	6	7
Washington	15	15
FDU-Madison	11	15	7
Washington	15	13	15
Haverford	6	9
Washington	15	15
NYU	15	15	15
Washington	2	12	8
Catholic	13	15	11
Washington	15	5	15

Field Hockey

Gettysburg	0
Washington	1
Wesley	0
Washington	2

Soccer

Muhlenberg	2
Washington	1
Wesley	1
Washington	0
King's	0
Washington	2

REC SPORTS IN SHORT

On Sunday, September 18, there will be an outdoor 3 v. 3 basketball tournament in the Quad parking lot. For information, contact Adam Poe or Will Brandenburg at x7245.

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Saturday, September 17

Soccer v. F&M 1:30 p.m.

Volleyball @ Scranton 9 a.m.

Tuesday, September 20

Field Hockey @ Haverford 4 p.m.

Wednesday, September 18

Soccer v. Swarthmore 4 p.m.
Volleyball v. Swarthmore 7 p.m.

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Four

Serving the College Community Since 1930

College welcomes new Vice President in Charge of Finances

Kate Meagher

Anita Gottlieb is a woman with a mission.

The new Vice President of Finance and Administration plans to spend her first few weeks at Washington College asking students and faculty members how they feel about the College, so that she may know what to fix and what needs no alteration.

> "I think we need to be real honest with ourselves about what we need to do better."
>
> -Anita Gottlieb

Gottlieb comes to Chestertown from the position of Senior Vice President for Operations at Defenders of Wildlife, a national conservation organization. She was in charge of Budget / Accounting, Administration / Personnel, fundraising, membership operations, media operations, and Watchable Wildlife. Watchable Wildlife books describe the various forms of wildlife which can be spotted in a given area. Each book deals with a different state. Prior to working at Defenders of Wildlife, Gottlieb was the Assistant Vice President for University Relations at American University.

Gottlieb has had a house in Rock Hall for 11 years, and loves the area, so "when I saw the position was available, it seemed to me to be a unique opportunity because there are not very many interesting jobs on the Eastern Shore for people who do what I do — administration of large, non-profit organizations," said Gottlieb. Because of her background in education, it seemed like "the perfect job."

"The more I found out about the College, the more interesting it became," she said. Gottlieb is excited about the prospect of working at a college where she will "know everybody" and be able to "personally interact with the students."

As for her plans for the College, the new VP. said that "it is certainly no secret" that the school is going through some "financial difficulty."

"The only way to get out is for everyone in the community to recognize that we're all in this together," said Gottlieb. "We need to pull together and look at what we're doing and what we're doing right." She believes that looking at those aspects which are right with the school can lead to the development of methods to correct what is wrong with the school. She does not deny the existence of problems.

"I think we need to be real honest with ourselves about what we need to do better," she said. "If we [learn from both what is right and what is not], I think that it will have a positive effect on our revenue. And we need to increase our revenue." She suggests several ways to accomplish this goal, including recruitment of students, fundraising, and grants.

"We can do that if we do it together," said Gottlieb. "Current students are the best recruiters there are." She encourages students to tell prospective students how they feel about the College.

"Students can really be an important factor in all this," she said. Ω

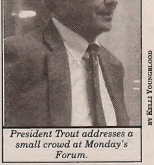
Anita Gottlieb, new Vice President in Charge of Finances.

BY KELLY TOUCHSTONE

President's Forum: "Where is our Joe DiMaggio?"

Kate Meagher

Washington College President Charles Trout held an open student forum on Monday night.



All were welcome to attend, but turnout was very light. Trout attributed this to a lack of any "pulsating student issues" on campus.

It's obvious from the turnout that the campus is not aflame with burning issues," said Trout.

Acting Student Life Chairperson Rob Moran thanked Trout for his letter to the students which was published last week in The Elm.

"It's what I've been waiting to hear," said Moran. He had been waiting for someone to say "that Washington College is going to be O.K."

Trout then addressed the attendants about prevalent issues in the United States. He pointed out that this is "an age without heroes - an age of the anti-hero." He complained that baseball players, at one time good role models, no longer possess the qualities of old.

President Trout addresses a small crowd at Monday's Forum.

BY KELLY TOUCHSTONE

"Where is our Joe DiMaggio?" Trout asked the group. "It's pathetic."

In looking for present-day heroes, Trout singled out Jimmy Carter for his

See "Forum" on 4

SGA holds elections, gears up for Senate confirmation

William Denton, III

Tuesday night, the SGA Executive Board met for the last time before the confirmation of this year's Senate.

The new Senators, who were elected Wednesday and whose names are forthcoming in this issue of The Elm, will convene for the first time next week. The first meeting will take place Tuesday and will be, as always, open to all students.

According to SGA president Jamie Baker, the first order of business with the new Senate will be to "get committees established" with the intent of getting things accomplished more quickly and efficiently with the Senators divided into smaller and more focused groups.

The first list of tasks at hand for the new Senate include a much-needed improvement of the SGA film series as well as increased security measures at on-campus parties.

An issue which promises to demand attention not only at the first Senate session but throughout this year is W.C.'s revised Honor Code. Baker wishes to remind all students to "remember their responsibilities and the pledge they signed".

Many of the vacancies on the standing faculty committees still remain unfilled. Even after distributing a list of vacancies to all students, Baker describes the turnout for these positions as only "fair". Several Committees, such as the one overseeing the Honor Code, have been completed, but others remain sparse.

Monday evening, the SGA Executives attended a dinner meeting with President Charles Trout. These meetings, which are regularly scheduled at the beginning of each year, are designed to provide a foundation for year-long cooperation between the Student Government Association and the President's Office.

Baker described Monday's event as "a relaxing non-business dinner to build a working relationship."

Upcoming events include an SGA-sponsored dance party in the Student Center Friday, September 30.

As always, the SGA encourages feedback from students. Anyone with questions or concerns should feel free to contact the SGA via BlitzMail, the SGA folder in the Pacer Forum, x. 8500, or talk to an Executive Board member in person. Ω

For SGA membership list, see 4

Inside This Week's Elm

SGA membership list

All the executives and senators are listed for easy reference.

4

Sarah on Sex Ed.

Gender Studies Reading Group more exciting than high school sex ed. class.

5

The Lit. House

Becky takes us on a brief tour of the O'Neill Literary House.

6

We Get You Discounts!

Jeff and Kevin take us on another zany interview. This time, in search of bargains.

8

In his last year at Washington College, President Trout is taking every opportunity to inform the College community about how he sees the College growing and progressing. Having heard one or two of these speeches myself, and having been briefed on several others, I've detected a few striking similarities. Review of the curriculum, revision of the Long Range Plan, and diversity are top on the President's wish list for the future of Washington College. Diversity is also on my wish list for the future of Washington College, but I think that President Trout and I have very different reasons for advocating this stance.

Fifty miles from Dakota territory
Cheyenne scalp fringes his belt.
Found him alone washing in the Bighorn
a steady aim and he bagged his game.

Being the spawn of hard-core 60s hippies, I grew up believing in the concept of diversity, and, at times, taking it for granted. East Lansing, Michigan, downtown Houstan, and even little, tiny Thomasville, Georgia had their share of diverse populations, and my particular sensibilities made me gravitate to those populations. Needless to say, coming to Washington College with its relatively low population of minorities was a bit of a shock.

Pale sun falls without contest.
Here is obedient darkness.
He will not return.

The next shock for me was walking into the dining room and finding it segregated, apparently willingly. All the international students sat at one table. All the African-American students sat at one table. The jocks had their tables, the sororities theirs. The "freaks," the group I found myself in, even had theirs.

White Cadillac, white man at the wheel, white faces on the mountain, wounds that will never heal.
Black clouds overhead, old man says looks like rain.
Thieves' Road winds to the Black Hills sign says South Dakota, U.S.A.

President Trout talks of making Washington College "look more like America." I just want Washington College to look more like my life. Dr. DeProspo once said, "letters aren't monogomous; they mingle, make new words." Tex has a similar theory about colors. I have a simular theory about people. We are not monogamous, in the metaphorical sense. We find ourselves drawn into communities, either of our own making, or already established ones. As human beings, we thrive on culture, on people, and whether we like it or not, on change.

Grass plains stretch to the horizon, not a soul can be found on them.
They will not return.

I would like to see a cultural change happen at Washington College. Actually, I would like the many sub-cultures of Washington College to change. We all have common ground upon which to build a unified community. Our biggest barrier is our own tendency to only associate with those we consider to be like ourselves. Differences do not have to separate; they can enrich. While we are here at Washington College learning how letters make new words and colors make new colors, we can also learn how people make new cultures, new communities, new worlds.

Old rusted pickup and a mad dog in the yard, purple paint peels but fails to reveal the bitterness that grows inside.
Cloud of dust in the distance,
strange knock beneath my hood.
Is it better to have words left unsaid than to have words misunderstood?

Realistically, I know that the segregation in the Dining Hall will never disappear completely. Realistically, I know that not everyone wants to or is willing to widen the scope of his or her life. Realistically, I know that writing this editorial espousing diversity will not make much of a difference. Realistically, I am just a hippy's daughter and one of the worst bleeding heart liberals I know, who in the spirit of grass roots movements everywhere, thinks that if one person decides that I am talking sense and decides to break the barriers then I have accomplished something.

Pale sun falls without contest.
Here is obedient darkness.
It will return.
I know it will return.
It will return.

Thanks go to Josh Lawrence and Marianne Culbertson for providing The Elm with transportation to Elkton this week.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
News Editor Rachael S. Fink
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor
Mindie J. Nolan
Arts & Entertainment Editor
Carolyn Fuss
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Nicole Zemanski

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Richard McKee, Jr.
Office Manager
Steve Kim
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and Crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BitsMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

Student opinions do matter

I was pleased to note the Elm's interest in the evaluation of administrators. I'd like to clarify the Faculty's recent resolutions on the matter as they relate to student participation. I think you have have underestimated the role students in both existing and proposed evaluation procedures at the College.

The Faculty has asked the Board to adopt a procedure for the regular evaluation of the College President. As faculty members, we recommended (but could not "require") that the Faculty's views be solicited in certain ways during future evaluations. This was in no way intended to preclude the gathering of student opinion of staff opinion; in fact the resolution explicitly stated that this ought to be only a part of the information-gathering process. I hope and expect that the Board would also gather student and staff opinion in any presidential evaluation.

The only detailed evaluation proposal currently under consideration (the one for deans) does include mechanisms for gathering student opinion. I don't think the Faculty would support a proposal that did not provide for such input. Indeed, students are "part of the process" when faculty members are evaluated: student course evaluations are the main – and often the only -- evidence of teaching performance. They are taken very seriously by instructors and by the Appointments and Tenure Committee when it evaluates faculty members. Moreover, students serve on most College committees. Student participation is a deeply ingrained, much appreciated, and vitally important part of the governance of this institution.

Dr. Emilie Amt, Professor of History

Accosted in Superfresh

On Monday night, after play rehearsal, two of my friends and myself walked up to Superfresh to get some ice-cream. After we had finished our shopping and headed toward the checkout counter, we were accosted by two night-time employees, one employee behind us and another in front. The one behind us yelled, "Are these the ones?" then the other answered, "There is no one else in the store, it had to be them." "Did you see them knock the stuff down?" "No, but there is no one else in the store, who else could have done it?" "Well since you didn't see them, there is nothing we can do about it." Then they pushed past us and talked about us some more. By this time I had realized what happened and said to them that I thought it was very rude of them to talk to paying customers in such a way, accusing us of something that we did not do, then talking about us as if we were not even present. I told them that I felt they owed us an apology. The employee who accused us turned around and said that there was no one else in the store and it had to be us. In reality, there were other people present in the store, not just us. I was very insulted. I pushed away my shopping cart, said a few choice words to them, and proceeded to walk out of the store with my friends. However these gentlemen blocked our exit in what seemed to be an attempt to provoke an argument with us. After we left the store, they followed us out and proceeded to curse at us.

The next day I called the store manager to register a complaint. The manager made it clear that he did not have the time or interest in my complaint. At the end of the conversation I did not even receive an apology. My firm belief for this blatant disregard of a valid complaint is the fact that the complaint was made by a college student.

I have worked in retail before, and I know that under no circumstances does an employee treat a customer in such a way. I believe that the college and town need to learn that one is not totally independent from the other. Until this lesson is learned college and community relations will be very strained.

College students can be rowdy, we all know this, but the majority of us seem to be able to handle ourselves in a place of business with a good measure of maturity. We are a resource in Chestertown with money to spend and thus should be treated with the respect any other customers from the community receive. I, for one, will not be treated with such contempt and ignorance again in a business that depends on me and other customers like myself for survival.

Richard McKee, Senior, Drama major

This Week on Campus

Sept. 26 - Oct 2

Film Series

KIKA

Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon., 7:30 p.m.

Monday 26

Beethoven's "Orpheus in Hades"
Lecture by O. Jander
Gibson, Rm. 9, 4 p.m.

Tuesday 27

Wednesday 28

Bach's Lunch Performance by students and faculty.
Library Terrace, 12:30 p.m.

Thursday 29

Friday 30

Alumni and Friends Golf Tournament
Contact the Alumni Office, 778-7812

Saturday 1

Sunday 2

Thinking through ...

the minimalist mission in Haiti

by Paul Briggs

The news from Haiti, at first, seemed a little confusing. Why were Haitian military thugs attacking and sometimes killing civilians right in front of the U.S. troops? More importantly, why didn't the U.S. troops do anything to stop them?

As it happens, there is an explanation. Under the agreement that Jimmy Carter, Clinton's envoy to Haiti, reached with the military dictators of Haiti, U.S. and Haitian forces are supposed to cooperate as much as possible. This has come about largely as a result of the unwillingness of either the public or Congress to make restoring democracy in Haiti any longer or more difficult than necessary. Thus, when Haiti's "security forces" went about their usual duty of bashing demonstrators over the heads with clubs, American troops had to stand by and not interfere.

It may also seem strange that General Cedras agreed so quickly to a peaceful transition to democracy. There is an explanation for this, too. Even cowards will fight if their backs are to the wall. Given an escape route, however, they will take it without hesitation. If one accepts that the top priority was preventing American soldiers from getting in harm's way, then Clinton's shrewdest move was giving the regime a last-minute opportunity to cut a deal.

President-in-exile Aristide's dissatisfaction with the arrangement under which he is able to return to his rightful position is also understandable. Even when he is back in office, the country's own military will remain not only a public nuisance out of his control, but a constant and personal threat. Aristide has no desire to serve out his term with the sword of Damocles hanging over his head. For this reason, he has asked the United States to disarm Cedras's forces. This is, of course, impossible.

To completely understand U.S. policy regarding Haiti, however, one must understand the basic ideas underlying our foreign policy as a whole. Throughout the Cold War, the predominant aim of American foreign policy was of course to halt the spread of communism. All other goals, including the encouraging of human rights and democratic institutions in emerging nations, were subordinate to this. Thus, within foreign policy circles there developed a spirit of realpolitik, exemplified by that master of foreign policy, the late Richard Nixon. At its best, this philosophy helped inspire the Marshall Plan and NATO, which were instrumental in the transformation of Western Europe from the post-World War II collection of wounded and hostile states to a tightly-knit community of free and prosperous nations. At its worst, this philosophy was responsible for abuses too numerous to mention, including support of numerous thoroughly vicious dictators who posed as anti-Soviet, unwise and ill-fated covert operations like the Bay of Pigs invasion, and of course the Vietnam War.

Under Bush, this concept of self-interest as paramount prevailed even after the Cold War ended. Thus, Noriega was ousted not when he annulled his own country's elections, but when he began harassing Americans stationed in the Panama Canal zone. America went to war against Iraq not when Saddam Hussein used chemical weapons against the Kurds, but when he invaded Kuwait. According to this philosophy, Haiti is a worthless backwater, mired in poverty and hopelessness and of no concern except insofar as its denizens have to be kept from crossing the Caribbean in vast numbers and inconveniencing Florida's refugee facilities. This is why, when Aristide was overthrown in 1991, virtually nothing was done about it.

The antithesis to this thesis (to use Hegelian terms) was Clinton's idealistic conception of post-Cold War foreign policy as a tool to encourage the spread of democracy, human rights and free trade. According to this philosophy, Haiti does matter, partly because it is in America's "backyard" where we should be most vigilant in safeguarding international freedom, but mostly because Haitians themselves matter as human beings. The problem is that this philosophy is at odds with that of virtually the entire foreign-policy establishment in Washington. Clinton, true to his nature, sought to find the middle ground between these two philosophies. The result has been the backdown on China's MFN status, increased attention to Russia, and now the current rather strange Haiti policy. Whether this synthesis will ultimately prove a workable post-Cold War foreign policy still remains to be seen. Ω peace-making efforts in Korea and Haiti.

"Forum" from 1

Trout then turned to the improvements to the College over the summer. He noted dorm renovations in Caroline and Cecil, and new coin-laundry machines in every dormitory.

The most expensive project, according to Trout, was the new lighting system in Tawes Theater, paid for with a bequest from the state of Maryland as well as funds raised by Friends of the Arts.

Turning to the issue of his resignation, Trout said that ending his administration after five years "is right for me and right for the institution." He admitted to being "confused" about what was the right decision. "It was really a hunch," said Trout.

Trout said that he had hoped to unify the College with increased diversity, curricular reform, and the Long Range Plan, but that he was not sure that he was the right person for the job. He wondered if the College can really be unified.

The Board of Trustees will meet on October 6 and 7 to discuss candidates for interim president and members of a president search committee. Trout expressed concern about the Board's choices, and emphasized that he has urged that students and faculty be represented on the committee.

Trout hopes that his successor will continue increasing the diversity of the College. He pointed out that when he took the position of President of Washington College, it ranked 140 out of 141 small liberal arts institutions in terms of diversity. Under Trout's administration, diversity has increased significantly.

Regarding curricular reform, Trout feels that it is imperative that the curriculum of the freshman and sophomore years be restructured.

"The curriculum is completely incoherent," said Trout.

All freshmen take Forms of Literature and Composition, but the syllabi for the sections differ according to what professor is teaching the course. Trout would like to see the College define "what the [freshman] student should know and how he should know it." The teacher of each Forms section would function as the students' faculty adviser as well.

Trout would also like to see the upper-level courses encourage "greater independence." He believes that the senior obligation is "great," but that preparation for it could be improved.

The faculty should be expanded in order to reach goals that are impossible now, according to Trout. He believes that it is an impediment to the College to have academic departments with only two or three faculty members.

"It cuts us off from trying some things we ought to be doing," said Trout. He believes that the study of hydrology is something which the College should really offer.

"Water quality is a massive issue," said Trout. "We ought to be in it. We ought to be in it big time."

A student asked Trout what changes he thought were necessary for juniors and seniors. He recommended "at least one or two common experience courses." These courses would have a core of agreed-upon texts selected "to get at eternal questions — the big questions of living and dying, justice and injustice, have and have not." The texts for these courses would include Plato's Republic, Greek Tragedies, Machiavelli's The Prince, and even books of The Bible. The courses would have "a huge writing component," said Trout.

Other changes recommended by the out-going president included easing distribution requirements and requiring a thesis for every major.

In conclusion, Trout said that he and his wife will be staying in the area for at least a portion of his time on sabbatical.

"We hope to enjoy the ties with you that we've really come to treasure," said Trout. "So as the emperor says in Amadeus, 'There it is.'" Ω

Diesel spill on 213 over weekend

On September 16, Route 213 was shut down for approximately one hour due to a fuel spill.

"A fuel truck carrying diesel fuel was driving north on 213, when it developed a leak in the valve system just before Reid Hall," said Security Officer Ken Haines. The truck continued to leak fuel up 213 to the bypass at Route 291.

Public Safety was alerted by a resident of Reid Hall who detected a strong odor coming from the road. Officer Joe Gladu arrived on the scene, and alerted the local 911 center.

"Officers [Michael] Worth and [Darrold] Smith responded and assisted in traffic control on the highway," said Haines.

Both the Chestertown Fire Company and Police Department responded to the scene.

"The Fire Company put a chemical absorbing compound on the diesel fuel," said Haines.

There was "no real damage to anything," according to Haines. Ω

The William James Forum presents

A Gay Priest Shares His Story

A talk by the Reverend Anthony Water, Catholic Chaplain.

Wednesday, September 28, Hynson Lounge, 7:30 p.m.

Public Safety Notice

The parking lot located by the Gibson Fine Arts Center will be reserved from 6 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday for faculty and staff only. The parking spaces located behind Bunting Hall will be reserved for faculty and staff between the hours of 6 a.m.and 8 p.m. daily with the exception of the two handicap and two visitor spaces which will continue to be open for those specific reasons.

These changes are effective and enforceable at the close of the business day on Tuesday, September 20, 1994.

Chestertown Natural Foods

"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"

101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1677

Student Government Association members for Fall Sememster 1994 and Spring Semester 1995

Executives

President:	Jamie Baker
Vice President:	Sonja Wilson
Secretary:	Sharla Ponder
Treasurer:	Elizabeth Likens
Honor Board Chair:	Douglas Beckworth
Parliamentarian:	Ken Pipkin
Acting Student Life Chair:	Rob Moran

Senators

Cardinal:	Alicia Carberry Luther Dudich
Caroline:	Kelly Harrison Corey Stottlemyer
Cecil:	David Dennehy
Dorchester (1 seat):	Tim Pilorski* Gene Vassel* (tie)
East:	Siu-Yee Ng
Kent:	Katie Langan Carolyn Rouland
Middle:	Mark Murphy
Minta Martin:	Leanne Cole Amy Lutz Stephanie Self
Queen Anne:	Paulina Sierra Samano Laurel Harris*
Reid:	Elizabeth Barlow Devon DeMerritt*
Somerset:	Nicket Mody
Talbot:	Bradd Burkhart*
West:	Mitsuyoshi Hannuki
Wicomico:	Lisa Purvis
Worcester:	Melisa Olsen
Off-Campus:	April Alcan Carey Hargrove John Paine* Will Smiley*

* Indicates win by write-in 15 years ago in The Elm

Friday, November 2, 1979

Despite small numbers, blacks feel little pressure

Although black students comprise only one percent of the student body, they say thay have experienced little or no racial discrimination at Washington College.

There are seven black students out of a total enrollment of 719 this semester. Of the seven, there are four freshmen, two transfers, and one senior.

Although their reasons for choosing Washington College vary, most of the students say that academics was the major factor in their decision.

The total of six black freshmen and transfers is an increase over the number of black students accepted at Washington College in recent years. Director of Admissions Mickey DiMaggio said, however, that there are no statistics available. "We don't know how many black applications we get each year because we don't break it down into a minority thing. The year-end summaries of trends don't keep records of this," he said.

The Admissions Staff, therefore, does not know whether more blacks applied to the College or if a higher percentage was accepted than in recent years.

Friday, November 16, 1979

Resolution to ban classroom smoking highlights SGA meeting

Speaking to the Senate from a prepared statement Monday night, Sophomore Mike Garvey propoed "that this council adopt an all-inclusive no-smoking resolution forbidding any manner of smoking in the classroom environment."

Garvey, who is not a member of the SGA, added, "I find it inexcusable that an institution such as Washington College with a reputation for intelligence and for undiscriminating policies should allow such a blatantly unjust practice as smoking in classrooms."

Garvey's comments were applauded by the Senate, and several senators spoke in favor of a ban on classroom smoking.

New Cove Hours!

The Cove will soon begin operating on a new schedule!!

Beginning Friday, September 23, the grill will remain open on Friday and Saturday nights until 12:30 a.m. and the deli will remain open until 12:45.

Breaking Down the Barriers in International Education

Thursday, September 28, 7 p.m.

First lecture in the basement of the International House.

Sponsored by The International Club

Blood Drive

(Sponsored by the Sophomore Class)

Tuesday, October 11
11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Sign up to donate blood!

There will be a meeting on Tuesday, September 27 at 8 p.m. in the basement of Reid Hall for those of you who would like to help.
Call Leti at x. 8592 for more information.

BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442
Off Street Parking Next To The Store
Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm
Ray-Ban · Hartly · patagonia · Columbia Sportswear Company · JANSPORT · REEF · ORIGINAL UGG · Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks · Barrecrafters Car Racks
10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS
WITH STUDENT I.D.

Not just another chapter in sex education

Sarah Bell

When I heard about the "Gender Studies Reading Group," the first thought that entered my mind was, "Oh ... so a bunch of people sit around and discuss the difference between males and females ... ok." But of course, I was wrong. I was very wrong.

I would never have had the pleasure of meeting Professor Audrey Fessler if it had not been for Rachael (who "misplaced" the information on this article). I caught Fessler after her class and she was more than willing to help me out. We talked in her office where she gave me a description of the reading group.

It was founded in the fall of 1991 by herself and two other students. Student members voluntarily read and discuss articles and books pertaining to gender issues such as date rape and feminism. The students make up their own syllabus, deciding which books or articles they want to read.

The Gender Studies Reading Group purchases one copy of each book on the syllabus and Fessler places them on Closed Reserve at Miller Library. The portions of the book that will be discussed are xeroxed and distributed through campus mail.

The Reading Group used to meet in the Lit. House but now they will meet in Hynson Lounge.

"We meet on Sundays and there is a brunch in the cafeteria on that day. So, I figured we could all eat together in the Hynson Lounge. The students would have to come there anyway to eat so I decided to have it there," said Fessler.

The Gender Studies Reading Group also holds a "special event" each year. Some of the past events have included a seminar with Dr. Fedwa Malti-Douglas and a conference at New York University entitled Out of the Academy and Into the World with Carolyn Heilburn. Last year's event was a co-sponsored panel forum on "What Is Politically Correct?"

"I want to cover all perspectives," said Fessler. "We've read books that argue that date rape doesn't happen on campuses and ones that argue it does happen. We've read a very controversial book by Susan Faludi called Backlash which very forcefully argues about how conservatives were squelching feminism in the eighties."

Professor Fessler also told me how she wanted to be a quiet facilitator rather than a leader in the discussions.

"I don't want to act as an authority. I don't want to be the Teacher and them to be the Students. I want everyone to feel equal."

By the time I had finished this article, the Gender Studies Reading Group had taken on a whole new meaning for me, from the difference between girls and boys to intellectual discussions on different gender topics (such as date rape), encompassing all different perspectives and views.

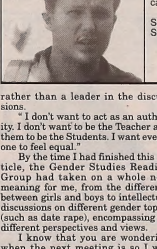
I know that you are wondering when the next meeting is so I will gladly tell you! It will be this SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, in the Hynson Lounge. This first session will be a planning session and all are welcome (even you males). So come one, come all and you might even have the pleasure of seeing me there! Ω

Question by Philip McQuade

Campus Voices

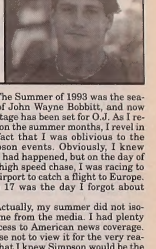
Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: Who is your idol, and why?



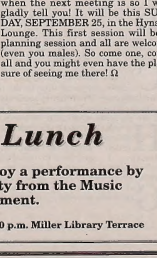
Skip, because he leaves a path of destruction.

Kareem Humaidan, Sophomore



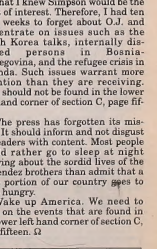
I idolize Calvin, because he has his priorities straight.

Julien Gaudion, Junior



My sister, because she has put up with me and a lot of sh*t all her life.

Robyn Mitchell, Junior



Good question. Pele, because he was a great soccer player.

Yonatan Alemu, Freshman

Theodore Roosevelt, because he led by example.

Skip Gibson, Senior

I'm my idol. I think of myself.

Lumpy, Junior

crud.

creative ranting under duress.

by Jason R. Truax

One might think that ranting is easy to do. I certainly did. That is why I agreed to write this week's CRUD. Ranting in print is something entirely different from verbalizing your grief. If you offend someone in print, it perpetually slaps you in the face. Therefore, I will not rant about the quirks of our small community. Rather, allow me to comment on the corrupt state of American society — our deplorable obsession with tabloid issues. If this makes you want to slap me in the face, well, feel free, but a word to the wise, I might just slap you back.

I do not mean tabloid issues in the sense that a Jersey City woman recently informed the National Enquirer that aliens impregnated her poodle. I mean the coverage that our media gives to events such as the trials of the Menendez brothers, Lorena Bobbitt, and most recently O.J. Simpson. Apparently, these are the stories with true grit; they are the hot issues. However, their importance to the public is an embarrassment.

The Summer of 1993 was the season of John Wayne Bobbitt, and now the stage has been set for O.J. As I reflect on the summer months, I revel in the fact that I was oblivious to the Simpson events. Obviously, I knew what had happened, but on the day of that high speed chase, I was racing to the airport to catch a flight to Europe. June 17 was the day I forgot about O.J.

Actually, my summer did not isolate me from the media. I had plenty of access to American news coverage. I chose not to view it for the very reason that I knew Simpson would be the point of interest. Therefore, I had ten solid weeks to forget about O.J. and concentrate on issues such as the North Korea talks, internally displaced persons in Bosnia-Herzegovina, and the refugee crisis in Rwanda. Such issues warrant more attention than they are receiving. They should not be found in the lower left hand corner of section C, page fifteen.

The press has forgotten its mission. It should inform and not disgust its readers with content. Most people would rather go to sleep at night knowing about the sordid lives of the Menendez brothers than admit that a large portion of our country goes to sleep hungry.

Wake up America. We need to focus on the events that are found in the lower left hand corner of section C, page fifteen. Ω

Bach's Lunch

Bring a lunch and enjoy a performance by students and faculty from the Music Department.

Wednesday, September 28, 12:30 p.m. Miller Library Terrace

PLEASE !!

all writers submit to

The Collegian

(poetry, short fiction, essays, art, photos)

in care of Kelli Youngblood, editor. ext 8505 via Blitzmail, LitHaus mail, or Campus mail

BROADSIDES is now accepting submissions of poems, prose poems, and short stories (up to one page in length) for publication. BROADSIDES is a Washington College-based publication funded by the Writers' Union; submission is open to any W.C. undergraduate. All published works are automatically entered in the Poetry Postcard Contest for Fall 1994. The three winning student works (as judged by a professional poet) are to be published as hand-set postcards at the Literary House Press by Mike Kaylor. Submissions should be sent by campus mail, Lit. House mail, BlitzMail, or any other mail to Katie Hegenstesh. Up to two submissions by any one author may be published in the same semester.

Earth Notes

BY Andrea Nolan

After a week of papers and proposals I admit that I was at a bit of a loss about what to write about for this week's column. With my creativity tapped, I sat down at my computer to discover that not only was it almost 200 degrees, but a stench similar to that of a rotting corpse was permeating my room. Usually, to clear and cool the air, I would open my window. However, stuck into my window is the abortion of modern man — the air conditioner. It sucks up electricity, throws toxins into the air, and (in what I believe to be its greatest sin) it creates a heck of a lot of noise. Why such an abomination is needed I will never know, we seemed to get along fine without them for thousands of years — and millions of people still do live free of that conditioned air. Last year my roommate and I took the damned thing out, coming inches away from dropping it on the BMW parked below us. Therefore, not wishing to push my luck, it sits there, clogging up my window. Usually it is silent, but occasionally I am pushed to the brink by the odd stench that a stuffy dorm room emits, I am forced to flip it on. Thus, today I clicked my air conditioner on to its lowest setting, and now am sitting here surrounded by its incessant, blaring noise. In an effort to mask its obnoxious hum, I turned on my radio, the volume cranked to overcome the air conditioners racket. Then my phone rang, and I held the ensuing conversation at a roar so that my friend could hear me over the din. So, I am here to write today about something that plagues us all — noise pollution.

Actually, plagues may be too strong a word to use. While I am driven to the brink of insanity over the racket of the modern world, I know that many people blissfully go about their business without any inkling of society's deafening roar. However, ignorance does not mean that these people are unaffected by the noise. In the past century we have become a society that has been increasingly bombarded by sounds. First trains began to crisscross the nation, than cars began to putt down our roads, and planes began to soar above us. In our homes air conditioners clatter, televisions blare, refrigerators hum, and vacuums whine. We are a people suffering depravation of silence. Try to think back to the last time you experienced total and complete silence. Or even a silence that was only broken by the world's natural sounds of birds, bugs, or a quiet conversation. I often go down to the water to collect my thoughts, but still there is the noise of cars behind me and the growling of boats before me. Even the houses around me utter forth a sort of white noise, barely containing the mechanized din within their walls.

I am not saying that the modern world is evil, or that we should all live a life of complete silence. But rather, silence is something that is missing from our lives that should be reintroduced. It is an endangered species. A mind needs silence to think and a body needs silence to rest from the senses overload it is bombarded with each day. But this lack of silence is something to which we have become conditioned.

This past summer I had the rare experience to spend a month deep within the mountain ranges of Wyoming. For two of those weeks, the area I was in was in restricted air space so that nothing, not even a passing jet overhead, invaded the silence of the world. I did not truly realize how beautiful that silence was until I returned back to civilization with its incessantly humming air conditioners. So now I find myself slowly driven into a rage by the air conditioner's noise while friends caution me to just ignore it. But before I left for the woods I didn't notice its noise, nor the noise of the airplanes that frequent the sky above my suburban home. I somehow think this ignorance was worse, for in ignorance the noise could grow increasingly worse without my knowledge, and I would tolerate it without knowing that there was anything to tolerate. Our world has changed radically in the last few hundred years and we are affected by this changing environment in many different ways. How precisely we are being affected and altered is not completely understood, but we do not need that knowledge to try to preserve some fragment of silence. Silence is something that is missing, and we should try to restore it. Beyond 1984-esque litigation imposing restricted air space and noise ordinances, the quest for silence is deeply personal. In my fight against noise, I hop upon my bike, pedaling as fast that the sound of wind envelops me, until I find some little back road in the middle of corn fields and marshes. Then I stop and soak in the silence, and there feel my shattered nerves mending, and I cling to the eternal hope that, while I am out, maintenance will slip into my room and rip that air conditioner from the window, allowing fresh air to pour in to take up the space of all that lost noise. Ω

Introduction to the O'Neill Lit. House

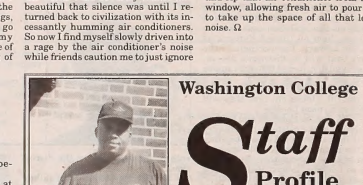
Becky Bryant

For students unfamiliar with the O'Neill Literary House, this is your opportunity to experience indirectly the fruits of the prolific writers; students and faculty alike who labor to produce publications, events such as the numerous poetry / prose readings, and receptions for the varied visiting professionals who are temporarily housed in this structure.

The Literary House, with a welcoming facade of umbrellaed tables, screened porch, and woodgrain walls tempered with bone white paint, is merely a skeleton. Yet within this framework stars the spirited activities of its citizens.

This Friday, September 23, an Arts and Crafts show consisting of original paintings, drawings, ceramics, etc. by faculty and staff opens to the college campus for viewing. The reception starts at 4 p.m. and continues until 8 p.m.

The upper rooms of the Lit. House have been serviced out to non-majors and English majors alike. These four Fellowship rooms foster a relaxed, quiet atmosphere in which to study, featuring computers, bookshelves, and an active cat named Edith (who may stay if you offer her cheese).



Mike Kaylor offers a Literary Press Workshop to students on Monday and Thursday nights between 7 and 9 p.m.

This year's group proves ample at a number of twenty plus students. The unrestricted enrollment has demanded the existence of the two night sessions to the delight of Kaylor. Students are beginning to print their own postcards and future projects are forthcoming. Already, the press has sponsored the bi-annual Washington College Review.

Students joined other like-minded bibliophiles in the Writers' Union. The first poetry / prose reading took place this Thursday at 9 p.m. Taking a break from engrossing lectures on existentialism, these collegians shared cherished verse over eats and drink ... spilling mouthfuls of crackers and e.e. cummings on the unsuspecting nearest them.

Freshmen in both Professors Day and Wagner's Creative Writing classes have begun the preparation for the Freshman Colloquy Sponsored by the Literary House every year, the students choose a literary theme of interest and compose a program of selected works demonstrating this motif.

Check the calendar of events and WacHappenings for the date of this event and many others, including the future visit of the gracious Mavis Gallant. Ω

Washington College

Staff Profile

William Ervin Griffith (he goes by "Griff") is a man who has seen it all. In case you don't know him, he's the big guy that works behind the counter at The Cove. He got the position through a friend who told him the job was open. As part of his job, he has to card Washington students when it comes time to serve alcohol. "The best way to check fake IDs is to quickly ask the student when his/her birthday is, and if they're kind of startled, then they don't know the date they were born, and that's one way to catch them with fake IDs."

He enjoys sports, and works as a 2A basketball official for Bayside Basketball here in Kent County. He occasionally officiates softball in the summertime on both the college and high school level. He gained experience in sports playing baseball for the University of Maryland and is finishing up his schooling here at Washington studying Criminal Justice.

Currently, Griff is a juvenile counselor by profession. In the past, he worked for four years as a prison guard in Kent County detention center and spent time in the military from 1982 until 1987. Griff said that, although Washington students are occasionally rowdy, they're nothing compared to what he's seen in the past. When asked for his official opinion of the students, Griff said, "Overall... they're okay."

He went to college through the military, and says college today is a lot different than what it was for him. "The kids, they're just not as much... what's the word for them? They're a new breed," he said chuckling. I asked him for words of advice since he's been through it all before, and Griff offered this: "You have to be firm, fair, and impartial" which pretty much sums up how Griff does business.

Griff will be leaving The Cove and moving upstairs to the Dining Hall, so if you see him up there, say "Hi!"

Andy's

ANDY GODDARD, MGR.
410-778-6779

443 N. HIGH STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620

Friday, September 30

August West returns to WOW you with Meg's sensational voice accompanied by Steve's tasty guitar.

The Music Department and the O'Neill Literary House present

Beethoven's "Orpheus in Hades"

The Andante Con Moto of the Fourth Piano Concerto.

A lecture by Owen Jander, Wellesley College.

Gibson Performing Arts Center, Room 9, 4 p.m.

Hmmm, this was a good week for music. I finally managed to scrape together the cash to go out and pick up Public Enemy's new album, Muse Sick-N-Hour Mess Age, and the only word I can think of to describe P.E.'s latest production is Punky.

This, the sixth Public Enemy album, seems, to me, to be a bit more hollow than some of their past work. There isn't really a "Bring the Noise," or "Burn, Hollywood, Burn" on Muse. There is, however, the James Brownesque "What Kind of Power We Got?" as well as the more typical sound of "So Whatcha Gone Do Now?" Obscure samples, real drums (it shows, too), and a cast of thousands are the musical trademarks of this album. Unfortunately, it gets bogged down in sections. For some reason, tracks such as "Stop in the Name," and "Live and Undrugged Pt. I and II" lack the drive of some of the other cuts ("Stop in the Name" isn't even listed on the cover).

That's the music, what's the message? I'll have to admit that I'm not sure what to say about the politics of this album. I understand the not-too-subtle irony of my appreciation of the lyric, "The white man's a god complex!" I love it am, cruising along in my truck — long-haired, white-skinned me — and digging the fact that I'm out of being called a racist pig-head with no morals to speak of. These are the politics of Public Enemy. I hear in the voice of Chuck D. so much anger and frustration at being the brunt of the European joke, it should make my palms sweat. But the point here is that it doesn't. And this is what I want to take a moment to consider: has rap lost its punch?

The natural life cycle of a movement, as I see it, is conception, birth, reign, and incorporation. The not-yet-a-movement begins to form in the minds of sometimes separate, sometimes cooperative folks who get together in the pure spirit of "hmmm, now here's an interesting idea ..." Then the fetal movement, having been conceived in the mind or minds of its parents, spreads to other people who take it and add to it, effectively giving birth to a new and mobile (and hopefully radical) set of ideas. As the movement takes on followers, it grows and swells, eclipsing its rivals until it reaches its time of full reign. Now the movement is king of the hill, looking out upon its mighty kingdom with an ever so slightly self-satisfied smirk on its face. It is at this time that the corporate greed-heads get a hold of our joyous and vital movement, wrestle it to the ground, and suck the life out of it by transforming it from an inspiring statement of human creativity into a mass-market fad fit only for cheap consumption. Or words to that effect.

And where does the new Public Enemy album fit into all of this? Well, look at it this way: some of the things said on this album should be shocking. And yet, they are not in the least. Now I will admit that, since entering the collegiate system, I have lost touch with the outside world in general. I don't have a TV, and I don't read the paper except every once in a while. So there is the possibility that some sort of controversy has erupted over the afro-centric spirit of this album and I just haven't heard about it. But I don't think it has. I say this because I believe that, in general, people have gotten used to rap. It has been conceived and birthed and is now enjoying its reign/incorporation. True, many things are happening in the world of rap that are worth noting, and without a doubt the current proliferation of styles that fall within the jurisdiction of rap are testaments to its vitality. But the greatest amount of publicity gained by rap today, it seems, centers around ruinous buffoonery (obscenity charges peppered with the occasional sexist and violent act; not, as we would hope, the forcible questioning of racial boundaries punctuated with threatening sneers at the white racist establishment.

Rap, as a movement, has already succeeded in taking its first steps toward maturity. Compare the novelty sound of "Rapper's Delight" with the densely layered sound-of-the-tracks-off of Muse Sick-N-Hour Mess Age for proof of this statement. It seems sad that no one is scared of it anymore. Perhaps, you might say, this greater acceptance will lead ultimately to the respect that rap as a musical and lyrical form deserves. Perhaps one day Chuck D. will be taught hand-in-hand with Shakespeare, and Terminator X will share time in music appreciation classes with Wagner. But what we must ask ourselves on this, the eve of rap's integration, is "To what end?" To what end is rap made to cast off its marginal quality? Remember what happened to punk when it got too popular? Up sprung New Wave and the pop schlock of the Eighties. A new generation looked out upon the vast feast of western culture and, in my opinion, shortsightedly demanded their MTV. DO NOT LET THIS HAPPEN TO RAP! When the elders try to teach you about your own ideas, reject their interpretations as false and misguided. Refuse to buy back your own creation! If it's too loud, you're too old ... Ω

Drop a Degree

Aaron Pierce

Public Enemy ... Muse Sick-N-Hour Mess Age ... Some Pretentious Comments on a Musical Movement ...

Popcorn & Jujubes:

If this movie were a box of popcorn, half the kernels would be burnt.

A review of Natural Born Killers by Kevin Hoffman

When I went home for Labor Day weekend, I wanted to go to all the usual hang-outs from over the summer: the Newark Arcade, Wings to Go, Wonderland Records, and all the other numerous franchises of Newark, Delaware has to offer. But, perhaps more importantly, I also wanted to see a movie. That movie was Natural Born Killers and indeed I got the opportunity to view it. Twice. The second time I took notes. It's that kind of movie.

For those of you who haven't seen the commercials, Woody Harrelson is Charles Manson Mickey Knox, Juliette Lewis is Ratt Girrrl Malory Knox and together they are: Natural Born Killers. In the first five minutes, Micky and Malory go to a diner off Route 666 and murder everyone inside (and follow it with a romantic dance). Their love is straight out of True Romance (another Tarantino project) which is in turn straight out of Sid and Nancy.

The movie is shown through five different camera angles at all times. There are red tinted and Gameboy-Spinach-green tinted cameras. There's a fast and black-and-white Happy Harry's security camera. There are slowed down cameras and sped up cameras. There are three's cameras to show what Micky and Malory are thinking about, cameras to show what Micky and Malory would look like as cartoon characters, and cameras that show Micky and Malory sit-coms. There are a lot of cameras in this movie.

There are also a lot of Douglas Coupland-style name dropping to reaffirm that we all live on the same crazy planet. You'll see references to WWF Wrestling, American Gladiators, the Superbowl, Frankenstein, Leave it to Beaver, and a five minute perversion of "I Love Lucy" (only it's "I Love Malory" with Rodney Dangerfield as the abusive patriarch playing child molestation and physical battery for big yucks from the laugh track). This works. Oliver Stone is pretty clever with some of the juxtaposition and pulls off the irony. However, I must voice my objection to the thirty second Coca-Cola commercial (the one with the polar bears) played out in its entirety on the big screen! I didn't pay six bucks to endure the same trash I can get at home for free.

Which brings me to another interesting feature of this Natural Born Killers: a lot of it is the same old trash you get at home for free. Sitting down in the theatre to watch this movie is not so far removed from staying at home on your sofa and watching MTV. The movie is much like one two hour long video. The images are flashed at pretty much the same speed as MTV (this movie is an Electric Kool-Aid Attention Deficit Disorder Test), the same bands (the soundtrack was mixed by Trent Reznor), and, with the aforementioned thirty second Coke spot, the same commercials.

Natural Born Killers has been called "an indictment of our media." The man cited for this "indictment" is American Maniacs, a reality-programming television parody within the movie. American Maniacs is hosted by the obnoxious Wayne Gail who is played by the equally obnoxious Morton Downey, Jr.

After the Route 666 opening sequence and the break for the title screen, the movie cuts straight into American Maniacs. Morton Downey, Jr. is doing an episode on Micky and Malory's killing spree. He announces the name of the first victim like he's the next contestant on The Price is Right (Patrolman Gerald Nash, come on down!). This sort of running commentary continues through the whole movie.

When Micky is finally caught by the police outside of a convenience store, a Japenese reporter does a mixed-up voice-over for comic effect: "Micky is quite virile ... Micky is rendered impotent ... " The whole arrest is seen through television screen and when the camera view pulls away and you see the cops bashing Micky all you can think of is Rodney King.

A year later, Micky is in jail and giving Morton Downey, Jr. an interview. When Micky pauses at just the right times for the commercial breaks, Morton can't help but love him. All is forgiven as long as our catch-phrases are catchy enough and our timing is in line with the commercial break. The interview is broadcast to the inmates of the prison, and after Woody says something particularly cool, the prisoners cheer. Again, there are shades of the Rodney King fiasco. Oliver Stone seems to be saying that the media cause the L.A. riots. I believe it.

During the riot, Micky makes a point of keeping the cameraman and Morton Downey, Jr. alive. In fact Micky and Malory always "leave someone alive to tell the tale." This is just a variation on the whole "If a tree falls in the forest ..." philosophical question, but it's an interesting variation involving our media.

When Micky is reunited with Malory, Morton does a report of their kiss, "At this moment they are the only two people on earth. This kiss has been a year in the coming. It's something that people told them they would never do again." It asks the question: Do we need media announcers to state the importance of everything?

After the big get-away, Morton Downey. Jr. is interviewing Micky and Malory. He asks, "So what's next for the Knoxes?" and you almost expect them to say, "We're going to Disney World." They decide its finally time to off obnoxious Morton Downey Jr, so Micky sums up the point of the movie: "Killing you and what you represent is like a statement. Frankenstein killed Doctor Frankenstein." Kill your media?

Overall, it is a movie well worth seeing. At times it's hard to forget that you are the target market, and it's easy to feel insulted and pandered to by the movie. But even with its pseudo-arty-MTV-wanna-be quality, it still manages to say some very timely things about the age and culture in which we live. It should be experienced; even if just to hear the explosion of laughter from the audience as the movie flashes the great exploitation news stories of the year (Menendez, Koresh, Tonya Harding, John Wayne Bobbitt, and, of course, O.J. Simpson). It is kind of funny, in retrospect, to see just how ridiculous a story has to be to entertain us. Ω

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin and Jeff roam Chestertown in search of bargains.

Welcome to "We Get You Discounts!" Every week, Kevin Hoffman and Jeff Frank will brave the wilds of Chestertown and badger local merchants so that you, the students of Washington College, will never have to pay full price!

The target for this week's attempt was China House Chinese Restaurant in the Kent Plaza. This restaurant posed an interesting problem: How do you say "discount" in Chinese? To overcome this possible obstacle, we brought along Song "Joseph" Ham. We interviewed him in the parking lot to get his opinion of the whole situation.

Kevin: How do you feel about being a translator?

Joseph: Pretty good.

K: Now, how fluent are you in Chinese?

J: Not at all. I'm Korean.

K: You don't speak any Chinese?

J: No, I don't speak any Chinese.

K: Okay, we're going to get go in and get some food right now, and we'll see how it works out.

We entered the restaurant.

K: Can you read the menu?

J: Sure, I can, it's in English.

K: I'm talking about those Chinese letters on the side. Is that another description of the meal? What is that?

J: Yeah, probably. I don't know. It's Chinese.

K: What would you recommend here? What do you think would be good?

J: I don't know. I don't eat Chinese food.

After picking out our platter of choice, we went up to the counter to place our order.

K: Can we get a Moo Goo Gai Pan?

Cashier: Yeah, all right.

K: We're from Washington College, up the street. We're doing an article on the restaurant. Is it okay if we ask you a few questions?

C: I don't speak English very well.

K: That's okay. We have a translator for that.

Joseph: I told you I'm Korean. I don't speak Chinese.

K: Oh. Okay. Is there any way we can have a student discount?

C: I don't speak English very well.

K: All right. That's okay. Maybe we can ask some more questions later. Thanks.

To occupy our time while we waited for our food, we decided to interview a few customers, who also happened to be students at Washington College.

K: My name's Kevin. We're from The Elm. What's your name?

Customer #1: Anne Black.

K: What's your name?

Customer #2: Mari Endo.

K: Now, what food are you eating here Mari?

C2: Steamed chicken with mixed vegetables.

K: And what are you eating Anne?

C1: Hot and spicy beef.

K: Are they pretty good?

Both: Yeah!

K: Okay. Do you mind if I get a little sample of your food?

C2: Sure. Go for it.

K: Mmm. That's good. Can I have a little piece of corn?

C2: Sure.

K: Can I have a little hot and spicy beef? Is it really hot and spicy?

C1: Yeah.

K: That's good! I'm going to get a little more of this hot and spicy beef. I'm going to get right in here at this big beef morsel. It smells pretty good. Oh man, that's good! What are those things?

C1: They're carrots.

K: Oh, I don't like carrots. What's this?

C1: It's a green pepper.

K: I'll go for a green pepper!

Our interview was interrupted by the arrival of our food.

K: Can we have an interview with you for The Washington College Elm?

Food Server: I don't know English very well.

K: Oh, it's okay. It's only going to be a few questions.

F: I don't know English.

K: None at all?

F: No.

K: Can we have a discount?

F: I don't know English very well.

K: Okay.

After another failed attempt at a discount, we decided to eat our full price meal.

K: All three of us are going to chow down, our Moo Goo Gai Pan. I'm going to pass the plate over to Joseph and we're going to get an informed opinion as to how this compares to the real stuff.

Joseph: Tastes like chicken.

K: How does this compare to the food from back home?

J: I told you. I'm not Chinese. I eat Korean food.

K: So let me get this straight real quick. You don't know any more about Chinese than me or Jeff?

J: Maybe a little bit more.

K: And you're Korean, you're not Chinese?

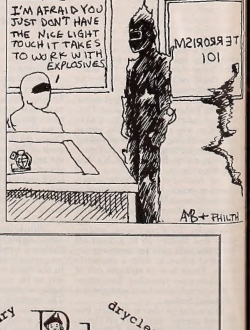
J: I'm Korean. I'm not Chinese.

K: And you can't translate Chinese?

J: Nope.

K: Why'd we bring you along?

J: (laughs)



K: Wait a minute! You're just getting a free lunch out of this!

Jeff: They probably spoke English but they just wanted to pretend they didn't, so they wouldn't have to give us a discount.

K: That might be true, but we got fortune cookies. I actually got two fortunes in one cookie. That sort of counts for a discount! Confucius says: "You are never selfish with your advice or your help." That's kind of true. We're helping the students of Washington College. I believe that fortune is correct. And the other says: "You never hesitate to tackle the most difficult problems." ... like trying to get Washington College students discounts! And it's true, we didn't succeed this time. It was the whole language barrier. But that's not going to stop us from trying again next week. Because we care about Washington College students, We Will Get You Discounts!

HOROSCOPES

Virgo (8/24-9/23) Let your charming personality lead in the hunt for riotous partying.
Libra (9/24-10/23) This warm weather does wonders for your easy-going temperament. Take advantage of the starlit pavement and let it guide you to the fountain of quiet peace.
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) You're keeping too tight a reign over your self-control. Let go of your tenacity for one 24 hour cycle and dance naked with a fellow traveler.
Sagitarrius (11/23-12/21) You seem to have a GOD complex. Stop thinking that everything you do and say is the only thing that matters.
Capricorn (12/22 -1/20) You must gain control of your mood swings. Perhaps we should take you away haha hoho hahum to the funny farm where life is beautiful all the time.
Aquarius (1/21-2/19) Your persistence has paid off! Now you must use your good judgment to plan who you would most like to spend candle-lit moments with in the next two weeks.
Pisces (2/20-3/20) You are way too nice to everyone, harden that backbone. Psyche!
Aries (3/21-4/20) This month's full moon was in Aries. You are feeling confused in areas where you previously felt in control.
Taurus (4/21-5/21) Romance has died like the leaves that stick to your shoes.
Gemini (5/22 -6/21) Obviously you have been pierced because you took the road to nowhere once again. Maybe next time you'll smarten up and listen to what we say.
Cancer (6/22 -7/23) Your friends hate you because your attitude towards life sucks. Take a salt bath to cleanse those festering wounds.
Leo (7/24-8/23) Looking in the mirror is certainly one of your strengths. Primp up so you can take a trip with a Cancer.
by Luna and Ember

Spider's

(Formerly Newt's)

Hillside Bar

Special Draft Night

Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Midnight Madness

Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Must be 21 or older

laundry Park drycleaning

RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

Field Hockey falls to the Green Terrors but picks up its game against Haverford

Nicole Zemanski

Last Thursday, the Sho'women traveled to Western Maryland College to play their second Centennial Conference game of the year. After beating a strong Gettysburg team last week, the Sho'women fell just a bit short to the Green Terrors by a score of 1-0.

"Overall, the team came out real flat," comments Coach Feyerherm. The women were mentally prepared for the game, but when they came out on the field they just couldn't get it together to mark up another win. With such factors as long grass and humid weather, the Sho'women just could not get their game together. Western Maryland played an extremely aggressive game which was the key for the Green Terrors' win. After beating powerhouse Gettysburg, it was a slight disappointment to the team that they couldn't pull off the win against Western Maryland.

On Tuesday, the Sho'women came back with a vengeance and scored four first-half goals against Haverford. The women had something to prove to themselves and they showed the Centennial Conference what W.C. Field Hockey can do. Freshman Nicole Mills scored the first two goals, the second coming off of a penalty stroke. Junior Kouri Coleman added another goal on junior Cindy Matalucci's assist. To finish out the half, freshman Sarah Sobon added a fourth goal with sophomore Marcia Flinn's assist. The Sho'women outscored Haverford four to zero.

Haverford woke up in the second half and made the game close. After Haverford scored two goals to make it a tight game, junior Lisa Athey answered with a crucial goal to put the Sho'women up five to two. The rest of the half remained pretty quiet until Haverford scored one more time. Junior goalkeeper Peggy Busker had a total of thirteen saves for the Sho'women and paced the defensive end. The game ended with W.C. on top 5 to 3.

Coach Feyerherm said, "This game was the best game we have played since I have been coaching the team in two years." Not only were the players supporting each other on the field, but the women kept up the intensity on the field the whole game. "Last year we couldn't buy a goal and this year the team is ready to score and is putting on the pressure," says Feyerherm.

Coach Feyerherm was pleased with the entire team, especially freshmen Mills and Sobon along with sophomore Leanne Cole. "We played our most intense game of the season," states Cole, who sparked the team with her enthusiasm and intensity throughout the game.

"The team is moving step by step as the season progresses and I'm real happy with what we have accomplished so far," comments Coach Feyerherm. The Sho'women have already won two Centennial Conference games this season compared to last season when they couldn't win one. "I think we are going to surprise a lot of teams in the conference this year," states sophomore goalkeeper Stephanie Self. The team is even playing a slightly tougher schedule than last year. The women are making great strides at turning the field hockey program around with a strong defense and a powerful offense. Ω

With style and grace, midfielder Cindy Matalucci hits the ball up the field.

BY JIMMY PESSO

For once, a cut in educational spending that actually helps students.

Macintosh® Performa® 475 4/160, Performa Plus Display, Apple® Keyboard II and mouse. Only $1,719.00.

Apple® PowerBook® 150 4/120. Only $1,239.00.

Power Macintosh® 7100/66 8/250 with CD-ROM, Apple® Multiple Scan 15 Display, AppleDesign® Keyboard and mouse. Only $3,583.00.

With Apple's special low student pricing, you can get a terrific deal on Macintosh,* the best-selling personal computer on college campuses today. You can choose the affordable Macintosh Performa,* which comes complete with lots of powerful software to help get you through college. You can also choose the portable Apple® PowerBook® or the Power Macintosh® — the world's fastest Mac.* And because Macintosh is still the easiest personal computer, you won't have to dig through complex manuals. Plus, with low student pricing, a Mac is as easy to afford as it is to use. All of which makes it the ideal time to discover the power all college students need. The power to be your best.® Apple

POWER Macintosh

For more information visit the Computing Center in Ferguson Hall or call x7712.

© 1994 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the apple logo, Macintosh, Macintosh Quadra, Performa, PowerBook and "The power to be your best" are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. AppleDesign, Mac and Power Macintosh are trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc.

Sho'men Soccer: Win, Lose and Draw

The Shoremen take on Gallaudet, F&M, and Swarthmore in a week's time

Peggy Busker

On a hot, muggy Thursday, the Shoremen traveled to Washington, DC to challenge the men from Gallaudet. Gallaudet is not in the Centennial Conference and the Shoremen have beaten them for the last four years. However, Gallaudet always proves to be a physically demanding game for the Shoremen.

Washington set the pace of the game right away and controlled the ball. In practices all week Coach Helbling worked on possession and switching fields. This was the game in which the Shoremen made their practice pay off. They were consistent and played well the entire game.

Gallaudet packed their team in to play a defensive game early on, which made it tough to score goals. Washington kept the ball on their offensive half. Only 8:52 minutes into the game, freshman Scott Helm scored his first goal of the season off of a direct penalty kick, putting the Sho'men on the scoreboard.

Also in the first half, Tom Hiebler made a high cross in front of the goal and Brian Rush finished it with a textbook header into the back of the Gallaudet net. At the half the score was 2-0 in Washington's favor.

The second half went like the first. The Sho'men dominated and controlled the game. They never let up. There were a few scary moments when the Sho'men defense broke down and Gallaudet had chances at Greg Miller, but Miller came up with two big saves to clinch the shutout.

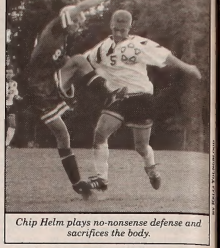
Freshman Kevin Meyers also got to prove that he was not going to let down his guard. With less than twenty minutes remaining in the second half, Meyers received a cross from Andrew King. Meyers charged the ball into the net at the far post, catching the Gallaudet goalie on his heels.

Washington played like they wanted to win and it worked. They were hungry for the win and they put in three goals on a tightly packed defense, an accomplishment of which the coach is proud. Washington outshot Gallaudet 22-2. Gallaudet's goalie, Mark Venz, made nine saves as a result of many Washington shots hitting off the post. The game was a good experience for the Shoremen to play a slower and more controlled game.

On Saturday the Shoremen played conference rivals Franklin and Marshall at Kibler Field. This game was very different from the Gallaudet game. It was a very fast paced game that was evenly matched. This was the type of game that the Shoremen will be playing a lot this season within the conference.

In the first half, neither team dominated. Each team had seven shots on goal, but nothing on the scoreboard. Washington has yet to give up a goal in the first half. The Sho'men terminator defense of Chip Helm, Greg Miller, Tom Hiebler and freshman Shayne Bates are ruthless this season and prove to work better together every game. The midfielders are retreating more to help the team defensively and in turn get the transition game started faster. These tactics are proving to work for the Shoremen.

The offense had the ball around the F&M goal many times in the first half, but could not get many good shots. There were several head shots on goal that just missed or hit off the post.



At the start of the second half, it was clear that the game was up for grabs. Each team wanted the win and it showed. To get the Sho'men on the attack they needed a spark. That chance came when goalie Greg Miller saved a direct penalty kick from an unintentional foul by defenseman Tom Hiebler in the penalty box. This save gave the team a boost. Freshman Kevin Meyers hit the post on a header and got pushed outside the penalty box. Chip Helm took the 18-yard indirect kick and freshman Erik Dahlen knocked it into the F&M net. The score was 1-0 in favor of the Sho'men.

With twenty minutes left in regulation time, F&M were dangerously close to Miller. The ball was crossed and on a two-on-one with freshman defenseman Matt Stroll, F&M player J. Long took Miller off of his post and redirected the ball into Washington's net. The score was tied and time was running down.

At the end of regulation time the score was still tied, so an additional thirty minutes of non-sudden death overtime was played. Again, neither team could score. Washington dominated the second overtime period, pounding the goal with five shots. The final score was 1-1. Washington had its first tie game of the season.

Washington outshot F&M 19-16 and the F&M goalie made two saves the entire 120 minutes of play. Washington's Miller had eight saves, including the penalty kick. Coach Helbling was pleased with the Sho'men's effort. The game was a very mental game and W.C. can give itself much credit for playing hard and never giving up. A lot of good things came out of that game for the Shoremen.

On Wednesday the Shoremen took on Swarthmore, another conference rival. This game was totally different from the game that was played on Saturday. The Shoremen did not come ready to play.

Chip Helm plays no-nonsense defense and sacrifices the body.

The first half was a wake-up call for the Sho'men. Washington put several good shots on goal and appeared to want the win after Saturday's tie. Washington had three shots on goal compared to Swarthmore's eight, and Miller came up big with three saves. The score was 0-0 at the half.

In the second half, the Sho'men let up and with 30 minutes remaining Swarthmore scored. Miller had come out to take the player off the ball. Miller made the initial save and when the defense tried to clear it out L. Cuello of Swarthmore was there to finish it off and put his team on the scoreboard.

Being down by one goal, the Sho'men rallied several times and had the ball in Swarthmore's penalty box but their goalie was never tested. There was not enough time in the game for the Shoremen to score and in the end Swarthmore took it 1-0.

For the Shoremen, there were several beautiful plays in the remaining minutes. The quick freshman, Long Le, had taken the ball into Swarthmore territory and though bombarded by Swarthmore defense still managed to get a shot on goal, but the Swarthmore keeper was there to collect it. Washington's Greg Miller came out of the penalty box to head ball out thus preventing another one-on-one. Chip Helm took the ball down the sideline and had a beautiful cross in front of the Swarthmore net but the Shoremen could not get a good shot on goal.

After the game, W.C. players were very angry and frustrated with their level of play. They now realize that in order to win in this conference they are going to have to get hungry and play aggressively. Washington never really tested Swarthmore's keeper in this game and therefore missed out on a lot of scoring opportunities.

Tomorrow, Washington takes on the conference team of Gettysburg in Gettysburg. This will be a chance for the Shoremen to prove themselves in the conference. Ω Sho'women Volleyball: It's just the beginning!

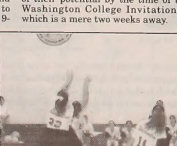
Mariah Geissler

The volleyball team hit the road last weekend for the annual Scranton Tournament. Only the third week into the regular season, Scranton offered the coaches of the various teams a full day of matches to try out different rotations which they will sort out to produce what they hope to be the winning combinations.

The Shorewomen found themselves up against three tough competitors: Kings College, Hunter, and Allentown. The team fought hard to beat Kings, just falling short with a 9-15, and then a 13-15 loss. The team bounced back and pulled together for a victory in the second match against Hunter. The 15-12 win in the first game against Hunter obviously wasn't good enough for the Shorewomen. In the second game, they came back even stronger for the kill, defeating their opponents 15-6. The third and final match of the day was against Allentown, a team that proves to be a tough competitor for W.C. each year. Despite the great effort on the part of the Shorewomen, Allentown emerged from the competition with the win (10-15, 9-15).

Coach Fall notes that the team was "disappointed with the turnout of the weekend. We had a tough pool, but not anyone who was out of our potential," and also that, "we came back with a lot of lessons. We're going to take what we learned and go hard."

The results of this weekend's matches put the volleyball team just above the fifty percent mark with seven wins and six losses. The team has set some very ambitious goals and is ready to fight with intensity to improve their record. Coach Fall hopes to see the team hit the maximum height of their potential by the time of the Washington College Invitational, which is a mere two weeks away.



Michelle Chin, co-captain of the team, agreed with Fall that the weekend did not meet the team's expectations, but she is anticipating a successful remainder of the season.

"We have already progressed further this season than we had at this time last year," said Chin. "We hope to get most of our offense worked out by the end of September, if not sooner."

The Sho'women have good reason to be confident in the prospect of a victorious season. Not only does the team have two enthusiastic co-captains, Beverly Diaz and Michelle Chin, to keep their spirits high, but they also have the advantage of being experienced.

The Sho'women did not graduate any seniors last year, and have gained three excellent freshmen for the new season to help the team along. Emily Kessler, a freshman, has definitely made herself known on the court with 48 kills already this season.

The volleyball team has its first home weekend tournament this Saturday at 11 a.m. against Gettysburg and Muhlenberg. They are sure to be intense and action-packed matches. Come out and cheer the Shorewomen on to victory! Ω

Bump! Set! Spike!

Beverly Diaz cuts a high-flying spike.

Becky Stephens rushes to support.

VOLLEYBALL PHOTOS BY MARIAH FORGE

About Recreational Sports ...

The rec sports program is a strong presence on campus. It involves sports from aerobics to rugby. Will Brandenberg is in charge of the department. He organizes students on campus to run events like the basketball tournament and he organizes coaches for sports like women's soccer. These programs are, in many cases, as strong as the varsity sports on campus. These teams will play all year.

The one concern for rec. sports this year is women's participation. There is competition among the fraternities for an award, the Interfraternity Banner. This can be won by fraternities winning points in rec. sports events. This year Brandenberg hopes to do the same for sororities. Look in future issues of The Elm for scores and articles on rec sports.

From the touch line

Peggis Small

The allure of the pitch is a mighty one. No doubt young men campuses have heard tell of final second goes, cheering fans, and proud parents. And no doubt the legend of the mythic Khorne, the Rugby God whose mercy and appetite shadow even the devil himself and all his hairy-toothed guard. Even more appealing is the classic rugger, the Adonis who, upon seducing his adversaries to quivering shapes resembling jellies, dashes to the arms of a maiden, and then returns to his stately dorm room after quaffing down countless pints to jot out his Philosophy Thesis (which will no doubt receive Honors).

The gore-swept fields of the Potomac Rugby Union echo like mournful bells to Washington College players: Coppin State; Naval Academy; Salisbury; American University. The campaign repeats itself each year: but the young men answer the call undaunted; fortified through a religious adherence to the belief that revelry and weak beer are good for the soul, they challenge the opposing teams teeth-clenched, dugin, and barely reeling from the previous night.

This year opened with our boys facing American University, and although they put up a valiant figlt, had to shrug off a defeat. But the match was not without Washington highlights.

Ravi Jayatileke and his magic boot did wonders kicking for advantage, enabling Washington to drive deep into the opponents' half and no doubt causing emotional and psychological distress to the American players unfortunate enough to be caught beneath the incoming ball. Josh Lawrence made for an impressive figure on the pitch. Standing 6'6", American players crumbled before him, and he soared above all opposition in line-outs, stealing the ball for Washington with near perfection. The tries were made by Craig Flury and Washington College Rugby Football Club President, John O'Hearn. These being the first-ever tries for Flury and O'Hearn, they received the legendary Zulu-Rua, a ritual so bizarre to the average onlooker that one must be of rare character to understand it, and even rarer to withstand it.

To the men who meet the challenge of the pitch, may Saint Jude protect and watch over you; to those who want to stand with these proud fellows, come out to practice (Mondays and Wednesdays at 4pm in front of Somerset), or talk to John O'Hearn. And ask him about his Zulu-run. Ω

Football at W.C.!
The real story from the athletes themselves

Brian Tipton

This year's intramural football league is shaping up to have a very exciting season. This year's league is composed of the Northern and Southern Division. The Northern Division is made up of Theta Chi, the pre-season #1 Goose Lounge, off-campus Phi Delt's, Phi Sig's, and Smashmouth, which is Neville and his rotating squad. The Southern Division is made up of Phi Delta Theta (Steve Bashel and his all star team!), Rugby Phlegm, who hopes to improve even with the loss of Slip "Skippy" Meissner; the Devils, which consist of many freshmen and free agents and Devin "Bad Hair" Brown; and last but not least, Kappa Alpha, led by Andre "the Doctor" Taylor with Ken Popkin anchoring the team.

So far this season has shaped up as expected, with few exceptions. In the Northern Division, Theta Chi and Goose Lounge are in the lead with three wins and no losses. The winner of the September 22 meeting will most likely go on to win the division. In the Southern Division, the Phi Delta team is in the lead with a 2-2 record, coming off of Tuesday's upset at the hands of Kappa Alpha. The Devils recently showed some spark in their overtime defeat of the Phi Sig's. It seems right now that the Southern Division will not be decided until the last game of the season. Ω

Watch Out!
Sho'men Basketball

Peggy Busker

This past Sunday a strange thing happened in the parking lot behind Cecil and Dorchester. The Recreational Sports Department sponsored a 3 v. 3 basketball tournament. Eight teams signed up and played two and a half hours. Each game was played to eleven points. Most games were very close, ending in scores like 11-10 or 11-9.

The talent that was on the courts was excellent. Many people were able to participate because the event happened on a Sunday. This year all the teams were made up of college students. In the past, teams from the maintenance department and the kitchen participated. Maybe this was why the team of Douglas Beckworth, James Alvarez and Jim Czarniak were able to win the tournament this year. But if anyone has been to the Lifetime Fitness Center at all in the last three years they have seen these guys practicing. Was it talent or luck? To find out, come see these guys play next spring in the Schick 3 v.3 Super Hoops Tournament. Ω

POW

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

The men's soccer team has played extremely well during the first few weeks of the season and has posted a 2-2-1 overall record. One of the main reasons for the team's success has been senior goalkeeper Greg Miller. Leading the defense along with junior sweeper, Chip Helm, Miller has allowed only four goals in the first five games, marking the Shoremen's best defensive start since 1979. Miller has made this week's Centennial Conference Weekly Honor Roll by posting an 82.4% saving average and his play in this past Saturday's game against Franklin and Marshall. The Catonsville, Maryland native made one amazing save after another and sparked the team's defense by blocking a penalty kick in the first half. Not only does his skill and love for the game make him shine, but his leadership has also earned him the co-captain's position on the team. Greg has also played an important role in the development in the S.A.M. (Student-Athlete Mentor) program here at W.C. Luckily for Sho'men athletics, Greg will not be ending his collegiate career with soccer, but can also be seen in the spring on the lacrosse team.

This week's Sho'men on the Centennial Conference Honor Roll are ...

Greg Miller recorded his second shutout of the season against Gallaudet and gave up only two goals in two games, one game lasting 120 minutes, stopping a penalty kick against F&M. Miller averages .71 goals a game and has a saving percentage of 86.

The women take over

Christy Bellveau

Thanks to the hard work of recruiting members, hiring coaches, scheduling games, and buying equipment, the Women's Soccer Club is back for its third season at Washington College. I am glad to see the enthusiasm for Womens' Soccer has grown over the past few years. Coached by Bill Griffin, a senior here at W.C., the 18-member team is the strongest it has ever been. Key returning players to watch out for include: Curtia Arnold, Curtina Arnold, Christy Bellveau, Amy Harmon, Kelly Eakin, and Carme Kelly. The season kicks off with a scrimmage against Goldey-Beacom in Newark, DE this Sunday, Sept 25 at 4pm. The team will continue its season with two away games before returning home for the home opener on October 22. Come out and support the Women's Soccer Club. We'd love to show you what we can do! Ω

Meet Roni Threlfall and Kelly Moor, new assistant trainers to Mark Laursen

GOODSON/OLYMPUS M

Roni is a native of Chevy Chase, Maryland, but grew up with her mother and sister in Annapolis, Maryland. She played soccer and basketball at Severn High School through her senior year. In her senior year she had reconstructive knee surgery which, in turn, sparked her interest in Athletic Training. For her freshman year, Roni attended Boston University. For her final three years, she transferred to W.C.'s conference rival, Gettysburg College. She received a B.A. in Health and Physical Education while she trained for all the sports. This past summer, after graduation, Roni passed the National Athletic Trainers Association Exam. Roni has had a great time getting to know the students at W.C. and wishes all of the teams a great year.

Kelly hails from upstate New York. She attended high school at Dolgville Central, where she was an avid soccer and softball player. Upon graduation, she went to Canisius College in Buffalo, New York. There she was an athletic trainer for three years. Last May, Kelly graduated from Canisius with a B.S. in Physical Education / Athletic Training. She returned to her high school to coach modified softball, then moved onward and upward to Washington College. Kelly will be here for one semester. In November, she will be taking her certification exam to become a Certified Athletic Trainer. Ω

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Tuesday, September 27

Soccer vs. Goucher, 4 p.m.
Volleyball vs. Haverford, 7 p.m.

Thursday, September 29

Field Hockey vs. Swarthmore, 4:30 p.m.
Soccer @ Lebanon Valley 4 p.m.

Friday, September 30

Volleyball: Washington College Invitational Tournament
5th annual Alumni and Friends Golf Tournament
1st annual Alumni and Friends Tennis Tournament
Contact Alumni Office (x. 7812) for more information

Scores

Field Hockey:

Washington	0
Western MD	1
Washington	5
Haverford	3

Soccer:

Washington	1
F & M	1

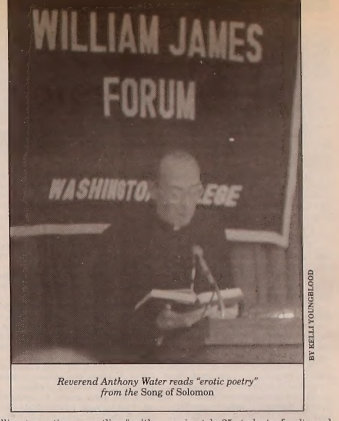
Volleyball:

Washington	9	13
Kings	15	15
Washington	15	15
Hunter	12	6
Washington	10	9
Allentown	15	15

COURTESY OF KAREN SMITH

With moves Karen Smith would be proud of, the intramural football team shows its stuff.

Clarifying the Top Ten misconceptions about Women's Soccer



1. Yes, it is here at Washington College.
2. We do have a coach. His name is Bill Griffin.
3. It's true, we don't have a field, but we do practice.
4. We're mistaken for varsity but we are at the club level.
5. Yes, we did score goals last year.
6. Yes, we do have a strong defense.
7. Yes, we do have real uniforms.
8. Yes, we do play against other schools.
9. No, we did not compete in the World Cup.
10. Yes, we are here to stay!

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Five

Serving the College Community Since 1930

GEOFFREY NOLTE/THE ELM

Reverend Anthony Water reads "erotic poetry" from the Song of Solomon

A cross, a rosary, and a midnight blue skirt

Reverend Anthony Water shares his experiences being a homosexual priest in the Catholic Church

Rachael Fink

Wednesday night parts of The Bible were called 'erotic.'

The Song of Solomon was revealed as a "vibrant sexual celebration."

According to Reverend Anthony Water, a Catholic chaplain, "implied in this erotic poetry (passages from The Song of Solomon) is the whole experience of the divine."

Water went on to quote Pope John Paul II as having said, "Men and women are two different ways of being human."

All of this was in introduction to Water's speach, sponsored by the William James Forum, A Gay Priest Shares his Story. The very personal account that followed was Water's explanation of how the rosary, a cross from a friend and dog tags from the latest Gay and Lesbian March on Washington can co-exist hanging from the rearview mirror of his car.

During the course of the lecture, Water presented several articles symbolic of his life: Christmas figures from his adolescence, a poem written by a child, and a blue, batiked skirt, bought recently and symbolizing not only his acceptance of his homosexuality, but also calling to mind the darkness of the universe.

"The universe is the primary revelation of the divine, not The Bible," said Water. "And most of the universe is dark."

"My experience of growing up in adolescence is about repression of my real feelings," said Water.

Water spoke of having recieved a Ph.D. in repression growing up, and now, "I want to give it back."

Water went on to speak about his coming to terms with his sexuality and "how distasteful my sexuality is to the institution with which I work."

Having struggled with his sexuality for many years, Water says he is "willing to continue wrestling," with himself and the Catholic Church.

Water spoke of "the sorrowful, the joyful and the glorious" in life saying "The glories come only when you are willing to pay the price."

The floor was then thrown open to questions from the audience of approximately 25 students, faculty and county residents. Dr. Edward Weissman, professor of Political Science, asked Water "How can you feel comfortable being part of an institution that is ultimately built not on

See "Catholic" on 3

The reality of W.C.'s alcohol policy

Beth McLaughlin

The consumption of alcohol is a reality on every college campus.

Washington College is certainly no exception.

Every student has somehow come into contact with alcohol. If not actually consuming it, then they have been in the midst of it at a party with friends, or simply observing the poor drunken fool desperately trying to find his/her way home late one night.

Have you ever taken a tour of the dorms on a Sunday morning? Without a doubt we must constitute the majority of the county's recycling.

So it's a fact, so what?

It might be a real good idea to snuggle up with the student handbook and catch up with the consequences of these fun but drunken evenings.

The rules on campus conform to the state laws: no possession or consumption of alcohol under age, no open containers, and no disturbing conduct because of intoxication. All students should note the first line of the policy, "Washington College's policy regarding the use of alcoholic beverages is in accordance with the laws of the State of Maryland and the ordinances of the town of Chestertown."

More than one student can attest to this fact, as they were served citations by the Chestertown Police Department in the first weekends of the semester.

As Jerry Roderick, Director of the Department of Public Safety says, "We are by no means a sanctuary, students must understand that they are responsible for their own actions."

The edges of campus do not miraculously protect us from the outside world; the laws that rule out there rule within.

"Every year we always have a few students arrested on campus," Roderick says. "We want to encourage and remind students what the guidelines are, and if they choose not to follow them, they run a great risk of running into law enforcement."

Roderick adds that he has seen an improvement. More students are willing to comply with the College policy on alcohol and he feels that although we haven't gotten off to the best start, this year will mark improvement.

"We have a certain obligation to provide a safe environment for the students," Roderick says. "The policy has been designed with the good of the individual student and the institution in mind."

Safety is a key issue when alcohol is involved in any situation. This is one of the many reasons why the enforcement of this policy is so important.

See "Policy" on 3

Freshman class profile

A quick look at this year's freshmen

William Denton, III

When I (a freshman) arrived at the conclusion that 'frightening' is the word most commonly used to describe the freshman class, I decided to do some research.

Actually, I decided to do the research after Kate asked me to do this article. After attempting to argue that we were scary in a good way, I complied only after she said, "I don't think the freshman class is scary." I'm going to be a freshman for eight more months; now is as good a time as any to learn to take orders. At any rate, here is some data on the freshmen:

The projected class of '98 is fairly large. While not as large as the class which entered in 1992, the total of 236 is above recent averages. Surprisingly, the current freshmen were chosen from an unusually small applicant pool. The number of applicants this year is over 100 less than the average for the past five years.

Of the freshman class, 54% comes from outside the state of Maryland. We're not that regionally diverse, though — about 70% of those 128 students come from the states of Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, and Delaware. There are also freshmen from Virginia, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Ohio, Massachusetts, North Carolina, New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont, Florida, Alabama, California, and the District of Columbia. Ten international students, from the nations of Bulgaria, Mexico, Panama, France, Japan, Thailand, Turkey, Ethiopia, and South Africa, round out the freshman class.

A total of only 29 freshman students come from minority backgrounds. The percentage (13%) is low, but when compared to past years and other schools, it appears closer to average.

It appears that BIO 101 classes are the best place to find freshmen these days. Of the 196 who have reported their intended major to the Admissions Department, 38 plan to major in Biology, while only 22 intend to pursue English degrees. A total of 65 freshmen anticipate majoring in Psychology, Political Science, History, International Studies, Philosophy, Sociology, Economics, or entering the Pre-Law program. There is also the usual sparse group of Drama, Music, and Art majors, as well as a Forestry major.

One thing about the freshmen—we test well. The freshman class's aggregate SAT scores were higher than any of the past five incoming classes. Almost 90% of the incoming freshmen were ranked in the top half.

My demographics fail to tell me why a worried look befouls the face of every upperclassman Elm staffer upon the mention of this year's freshmen. Personally, I think Kevin Hoffman is giving us all a bad rap. He's scary in a good way, though. ☺

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through ...

the first installment of a two part essay on the upcoming elections by Paul Briggs

3

SGA issue of the week

Is cable a necessity of life here on campus?

4

crud.

Hungry? Jodie has a few interesting suggestions for appeasing your rumbling stomch.

5

Dropped a Whole Degree

Guest columnist Aaron Blake damages body parts to bring you a review.

7

The messenger came with bad news from the town
Said "The phone-lines are on strike and the doormen are all down
They've turned your den of thieves into a temple
They need someone of stature to set them an example"

No, The Elm is not out yet.
No, I don't know where it is.
No, I don't know when it will get here.
I hope that clears up a few things here on campus.
Seems like everytime I make my way down Cater Walk, drop into The Cove for a pack of smokes, or hurry through the halls of Bill Smith on my way to class, every third person I pass feels compelled to ask me where the paper is, and why it's not out yet.

To be honest, I do not always know where the paper is, or why it is not out yet. What I do know is that we (the Elm staff) are trying very hard to put out a decent paper. Some very dedicated people spend lots of time trying to come up with story ideas, tracking down leads, taking photos, and doing everything that is necessary to put out a 12-page weekly paper.

It is not easy.

Especially this year.

This year, as editor, I decided to implement some changes in the process of getting The Elm printed. Everything is electronic now, even the pictures. This reduces the chance of human error, but not the likelihood of electronic ones.

In partial explanation as to why we are having so many problems getting the paper out on time this year, I would like to outline some of the difficulties that we have come across.

The first paper was late by a day. Our printers had us on the schedule for Friday morning instead of Thursday night.

The second paper did not come out for a full two weeks. We missed our press run due to problems with the scanning of photos and the printer. When we did put out the second paper, it was a nice fat one, 16 pages, full of two weeks worth of information and hard work.

The third paper, only eight pages, came out on time. The only reason it came out on time was my insistence on the 5 o'clock deadline, and refusal to print anything that didn't make it into my hands on time, hence the eight pages.

The fourth paper was almost a full week late. Once again, we had problems with our printer. In order to print the proofs that then get transferred to film and finally to newsprint, we have to have access to the internal network at the Cecil Whig, in Elkton, which is where the final printing happens. The net was down. The net was down all weekend. When the net finally was restored, the printer started to act up. The entire thing is getting frustrating to say the least.

As I write this editorial, we are just a few hours from putting the paper to bed, and we don't anticipate having any problems doing so. We didn't anticipate any of the other problems either.

And we didn't anticipate the level of anxiety that the College community would reach when not able to read their paper on Friday.

Each member of the Elm staff is a full-time student, taking a full load of classes and in several cases holding down a second or even third part-time job. We are all trying our best to put together a paper that we can be proud of, that the College can be proud of, and that will fulfill the needs of the College community. Our job is made much more difficult when we are constantly forced to justify ourselves. [illegible]

Putting out the paper is not an easy thing, not for me, not for the editors, and not for the writers. We are trying our best.

The next time you see an Elm staff member around campus, don't ask where The Elm is, ask how things are going, how classes are going, or if they would like to stop by for a cup of coffee and a friendly chat. Smile at your Elm staff, and remember, we are only human, and we are not professionals, but we are trying to provide a service to the College and we are doing the best that we can.

Oh, and by the way, I'm fine. Thank you for asking.

And the people said 'Two and two is four Don't tell us anymore
We all know the score
We must kill the messenger' [illegible]

So if you want to send a message ...

(Lyrics from Kill the Messenger, John Wesley Harding)

To the Editor:

Apathy: a four letter word

Apathy. What a word; Old Mr. Webster — the dictionary — states the word means: the absence or suppression of passion, emotion, or excitement. Someone said to me the other day that the Washington College student body is very apathetic. (Why do people always ask me these questions?) They wonder why nobody ever goes to events that we spend good money on. Last weekend alone there were two events in the Cove. Maybe 100 people attended both — from what I saw. Well, where the hell is everybody? Are we all a bunch of lamos who are sitting in our rooms smoking and drinking every weekend, or are we all just going home and coming back in time for Sunday dinner? Well, I know I'm not in my room smoking and drinking, and I'm not going home every weekend. So I guess we need to take another look at what's wrong with the campus. I couldn't tell you how many times I've heard, "what's going on this weekend," or "where's the party?" and all I hear is "I dunno, who cares, I'm going home this weekend." Then I hear "Oh yeah, something in The Cove, but nobody's goin'."

I think everybody needs to get out of their rooms and go to The Cove. There is a whole campus out there and if you don't like what people are doing on the campus, as in the sense of parties or events, you should tell people already involved. You can get in contact with me. By being a member of the SGA and working for Student Activities, I know we are constantly seeking new advice from the students. Now, the truth of the matter is that all the old drink fests are disappearing and are becoming a part of the past. We, as non-empathetic students, need to realize that there is a plethora of fun things we can do on this campus that don't involve drinking. You can find so many things to make this campus exciting. One must simply get involved to get things done; there are only 800 or more of us around, so we all need to realize that the majority of the student body can go home every weekend and expect that there will be a lot of interesting things to do for the people who aren't home eating a good dinner. College is supposed to be an awesome experience, but it's up to all of us to make it that way; it won't happen if you stay in your dorm, get smashed every night, and not meet other people. It means you have to get up off your ass and take action. People elected last year are trying to make this place more interesting and if you don't like their ideas, go to them and show them what you want. I'm sure we can all work together to get what you and the rest of the campus wants to make sure we all have a good time. Well, like I said, if you have anything you want to see improved, BlitzMail me or send it through campus mail. On the other hand who really cares, just forget it. I'm going home this weekend.

-Ken Pipkin, Senior

Pertinent points to ponder

The hot humid hazy days of summer are finally slipping away like a cloud on a gentle breezy day. The cool fresh invigorating days of fall are fast approaching. With the ushering in of a new season simultaneously comes the beginning of another exciting and challenging year at Washington College. So along with the incoming year, the following are some salient suggestions that should serve to activate the gray matter in the so called cerebral cortex.

1. Totally ignore any recommendations made by the administration of the college, the SGA, and other responsible groups on campus. This indifferent attitude may afford you the opportunity to meet highly influential people at W.C. with a minimum amount of effort.

2. Park anywhere you want. After all, it is a free country isn't it? Nobody can tell you what to do. Besides, this might save you the inconvenience of finding a parking spot by having K & L find one for you.

3. Party Hearty!! Go with the flow. (Especially where beer and hard liquor is concerned.) Disregard the ugly rumors of date rape, alcoholic poisoning, and the nearly 25,000 traffic fatalities related to alcoholic consumption each year. After all, it could never happen to you.

4. Keep your dorm door propped open whenever you can and particularly at night. This may well provide you with an opportunity to meet somebody new and totally far out. It may also give you an experience that might be remembered for the rest of your life.

5. Drink alcoholic beverages in as many public places as you can. This gives you an opportunity to be creative in the way you try to conceal your drink.

6. Try to develop an innovative strategy to apprehend the infamous "Nobody." He or she is personally responsible for most of the destruction on campus. The Public Safety Department really appreciates your willingness in the past to help identify the perpetrator Nobody.

7. Keep avoiding the library on Friday and Saturday nights. After all the library is not the only place to expand your mind.

8. Try to reduce stress in innovative ways. Breaking down a door or smashing a window is sure to reduce stress. These suggestions will provide interesting topics for conversation and they are certain to be big hits.

In the final analysis, the choice is up to you. Of course, with every choice there will be a consequence. Ask yourself, Is the choice being made really worth the consequence that may ensue?

-Joe Gladu

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplon
Arts & Entertainment Editor
Carolyn Fuss
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker & Nicole Zemanski

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Richard McKee, Jr.
Office Manager
Steve Kim
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and Crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or yoursel over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

This Week on Campus

Sept. 30 - Oct. 6

Film Series
A Tale of Winter
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 30
SGA sponsored dance party in Student Center 9 p.m.

Saturday 1

Sunday 2

Monday 3
GALA meeting, 6 p.m., basement of Reid Hall

Tuesday 4

Wednesday 5

Thursday 6

Thinking through...

The elections - What to watch for, part 1

by Paul Briggs

Recently in Washington there was an important piece of political showmanship disguised as news. Some three hundred Republican politicians stood on the front steps of the Capitol and offered a "contract with America." This "contract" basically stated that if given a Congressional majority, Republicans would demand (among other things) an increase in defense spending, a "family tax credit" and capital gains tax cut, term limits, welfare reform and a constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

This is something of a disappointment. One of the better qualities of the Party of Lincoln in recent years has been its (usually) principled stances for the rate at which the government is spending itself into permanent debt. This professed fiscal responsibility has, in fact, been something of a point of pride for them, and a way of separating themselves from the other side of the aisle. But where is it now? Reduce taxes, jack up defense spending and balance the budget all at once!" Either the leadership of the GOP has not learned a single lesson from the massive deficits of the Reagan years, or it believes that the voters have not.

This "contract" is based on the assumption that the Democrats will experience massive losses in the House and Senate due to their association with Congressional performance. This idea is certainly in keeping with conventional wisdom, but it does not bear close examination in the light of recent history.

Consider 1990. That, you may recall, was the year of the budget crisis, when the need for fiscal responsibility finally made itself painfully evident. The inability of then-President Bush and the Democratic Congress to agree on a budget resulted in the federal government shutting down for brief periods. In addition, the S&L fiasco and accompanying scandal revealed corruption, negligence and incompetence at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue. The mood of the public was one of unrestrained fury at the politicians- and especially Congress. This was best expressed by one Jack Gargan, an average citizen who personally paid for ads in papers across the nation, listing the many individual and collective offenses of Congressmen and exhorting the citizens to "VOTE EVERY INCUMBENT SENATOR AND REPRESENTATIVE OUT OF OFFICE!"

The result? One senator and fifteen representatives were defeated. The voter backlash against incumbents tailed off and died at the polls. In the words of Facts On File –

"Many political observers has predicted that a significant number of incumbents would lose, noting that evidence of dissatisfaction with the country's direction had been rising in survey's and that maverick candidates had fared well in several races during the primary season.

"But while only 18% of Americans approved of the performance of Congress, according to an ABC News survey, 62% approved of the performance of their own representatives in Congress. As a result, an increased apathy toward politicians in general did not translate into significant turnover in Congress."*

Then there was 1992. The anger over the '90 budget crisis was nothing compared to the white heat of rage brought on by the House Bank scandal. In the Senate, the Thomas-Hill hearings had enraged a substantial percentage of the population. And, in fact, that year there was high turnover. Over a hundred new faces were in the House when next it convened. This was, however, entirely due to the countless incumbents taking the opportunity to retire or resigning in disgrace, as well as some who were defeated in primaries held right in the middle of the scandal. Of those who ran for re-election and made it past the primaries, only three senators and 24 representatives went down to defeat.

The point is that anger at Congress in the abstract hardly ever gets translated into anger at individual incumbents by their own constituencies. The people may want to burn down the legislative forest, but not if it means losing their particular tree. Moreover, if anyone bothered to compare the mood of people this year to that in the two previous elections, they would probably find the anger and desperation to be far less intense.

Under normal circumstances, therefore, I would feel confident predicting that the Democrats were unlikely to lose more than a dozen seats- probably less. This year, however, there is a difference. There are many House Democratic freshmen from '92 running this year, and freshmen are more vulnerable than more senior members. This adds an extra element of unpredictability to the elections.

There is a way that Democrats could minimize their losses. Instead of going on the defensive and trying to distance themselves from the President, they could go on the offensive and take on the Republicans aggressively. As David Broder has pointed out, the Democrats' own 1995 budget battle most Republican leaders were predicting that Clinton's budget would wreck the economy and increase the deficit. These predictions have turned out to be false, and those made by the Clinton administration have proven far more accurate. This is not brought up in national debates nearly as often as it should be.

In other words, instead of reacting to Clinton's declining popularity, they could try changing his popularity. This sort of thing can be done, and has been done before many times. Looking at the Democrats this year, though, I suspect they're not up to it.

* Facts on File 1990, p.832

From "Catholic" on 1

Peter's rock but on the rock of sexual repression?".

Water made it clear that he believed in his choice to join the Catholic Church, regardless of the Church's stance on homosexuality. He talked of the rightness of his life and his decision to become a Catholic priest and said "I can have more influence hanging in there."

Admitting that he has not yet had to "cross the bridge" of being called to account for this stance of orientation by the Church, Water is adamant about "not giving my conscience up to an institution," and being "a genuine and sincere person," something he does not feel he can do while denying his sexual orientation.

In response to a question concerning the religious right, Water remarked "I don't know if the Church is a relevant institution in this day and age anymore.

He went on to point out the problems with trying to interperate The Bible to account for today's modern American society.

"The scriptures were written in different languages, different cultures," said Water. "The Bible is their (members of the religious right) security blanket."

He went on to emphasize the importance of not letting the doctrines of any organization dictate social and personal decisions.

"How many clergy struggle with their own sexuality or with their own call?" Water asked, continuing by stating that he would not place his religious trust in a priest who had not done just that.

Following the questions from the audience, Water invited the audience members to participate in a ritural of his own making. Brightly colored balloons were distributed among the audience members who where then asked to fill the ballons with something inside a special token to humans; and guilt, an emotional one. The balloons were then released to wizz around the room, releasing all of the toxins harmlessly into the air.

The remaining audience members then gathered into a rough circle and passed around a single candle with the tree of life on the holder. Water asked the audience to imagine that the candle flame was part of themselves, part of their essential person. The candle was passed from person to person around the circle, so as to "share yourself with your neighbor."

The William James Forum will be sponsoring its next lecture on Tuesday, October 18. Captain Mike Dine of the D.C. Metro Police Department will be speaking on the question "Can we insure integrity in law enforcement?" Ω

From "Policy" on 1

College policy regarding use of alcoholic beverages

Washington College's policy regarding the use of alcoholic beverages is in accordance with the laws of the State of Maryland and the ordinances of the town of Chestertown.

The College holds as a goal the practices of responsible social behavior. For students of legal drinking age (21 years or older), this includes the responsible use of alcohol. The College's alcohol policy has been designed with the good of the individual student and the institution in mind.

Under no circumstances, even if the violator is of legal drinking age, will being intoxicated be accepted as an excuse for damage, destruction, abusive or other unacceptable behavior. High among a student's responsibilities is regard for one's self, one's peers, and for the welfare of the College and the community of Chestertown.

All social events need to be planned in advance with the assistance of the Director of Student Activities, Mr. Dennis Berry, and registered with him at least 48 hours before the date of the function. If alcohol is to be served, an "event form" must be completed with will include the name(s) and signature(s) of the individual(s), 21 years of age or older, responsible for the event. A copy of this form will be forwarded to the Campus Department of Public Safety.

Officially sponsored College activities and events

1. At official College events where we anticipate that the majority of those attending would be of legal drinking age (i.e., Washington's Birthday Ball, Alumni Association events, etc.) alcoholic beverages may be served. Food and non-alcoholic beverages must also be available. The sponsoring organization is responsible for developing an age control system to ensure that underage drinkers will not be served.

2. At officially sponsored faculty / student events (i.e., Dean's List Reception, Departmental receptions, etc.) only wine or beer may be served. Food and non-alcoholic beverages must also be served. The sponsoring organization / person will be responsible for developing an age control system.

Social events sponsored by student organizations or by individual students

1. No all-campus event may be held during the week (Sunday - Thursday).

2. No hard liquor may be served.

3. Any all-campus event at which beer / wine is sold MUST be held in Hodson Hall, and all sales restricted to the Deli.

Age identification will be checked at the point of sale in the Deli, and purchases will be limited to not more than two (2) alcoholic beverages per customer per service.

Non-Washington College "guests" must register with the monitor on duty. The monitor, hired through the Campus Department of Public Safety Office, will register guests and check wrist bands as individuals enter the event.

Alcoholic beverages may be taken from the Deli into the event but cannot be taken from the building, and no alcoholic beverages may be brought into the building.

4. Food and non-alcoholic beverages must be available and in sufficient quantity. They must be prominently displayed and readily available.

5. The availability of wine and beer may not be included in advertisement of the event.

6. Except under special circumstances planned well in advance, all events at which wine and beer are to be served must be held indoors.

7. The sponsoring organization or individual(s) will be held responible for the conduct of the event in compliance with state law, town ordinance and college policy.

8. Social events must be held in an approved location and must end by 2 a.m.

Enforcement of College policy

1. Students and / or organizations violating College policy in regard to the use of alcohol will be subject to disciplinary action by the College judicial system as well as local law enforcement officials.

2. On duty Department of Public Safety personnel will be available to assist organizations and individuals in the control of alcohol consumption. The Department of Public Safety officer will assure that the event is over at the scheduled time. Events must be over at 2:00 a.m. (The Department of Public Safety Officer may, after consultation with the individual(s) in charge of any event, determine that an event must be closed earlier than the scheduled time if he / she feels that the safety and security of the individuals or the College is in question.)

3. The Maintenance Department will be responsible for determining whether adequate clean up has been achieved after an event.

4. Any guests attending College functions must register prior to the event. The name of the "host" must be included in this registration. The "host" is responsible for the actions of his guest.

Text taken from the Washington College Student Handbook 1994-1995, pages 16-18. Ω

First full SGA meeting of year

The 1994-95 Student Government Association Senators, as well as Executives and Class Presidents, convened for the first time Tuesday night in the Casey Forum. The meeting, which lasted about an hour, was devoted mainly to organizational purposes.

After roll was taken, the Senators were sworn in and then New Student Life Chair Rob Moran was confirmed. Moran's job as Student Life Chair is to "be in charge of funding the social events of the college."

According to the Class Presidents, the seniors are holding meetings in order to find a speaker for Commencement, the juniors are beginning to prepare for Casey Day, and the sophomores are planning to use the profits from their fundraiser (in which several students sold themselves into slavery for three hours) to sponsor a freshman / sophomore dance. The sophomore class is also sponsoring a blood drive which will take place on October 11.

An amendment to the SGA Constitution was proposed which will change the funding process for departmental clubs. If it is passed, money allocated to clubs will be required to be kept in the clubs' accounts in the business office so that spending by the clubs can be monitored more closely both the SGA Treasurer and the Business Office.

The six Senate Committees (Organizations, Publicity, Social, Elections, Buildings & Grounds, and Food Service) were then filled. It was one of SGA President Jamie Baker's top priorities to get the committees established as quickly as possible in order to mobilize the senators. The Academic Council (one of the standing faculty committees) was also filled at the meeting. This year, the Council will focus on the freshman academic experience. Members will review Forms of Literature and Composition and decide if it should remain the required English course.

Many other faculty committees remain sparse. Several, such as the committee overseeing the Honor Code, have been filled, but more students are needed. Even after sending out a mailer to the students two weeks ago, Baker describes the turnout as only "fair". Once again, if any student is interested in serving on any of these committees, please contact the SGA via BlitzMail, Pacer Forum, or at x. 8500.

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

With many of the formalities out of the way, a few issues were brought up toward the end of the meeting. Improvement of the campus's cable television services was discussed at some length, and support for a bill was fairly obvious. The issue probably will be voted on within the next two weeks.

Security issues were also discussed as they pertain to fraternities. It is clear that many senators support improving party security so as to prevent problems, but there is also widespread apprehension about being regimented to the extent that a student could be denied admission to a party should he / she not have his / her ID card. This is another of Baker's high-priority issues. According to the President, "we need accountability because people who don't go to school here cause problems sometimes."

This year's Student Government appears to lack nothing in the areas of good intentions and ambition. The organization is extremely confident in its abilities and is seeking as much responsibility as possible, determined Baker, "With the leadership of this school in such a state of transition, the SGA and the students could take over the leadership of this school. It's well within our capabilities." Ω

This week's issue: Cable T.V.

It all began in Tuesday's Senate meeting when Baker announced that the Senate should "consider whether we want cable T.V. in all the dorms."

The response to the idea seemed overwhelmingly positive. The proposal, as nebulous as it was in its stage of infancy, met with zero serious opposition. In drafting a bill, though, several problems arise.

In Baker's own words, "we need to find out how difficult it would be and who would pay for it." The general consensus seems to be that re-installing cable in the dorms would be relatively inexpensive, especially considering that the wiring is already in place in many cases.

Another issue is which areas should be connected to cable: should all the individual rooms be wired, or just the lounges? What about situations such as the one in Kent House, which has only one lounge for approximately 45 rooms?

As always, the SGA welcomes your feedback. Do you have any questions or concerns about this week's issue? Do you support wiring all the dorms for cable? Feel free to contact the SGA through BlitzMail, Pacer Forum, or at x. 8500. Ω

Cop Talk:

News from the Department of Public Safety

Paul Bayne

Many rumors have been spreading across campus since the assault outside the CAC on Thursday, September 22. The Department of Public Safety would like to qualm these rumors and has given The Elm an official report which appears to the right. One of the most frightening rumors is that a convicted rapist was released and was on campus. This, as well as many other rumors, is false. Please refer to the official report for further details.

On the subject of campus crime, there have been 22 crimes under investigation since the beginning of the academic year. The crimes are mostly petty theft and malicious destruction but they do include the above-mentioned assault.

Over half the crimes are crimes of opportunity, most commonly theft as the result of leaving a door open or unlocked. Public Safety wants students to know to lock their doors. Students who lose their keys should still lock their doors and just ask an RA or a Public Safety officer to let them in.

Officer Ken Haines says that 22 crimes is a somewhat typical number this far into the semester. Most of the crimes receive quick response and are solved quickly. Haines says that every crime is investigated to its fullest extent, from petty theft to assault. He wants to create "community policing at its best."

"I eat, live, and sleep Washington College," says Haines. "I recognize most students by face."

The Department of Public Safety here at W.C. has one of the highest crimes-solved rates in Kent County. Due in large part to the exploration of new and innovative programs to implement on campus. One of these programs is the uniform policy which is now in effect for all public safety officers.

Another such program under research is a bicycle program. On a campus such as W.C. a bike is one of the fastest ways to get around. Officers on bikes could greatly increase response time. Haines also feels that an officer on a bike is more accessible to the students than an officer in a squad car. It is easier to ask a quick question or just chat with someone on a bike. The goal for this project is to have two bikes and four officers trained for bike patrolling. This program is still being studied for effectiveness. Look for more officers on bikes in the future.

Haines does not want to take all the credit for these new initiatives. He compares Public Safety to a professional sports team. The officers are the team, Director Jerry Roderick is like the front office man, and Haines is the head coach. He attributes the increased effectiveness of Public Safety to the hard work of the entire team. Programs such as officers on bike are just "one more piece of the puzzle" of community policing.

One last note of interest for any skateboarders on campus: Skating is illegal on campus and in Chestertown. If police see people skating they will be asked to stop and if seen again they will be given $50 citations. Three local high school students were issued citations this past week for skating on campus. Ω

Official statement from Dean Mareen McIntire and Director of Public Safety, Jerry Roderick

On Thursday evening, September 22, a local male resident was arrested on campus for engaging in activities which resulted in the assault of five Washington College students in and around the Casey Academic Center.

The incident which resulted in the arrest occurred when a female student, who was walking with three friends immediately in front of the Casey Academic Center, was grabbed from behind by the suspect. A struggle ensued and the victim was able to break free and seek shelter inside the lobby of the CAC.

The alleged assailant was brought into the building by another Washington College student where a second struggle broke out. The assailant was detained in the building by a number of Washington College students until the Chestertown police Department and the Washington College Public Safety Staff could be summoned. Upon their arrival, the suspect was arrested and taken into custody. He is currently being detained at the Kent County Detention Center. The quick response of the Washington College students made the immediate apprehension of the suspect possible and the community owes them a debt of gratitiude.

One victim suffered minor injuries but did not require medical attention.

Members of the College community are encouraged to notify the Office of Public Safety whenever they witness events which affect the safety and security of our community.

National Depression Screening Day

October 6 is National Depression Screening Day. More than 17 million Americans, including college students, suffer from clinical depression. The symptoms, which include a loss of interest in activities, hopelessness, changes in sleeping or eating patterns, irritability, and/or thoughts of suicide, respond well to treatment. Usually clinical depression is cured by a combination of medication and psychotherapy. Treatment is a necessary step. Unlike "the blues," depression is not a passing phase, and people suffering from it cannot be cheered up by good news or a change in circumstances. In any six-month period, 9.4 million Americans suffer from this disease. One in four women and one in ten men can expect to develop it during their lifetime. Eighty to ninety percent of those people can be effectively treated, and nearly all people who receive treatment derive some benefit.

Nearly 200 colleges around the country will be offering free screenings for depression through their health or counseling centers. Thousands of others will be encouraging students suffering from the symptoms of depression to attend free screening programs off campus at hospitals, shopping malls, libraries and other sites in local communities, all staffed by mental health professionals.

Depression is often passed off as the "blues" or "stress." Clinical depression, however, is not cured by the passage of time. Symptoms such as disturbed thinking (beliefs not based in reality about physical disease, sinfulness, or poverty) and even headaches or stomachaches may develop as well. This is a disease which critically impairs one's college career. Get tested for clinical depression on October 6. It may be the most important test of your life since the SATs. Ω

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

crud.

creative ranting under duress.

by Jodie Clark

Fantasies of meat and love

I love meat. I like to think about consuming functioning muscle on a not-long dead animal and using it for my own nutritional benefit. I like delving into a whole Cornish hen. I like to pretend I'm a vulture and the hen is road kill.

There's a slight problem with my vulture fantasy: it's never officially satisfied. Standing in line, waiting for my rations in the dining hall, I often feel like a rather wimpy member of the animal kingdom. What self-respecting omnivore would placidly stand by, ready to consume another's kill? Especially if the other's kill happens to be of domesticated animals. I have noticed that there are no professional hunters anymore. You can't buy venison or quail at the grocery store.

And I'm sure that's with good reason. There are logistic problems. You start selling venison at the grocery store and you run out of deer. You start a "back to the primitive hunt" fad, everybody has a gun, and Disney will have to re-release Bambi as a method of societal ablution.

Of course, none of this would be a problem for me if cannibalism were socially acceptable. Sometimes I see someone across the room and my mouth starts to water, and it's not because I'm turned on — I'm hungry. My stomach growls when I read A Modest Proposal. I feel cheated that I have never knowingly sampled human flesh.

Cannibalism may also help solve the over-population problem. Of course, we'd only eat the bad guys — there are plenty of bad guys to go around. The problem is, bad guys don't seem like they would taste good. They simply don't seem healthy.

In The Power of Myth, Joseph Campbell mentioned that a Persian myth of the first parents claims that when God created total love between parents and children, the parents couldn't refrain from eating their children. Seeing this, he had to reduce the love by a fraction of a degree so they would have more restraint and the race could continue. Forget about bad guys; your taste is for whom you're close to.

Now this is actually feasible. You're thinking: yeah, cannibalism sounds great — I'm salivating. But how can I eat one of my friends without them noticing and getting angry?

What if circumstances (you were starving) required that you eat one of your friends? You'd have fewer qualms about chowing down, especially if your friend is already dead. You'd be sad, sure — but keep in mind, you're really hungry. This is a tragic thought — but something about it excites you.

I suggest a method for realizing these daydreams: Survival Fantasy Camps. Ideally, the camp could simulate your favorite survival fantasy: you're trapped in a cabin in Alaska in winter, for example, no one around for miles. You're with a friend, working together to live, establishing a bond that could never elsewhere be established. And when one of you dies, the other gets to enjoy what few today have: a meal of human flesh.

Turn it over in you mind. Survival Fantasy Camps: the perfect place to take a date. They symbolize total love. Romeo and Juliet would do it. Tristan and Isolde would probably run the establishment. I've always thought that humans had a lesson or two to learn from the praying mantis.

The one drawback may be this: what if humans taste like chicken? To which I reply, well, maybe it's time for chickens to have their day in the sun. And chicken is very versatile — tasty too. Ω

Campus Voices

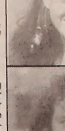
Question by Philip McQuade

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What do you think about the administration's policies regarding on-campus parties?

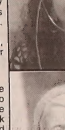
I agree that if you are serving alcohol you should check IDs. Sometimes with alcohol things get out of hand. But as far as registering it, I never really heard about it.

Chantell Jones, Sophomore



First, if they're going to put restrictions, they've got to enforce them equally and consistently; Greeks, non-Greeks, dorms etc. It's part of college life that everybody drinks and we can't help in if we learned it from the best: President Trout.

Mike Bowman, Junior



It's definitely changed since my freshman year when parties were parties.

Stephany Slaughter, Grad. Student

You have to have food? and -- 10 people?! Come on! I don't think people are going to stick to it, you know.

Kristina Carter, Sophomore

I understand the're trying to make things safe for everybody and safe for the organizations, but the social life has really suffered. I remember my freshman year ... it was so fun.

Cleo Patterson, Senior

I think it sucks, because we shouldn't have to serve food and anyone who wants to dirnk should be allowed to, and anyway I'd invite security so we wouldn't have to register it.

Claire Pitt, Sophomore

Club Fair blues:

A list of campus organizations for those who missed the Club Fair

Mindie Kaplan

So you missed the club fair. (Don't worry, so did everyone else.) Now you're being bombarded with millions of multicolored club advertisements. Okay, that works. You see one that sounds good, dutifully jot down the date, time, and place of the first meeting— oops! (The meeting was last week.) Now what?

The Elm and the wonderful folks at Student Activities have provided you a list of all the clubs you are just dying to join. Enjoy!

(If your club does not appear here, please send your club name and a representative for students to contact for inclusion in a later issue. Also, please send any corrections to The Elm.)

Academia

Anthropology Club, contact Jason Truax

Business Writing Guild, contact J. Wright, adviser

Debate Society, contact Student Affairs

French Club, contact Donica Collier

German Club, contact Joe Koskuba

Historical Society, contact Dr. Striner, adviser

Investment Club, contact Jay Wright, adviser

Philosophy Club, contact Eric Dalessio

Printshop Club, contact Mike Kaylor, adviser

Psychology Club, contact Dr. George Spilich, adviser

Society of the Sciences, contact Dr. Rosemary Ford, adviser

Spanish Club, contact Student Affairs

Visual Artists' Union, contact Student Affairs

Writers' Theater, contact Bob Day

Writers' Union, contact Bob Day

Culture / Ideology

Campus Christian Fellowship, contact Renee Kuhnel

Dale Adams Heritage Exchange, contact Zylia Knowin

Gay and Lesbian Alliance (GALA) contact Rachael Fink

Gender Studies Reading Group, contact Audrey Feasler, adviser

Hillel, contact Ilaine Goldsmith

International Relations Club, contact Dr. Tahir Shad, adviser

Middle East Club, contact Jay Wright, adviser

Newman Club, contact Steve Dashiell

Otherworlds / Open Minds Group, contact Bob Day

W.C. Republicans, contact Student Activities

Service / Protest

Amnesty International, contact Jason Truax

Big Brothers / Big Sisters, contact Dr. Jim Siemen, adviser

Hands Out, contact Keith Morgan

Sane / Freeze, contact Dr. Kevin Brien, adviser

Target Tutoring, contact Shawntel Fitzgerald

Terra Firma, contact Andrea Nolan

Physical Activities

Aerobic Dance Club, contact Amy Hanes

Dance Club, contact Dr. Karen Smith, adviser

Ice Hockey Club, contact Dave Kraft

Intercollegiate Riding Club, contact Will Phipps

Men's Lacrosse Club, contact Will Brandenburg, adviser

Outdoor Skills Club, contact Dr. Rick Locker, adviser

Rugby Football Club, contact John O'Hearn

Tennis Club, contact Steve Dashiell

Volleyball Club, contact James Alvarez

Women's Soccer Club, contact Christy Belliveau

PLEASE !!

all writers submit WRITING

(poetry, short fiction, essays, art, photos) to

The Collegian

W.C.'s Official Lit. Mag

in care of Kelli Youngblood, editor. ext 8505 via Blitzmail, Lit. House mail, or Campus mail

Chestertown Natural Foods

"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"

101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1877

Net Surfing

The Computing Center • Macintosh PC • The Internet System • BBS • MUD • IP Dungeon • MUD • IP Address NewsWatcher • Turbo Gopher Telnet CA alt.barnes&noble • Pacer Forum BlitzMail • LegendMud • Broadcast

by Mindie Kaplan

Communication at college can be difficult, especially if you want privacy or have to pay your own long-distance phone bills. The solution? Well, since this is a column about computers, you've probably already guessed the answer.

IRC (Chat is one way for people across the globe to "talk" to each other. It is completely free of charge and can be done from any campus computer. PC users can connect using their modems to telnet to the desired site. Why IRC Chat? Because your "conversations" can be as large or as intimate as you like and you can babble either with a close friend or with dozens of people you've just met. Besides, that private chat with your boyfriend/girlfriend can't be "overheard" by your roommate if you're typing instead of speaking, so the privacy factor is a definite plus.

Some IRC Chat addresses to check out are:

Olohof.BBS.at.morra.et.tudelft.nl 2993

NCCU at sunec.ccu.edu.tw login as guest

address cs-mail.bu.edu

address ucsu.colorado.edu

address ug.cs.dal.ca

address irc.funet.fi

address coombs.anu.edu.au

Addresses that do not end in "edu" are located in other countries and increase your chance of talking with someone from a different culture.

There is also Tele-Chat located at ns.speedway.net 8888 or ns.speedway.net 5010 which offers a non-IRC chat service.

To quote Espen (forum moderation for the ISCA room "IRC Help"), "IRC is a multi-user chat system, where people convene on 'channels' (a virtual place, usually with a topic of conversation) to talk in groups, or privately. Currently, the number of users online at one time is usually 2500+ from countries all over the world."

Once you connect to a server, there are a few things to remember. All IRC commands start with a "/" and most are one word. Type "/help" will get you specific information on the commands. The people connected to the server are grouped into smaller areas of discussion called "channels." Private or secret discussions will not show up on a listing of channels "/list". Each channel name must start with a "#". A "@" before someone's usename indicates that he/she is the "channel operator" and can "invite" you into a "closed" discussion. Some groups, while still "public" discussions limit their membership to specifically "invited" users. A membership to a channel is not permanent and you may have to be re-invited should you logoff and return. To join a channel, type "/join #channelname". To request an invitation to a closed channel type "/who #channelname-channel operator name".

You can also create your own channel for conversation. This is especially useful to create private conversations between you and a friend who has also logged into the site. Type "/mode" to determine who can join a channel you've created. "/mode #channelname +s" creates a secret channel. "/mode #channelname +p" makes the channel private. To set up a private conversation between you and only one other IRC user, type "/query username". Every message you type after that will go only to that person. The system knows that you are sending a message when you do not use the "/" key. To exit a private conversation, type "/query".

For further information on IRC Chat, you can read the forum "IRC Help" on ISCA BBS (bbs.isca.uiowa.edu) or contact the Computing Center. Ω

Dance Festival to be held at W.C.

Laura Hausmann will be featured guest instructor at the 22nd Annual State Dance Festival to be held October 14 – 16, 1994, at Washington College. Ms. Hausmann will teach intermediate and advanced ballet classes to children and adults as well as variations and repertory classes.

Hosted by the Maryland Council for Dance, the festival offers a total of 56 techniques classes: ballet, pointe, tap, jazz, modern, ethnic, musical theater dance, and workshops in improvisation, stretch, mime, and Pilates-based exercise. Ethnic forms include African, Irish, folk, and Chinese classical dance. A showcase performance by Maryland dance companies and a concert by festival faculty and guest artists will round out the weekend. Other faculty include Elizabeth Ahearn, Dawn Barnes, Russell Beaton, Thom Cobb, Steve Greenblatt, Judi Fey, Tensia Fonseca, Beryl Friel, David Geyer, Carol Hess, Karen Katrinic, Dennis Price, Karin Lynn Smith, Xiao Fang Xu, and Mary Williford.

Annual scholarship auditions will be conducted during the Festival whereby outstanding young dancers have an opportunity for scholarship awards based on performance in ballet, modern dance, and jazz auditions. In 1993 the Council awarded scholarships valued in excess of $4500.

The festival fees for the weekend are $50 / students, $60 / teachers with discounts for groups. Showcase performance Saturday at 4:30 p.m. is open to the public at no charge. Contact Karen L. Smith for information. Ω

Arts and crafts fun at the O'Neill Literary House

Jeff Frank

On Friday, September 23, from 4 - 8 p.m., the literary students who usually frequent the Lit. House were replaced by a large number of teachers and other well-dressed adults. The event: a faculty art and crafts show. Several faculty members presented their crafts in displays covering the back porch and a couple of rooms on the ground floor of the house. Among the faculty who displayed their wares were Judie Berry (Basketry), Ermon Foster (Stained Glass), June Foster (Tapestries), Mike Kaylor (Printing and Book Arts), Richard Striner (Drawings and Paintings), and Katherine Trout (Weavings). The Washington College Catering Service catered the show; they served crab claws and mini biscuit sandwiches.

"The food looked almost as good as the art projects on display,and it was free!" said Kevin Hoffman. The absence of the students remains a mystery. Ω

Washington College Staff Profile

This week's Profile victim is one of the Elm staff's favorite people: Faculty Secretary Alison Bergen. A Sunnyvale, CA native, Ms. Bergen became a professional equestrian straight out of high school, then later became educated in the fields of accounting, bookkeeping, and small business operations. In her own words, her job entails "performing comprehensive tasks under limited direction for 27 professors housed in Ferguson Hall."

Ms. Bergen has been married for 20 years and has a daughter, Marilyn, 14. She and her husband also welcome a Brazilian exchange student, Claudia, 16. The family maintains a 750-acre farm and its inhabitants, which include five dogs, a herd of beef cattle, and five Jack Russell horses.

In addition to that, Ms. Bergen also operates a computerized accounting/bookkeeping service out of her home. She contends, unbelievably enough, that she does indeed have some free time occasionally, which she often spends gardening.

GALA

The first meeting of the Washington College's Gay and Lesbian Alliance will be held Monday, October 3 at 6 p.m. in the basement of Reid Hall. Everyone is welcome to attend.

BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442
Off Street Parking Next To The Store
Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm
Ray-Ban patagonia Columbia Sportswear Company REEF Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks Harris JANSPORT ORIGINAL LLBean
10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS
WITH STUDENT I.D.
Barrecrafters Car Racks

Blood Drive

(Sponsored by the Sophomore Class)

Tuesday, October 11
11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Sign up to donate blood!

If you would like to donate blood or assist with the blood drive, please contact Leti at x. 8592 for more information

Dropped Whole Degree

Special review by special guest reviewer

Aaron Blake

Hari Kari and Combines: Clutch shifts into high gear and overtakes Prong

Tommy Victor is a god. Remember that. It will be important later. But I'm getting ahead of myself.

Drown, the first of the three bands to play Saturday night at Hammerjack's, defied expectations. The name kept dredging up images of Smashing Pumpkins, which is not a good way to get my attention. Neither did nor the other two people I was with had ever heard of them, but we were impressed nonetheless. Pounding out a metal/hard-core/industrial sound all its own, Drown set the stage for what was to be a thrashing good night. Drown's vocalist is two parts Henry Rollins and one part Phil (Pantera) Anselmo. Alternating between speaking and roaring, his energy and enthusiasm were echoed by both the crowd and the band. There was little to speak of in the way of guitar solos, but I can forgive the guitarist for that one—he also ran the keyboards. It is becoming safe once again for bands to bring out their keyboards, and both Drown and Prong made use of them; Drown for some techno-effects and Prong mostly for some spoken samples to open songs and to fill in the rhythm guitar that is present on the albums but missing from the live band.

Clutch came on after what seemed an interminable break, and proceeded to bring down the house. Originally from Baltimore, Clutch opened with two songs from their forthcoming album Big News From the Party Boat, due in March. While none of us recognized these songs, our lack of recognition did nothing to diminish our enjoyment of them. The moshpit (and the rest of the crowd, for that matter) truly came alive when Clutch launched into their best-known song, "A Shogun Named Marcus," from their last album, Transnational Speedway League: Anthems, Anecdotes, and Undeniable Truths. "Unique" is probably the best word to describe Clutch's music, while "cliché" probably best describes their lyrics. Take the ominous growling vocals of a death-metal band and lay them over a funky bass line that would do Flea proud. Turn that 33 1/3 Chili Peppers bass line up to 45 rpm, add some almost-but-not-quite-abrasive guitar (with a heaping helping of distortion), and you've got Clutch. But only for a few songs, because Clutch can shift gears with the best of them (no pun intended. Really.). Clutch's lyrics are not cliché in the sense that they are the same thing you hear from every other band. Rather, Clutch builds its songs around the slogans, ads and catchphrases you hear on TV and see on billboards every day. In fact, as we were driving to Hammerjack's, we spotted a Marlboro billboard proclaiming "Come to where the flavor is." This made me smile, since this line is pretty much the chorus to "Walking in the Great Shining Path of Monster Trucks." This song, along with "Marcus" is one of only three songs that Clutch played from Transnational Speedway League; everything else was new. The crowd didn't seem to mind, however, and had a grand old time. One spectator was so into the performance that he pushed me out of the way and climbed the balcony railing, intending to dive 15 feet into the moshpit below. He probably would have jumped had security not hauled him off the railing by his belt loops.

Playing mostly new stuff was a plus for Clutch, since it really let us fans know what to expect from the new album. When Prong followed suit, however, it was a disappointment. You see, their new album has been out for months. Prong devoted 9 of their 13 songs to Cleansing, its most recent album. They opened with the title cut from their 1990 release Beg to Differ, followed by "Lost and Found" from the same album. The band then went on to "Prove You Wrong" from their 1992 release of the same name. From then on it was Cleansing until the encore, where they treated us to "Unconditional," also from Prove You Wrong, and two more from Cleansing.

Now I don't want you to get the wrong idea and think that Prong put on a bad show or that I didn't enjoy myself. On the contrary, I probably enjoyed it even more than the drunk people who ended up dancing on the edge of the balcony, blocking my view, and trying to start their own little moshpit on the balcony. I obeyed Tommy Victor's request and shook my fist in the air for the duration of "Whose Fist is This Anyway?" I got into a serious fit of headbanging during "Another Worldly Device" that left me with a sore neck for the next two days. I think Cleansing is by far Prong's best album. But it's not their only album, and the best way to let these new fans (the ones who came because they saw the video for "Snap Your Fingers, Snap Your Neck" on MTV) know this is to play things from the other albums.

But enough whining. Back to the blasphemous theological statement that opened this column: Tommy Victor is a god. Prong's guitarist and vocalist is one of the few metal guitarists (hell, he's one of the few guitarists, period) who can play innovative music fast and well. With emphasis on the "fast" part. If you want to hear the true measure of Victor's guitar wizardry, listen to "Take it in Hand" from Beg to Differ (if you ask me nicely, I might let you borrow it). Victor is the consummate leader, holding the band together through numerous personnel changes over the years and eliciting crowd response throughout the whole performance. Victor kept the crowd interested by announcing the titles of songs, what album they were from, and what the general meaning was behind them. He was very energetic, running from his microphone to the corners of the stage and waving the crowd to participate, jumping around like a fool, and generally showing off. Victor was so often away from his microphone, in fact, that Paul Raven had to absorb much of the vocal duty. Victor does all the vocals on Cleansing for the first time in Prong's history, having shared vocal responsibility with the past two bassists. Raven, an exceptional bassist who really makes his presence known like none of Prong's other bassists have, proves he can pick up the slack when Tommy Victor forgets that Mike Kirkland isn't around anymore.

In the end, while Prong put on a scathing set with Tommy Victor taking his place as a true guitar god, and I was most pleasantly surprised by Drown, the night belonged to Clutch. So when you see someone beating down the door to the record store some Tuesday in March, you'll know it's me trying to be the first to get my hands on Big News From the Party Boat.

Suggested listening: "A Shogun Named Marcus," "El Jefe Speaks," "Binge and Purge," "Earthworm," and "Heirloom 13" from Transnational Speedway League by Clutch.

"Freezer Burn" from Force Fed, "Beg to Differ," "Take it in Hand," "Prime Cut," and "Intermenstrual" DSB" from Beg to Differ, "Prove You Wrong," "Unconditional," and "Hell if I Could" from Prove You Wrong, and Cleansing, all by Prong.

Anything by Drown if it exists. Ω

Andy's

ANDY GODDARD, MGR
(410) 778-6679

357 W. HIGH STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620

Friday, September 30
August West
Alternative rock duo with great vocals!

Saturday, October 1
Karen Goldberg
Singer-songwriter-guitarist, a blend of Joni Mitchell and Riki Lee Jones

One Night Only
Friday, October 7

Andy's presents

CATFISH HODGE

Legendary Blues Musician
Little Feat leader after Lauell George

JUNTA Minutes

Notes from the Writers' Union Representatives meeting

At the latest Junta meeting, plans for having an author, Mavis Gallant, visit W.C. were finalized.

The dates will be Nov 17-19.

On Friday 18, from 1:00 to 2:30, the Writers' Union will have a tea with Mavis Gallant for a discussion with whomever has read her work.

At 4:00, in the Norman James Theatre, she will be reading from her work.

At 5:30 there will be a reception at the O'Neill Literary House.

More as it develops.

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin and Jeff roam Chestertown in search of bargains.

Hello students, and welcome to "We Get You Discounts"! This is the second installment of our never-ending quest for discount Chestertown products. As you will recall, our last attempt ended in disaster. This time, we decided to go to a restaurant that had English speaking employees. We got a tip from a few seniors that Sharon's Diner might have a sweet spot for Washington College students, and so, with a recorder, a microphone, and Jeff's mom, we set off for the fabled promised land of discounts:

Kevin: This is Kevin and Jeff, and we're from The Washington College Elm. We're talking to the famous "Sharon" of Sharon's Diner. I understand that you used to be involved with Washington College in some way or another, what is now the Cove, is that...

Sharon: We had the snack bar there, Ms. Dee and myself – Ms. Dee being my mom – since about 1954. I grew up there, graduated from high school there, and my son, Cheese Dog, did the same thing, he's about twenty-four now...

K: His name is "Cheese Dog"?

S: Cheese Dog. The kids used to baby-sit for him.

K: How'd they feel about baby-sitting a cheese dog?

S: Nothing. Have you ever seen Cheese Dog?

K: I've seen a cheese dog; I'm not sure if it's the same one you're talking about.

S: He weighs three hundred pounds, he has a Bronco...

K: That's a big cheese dog!

S: They named him Cheese Dog because he used to run past the grill and say he wanted a hot dog. There was one boy in particular, who was Theta Chi, and he always ate cheese dogs. So then Phil picked up, "I wanna cheese Dog!" So we fixed a cheese dog for him, and he wouldn't eat the cheese; he'd take the cheese off and say, "I don't like that." So, all the kids started calling him Cheese Dog because that's all he knew how to say.

K: This is Jeff's mom. She's present with our interview right now. She probably has a few questions to ask Sharon to see if Jeff is getting the same kind of good treatment that he gets at home.

Jeff's mom: Does Jeff come in here often?

S: I really don't recognize him. Once I know his name the first time, it'll be like anybody else, I won't forget it. I always remember kids. We used to have charges at the snack bar. We had seventy-five percent of the kids on charges, and I can tell you kids that sent me bad checks twenty, thirty-five years ago. And I can tell you the ones that have charges that were never paid...

K: What do you think of their mothers?

S: Their mothers? That all depends. Sometimes the kids are like their mothers. Sometimes they're like their fathers. I always get to know the parents before I let the kids charge, and I had a personal contact with the parents at all times, and if I thought there was anything going on with them, I'd call them and let them know about it.

K: Now, Ms. Frank, would you be upset at all if Sharon started acting like a surrogate mother for Jeff?

Mom: No, as long as he didn't bring Sharon home on weekends.

K: What if there was a, you know, a custody battle or something? And Sharon actually tried to take Jeff from you. What would you do in that situation?

Mom: I'm sure I would probably lose the battle and Jeff would stay with me.

K: Has a situation like that ever come up, Sharon? Where you like a kid so much, you kind of want to adopt him?

S: We've had several kids live with Ms. Dee. We've had several students come and live with my husband and myself.

K: If someone had a problem with their roommate maybe, do you think they could come shack up at your place for a little while until the thing blew over?

S: Well, I don't know so much about that, but if they were having a problem with their roommate...

K: Maybe Cheese Dog could come and straighten them out?

S: Maybe that might happen. All depends on what kind of roommate it is. Sometimes they're not made in heaven, and they need to be straightened out a little bit after they've been there a month or two.

K: Now, if a student were running low on money, for instance: maybe Jeff's mom forgot to send Jeff his weekly allowance, or something like that. Is there anyway you can offer, like, a discount or something to the students of Washington College, to help in that situation?

S: Okay, we didn't have discounts. Our food is as cheap as anywhere around town.

K: So, there's no special treatment for Washington College students?

S: No, we just treat them as I would treat my son.

K: And no discounts at all?

S: Discounts! Ah, there might be discounts. We're talking about running a special ad for the college students.

K: Oh, I'm interested in this. So what will happen here?

S: I don't know. It all depends on what the kids like. I haven't been there for two years; I don't know exactly what they like.

K: I'll tell you a secret — the kids like discounts. I know that from experience. So you're looking to place an ad in The Elm ... and a part of that might actually be a discount for the Washington College students? What kind of discount are we talking here? Are we talking ten percent or...

S: I don't know. That's something that we'll have to talk over.

K: So, we're looking at maybe ... probably getting a discount at this point. We are getting a discount?

S: Yes.

K: Alright! Let's hear it for Sharon! How's that make you feel Ms. Frank, as Jeff's mom, knowing that he'll be able to get some home cooking at a good price?

Mom: I'm pleased. I'm pleased. I hope they call it the Kevin and Jeff discount.

K: I don't care what it's called, as long as I get the discount.

Tune in next week, same Elm-time, same Elm-channel, for more politically correct and socially sensitive discount fun with Kevin and Jeff, your discount buddies. Ω

HOROSCOPES

Libra (9/24-10/23) — "Cunning is what counts in life." Tell your friend's roommate you saw them masturbating and screaming your name.

Scorpio (10/24-11/22) — Your friends were talking about you over their soup. Now even Miss Betty knows about your inflated ego.

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) — Life makes a lover or friend of yours a narcissus pool; "you do not want anyone else once you have learnt what you are; there is no more to learn."

Capricorn (12/22-1/20) — You want to share with someone your pleasure in being alone: "this is the paradox of any happy solitude."

Aquarius (1/21-2/19) — Buying your gruesome cyclops mask now is premature. Be spontaneous this time. Use Devil's Night remnants to make up your costume.

Pisces (2/20-3/20) — Being vague about your love relationship makes you feel more like it's true love unrequited but if you don't do anything about it you can forget any candlelit beach blanket talks.

Aries (3/21-4/20) — "You can't wind back the clock that sits grinning on the marble shelf. You can't even smash its face in and forget it."

Taurus (4/21-5/21) — You deserve every dollar from your last pay check. Take a trip to Tower Records and see a movie while you're at it.

Gemini (5/22-6/21) — Your creative spirit is dying for attention. If you don't write then borrow some crayons.

Cancer (5/22-7/22) — Nobody knows why you get as "fed-up as you do." Accept the next compliment you get with grace instead of sarcasm.

Leo (7/23-8/23) — "The only thing between you and hell is the floor." Moderation is the key word for Friday night.

Virgo (8/24-9/23) — Don't be a piece of furniture against a wall in a dark room. Light a candle so people can see your drawers.

by Luna and Ember

BROADSIDES

is accepting submissions of poems, prose poems, and short stories (up to one page in length) for publication. Submission is open to any W.C. undergraduate.

All published works are entered in the Poetry Postcard Contest for Fall 1994. The three winning student works (as judged by a professional poet) are to be published as hand-set postcards at the Lit. House Press by Mike Kaylor. Submissions should be sent by campus mail, Lit. House mail, Blitzmail, or any other mail to Katie Degentesh.

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

Spider's
(Formerly Newt's)
Hillside Bar
Special Draft Night
Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Midnight Madness
Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Must be 21 or older

Miller saves Soccer from certain death

Matt Murray

In 1991, Washington College finished a dismal men's soccer campaign with a 1-13-1 record.

One of the only highlights of 1991 was a freshman goalie named Greg Miller who saved 129 shots during the course of the 15-game season.

Three years later, Washington has become a contender in the Centennial Conference. In 1993, the Shoremen completed a strong fall with a 7-9-3 mark — and Miller was instrumental in the team's success.

"He was our M.V.P.," head coach Todd Helbling said. "He was a big part of last year, and he played well all year."

At the conclusion of the 1993 season, Miller was honored as one of the best players in the conference when he was named to the All-Conference second team for a year in which he boasted a 1.48 goals against average and an 81.8 save percentage. In one of the toughest soccer conferences in the country, Miller made 72 saves, while only allowing 17 goals in conference matches — a 1.76 goals against average.

Miller is once again leading his team. He has made 38 saves while allowing only seven goals, and his clutch play has held several strong teams in check. His save against a penalty kick in the Franklin & Marshall game preserved a tie with one of the conference's powerhouses.

But even with all of his success on the soccer field, Miller has followed a strange road to collegiate stardom. The senior did not plan to play soccer in college. It just kind of happened that way. A two-sport star at Catonsville High School, Miller arrived at Washington College in 1991 with the dream of playing NCAA lacrosse for a perennial contender.

"I decided that I was just going to play fall lacrosse my freshman year so I could start learning the system," Miller said. "But I was just walking past coach Helbling's office one day, and we started talking, and the next thing I knew, I had a laundry bag and a locker, and I had to go home to get my soccer stuff."

Said Helbling: "We only had like eight returning guys, and I was just going through the admissions list, looking for anybody who had an interest in soccer. We only had one goalie, and I decided to just ask Greg and give it a shot.

Three years later, Miller has not only succeeded on the lacrosse field, but he has been a three-time letter winner and two-time Most Valuable Player for the Washington soccer team.

The 1991 season was a baptism by fire for the freshman. Named the starting goalie the fifth game of the season, Miller played on an undermanned squad in Helbling's first year as head coach.

Miller proved how well he could play at Haverford College on October 30. Facing a highly regarded Haverford team, Miller made 28 saves for the Shoremen in a losing effort.

With Miller's first season behind him, he was excited about returning for his sophomore year.

"Once I was on the team, I didn't even think about [not returning]," he said. "My last game in high school, I lost in a shootout in a playoff game, and after that I decided to hang them up. But I missed soccer, so once I started playing, I came back."

However, Washington had a different look in 1992, as 40 players tried out for the team. After a year as Washington's savior, Miller found himself fighting for the starting job. He ended up splitting time throughout the season with highly touted freshman Bill Riegel out of Liberty High School.

"No one likes to sit the bench," Miller said. "I didn't like it, but I accepted it."

Miller played in 13 games in 1992, making 114 saves, while allowing 29 goals. In short, his sophomore season didn't live up to expectations.

"Miller didn't play as well sophomore year," Helbling said. "There was a freshman goalie who was clearly as good as Greg from a technical standpoint. And when you get into a platoon system, the negative side is that neither player plays as well as they're capable of."

In April of his sophomore year, Miller's athletic career took a turn for the worse when he suffered a back injury on the lacrosse field.

"The neurosurgeon told me I was done playing collegiate athletics, period, and that my best option was surgery," Miller said.

But after extensive therapy over the summer, he returned to play in all 19 games in 1993. Riegel transferred after the 1992 season, leaving the door open for Miller to start every game. However, sophomore Chris Downs was ready to relieve Miller should his back injury become a problem.

"I wasn't sure what to expect because I didn't know if I would go out there the first day and dive on it — and bang, over," he said. "I didn't even buy my goalie gloves until after the first week because I didn't want to spend $80 for nothing."

Miller's back ailment did not return during the soccer season. His four shutouts included a 0-0 tie with rival Haverford, and he earned All-Conference second team honors despite the injury.

"It was a big deal [to be named All-Conference]," he said. "I didn't think I was the best goalie in the conference because I definitely am not a technically-correct or graceful keeper.

"But I don't compare myself to other goalies, and I don't even read the box scores the next day unless I had a really good game."

Despite Washington's sluggish 3-4-1 start in 1994, Miller is excited about what lies ahead for the rest of the season.

The record is also deceiving, as it includes losses to perennial powers Gettysburg, Muhlenberg, and Swarthmore — three games in which Miller allowed only five goals.

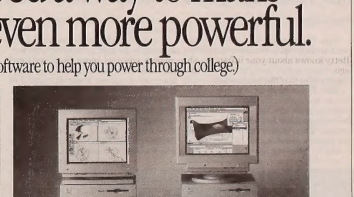
"I'm just going out there having fun," he said. "I don't expect to win the National Championship, but I'd love to just go .500."

In his fourth year as a starter, the goalie with a 3.0 cumulative grade point average only wants a few things out of this season.

"I want to win, and I want to play well," he said. "I want to beat as many conference opponents as I can — I'd love to beat a Gettysburg or a Haverford."

Miller has impressed Helbling with his hard work and competitiveness.

"He goes out to play, and he goes out to compete," Helbling said. "Greg works hard in practice, and he's got the right attitude.



"When he gives up a goal in a game, he's upset. When he steps on the field, he's all business." ❑

We've just developed a way to make Power Macintosh even more powerful.

(Buy one now, and we'll throw in all this software to help you power through college.)

ClarisWorks and the Apple Student Resource Set included when you buy the Power Macintosh computers in the ads.

Power Macintosh 7100/66 w/210, Macintosh Color Display, AppleDesign® Keyboard and mouse. Only $2,156.00. Or about $35 a month.†

Power Macintosh 7100/66 w/230 with CD-ROM, Apple® Multiple Scan 15 Display, AppleDesign® Keyboard and mouse. Only $2,383.00. Or about $39 a month.†

Not only is the world's fastest Macintosh® computer available at special low student prices, but now it includes a student software set available only from Apple. For a limited time, buy a select Power Macintosh® and you get software that helps you through every aspect of writing papers, a personal organizer/calendar created for your student lifestyle and the Internet Companion to help you tap into on-line research resources. Plus you'll get ClarisWorks, an integrated package with a word processor, database, spreadsheet and more. Buy a select Power Mac® with CD-ROM, and you'll also get a multimedia library of essential reference tools. It all comes with Power Macintosh — the computer that grows with you from college to the professional world. And now, with an Apple Computer Loan, it's easier than ever to own one. It's the power every student needs. The power to be your best.

Apple

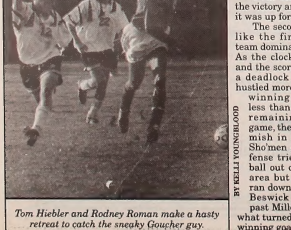
For more information visit the Computing Center in Ferguson Hall or call x7712.

Offer expires October 31, 1994, available only while supplies last. © 1994 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the Apple logo, Macintosh and "The power to be your best" are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. AppleDesign, Power Mac and Power Macintosh are trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. ClarisWorks is a registered trademark of Claris Corporation. †An estimate based on an Apple Computer Loan of $2,261.00 for the Power Macintosh 7100/66, and $2,501.00 for the Power Macintosh 7100/66 with CD-ROM (rates shown above. Prices and loan amounts are subject to change without notice. See your Apple Campus Reseller or representative for current system prices. A 5.5% loan origination fee will be added to the requested loan amount. The interest rate is variable, based on the commercial paper rate plus 3.5%. For the month of August 1994, the interest rate was 11.19%, with an APR of 11.36%. 8-year loan term with no prepayment penalty. The monthly payment shown assumes no deferment of principal or interest. Students may defer principal payments up to 4 years, or until graduation. Deferment will change your monthly payments. The Apple Computer Loan is subject to credit approval.

Sho'women triumph on home court

Mariah Geissler

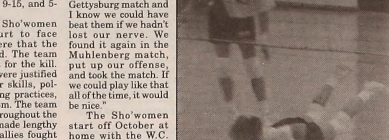
This past Tuesday night, the ringing of the victory bell echoed across campus, signifying the volleyball team's triumph over Haverford. Despite the ups and downs of their early season matches, it seems as if the Shorewomen are ready to take off. This victory against Haverford proves that they have kept up their level of play since the well-fought battle this weekend against Gettysburg and Muhlenberg.



A great transformation occurred during this weekend's matches. Washington met both of its competitors with a great fury of intensity. Throughout the five hour span of play, the team's ardent focus was at a level and duration that has not been matched in previous games this season. As in past years, Muhlenberg and Gettysburg brought out highly-skilled and determined teams to engage in a day of stiff competition. The Sho'women went for four out of a possible five games against both teams.

W.C. started off hot against Gettysburg in the first game. Each player contributed both her energy and skill to defeat Gettysburg with the score of 15-12. Unfortunately, the strong start did not lead to a win. Throughout the sixty stages of the games, Gettysburg and Washington kept the score closely tied. Despite Washington's efforts, Gettysburg took the match. The final scores of the games were 15-12, 3-15, 9-15, and 5-15.

After a break, the Sho'women came out on the court to face Muhlenberg. It was here that the transformation occurred. The team came together and went for the kill. All of their past efforts were justified as they drew from their skills, polished by the hours of long practices, and all of their enthusiasm. The team kept their momentum throughout the entire game which was made lengthy by the numerous long rallies fought out between the teams. Washington held up well against the heavy, hard serves dealt out by Muhlenberg College with their strong defense. The match results (15-10, 15-9, 5-15, 15-10) indicate the intensity that was brought onto the court. Muhlenberg dealt out quite an attack, but Washington by this point had found their rhythm and fought back to win the match.



Several players commented on the change in the chemistry on the court between the two matches. Beverly Diaz, co-captain of the team, commented, "We finally clicked this weekend. We had a bit of trouble in the Gettysburg match and I know we could have beat them if we hadn't lost our nerve. We found it again in the Muhlenberg match, put up our offense, and took the match. If we could play like that all of the time, it would be nice."

The Sho'women start off October at home with the W.C. Invitational. The team will be playing on both Friday night and Saturday morning against a difficult pool of teams. The tournament begins at six o'clock on Friday and eleven on Saturday. Ω

Tom Hiebler and Rodney Roman make a hasty retreat to catch the sneaky Goucher guy.

PHOTO BY KELLY PICKERING

Courtney Myers sacrifices the body by saving the ball for W.C. Emily Kessler provides support

PHOTO BY KELLY PICKERING

Field Hockey comes away with another one

Defense sparks Sho'women this weekend

Nicole Zemanski

The women's field hockey team traveled to Drew University and FDU-Madison to play in back to back games this weekend. Going into the weekend, the Sho'women knew they had to face some tough competition, especially from Drew, who made it to the NCAA Field Hockey Playoffs last season, but they were not going to let this get in their way.

The women came out pumped up in the first half and put the pressure on Drew from the beginning. After only two minutes of play, Washington College was on the board when freshman Sarah Sobon assisted freshman Nicole Mills for the only score in the first half. The Shorewomen constantly put pressure on Drew's defense while playing their game throughout the entire half. Coach Sarah Feyerherm commented, "I feel as though we played a better first half than Drew did."

Drew came out strong in the second half and put pressure on our defense the entire second half, but the Shorewomen maintained their ground. In the second half alone, Drew had twenty-three cornershots compared to Washington's five. Drew didn't score until there was 8:30 left in the game. After regulation time had ended, the Sho'women had to go into overtime in which the teams were still battling it out to score. After overtime ended, a double overtime was played with neither team scoring. The two teams ended in a deadlock tie, 1-1. Coach Feyerherm stated, "The defense was excellent once again and the team is feeling confident that they can score this year as opposed to last season."

Junior goalkeeper Peggy Busker and junior Shannon Metcalf really stepped up on defense and had many key saves. Busker had thirty-two saves in the game, one shy of the Washington College school record. Coach Feyerherm said, "Peggy played out of her mind during the Drew game

See "Field Hockey" on 11

Soccer 0-3-1 in Conference, 2-4-1 overall

After some tough games in the conference, the Shorewomen begin to play harder and it is paying off.

Peggy Busker

The Shoremen had two home matches this week. On Saturday they took on Gettysburg. This year Gettysburg soccer is eighth in the region and third in the conference.

The Sho'men were coming off of the loss to another Conference leader, Swarthmore. In that game the Shoremen did not play up to their potential. The Shoremen considered that game a wake-up call. If they want to win in this conference they will have to play every team very hard and to the fullest.

Saturday, the team came out hard and ready to notch their first conference win. The young team played hard for forty-five minutes. Twenty minutes into the game Washington found the weakness in Gettysburg's defense and scored. The junior from Seaford, DE., Brian Rush got the ball past the Gettysburg goalie and into the net. Freshman Eric Dahlen from Pasadena, MD had the assist. This was Rush's third goal of the season.

Washington's lead was short lived Several minutes later, Gettysburg's Milne fired a shot past Washington's Greg Miller.

The game was tied 1 - 1 at the half.

Both teams wanted the victory and at the half it was up for grabs.

The second half went like the first. Neither team dominated the field. As the clock wore down and the score was still at a deadlock both teams hustled more to score the winning goal. With less than ten minutes remaining in the game there was a skirmish in front of the Sho'men goal. The defense tried to get the ball out of the danger area but as the clock ran down Gettysburg's Beswick got the ball past Miller and scored what turned out to be the winning goal.

Both teams played with skill and confidence. Washington was outshot by only one, 13-12. Both goal keepers came up with six big saves.

Coach Todd Helbling was pleased with the effort. He and the Assistant coach Chris Dax agree that the team adjusted well to new things in the game. An extra forward was added in the lineup to add more offense to the defensively sound team. Brian Rush had to leave the game due to an injury to his knee, causing more changes. The coaches are also still excited for the young talent they have on this year's team. With each game they see improvement from the entire team.

Freshman Scott Helm feels that the team is improving. "They played better against Gettysburg then they did their first couple of games, 'said Helm. "We still have a couple of mental lapses that cost us the game." But as the coach and the team feels, they are improving with every game. The team is beginning to peak in their season. They have played some of their toughest conference games and they are still a force to be reckoned with.

Goucher experienced the Shoremen force on Tuesday. The Shoremen were down two starters for this non-Conference match-up. Brian Rush was still on injured reserve from the Gettysburg game, Andrew King came out of the game early because of illness, and Shayne Bates was hurt early in the game as well. Nonetheless, the Shoremen came out strong.

With only eight minutes off the clock, freshman Long Le cashed in on an assist from freshman Rodney Roman. Le's shot was from the top corner of the goal box. Several minutes later at the other end of the field, Goucher's Roye Radcliffe shot from nearly the same spot as Le and had the same result. Miller had two saves in the first half. The score was tied at the half.

In the first ten minutes of the second half freshman Scott Helm scored his second goal of the season. Junior Yoseph Bekele passed him the ball at the top of the penalty box and Helm did not hesitate; the ball was in the back of the Goucher net. Washington had the lead 2-1.

After Washington scored their second goal, they relaxed a little and played more evenly with Goucher. When the clock had run out the Shoremen were ahead.

It was good for Washington to have a close victory. The team still did not play 90 minutes of their best soccer but the quality did improve. There was better shot selection on the Goucher goal and solid defense. Washington was outshot 24-15, but many of the Goucher shots were in the second half and not directly on goal. Miller had eight saves to Goucher Ian Kaplan's nine.

Freshman Rodney Roman was pleased. "It was the first game that we finally capitalized on our chances and had two great finishes," he said. His feelings also reflect those of the Coaches.

The Shoremen's next Conference match is this Saturday at 1:30 at home against Ursinus. Like all other Conference matches the team will have to be hungry and play hard. Ursinus is 1-2-0 in the conference. This leaves the game wide open for Washington and the coaches are optimistic about the game. Helbling says, "The team has to make their own breaks." Ω

Softball takes first at Loyola tournament

Povloski leads team towards unbeaten status

Joni Heath

After two and a half weeks of offseason, nonconditional Fall Ball, the Sho'women softball team traveled to Harford Community College to play in the Loyola College Annual Greyhound Double Elimination Tournament this past Saturday. Among the other teams participating in the tournament were Loyola College, the Naval Academy, Harford Community College, Anne Arundel Community College, and Catonsville Community College.

After arriving and warming up, the Sho'women began their winning spree against Loyola College, defeating the team in quick 5 innings, 11-1. Bridget Maloney (North Dorchester High), one of the new freshman joining the team this year, pitched an amazing first game, allowing only 4 hits from the club team.

Immediately after that game, they notched fields for their second game. This one was against Anne Arundel Community College, whom they had faced the previous week in a split double-header at Washington College. The game turned into a fierce battle, with Washington winning 6-5. Sophomore Amy Povloski pitched the game, allowing the team 11 hits, but herself hitting 2 for 3, with 3 runs. Catcher Nicole Zemanski had a total of 3 put-outs behind the plate, including 2 long throws to second base to stop attempted steals.

After this victory, the team had the next two games off to relax, eat lunch, and watch their competition. Finally, they faced Anne Arundel again in the championship game. It was another strong game on both parts, with the Sho'women defeating Anne Arundel once again in a 6-3 victory, making it Povloski's second outstanding game on the mound.

Coach Lanee Cole remarks, "In the last inning of the championship game, Anne Arundel batters were still guessing at what speed the ball was coming in." Zemanski had another breath-taking put-out behind the plate as she pushed the umpire out of the way, diving to catch a pop-up foul.

Zemanski remarked, "After three years of playing softball at W.C., I feel as though the team completely came together in all aspects of the game with everyone contributing to the victories. Whenever we needed to get out of the inning or needed to score an extra run, someone came through and pushed us ahead."

Gina Coco, another new freshman, from Westminster, MD, agreed that the team played extremely well together after only 2 weeks of practice. Coco had a total of 4 RBI's for the two games she played, two of which came off of an impressive sacrifice bunt. She is very optimistic about the upcoming spring season.

Tara Rathel, the lone senior on the team, said, "It meant so much to me to finally have the team on the winning side, after so many years of the softball team not being very successful." Rathel is a fine example of each girl's contribution to the victory, as she switched positions Saturday, playing second base instead of her usual third base and shortstop positions.

All in all, Coach Cole agreed and added these comments. "It was a great moral victory for the team as well as for Washington College." She feels that everyone contributed to the success of the Sho'women. The team played nearly error-free for all three games, and the players really gelled together on the field. Offensively, Coach Cole feels the team really pounded the ball, hitting .392 for the tournament.

The Sho'women left the tournament undefeated and were awarded an impressive trophy. Amy Povloski was named the Most Valuable Player by the awards committee due to her outstanding efforts in all three games. What a fantastic way to end the offseason. Ω

Tennis off to great start

Peggy Buskor

Did you realize that last Monday the Tennis Shorewomen played Wesley???

Out of nine matches, six singles and three doubles, the women won 8-1. They only lost close in the second match. The seating for women's fall tennis is tough and very competitive; Returning this year are four players; seated third is junior Vicki Roth from Berlin, Md., fourth is sophomore Amy Rizzetello from St. Michael's, MD., fifth is another junior, from Hyde Park, NY., Anna Marie Malena, and seated sixth from Denton, MD. is Melissa Ewanger. Sarah Horanebeck, a transfer from University of Connecticut, played for exhibition, winning one and losing one. Two freshman take over the number one and two spot this fall. Megan Brumby, who lost close in the second match is seated second this fall. From

"Field Hockey" from 10

with save after save in the second half".

Coach Feyerhern was also pleased with the way her team played with the conditions at Drew. The field was an artificial turf field which most of the players had never played on before. The women were mentally prepared and played like they had been playing on artificial turf forever. The Sho'women fought hard and came out with a tie against powerhouse Drew.

The only disappointment during the entire afternoon was when Mills broke her toe while breaking towards the ball off of a cornershot from Drew. She was determined to play and stuck in there for twenty minutes until she was forced to go to the hospital. The outlook is good for Mills though because she should be back as soon as she starts training on it again.

After playing this hard fought game into double overtime, the Shorewomen had to come out again on Sunday against FDU-Madison. Coach Feyerhern was worried about the fatigue the team would be feeling after playing such a tough game, but the women came out ready to fight again.

In the first half, FDU-Madison did a great job by going down Washington's non-stick side and applied constant pressure to the Sho'women defense. After Washington shifted and adjusted to FDU's style of play that was killing them early on, the women began to dominate the game.

The women ruled the second half and never trailed the entire game after sophomore Leanne Cole's goal. The defense played well and did not feel the pressure nearly as much as during the Drew game. Freshman Sobon had a great game with the assist on Cole's goal. Busker recorded four saves for the game. Overall, the Sho'women came away with a great feeling of confidence about their upcoming [illegible] and [illegible].

This weekend, the team faces some key Conference play in Swarthmore and Bryn Mawr. Swarthmore is currently undefeated and in first place in the Centennial Conference. Bryn Mawr has a record of 3-4-1 overall. Both of these key matchups are home this week so come out and cheer the Shorewomen on. Ω

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

We are proud to honor one of our own members of The Elm as Player of the Week for this week. We have chosen junior goalkeeper Peggy Busker for her tremendous play in the two games during this past weekend. Busker had a career high thirty-two saves in the Drew game and fifteen in the FDU-Madison game. The thirty-two saves is one short of the Washington College record. Peggy's goalkeeping statistics for the season have kept her right at the top of the Centennial Conference. Her save percentage is .898 while only allowing an average of 1.25 goals per game. Field Hockey Coach Sarah Feyerherm commented, "Peggy played out of her mind this weekend," while making save after save. This is truly an amazing feat coming from a person who never picked up a field hockey stick until she reached the Washington College campus. Busker is a Biology major and History minor while working on her goal to attain her Education certification. She is also the Sports Co-Editor of The Elm, in the Community Chorus, works at the Cove and with Admissions. Through her determination and confidence on the field, Peggy was the unanimous decision for Player of the Week honors.

Volleyball Dictionary for Non-Athletes at W.C.

Spike — a powerful, overhand hit .

Kill — an intense hit that the opponent eats; if Diaz is conducting this feat, I advise the other team to leave the court immediately through the emergency fire exits.

Dig — sacrificing your body to keep the ball from hitting the floor; Smith's body can be seen rebounding off of the floor after saving the ball...it must hurt a lot.

Block — making the other team eat their own attempted hit; when the twin powers, Kessler and Stephens, activate, the ball usually rebounds off of the opponent's face.

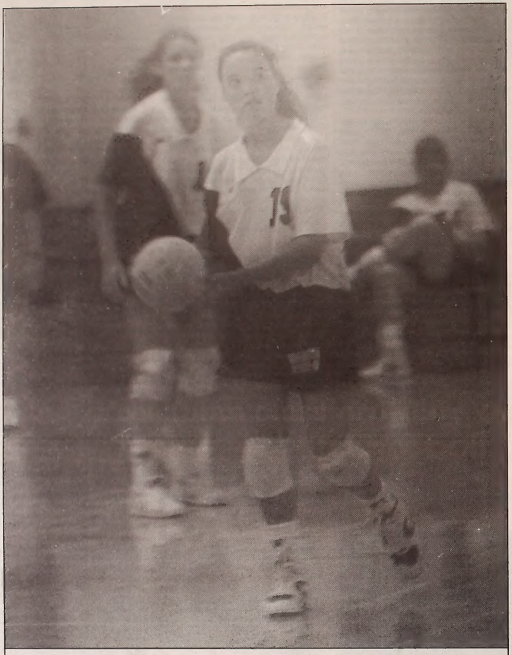
Side Out — other team is serving and you stop their attack thus regaining possession of the ball; when you are in Cain, you must listen and follow Chin's parents for this signal.

Serve — a long overhand hit that extends to the length of the court, hopefully bouncing in.

Service Ace — a serve that no one can touch, or even attempt to; Smith and Stephens usually make their opponents bleed when they serve.

Hit — using your hands, not a bat.

Set — creating a window with your hands enabling you to see Cain's ceiling with a slight push and a flick of the wrists to set-up the killer.



Pass — getting down in a prone position and allowing the ball to penetrate off of your arms; Barrett likes this a lot.

Stuff — the hot shot on the other team that tries in vain to penetrate the block and in return gets the ball rebounded off her face.

Centennial Conference Weekly Honor Roll

Nicole Mills, a freshman from Pocomoke, Maryland, scored three goals for Washington in two games. Against Haverford she scored on a penalty stroke and again later to give the Shorewomen the lead and the win at 5-3. Mills played strong again at Drew. She scored the first and only goal for the Shorewomen off of a penalty corner in the first few minutes of the game. She then broke her toe on a defensive corner. With a few minutes rest Mills went on to play the rest of the game. The final score was 1-1 after double overtime.

Beverly Diaz is recognized by the Conference as well this week. She has totaled 38 kills, 50 digs, three aces, seven assists and three blocks in the Sho'women's 2-1 week. She has also been recognized by her coach as being an excellent leader and role model on and off the court. Beverly is a senior and co-captain of the 1994 volleyball team. Beverly is feared throughout the Conference.Ω

BY KELLI YOUNGBLOOD

Michelle Chin looks into the crowd to see if her superman is there.

Scores

Softball

Washington 11
Loyola 1

Washington 6
Anne Arundel 5

Field Hockey

Washington 1
FDU-Madison 0

Washington 1
Drew 1
(tie, double overtime)

Volleyball

Gettysburg
12 15 15 15
Washington
15 3 9 5

Muhlenberg
11 9 15 11
Washington
15 15 5 15

Washington
17 15 15
Swarthmore
15 13 10

Soccer (Men's)

Washington 1
Gettysburg 2

Washington 0
Swarthmore 1

Washington 2
Goucher 1

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Saturday, Oct 1

Field Hockey vs. Bryn Mawr 1 p.m.
Soccer vs. Ursinus 1:30 p.m. (you can see the first half of the Field Hockey game)
Rugby vs. Salisbury St. 1 p.m. at Worton Park
Volleyball - W.C. Invitational - TBA

Tuesday, Oct. 4

Field Hockey @ Salisbury St. 4:30 p.m. (worth the trip)

Wednesday, Oct. 5

Soccer @ Haverford 4 p.m. (beautiful drive)
Volleyball @ Ursinus 7 p.m. (not too far from Haverford)

Thursday, Oct. 6

Field Hockey vs. F&M 4:30 p.m.
(gotta see it!)

Friday, Oct. 7

Volleyball @ Gallaudet Tournament 4 p.m.
(go support your team)

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Six

Serving the College Community Since 1930

W.C. bids farewell to Bishop, Bedell, Licata

Kate Meagher

Three members of the Washington College community are leaving the College to take positions elsewhere.

Director of Computing Paul Bishop and Vice President for Finance and Controller Lauren Bedell will both be relocating to the Virgin Islands. Bishop is the new Executive Director for Information Technology and Bedell the new Assistant Vice President for Finance at the University of the Virgin Islands in St. Thomas.

Cynthia Licata, secretary for the Public Safety Department, will become Faculty Extension Assistant for 4-H here in Kent County.

Bishop and Bedell resigned on September 20, and Friday, October 28 is to be their final day at W.C. Both are excited about their new positions.

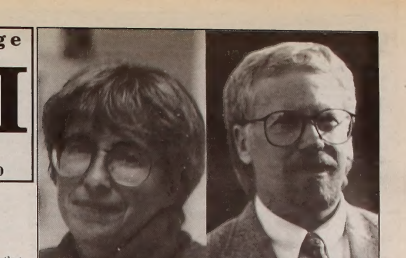
"Sometime in November we'll actually move our possessions to a little island 1,100 miles from Miami to begin our island life," said Bishop. He looks forward to "living" where people wear sandals all year round." He will be able to pursue hobbies such as scuba diving and sailboarding, recreational activities for which Bishop has had neither the time nor the opportunity while working on the Eastern Shore.

Bedell has "mixed feelings" about leaving. She is looking forward to "snorkeling everyday," but finds that she will miss the people with whom she works here at W.C.

"I think that the College has a lot of people that work for it that are really superb employees," said Bedell, "and I hope that they'll let me call them from time to time to take advantage of their expertise."

In his letter to the Washington College community regarding the resignations of Bishop and Bedell, President Trout stated:

"I send you this official news, as distinct from rumor, with decidedly mixed feelings. Lauren has been a rock of Gibraltar in our Business and Finance Office for eight years, while Paul, who joined our staff in 1984, was the central figure in bringing the College into the forefront of academic computing. I am certain that each and every one of you will join me in wishing them well.



"We have asked Dr. William T. Kirk to step in as Acting Dean of Computing once Paul departs. Tim Kirk, who came to Washington College in 1986, has been an essential member of our staff, and I have every confidence he will help sustain the momentum that Paul did so much to generate."

Kirk came to W.C. in 1984. He was a Visiting Professor of Psychology for 18 months. He then went to John Hopkins as a Post-doctoral Fellow in the Department of Psychiatry. Kirk became Assistant Director of Computing at Washington College in 1986.

"I saw the first Mac come on campus in 1984," said Kirk, "and I was back in time for the first network connection."

Kirk plans to apply for the permanent position of Director of Computing. There will be a national search, and according to Trout, the position should be filled "on or about June 1, 1995."

Licata is familiar to any student who has returned to his/her car to find a pink slip of paper under the windshield wiper bearing a fine for parking illegally. As secretary, she was the woman to whom students paid their parking tickets. As Faculty Extension Assistant, Licata will "finally" use her

BY KELLY TOWNSEND

Bedell and Bishop, two more administrators leaving the W.C. family degree. She graduated from Salisbury State with a degree in Liberal Studies. Her new job entails recruiting and training leaders for the 4-H program. Though not previously involved with 4-H, Licata been involved in a leadership role with Boy Scouts.

Licata's appointment has stirred up some controversy in the county. Hers is a new position, and replaces the Program Assistant. Parents of children in 4-H are in an uproar over her replacement of Clara Bramble, the Program Assistant since 1990. There were eight applicants for Faculty Extension Assistant, including Bramble. Licata was chosen to perform Bramble's previous job, in addition to handling new responsibilities.

Washington College wishes Bishop, Bedell, and Licata luck in their future endeavors. Ω

An Important Opportunity: The Society of Junior Fellows

Beth McLaughlin

So many posters plaster this campus that it is hard to have time to read all of them. There is one in particular of which many upperclassmen should take note.

It describes the Society of Junior Fellows, "a collegium of scholars dedicated to the exchange of ideas." The society is now in its fifth year of activities at W.C. The society sponsors speakers, assists with the publication of The Washington College Review, and provides supplements for those students who have earned internships.

There are several requirements that must be met in order for a student to be considered for the Society of Junior Fellows. Membership is open to students who are in at least their second semester of their sophomore year. To be eligible for membership, a student must have a cumulative GPA of 3.2 or better, demonstrate outstanding leadership qualities and participate in community outreach programs.

Interested students should contact their advisers from their major department. Recommendations are required from the Department Chair. Dr. Davy McCall of the Economics Department is serving as Curator of the Junior Fellows Program. Students are then elected by a faculty committee of curators.

In the summer of 1994, 17 fellowships were awarded. One student, Marcia Mowbray, participated in a nine-week internship with the State Department, working through the U.S. Consulate in Auckland, New Zealand. Another student, Katie Degenteld, was able to participate in a creative writing program through Eastern Washington University, in Dublin, Ireland. Erin Rowe is currently planning her project which she hopes will take her to Paris, France to conduct historical research which may one day become a book.

There are many opportunities for students on campus. It seems that all those who have become members of the Society of Junior Fellows have benefited in extraordinary ways. Ω

Honor Code discussions continue

Kate Meagher

"Helping undergird [the] heightened awareness of the importance of academic success is the new Honor Code. Developed and approved by both students and faculty, the new Code is printed in all the handbooks and has been introduced to all new students through their R.A.'s, to the campus as a whole through the SGA, and through professors in the classrooms. The W.C. Honor Code recognizes the individual's responsibility for his or her own work and the importance of the academic community in protecting the individual's rights and the community's values. The system provides a formal structure for dealing with violations while allowing a margin of time for individual recognition and response. Faculty and students share the responsibility for the success of the process."

In the above excerpt from the Dean's report to the Board of Visitors and Governors, Dean Beverly Wolff described the guiding principles of the new Honor Code.

"The new Honor Code is an experiment," according to Professor Audrey Fessler, Vice Chair of the Honor Board. "We're trying something very new and we're testing to see the effectiveness [so far] of the Code that was put into effect last year."

The Honor Board met last week to discuss the new semester. They reviewed Honor Code problems that have arisen thus far. One question addressed involves the judicial power given to the deans. They are given the power to resolve minor Honor Code violations committed by first-time offenders. Second offenses are sent to the Honor Board.

At last week's meeting, Dean Maxcy reported on a small number of Honor Code violations that have been brought to the deans through various channels, including Public Safety and Resident Assistants.

Another topic covered at the meeting was the task of clearly defining an Honor Code violation.

"We spent a lot of time trying to imagine the kinds of offenses that should bypass the deans and go right to the Honor Board," said Fessler.

A student member of the Board raised the issue of theft of goods and food from the Dining Hall. The Board discussed whether such an offense vi-

See "Honor" on 3

Inside This Week's Elm

Mystery picture
I.D. this picture and win a prize !! (maybe)
2

Recycle your life
Information on the recycling program at W.C. and in Kent County
6

Dropped a whole degree
Guest columnist Josh talks about local band, Strathmore Buzz
7

We get you discounts!
Jeff and Kevin strike out once but aren't out of the game yet.
8

To the Editor:

Last year, several members of the student body, the faculty, and the administration sat down and rewrote the Washington College Honor Code. They put together an interesting little document with little or no help from the student body at large. I will admit, I goofed, I didn't respond to the document when I had the chance, i.e. before it became official. I do have the chance to respond now, and as the new Honor System is not set in stone, it may just help alleviate some of the problems that I see in this document.

Found on page two of the 1994-95 Student Handbook, the Washington College Honor System spreads over eight pages in the thin, purple book. It starts with a short piece explaining the need for and philosophy behind the Honor Code.

"At Washington College we strive to treat our students as adults and expect them to act as such."

I was hell-bent on destroying my powers of concentration
While you were living like a saint
And all the time the very one you trusted was washing off somebody else's paint

In my three years at Washington College, I have yet to feel as if I am being treated as an adult. All my mail gets sent home to my mother, regardless of how many people I tell that I am no longer living there. All of my bills get forwarded to my mother, despite the fact that for the past two years I have received no financial support from her. Scholarship applications, loan forms, meal plan forms, payment schedules and numerous other official documents all have a nice little spot for my mother's signature. While it is true I am still my mother's daughter, I am no longer my mother's child. There are quite a few of us on campus who are making their way through life and life at W.C. with little or no assistance from their parents and still, parental permission is requested if not required to navigate through this life.

Following this brief and ambiguous introduction to the Honor System is a brief and even more ambiguous statement concerning the Standard of Conduct.

All students entering Washington College agree thereby to conduct themselves in a manner above reproach and to refrain from any action which, in the opinion of the officers of the College, might bring disrespect on the school or any of its members."

Now you know how to be dumb
Are you ready to take your place in the modern museum of mistakes?
Don't you know how to be dumb?
Like a building thrown up overnight in one of those reverse earthquakes

Each member of the Washington College community is an individual. What I find above reproach and actions that I feel might bring disrespect on the school or any of its members may well be vastly different from the opinions of the officers of our esteemed institution. For example, I find wearing a striped tie with a striped shirt most definitley below reproach and feel that it brings disrespect on the school for faculty members to be seen in public with mix-matched patterns. On the other hand, some of the officers of this college may find my bi-sexuality to be below reproach and disrespectful. Chances are I could not force the College to institute a dress code for color blind professors, and chances are also good that the College could not pass a discrimination policy. Whose values are we trying to uphold? Whose morals are driving the Honor System? Whose system of ethics decides what is and what is not above reproach and might not bring disrespect on the school or any of its members? In some circle, my bi-sexuality is definitely below reproach and most definately brings disrespect on the school and all of its members.

These two extremely vague and subjective passages are followed by seven pages of information on violations, possible violations, violations that aren't mentioned, how to report your violations to the proper authorities, how to report your friend's and neighbor's violations to the proper authorities, and how the proper authorities report their violations, and what happens to the above mentioned violators.

Included in the revised Honor Code is a section dealing with social violations. Any violation of any college social policy is now a violation of the Honor Code as well. In other words, if they can't get you for drinking underage, they can get you for "any behavior that harms or threatens the physical, psychological, or social well-being of any member or guest of the College community, or any behavior that threatens or damages the reputation of Washington College."

Like the Standard of Conduct passage, this passage is woefully vague and subjective. And like the letters to my mother, it is redundant and unnessacary.

Now you're masquerading as a pale powdered genius
Whose every bad intention has been purged
You could have walked out any time you wanted
but face it you didn't have the courage

Despite my problems with the new Honor Code, I applaud the many people who spent a considerable amount of time and effort putting together a document dealing with such important and essential issues. I would especially like to thank the students who took time out from their hectic academic and social lives to work on the Honor Code. In short, I full well realize that like those who do not vote, I do not have any room to complain.

All quotations from the Honor System were gleaned from The Washington College Student Handbook 1994-1995.
Song lyrics from How to be Dumb, by Elvis Costello.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan
Arts & Entertainment Editor
Carolyn Fuss
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Buskor & Nicole Zemanski

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink
Circulation Manager
Charles Buckner, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Richard McKee, Jr.
Office Manager
Steve Kim
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and Crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BitchMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8385.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

At last count, I had heard of four separate chain mail letters floating from Blitzmail account to Blitzmail account with the frequency of a Cray mainframe. Reactions have ranged from "Oh. That is some new way to avoid homework" to "Shit, I've amassed 49,205 years of bad luck." What they don't say (but should) is "If this keeps up the mail server's gonna die."

It's true. These pointless wastes of disk space are taking up room better filled by that cute pen pal from Austria or that inane Namibian writer who keeps sending you antique pornographic stories from the 60's.

As it is written in the official "Guide to Computing Etiquette at Washington College" (available at the Computing Center for a nominal fee), "Leave chain mail to the Middle Ages. Chain letters may sound like a cool thing to send on the system, but in reality, they do little more than take up space on the system...and waste your time!"

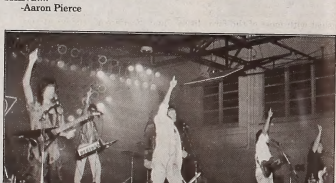
Anyway, stop sending chain letters—or at least don't send any to me. I'm still waiting for my ISCA-buddy to send me his picture, and GIF files take up LOTS of space.

-Mindie Kaplan

Is anyone a Communist anymore? Is anyone a radical left-wing (or right-wing for that matter) political activist anymore? Does anyone disagree anymore?

I submit these questions to the general readership in the hopes that perhaps just one of you will sit back and say to yourself, "Why come to think of it, there aren't any really interesting freaks on campus nowadays."

When I think about the future, I always seem to get the strangest urge to go out and buy a gun. After all, as the Gen X cliché goes, what do we have to look forward to? A lack of jobs, a dismal and unimaginative (or should we say "anti-imaginative") political climate, rising costs and dropping standards of living, etc. It's enough to make you cry, or at the very least submit to the gentle caress of total apathy.



But didn't you hear? There is a time in your life where you get to care. There is a time when you don't have to be a mindless zombie with no ambitions beyond landing that managerial position at wherever. The space between (uggch) high school and the (gasp) real world: College.

This summer, I watched several of my friends who graduated last year enter the real world. And do you know what they found? Nothing! No jobs, no money, no fun. They envy us, tucked safely away in our world of numbers and letter, theories and facts. I try to tell them, "Man, what are you talking about? There's nothing going on at Washington College." And they agree with me. Nobody is taking advantage of the situation.

This should change. This is not right. College students need to wake up and start talking. Don't like something? Let it be known!

Stage a rally, go to a reading, discuss Nietzche and Pound, grumble loudly when you pass the Buntagon, shake your fist at injustice, DO SOMETHING!!!

-Aaron Pierce

Editors Note: The Elm staff is really curious to know who is featured in the picture found in our archives. Anyone with information concerning the band please let us know. Their may be a reward involved.

This Week on Campus
Oct. 7 - 13

Film Series
Far Away, So Close
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 7
Board of Visitors and Governors on campus

Saturday 8
An informal evening with The Washington Ballet
Tawes Theatre, 7 p.m.

Sunday 9

Monday 10

Tuesday 11
Blood Drive
11 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Hynson Lounge

Wednesday 12
Life in East Berlin
A talk by André Schweitzer
International House basement, 7 p.m.

Thursday 13

Thinking through ...

The elections - What to watch for, part 2

by Paul Briggs

On the Republican side, the race to watch is the one in Virginia between Chuck Robb and Ollie North. It is no exaggeration to say that the future of the GOP for at least a decade may well be decided here. No doubt you have heard about the efforts of the Christian Coalition to dominate the Republican Party. There are those who have regarded the introduction of the Religious Right into American politics as being not unlike the introduction of the Visigoths into Roman politics. Molly Ivins, a bona-fide Texas liberal, has a more insightful perspective:

"Fundamentalists aren't evil; they're worried. They're afraid of modernity, whatever that is, usually spelled by abortion, and yearn for traditional values. All of us sinners like to see a hypocrite exposed, and sweet was the fall of Jim and Tammy Faye. And Jimmy Swaggart... But you know who his followers are? They're straight out of 'It's Now Praise Famous Men. All their lives they've suffered from poverty, isolation, no opportunity, poor diet, poor education, and the scorn of others. There was a time when progressives did not sneer at folks like that."[1]

I am not entirely encouraging that of all constituencies the Religious Right is the most loyally Republican, and is better organized and more effective at fund-raising than any other group in the GOP's "Big Tent." Part of their ability to gain power in the party is, in fact, the willingness of their followers to volunteer for the "grunt work" of campaigning and fund-raising. However, when it comes time to vote, they still keep finding themselves having to hold their noses and voting against their consciences. That is a lot to ask of anyone. Thus, it is a mistake to assume that the Christian Right's desire to set the agenda for the Republican Party is a simple matter of malevolence or lust for power.

Of course, the Republican moderates have an answer to this. Their answer is that candidates who espouse the Right's agenda are simply unelectable in most parts of the country. One of the many "first rules" of politics is "Whatever you do, don't frighten the horses" - and right-wingers can be very frightening. The public may be cynical about Bill Clinton, but allegations of drug-running, murder of political opponents and Satan worship, such as have been made in recent months, quickly reduce the accusers' credibility - and that of their allies - to zero. Mainstream women (and, incidentally, men) may find the ideas and jargon of radical feminists to be somewhat alien to them, but they know how to react when someone (in this case Pat Robertson) calls a proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the Iowa constitution "a socialist, antifamily political movement that encourages women to leave their husbands, kill their children, practice witchcraft, destroy capitalism and become lesbians." Nor has the public reaction to Pat Buchanan's 'Cultural War' speech at the '92 convention been forgotten. In short, Republican centrists not only have philosophical differences with ultraconservatives, but also legitimate fears that they may marginalize the party.

Virginia is the testing ground for these opposing visions. This state is conservative. North should win narrow margin- it would be clear signal that ultraconservatives need no longer swallow their pride and embrace whomever the moderate pundits declare "electable." Quite the contrary, they could nominate people who share their convictions and expect centrists to embrace them.

If, however, he were to lose badly, things would be a little more complicated. Virginia's GOP moderates have not been willing to accept the North nomination without a whimper. In fact, their candidate, J. Marshall Coleman, has left the party and is running as an independent. Thus, if North went down to ignominious defeat on Election Day, hardcore conservatives will blame moderates for deserting the party. Meanwhile, moderates will blame the Right for the irresponsible nomination of a convicted felon and compulsive liar. In short, there will be an ugly intraparty feud. (This would probably not really hurt the Republicans, though. Have you ever heard anybody say "I'd like to vote for Candidate X, but his/her party argues among itself too much"?)

In other words, after two weeks and sixteen hundred words I have no definite predictions to make. That's life in this business.

[1] Ivins, Molly, Molly Isins Can't Say That, Can She? New York: Random House Inc., 1991, p.128. Ω

This week's meeting: SGA Report

This week's issue: SGA event nights

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

The 1994-95 Student Government Association met for the second time Tuesday night, prompted by last week's meeting to make this a productive year. The SGA seemed finally to be finished with most of the formalities and ready to take on some important issues.

However, a few did have to be taken care of at Tuesday's meeting due to a glitch in the senate election procedure, another senator to represent off-campus students had to be chosen in order to achieve the proportional representation all students are due. President Jamie Baker chose Max Walton, whom he defeated in the Presidential election last year, to fill the vacancy. Also, the five Senators who missed roll call last week were sworn in.

The individual classes, who report their progress via the class President to the Senate each week, are in various stages of their tasks. The Senior class is getting an early start pursuing Speakers for Commencement. The Junior class is still fairly dormant, but will likely undertake plans for Casey Day soon. The Sophomore class is already days away from a major project of the year--Tuesday's Blood Drive, and the Freshman class has not yet elected officers at the time of the meeting. Elections were Wednesday, and the new Freshman class President will be sworn in at next week's meeting.

The funding amendment which gives the Business Office control of club funding was passed, as was the 1994-95 SGA Budget. In further matters of funding, the Senate also decided to invite College President Charles Trout to a future Senate meeting to discuss the funding the Student Government gets from the president's office, which was increased at much less than the anticipated rate this year. Trout will most likely attend the October 18 meeting.

Washington College's Honor Board met last Thursday to review several cases of Honor Code infractions, including contacting non-property damage and the theft of a shopping cart from the local Acme. The cases are handled by Dean Maxcy and the office of Student Affairs.

When the meeting was opened up to the discussion of issues, various concerns surfaced. Problems ranged from problems with the plumbing in Minta Martin to broken weight machines in the Lifetime Fitness Center to the absence of doors in the bathrooms on co-ed floors. Neither cable television nor campus security issues resurfaced during this week's session, but the issue of SGA-sponsored events was dissected extensively.

The Executives and Senators also discussed the meeting of the Board of Visitors and Governors scheduled for Saturday, October 8. At the meeting, the Board, which does not include any faculty members or students, will set up a Search Committee to find a new College President to replace Charles Trout in June. After a vote taken Tuesday provided a mandate, the SGA decided to undertake the task of attempting to include students on the Search Committee. The Board of Visitors and Governors under no obligation whatsoever to include students on the Committee, but they did allow students to take part in the selection process of President Trout. A further resolution initiated by the Senators stated that SGA President Jamie Baker, along with another student chosen later by the Executive Board, should represent the student body if the attempt to gain student representation is successful.

After only two Senate meetings, one cannot help but be optimistic about the ambition and work ethic of both the Executives and many of the Senators. It would be much less than a surprise if the '94-'95 SGA becomes one of those which future Student Governments look to as a model. Ω

Upcoming SGA events:
Saturday, October 8
Town Project, paint/restore the Fire Hall on High Street, 9 a.m.

SGA-sponsored event attendance has been somewhat unimpressive recently, to put it mildly. The SGA lost a ridiculous amount of money on the performance of the reggae band Messinjah two weeks ago. If you read last week's Elm, you saw that this issue prompted SGA Parliamentarian Ken Fipkin to pen a letter commanding students to get up and attend the events. Some people started thinking. This is why they came up with: why doesn't the SGA allow other social events to coincide with events they sponsor? Why should they? According to Senator Max Walton, who initiated the discussion of this issue at Tuesday night's meeting, when only one thing is going on and the students don't want to go to it, they may as well go home for the weekend. Is W.C. becoming a suitcase school because of the occasional SGA social monopoly or for other reasons? Some solutions were proposed at the meeting; a possible remedy which got much support from senators is allowing fraternity parties the same nights as SGA events, possibly beginning at 10 or 11 p.m. while the SGA event begins at 8 and ends at midnight. There seems to be a consensus that this solution would increase attendance of SGA events, based on the success of last month's Quad Party, in which the party ended at 10:30 and continued in the Cove. Other possible remedies include leaving the LFC open on weekend nights and skipping Friday SGA event nights. According to Walton, the objective is to keep students on campus for the weekend. Vice President Baker suggested the possibility that other events should be permitted only during events which cost less to organize, so as to keep the SGA from losing booking money unnecessarily.

What do you think? Do you want to see a variety of possibilities even when the SGA has worked hard and shelled out a lot of money to sponsor an event? Do you think the SGA should try to keep itself from losing money by making its event the only thing happening? Do you thing the Student Government should book Guns N' Roses for the Birthday Ball? Do you have any other suggestions to make (i.e. improve advertising for SGA events)? Use BlitzMail, PacerForum, or the SGA (x. 8585) to make your opinion known. It's your government - use it. Ω olated the Honor Code. They came to "no clear conclusions," according to Fessler. She believes that "the channels of communication will be open" between the Honor Board, food services, and the bookstore.

From "Honor" on 1

Privately covered by the SCC and the All-Campus Judicary, violations of social conduct and academic honesty now go before the Honor Board. Assistant Dean Beverly Wolff will handle minor academic violations, while professors can determine if a violation should be sent to Wolff. Professors may handle very minor violations on their own, as long as they report that they did so to the deans or to the Chair of the Honor Board.

Fessler points out that there is a clemency period for violations. If a student recognizes his or her mistake and comes forward ready to face the consequences within 48 hours of the violation, "I think the Honor Board would look more favorably [on the student]," according to Fessler.

This year's Honor Board Chair is Doug Beckworth.

"It's nice and telling that this new system is chaired by a student," said Fessler. "The students wanted to be in charge." The first drift of the new Honor Code was student-written, and revisions, additions, and modifications were initiated by students and approved by faculty, administration, and the students involved in the process.

Because it has "strong student roots," Fessler thinks that the new code "should work." No cases have come before the Board so far, but Fessler believes that it will get better and stronger with each case tried.

While she hopes that no cases have to be tried, "one or two will come along," she said. "I'm not a hopeless idealist." Ω

crud.

creative ranting under duress. by Eva Kaplan-Leiserson

Confessions of a Freshman Junkie

I was warned when I was a prospective student visiting here that there's a dangerous drug on many college campuses that makes your fingers cramp, gets in your blood, screws with your mind and makes you stare blankly ahead for hours at end. It has a devastating effect on your academic life. I was warned, but I paid no heed. Like all the others, I never thought it would happen to me. I never believed I would get addicted to E-mail.

I'm embarrassed by my addiction. I try to hide it. I wait until my roommate has left for her early morning first class to get up and turn on the computer. The friendly echoing chord when I press the w switch is a pronouncement of my hope. Surely my friend in California wrote me after I went to sleep last night. And that girl down the hall that I've been corresponding with is even more of a night-owl than me. After I've been out for a while, I rush back to my room. Someone will have written. I know they will have. I have perpetual hope.

E-mail has a dangerous impact on my emotions. Every student here knows the joy generated by the approaching hour of mailtime. Many of you can also empathize with the pleasure and pain produced by the fact that with E-mail, mail time is all the time. Oh Joy! Oh Rapture! You, while your opportunities to get mail are multiplied, so are your opportunities to have the depression that comes with finding nothing in your mail box -10, 15 times a day.

I'm not only a junkie, I'm also a dealer. I've turned on those who you would swear would never be mixed up in something like this. My roommate for example. She hates computers, or at least she told me this. Now I find her constantly and surreptitiously checking her E-mail and fighting with my friend over who is even more addicted. "You haven't found your address book yet?!" Up and down the hall, I hear my friends' pleas as they come to me for their fix. "Can I check my E-mail? Can I check my E-mail?" They keep me up at night, talking to the screen, and throwing glances over their shoulders at me. "I'm almost done, I swear."

As for me, I'm okay. Haven't yet gotten into the harder stuff. You know, the big "I" word. (shh....say it quietly. in-ter-net.) Yes, I know that E-mail is part of the Internet, but you know what I mean. The big banana. IRC chat, Newsgroups, MUDs, all that. It's tempting though. It's very tempting. I'm fighting my hardest. If you see me on campus, looking red-eyed and horrible, have pity. Ask me how it's going. But please, please, don't stop sending me E-mail ... okay? It's not that bad, really. Don't stop ... please ... please?

I have to go now. I have something really important to do. What's that? Oh, um ... change my icons. Yeah, that's it. I have to ... um .... I have to

The Best Seller list again?: Crichton's Disclosure less than expected

Jeff Frank

Michael Crichton's best selling novel, Disclosure (Ballantine Books), was recently released in paperback. With Disclosure, Crichton shows that since he has gained in popularity after the release of Steven Spielberg's "Jurassic Park," he can turn out shoddy work, and still have it on the best seller lists. Disclosure is Crichton's third attempt at a novel which falls in the genre of mystery, and his first unsuccessful one. The first, A Case Of Need, was originally released under an assumed name (Jeffery Hudson). It won an Edgar Award for best mystery, which Crichton could not accept publicly, because some of the characters were based on people he knew at Harvard Medical School. His second mystery, Rising Sun (1992), was published soon after Jurassic Park. Rising Sun was made into a movie (which was changed dramatically from the book, when director Philip Kaufman failed to understand the book, turning a good mystery into a cheap action flick with good actors) starring Wesley Snipes and Sean Connery. Crichton requested that his name be taken off the movie, but the request was denied. Disclosure was released in February of 1994, but the movie rights were sold in June of 1993 to Warner Bros. for 3 million dollars.

Crichton has a habit of dealing with social issues in his mysteries. A Case Of Need was about a young woman dying because of an illegal botched abortion by a liscensed doctor. Rising Sun (the book) dealt with racism and American / Japanese business relations. Disclosure dealt with sexual discrimination in the workplace. The plot is as follows: a young man's ex-girlfriend becomes his boss, and tries to elicit sexual favors from him. When he refuses, she tells the company that he raped her. Most of the executives believe her, so the man has to prove his innocence and her guilt, with one lawyer, and a mysterious hacker as his friends. Except for the virtual reality data chase in the end, the novel was more like something written by John Grisham, than Michael Crichton, though it was successful in capturing interest, it failed to bring in enough science to please his usual crowd. The selling of the movie rights eight months before the book was released may have pressured Crichton into getting the novel finished.

Crichton will be turning 52 on October 23rd. He resides in Brentwood (Los Angeles) with his wife, Anne-Marie, and daughter Taylor. He has written many novels (under several different names), screenplays, articles and has directed a few movies. His first article ever published was "Climbing Up A Cinder Cone", a travel article he wrote for the New York Times which appeared on May 17, 1959. Ω

Earth Notes

BY Andrea Nolan

As you may or may not know, a mammal of unusual size has been roaming the waters of the Chester River Labor Day weekend, along with the rest of the massive hordes of tourists that invade the Eastern Shore every weekend, a manatee came a-visiting. It seems that this native of Florida took a wrong turn at the Everglades, and happened upon the waters of the Chesapeake instead. This sea cow continued in his travels until finally he found the Chester River, and one of the Chester's small tributaries, Queenstown Creek. He apparently liked what he saw, and has been hanging around our waters ever since — that is, until he was captured by the law after a two week manatee hunt. Queenie, as the manatee has been dubbed by the ever creative press, weighed in at an impressive 1,500 pounds, and measured 10 feet-2 inches. That's a lot of mammal.

Well, call me ignorant, but until this last month of manatee hype I didn't know much of anything about the manatee. Being a long-time Maryland resident the largest water mammal I have ever encountered would have to be a porpoise. As for the manatee's familiar name of "sea cow," well this round, gray tubular thing hardly resembled the Holsteins of my native Wisconsin. So, I took it upon myself to do a little research into our good friend Queenie, starting with why we were trying to capture him in the first place — I mean, Maryland hardly qualifies it a practice of netting and deporting its tourists, it's hardly a sound business practice.

Well, it turns out that the feds knew what they were doing — being a native of Florida the manatee has a pretty low tolerance for low water temperatures, with anything below 68 degrees Fahrenheit being potentially fatal. I always thought that southern-ers were rather soft. However, if cold water doesn't kill him, a manatee can live for up to sixty years. The manatees' closest living relative is not the whale or seal as one would suppose, but rather the elephant. Its front flippers still posses vestiges of hoof nails that are left over from when the sea cow grazed the high plains. They eat a lot, up to 220 pounds of food a day. It can take five days for food to pass through the extra long digestive tract. They do have a slew of microorganisms helping out with the digestive thing, however, these otherwise helpful organisms have one drawback — they create a lot of gas. If this gas was kept penned up within the manatee, soon we would see a lot of sea cow blimps soaring around in the upper atmosphere. As a result, the manatee farts — a lot. I mean, a whole lot. The manatee is a solitary animal, and while the articles I read didn't mention any correlation to their prolific farting, I don't think that possibility should be overlooked. Seems like a good topic for a senior thesis if anyone is interested.

Oh, another nifty thing is that the manatees lungs stretch the entire length of its body. That would be like having lung capacity from your big toes to your ears. The manatees have very few enemies, and basically drift through life eating, reproducing, and farting. They have no social structures, instead preferring a laid back sort of anarchy.

The manatees biggest enemy seems to be man, for like the land cow, the sea cows' flesh is reputably very tasty. While poaching in America has decreased markedly, the manatees also have a bad habit of colliding with boats — propellers can do nasty things to a body. As a result, the manatee is a long time resident of the endangered species list — thus, the all out effort to save our misled manatee. Queenie is now resting comfortably in the National Aquarium, awaiting his deportment down to Sea World, where he will then be released back into Florida's waters. His future release is a happy thing, although I, for one, find his departure to be bittersweet. It is not everyday that a relative of the elephant trunk, swims through the Chester River, farting happily away. And people say that nothing ever happens around here.

(All information taken from Grzimek's Encyclopedia of Mammals, Volume 4, McGraw-Hill Publishing Company, New York 1990 pp. 522-528)

GALA

Washington College's Gay and Lesbian Alliance

Meeting
Monday, October 10 at 6 p.m. in the basement of
Reid Hall.

Everyone welcome to attend.

THE WASHINGTON COLLEGE REVIEW

is now accepting submissions for the 1994-95 edition.

The Review is a high-quality magazine edited by students and faculty. Its purpose is to publish the best of Washington College student essays, fiction, and poetry.

Submissions should be sent to the department editor in your department, the editor-in-chief, Dr. Sherbondy, or the student editor, Erin Rowe.

PLEASE (!!)
all writers: submit
Writing
(poetry, short fiction, essays, art, photos)

to The Collegian
W.C.'s Official Lit. Mag

in care of Kelli Youngblood, editor.
ext 8505
via Blitzmail, Lit. House mail, or Campus mail

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

The Great Pizza Taste Test

Kevin Hoffman

On Tuesday, the fourth of October, Washington College students expecting the usual dining hall dinner were pleasantly surprised to find the great pizza taste test. Three pizza companies — Sabatsoso, Tombstone, and Sabatini's — were here so that the students of Washington College would have the opportunity to sample their products. The College is considering adding a pizza bar to the corner of the dining hall, so that on a daily basis students will have the option of having pizza for lunch as part of their meal plan. Asked about the chances of the pizza bar becoming a reality, meal plan supervisor Lisa Travis said, "I was asking the Associate Director what the possibilities were, and he's relatively certain that its going to happen." Surveys were passed out to give students the opportunity to vote on whether or not they want a pizza bar, and if so, which brand of pizza it should serve. The companies have already done this at other schools, so a precedent has been set. They provide all the equipment needed to prepare the pizzas, and in return the school buys their brand of pizza.

Each brand spokesman promoted his brand with equal vigor. The Sabatini's representative said, "It's all pure, it's one hundred percent natural, it's made by our big family in Sacramento, Pennsylvania." The Tombstone pizza server said, "We bake our own crust from a factory. We have cold blended sauce, which means that the sauce isn't cooked until it goes into your oven. It stays ten below zero from the time it's flash-freezed to the time it hits your step (like an ice beer). We're the number one pizza in Baltimore We're the number one pizza in the United States. Basically, we're number one." The Sabatasso spokeswoman said, "Our mega slice is a nice big piece of pizza. Not only that, besides our regular pizzas, we have calzones and deep dish and individual pan-style pizza."

The students seemed enthusiastic about the project. Pete Torigoe said, "I would like getting the free pizza every day, but I'd also appreciate slightly larger slices." Many of the students complained of the small portions given out, and one student picked Tombstone as his favorite just because they gave him the biggest slice.

It is still up in the air as to which brand will win the great pizza contest of 1994. In fact, even the pizza bar is still up in the air. Lisa Travis said that it is very important for the students to turn in the surveys if they want to have a pizza bar. So in the end the decision rests on the students of Washington College. If you want a pizza bar, be sure to tell them so by filling out the surveys. Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Philip McQuade

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

What are you doing for fall weekend and do you think we should have classes on Columbus day?

I'm going to meet my friends from the University of Delaware to have some fun. No, I do not believe we should have classes.

Karen Sieger, Freshman

I'm staying my ass right here. No, I don't, even though Columbus didn't discover America

Lisa Sambula, Freshman

As the great pharaoh Benjamin T. Hinckle once said, "I'm driving to Vermont. Yes, Columbus stole America; he didn't discover it.

Mattt Mullin, Junior

I'm going to hunt ducks and sleep. Of course not.

Chris Tull, Sophomore

I'm going home for the first time since June. No, I have mixed feelings about that. It is a national holiday but look what has happened to the Native Americans, etc..

Mary Jefferson, Junior

We have a fall weekend? When is it? I'm spending my weekend with Bob Day and his sondog Levi delving into the poetry of Bobby Frost. No, so we can have an extra day for fall weekend. In addition, Columbus was a thief.

Will Phipps, Senior

Broadsides Poets profiled

Becky Bryant

"All my slushy flesh was cumbersome: it spilled over the lip of green ceramic men, gathering into a purple-white glossy bit of clay molded by the cracks into which I slipped." Erika Wilson has not fallen in any cracks during her stay at Washington College. A second semester junior, Erika is a Junior Fellow and Student Athlete Mentor to the W.C. Crew team. Her poem "August 11, 1973" has been selected by student editor Katie Degentesh '95 for this year's Broadsides poetry series. The series is designed for the publication and wide circulation of students' poems. "August 11, 1973" can be read in its entirety on any of the many bright yellow sheets posted on lampposts and surfaces around campus. Once chosen, poems are eligible at the end of the year to be published by Mike Kaylor's press in a postcard series. The postcards are sold in the school's bookstore and distributed to the participating poets.

On a cool Tuesday evening, Erika confided in me about the evolutionary process that occurred in the writing of this poem. Originally conceived as a character sketch of a Chestertown "woman off her rocker," the poem underwent a number of revisions. The central figure of the fountain downtown remains in the final draft. This fountain became the inspiration for the resulting birth imagery. Visualizing the character asleep in the fountain, Erika surmised, "What is that like?" Her mind played with the possibilities, arriving at the realization that this awakening from slumber into an aquatic environment resembled her own birth. The birth metaphor is evident in the title, her birthdate.

Erika Wilson transferred from Montgomery College to W.C. for the purpose of benefiting from writing opportunities such as Broadsides. Her creative writing has always been a priority and her poems have been published in Broadsides last semester. Her introduction to the college's writing community took place in Professor Day's Creative Writing workshop and she has since taken Day's Poetry and Short Fiction classes. As an English major, she hopes to fulfill her senior obligation by submitting a portfolio of her fiction.

Jennifer Reddish, the first featured poet of Broadsides has already received honors on her Creative Writing portfolio. A second semester senior studying abroad in London, Jennifer is both an English and International Studies major. She was student editor of the Washington College Review two years ago and has frequently contributed to Broadsides. When a summer internship opened up for a student editor of the Tribal College Journal, Jennifer more than qualified for the position. Her interest in Native American studies and editorial skills made the internship a rewarding and successful experience.

Anyone interested in submitting to Broadsides should contact Katie Degentesh via Blitzmail or campus mail. Please limit the submission to a single page of poetry or prose. Ω

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442
Ray-Ban Off Street Parking Next To The Store Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm Hanes patagonia
Columbia Sportswear Company
JANSPORT
ORIGINAL UGG
REEF
10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS
WITH STUDENT I.D.
Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks
Barrecrafters Car Racks

Reuseable WAC

Campus recycling program explained

Ever wonder who collects the glass bottles from the blue recycling boxes in your dorm? Or takes out the cans in the large plastic trash cans? Probably you've noticed that, except in a few cases, trash tends to collect there, sometimes for an entire semester, until it ends up in the regular trash to be hauled to a landfill somewhere. Did you know that those bins are part of the reason Chestertown doesn't have a solid waste incinerator, burning tons of garbage daily and producing the same black smoke and pollutants you'd find a big city?

Infinity Recycling is a non-profit organization which handles much of the recycling on the Eastern shore. They collect recyclables from over 600 sources, including schools, businesses, private homes, and public collection stations in Kent, Queen Anne's, Dorchester, Talbot, and Caroline counties, as well as Dover and Wilmington, Delaware. Their mission is not only to recycle but to educate the public about the benefits of recycling.

Five years ago, a group of upset citizens began Infinity in response to the threat of building a huge incinerator right outside of Chestertown that would have burned the trash of one million people daily. The Eastern Shore was in the middle of a solid waste crisis, and something needed to be done. Infinity set up operations, and has been effective enough to contribute to the passage of a mandatory recycling bill in Maryland.

Waste conditions have improved ever since. The areas covered by Infinity all meet or surpass the requirements of the new mandate, and there will not be an incinerator in Chestertown. The big waste companies, like Waste Management, have, without new incinerators going up, been forced to change to landfills to handle their business.

Infinity set up a program at Washington College about five years ago to collect recyclable goods. Blue boxes and trash cans were placed on each floor of each dormitory to receive glass and cans. They also set up a paper waste collection set up in five administration buildings. But Infinity is not satisfied with the results.

The Elm spoke to Marilee Schumann, co-owner of Infinity. She described herself as an activist, not a garbage collector, out to prove that people can recycle effectively. A trade magazine for the recycling industry was on her desk, currently featuring a big article on how effective recycling can be on college campuses.

"There's no leadership there (at W.C.). There are some students who want to recycle, there are some housekeeping who want to ... but there's no one coordinating it. The community ends up paying for that which doesn't get recycled. It's all part of living in a community. We (at Infinity) can't be responsible for picking up bottles in the dorms. In fact, we're not allowed to. We do pick up from the boxes behind the dining hall, and from paper waste bins in five administration buildings. But there could be more."

What she cited as being the missing ingredient in the program is leadership. At other schools, whether it be in the student body or the administration, someone was organizing collection. When The Elm asked several groups of students about recycling on campus, their answers ranged from not knowing there was any going on, to believing the RA or Housekeeper is responsible. Only one person knew there was a collection station behind the dining hall. The RAs we spoke with cited several students who take care of it for their halls or floors.

What to do with your recyclables:

Infinity Recycling collects glass, metal cans, and paper from W.C. every week. The collection drums are clearly labeled as to what material is to be placed therein. Note: Infinity does not collect plastics of any kind, nor do we pick up cardboard.

Glass bottles and jars should be sorted (by color) and deposited in the appropriate drum. These drums are located behind the Dining Hall (for Kent, Cullen, and the Hill Dorms), by the triad (for Cecil, Dorchester, Talbot, and the Cardinal dorms), and next to Queen Anne's (for Queen Anne's, Caroline, Minta Martin, and Reid). Bottles and jars should be empty and rinsed out, with the lids removed. Ask your RA for details about transporting glass to the collection sites. Please do not leave glass in front of the dorms, as it will no longer be picked up by Infinity.

Metal cans, however, will be picked up in front of the dormitories, and in the "metals" drums on Tuesday morning. Infinity will also collect aluminum beverage containers and steel cans (large steel cans should be flattened). All cans should be empty and rinsed out.

Infinity also collects paper from several locations around the campus. Students should bring their paper to Central Services in the basement of Bill Smith Hall. Please keep colored paper and newspaper separate from white ledger paper. Also, Infinity does not recycle magazines, catalogues, or coated paper of any kind. Ream wrappers for paper reams cannot be recycled either. Ω

International relations at W.C.

Jessica Villecco

The International Relations Club is one of the most diverse and active clubs on campus. It has members from all over the world and from many diverse backgrounds. What exactly is the International Relations Club you ask. Well, it is what you would call the W.C. campus culturally diverse family. The Club likes to get involved in a wide variety of things, international dinners, and trips to places such as Washington, D.C. and New York City. There are many lectures concerning various international topics, and let us not forget the many wild parties to be sponsored by the Club. All of these events are open to the whole campus. If you would like to join the International Relations Club or would like to get involved in any of the many events happening here on campus, feel free to contact either president Angela Panton (x.8750), vice-president Mitsu Hannuki (x.8801), treasurer Siu-yee Ng (x.8762), or secretary Jessica Villecco (x.8639). Don't forget our International dinner on Oct. 9 at 7 p.m. in the basement of East. Our second lecture on Life in East Berlin on Oct. 12 at 7p.m. in the basement of East, and our NYC trip on Oct. 22. Everyone is invited to take part in one or all of these events. Ω

Comming Soon!!!

EARTH JUMP TWO

Relive the majic

WAC from the past

Karen Sieger

Washington College has a rich history. It all began with a man named William Smith. You might recognize the name, or some of your classes may be held there.

William Smith came from Aberdeen, Scotland to New York City in 1751 as the tutor for Josiah Martin's two sons. While in New York City, the State Legislature appointed trustees to establish a seminary of learning. William Smith submitted his idea called the "General Idea of the College of Miranna." Although he failed to impress the trustees, it brought him attention in the city.

A copy of Smith's idea was sent to Benjamin Franklin in Philadelphia, and he was invited for a visit. After much discussion, a charter was granted for the creation of the "Trustees of the College, Academy and Charitable School of Philadelphia," and Smith was appointed as provost.

Problems soon approached Smith with a heavy stick. German settlers in Philadelphia accused him of trying to abolish the German schools. He was also accused of trying to Anglicize the college, and during disputes between proprietors and the colonists, Smith sided with the proprietors. When the colonists talked independence, Smith urged moderation. This branded him as a loyalist.

When the revolution came, the college was closed. After the British evacuation of Philadelphia in 1779, the Pennsylvania legislature voided the college's charter on the ground that it violated the original principles of the institution and the college was hostile to the government and constitution of the state. It is believed this was done to remove Smith as the provost.

William Smith packed his bags and moved his family to Chestertown, where he planned to establish a village school or academy. At the time, students wishing to further their education had to travel to a neighboring state. William Smith proposed the creation of a school for these young men. Soon a charter was granted and Washington College was built. Ω

Washington College Staff Profile

The Washington College Elm Staff Profile this week is of Bette Lucas, new faculty secretary in Bill Smith.

The Elm would like to welcome Bette Lucas to the College staff. She is brand new, actually; her first day was Monday.

Lucas brings a variety of experiences with her to W.C. She and her husband have a dairy farm, she has worked as a banker for Signet Bank, and she worked as a secretary for Pardoe's Lawn and Tree Service. "Now," she said, "I hope I've found my niche."

Lucas has been married for ten years and has four children. The oldest, Paul, is 24 and the youngest, Sharon, will turn 19 in a few days. In her spare time, Lucas is active in the Kent County Chorus and still helps out on the farm. A special favorite is her beach house in Ocean City. "That's kind of my project," she said with a proprietary smile.

Down and Out

Poetry / Prose Reading

"If all be true that I do think,
There are five reasons we should drink;
Good wine - a friend - or being dry -
Or least we should be by and by -
Or any other reasons why."
-Henry Aldrich

Literary House
Friday, October 7
8 p.m.

Chestertown Natural Foods

"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"

101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1677

Dropped A Whole Degree

Special review by special guest reviewer

Joshua Buchman, '94

Strathmore Buzz: Buzz Primer

Simple music. Simple lyrics. Droning vocals. And a complicated backbeat. All well and good if you're Barry Mullin, Jr. complementing Bono's practiced simplicity. Unfortunately, Eric Emrey is no Larry Mullin, Jr., and while Ted Knight's amateurish ramblings offer nothing new for the annals of pop culture, there is a certain marketability apparent in this convoluted mix: very old, very dull, occasionally Manchester-esque. Derivative "alternative" pop at its finest.

Buzz Primer, the first offering from Strathmore Buzz, promises more than it delivers. Wrapped in a slick pop jacket complete with liner notes and other professional quality trimmers, the music quickly reveals itself as patently undeserving of such pampered surroundings. But the packaging does rightly serve to reveal the contents: very mainstream, very predictable, but, not unlike the trendy rap jacket, it would sell if cuddled by professional hands.

The guitar does not offend; it's mostly strummed two-chord dance-able stuff, and when it rises above the noise in a featured role (like the pretty twelve-string in "Without Your Words"), Ted Knight's pedantic steadiness is almost soothing. The problem lies not so much in the performance as in the presentation; the album just plain sounds bad. Most of the time Knight comes through like he's singing in a closet, and while the vocal quality and timbre is identical on all eight tracks, the closet seems to change shape every now and then. So even with the guitars and bass, but curiously not so with the drums. At least I thought it was curious until I noticed that Eric Emrey produced the whole shebang, accounting for the percussive dominance on Buzz Primer. Not only do the drums hold court over the sanguine mix, they oftentimes lack basic rhythmic consistency, tripping over themselves in needlessly complex patterns that are anything but complementary to the poppy and simplistic melodic phrasing. Knight's interpretations are consequently swallowed whole by the forced and superfluous addition of excessive percussive accompaniment. Otherwise, give the boy a producer and a contract and watch the money roll in.

Maybe the blame goes to our rhythmically-oriented media-intensified rap-laden pop culture (maybe Emrey owns the recording equipment), but there is definitely a sense of loss associated with this album. Not the type of loss embodied in Knight's trite lyrics (pop music like this doesn't deserve any better than adolescent groveling for an emotional impetus, so give Knight credit for not deigning to wax Homeric), but an almost tragic sense of loss, the kind associated with an artistic sense of the sublime. Well, not quite, but if you listen real close and use a healthy dose of imagination, you can almost hear what these songs are supposed to sound like. Their true selves lie dormant, suffocated by rhythmic inconsistencies and poor production values that would seriously hamper even the strongest of material.

The tracks in order of their appearance are as follows:

"Push & Pull" is first for a reason. It retains a semblance of coherence, and the picked twelve string compliments the fuzzy guitar nicely, but you've heard its likeness a thousand times. "Eaten Away" is the beginning of the rhythmical end, lending some nice irony to the title. It is followed by "High Ground," Strathmore Buzz's answer to U2. The guitar solo isn't bad, and Knight's lyrical closet is a little bigger on this one, but the rhythm is terribly forced, and after 30 seconds, you kind of want to push fast forward. The first side closes with "Willing." I think Smashing Pumpkins left this one in the tape vault. Slow, sing-songy, and overbearing: You know that I should / you know that I'm willing / But you know the time we had / was never quite fulfilling. I know how he feels.

"Without Your Words" opens the second side and offers a glimmer of hope. After about a minute of the same old stuff, the ditty segues to a beautiful twelve string doing what it is that twelve string are supposed to do, strum strum strum away. Then it's over. Knight doesn't sing opposite the acoustic, dashing the potential for anything seriously pretty on this album. Knight may want to take the plug out for his next offering (due sometime early next year according to the liner notes). "Nothing Lasts Forever" follows with a strong opening, then cascades into what sounds like a practice session. the tune is fairly catchy, though. The DB's could've had a hit with this one. That's The Decibels for you 80's pop neophytes. Next up is "Far Away," far and away the weakest track on the album: Take my fate / And turn me into what I'm not supposed / To be. Abracadabra, you're a musician. "4:00 in the Morning" closes the thing out; a cacophony of treble-piercing high-hat and fumbling snare, the drums ruin this song irrevocably.

All things considered, Ted Knight's songwriting talents could eventually net him big bucks some day if he's into suckering wholesome teenage sweethearts out of their allowances. But hey, isn't that what rock 'n roll is all about? Ω

The William James Forum presents

Can We Assure Integrity in Law Enforcement?

Captain Kim Dine

Class of '75

October 18, 7:30 p.m., Hynson Lounge

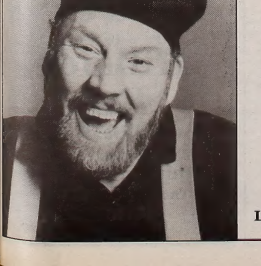
Public Invited

Andy's

ANDY GODDARD, MGR
(410) 778-0779

5776 HIGH STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620

Friday, October 14



The Hula Monsters

Last Gig!! Moe is moving to Oregon. Western swing, rockabilly, blues, Hawaiian tunes, Hawaiian shirts, grass skirts …

Saturday, October 15

Bitter Creek

Simply great bluegrass !!

One Night Only

Friday, October 7

Andy's presents

CATFISH HODGE

Legendary Blues Musician

Little Feat leader after Lauell George

The Drama Department presents

Timothy Mason's

ONLY YOU

Thursday, Friday, and Saturday October 20 through 22 at 8:00 pm in Tawes Theatre

First performed in 1987 by New York's Circle Repertory Company, the play is a fast moving and funny satire of conventional mores in which a group of young people searching for meaningful relationships stumble through various encounters with lovers, friends, and voices. In the end, of course, they find what they are looking for, but only after being guided through a very humorous masquerade.

The Washington College production is directed by Timothy Maloney with setting designed by Jason Rubin and lighting design by Dale Daigle. In the cast are Steve Brown, Dave Johnson, Richard McKee, Cleo Patterson, and Lisa Swann. Kelli Youngblood is the stage manager.

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin and Jeff roam Chestertown in search of bargains.

Welcome to week three of "We Get You Discounts!" This week, we will be getting the students of Washington College a discount. We have to ... it's in the name of the column. Kevin and Jeff, having slept through breakfast and lunch as usual, took it upon themselves to find some food. They picked Burger King as their restaurant of choice, since they are big fans of Dan Cortez. They entered the restaurant, their "Graceland," and went to the counter to order. Kevin and Jeff were very disappointed that Dan was not the cashier.

Cashier that is not Dan Cortez: May I take your order?

Kevin: I'd like a number three.

J: I'll have a Mega-Double Cheeseburger.

K: Can we talk to the manager? We're doing an article for the paper, and we'd like to talk to him or her about the restaurant.

C: Maybe in a few minutes, I'll see if she's on the phone. So that's a Double Cheese Combo, and a Mega-Double Cheese?

Kevin and Jeff waited patiently for their food, while looking into the kitchen, hoping to see their buddy Dan filming a "BK TV" commercial. Dan was nowhere in sight. A young lady wearing a Burger King uniform, who Jeff brilliantly deducted worked at Burger King, shoveled their food on to a tray.

Kevin and Jeff ate their food, hopes dwindling. Where is Dan Cortez? As they finished their meals, the manager came out of hiding (she was not Dan Cortez), and told Kevin and Jeff that she was too busy to talk to them. With minimal grumbling, Kevin and Jeff departed (but not before deciding to go to Domino's for dinner, to see the Noid).

Kevin: Did you just see what happened in there?

Jeff: Yes. There was a disgruntled postal worker, and he looked pretty scary.

K: They tricked us into eating at their restaurant, promising us an interview with their manager, and they didn't give us an interview. They promised everything, and delivered nothing.

J: The sign said "Burger King Cares," but I just don't believe that.

K: "My way, right away?" I don't think so. Not when we have to come back later.

The Burger King experience now ended, Kevin and Jeff ventured over to Roses to talk to the manager there. The manager, whose nametag claimed he was named "Ray," came out of hiding in the stock room, and took us back into his office, where we conducted the following interview:

K: Okay, we know that your first name is "Ray." Can we get your last name?

R: Yeah, my last name is Klein. K-L-I-N-E.

K: What position do you hold at Roses?

R: I'm store manager.

K: How is your relationship with the students of Washington College? Do you enjoy their patronage?

R: Very much so. My district manager and I talked a lot about that. I've been in the store less than a year, so I'm learning as we go. I really saw a difference when the college students started coming back. A lot more business, a lot more money. We want your money.

K: A couple of times, I've heard the word "discount" mentioned. Is there any way you can give a discount to the students of Washington College?

R: I did put an ad in your paper a few weeks ago, where we offered 10% off your next purchase. We did that, and we'll try it again in the future, and see what kind of response we'll get. We probably should have had that ad in the first issue, because I think a lot of their shopping was already done when they got here.

K: One of the facets of our column is that we try to get the students discounts, so if you're trying to increase the awareness of Roses, and we want to get a discount, maybe you could offer a discount through our column?

R: That's something we could discuss.

K: What kind of a discount do you think we can get?

R: The best I could do would be 10%.

K: Is that 10% off anything in the store?

R: Yeah, anything. I tried it once two weeks ago, and didn't get much of a response, but I'd be open to trying it again this semester.

K: What are you planning for Halloween? Are you going to decorate the store with ghosts and goblins and stuff?

R: We'll decorate the Halloween department, and have the associates dress up on Halloween day.

K: What about trick-or-treating?

R: We plan to have a trick-or-treat inside the store on the last Saturday evening in October. More details to follow. I'm sure it will be in the newspaper.

K: Whoa, I'm interested in this, what's going to happen?

R: We're going to encourage customers to come into the store, dressed up, to parade around the store, and we'll give them treats.

K: More than just candy?

R: Could be.

K: Do you have a big problem with shoplifting?

R: No. I did have a dog shoplift once. He came in the front doors, and he knew where the Snickers bars were, and he stole from me two times before I finally caught him.

K: What did you do to him?

R: I told him I was going to call the ASPCA, and I told him what a bad dog he was. I think I scared him.

K: Do you ever switch your nametags around, so you'll see some girl with a nametag on that says "Rob," or I'm in here and your nametag says "Sharice?"

R: I've actually thought about that when I'm having a bad day, or people are constantly asking for the manager. I could switch with a stock boy, and let him be manager for the day.

K: How are we to know that you are the real manager of Roses?

R: Good question. I'm an imposter. I'm from WalMart.

K: Do you have any final words for the students of Washington College?

R: We want your money. Let me know if there's something that is not here that you want.

J: Do you want my money now, or should I just wait, and buy something?

R: You can just buy something.

K: So, do we have a discount?

R: Give me a day that you want the discount, and I'll figure it out.

Kevin and Jeff left Roses Discount Store, satisfied that they had completed their duties as the only members of the Washington College Society of Discounts. They didn't get to meet Dan Cortez, but they did meet someone who may or may not have been Ray Kline, manager of Roses Discount Store. Ω

HOROSCOPES

Libra (9/24-10/23) — Black is death and death is blackness, so wear black and reflect how you really feel inside. Oops. No Smiths here.

Scorpio (10/24-11/22) — Ride that space ship home baby cause there's a birthday party to crash. Watch out for projectile sperm.

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) — Do you love what you know because you know it or do you know what you love because you love it? Cheer up. Remember, you get to die!

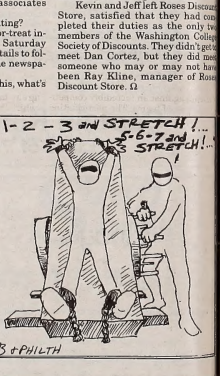
Capricorn (12/22-1/20) — We're sorry your father looks like Donahue, and feels like he should be in the geriatrics ward.

Aquarius (1/21-2/18) — Your pipe reamer is broken. Visit good will.

Pisces (2/19-3/20) — You too can buy a grave for five dollars cheap in Kansas. Visit Rattlesnake Hill and put a stake in your life.

Aries (3/21-4/19) — Your spirit needs some extra meat. Pretend you are a Bear for a day and kill someone you hate. GRRRRR!!!

Tarus (4/20-5/20) — Recent events have fired your kiln. Choose a sparring partner; break out those sharp objects.



Gemini (5/21-6/21) — Your earth mother is protecting your soul. Use this to your advantage and take that trip up North.

Cancer (6/22-7/22) — Lime Jello is not your favorite and neither are the people next door. Call your uncle and get him to bring his bb gun down.

Leo (7/23-8/22) — "REMEMBER YOU MUST DIE"

Virgo (8/23-9/23) — Your brain is like fermented swiss cheese. Use your education to fill up those holes.

by Luna and Ember.

Upcoming Events

October 8: •The Washington Ballet
7 p.m., tickets $20 or $10 for students. Tawes Theatre, W.C., call 778-7813 for reservations

October 9: •"The Little Prince"
2 p.m., tickets $5, performed by Church Hill Theatre's Green Room Gang, Church Hill Theatre, call (410) 758-1331

October 14: •Murder by Invitation
tickets couple $50 or single $30, an audience participation mystery, Church Hill Theatre, call for invitation (410) 778-7058

October 21: •"Bayside" female quartet— 8-10 p.m., tickets $3, Queen Anne's County Art's Council, Inc., "Emergence" coffee house

October 25: •Samuel Bartos
pianist— 8 p.m., tickets $10 or W.C. students free, Tawes Theatre, W.C.

Now through October 16: •Maryland Renaissance Festival
10:30 a.m. -7 p.m., Crownsville, call 1-800-296-7304

Now through October 30: •The Cherry Orchard — tickets as low as $10, Center Stage, call (410) 332-0033

Now through November 13: •West Side Story
tickets $29.95-$39.95, Burn Brae Dinner Theatre, call (301) 384-5800

Spider's
(Formerly Newt's)
Hillside
Bar
Special Draft Night
Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Midnight Madness
Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Must be 21 or older

Field Hockey holds its own against tough competition

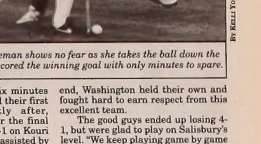
Schultz and Sho'women defense spark win against Bryn Mawr

Nicole Zemanski

The Sho'women had to face some tough competition this past week, but came away with a great deal of confidence. They faced two of the top teams around: unbeaten Swarthmore and an outstanding Salisbury squad.

Last Thursday, Swarthmore came into town posting an unbeaten record of 11-0, first place ranking in the Centennial Conference, and a ranking of twelfth in the nation. Not only does Swarthmore have an excellent goalie, but they have the best offensive threat in the Conference in top scorer, Melissa Bonder, who already has the single-season scoring Conference record (28 points). The team was prepared though and played an excellent game and came away with confidence and respect.

It was an evenly played game between both teams offensively and defensively. Coach Feyerherm commented, "Both teams have very similar styles due the hard-hitting and fall field game in which we both play".



Junior co-captain Jill Schultz registered her first goal of the season to keep Washington in the offensive portion of the game. Swarthmore scorer Bonder, displayed why she is the best scorer in the Conference and put one in the cage just past goalkeeper, Peggy Busker. That was the entire offensive game during regulation play for both teams due to solid defense.

Junior co-captain Jen Hanifee was given the almost impossible job of defending Bonder, but came away with much respect after the game. Hanifee constantly stayed with Bonder, who only escaped once to score a goal. The entire Washington defense came through without letting anyone penetrate the defensive zone.

In overtime, both teams remained strong and constantly attacked one another offensively and defensively. But Swarthmore came through and scored on a penalty stroke to win a hard-fought game, 2-1.

In another home game on Saturday, Bryn Mawr came to Chestertown and could not escape the team's intensity and drive to win. After playing such an excellent game against Swarthmore, the Sho'women came out a little flat, but quickly were back in the game.

Schultz put the Sho'women on the board with the first goal of the game and the team added many good shots on goal that were short of the cage. The defense responded by not letting Bryn Mawr near the goal for most of the game. It wasn't until there were six minutes left that Bryn Mawr scored their first and only goal. Shortly after, Washington came back for the final score of the game to win 2-1 on Kouri Coleman's goal which was assisted by Leanne Cole.

Kouri Coleman shows no fear as she takes the ball down the field. She scored the winning goal with only minutes to spare.

By Kelly Tomlinson

On Tuesday, the team traveled to Salisbury. Coach Feyerherm commented that "Salisbury was by far the best team we had faced all season. They are strong everywhere and are extremely aggressive." Even though Salisbury dominated the offensive end, Washington held their own and fought hard to earn respect from this excellent team.

The good guys ended up losing 4-1, but were glad to play on Salisbury's level. "We keep playing game by game to strengthen our program and it is working," states Coach Feyerherm.

The women come away with a win and were determined to show the Centennial Conference as well as our Eastern Shore rival what they are made of with a record of 5-3-1. Ω

W.C. Invitational: unbelievable intensity

Mariah Geissler

This was definitely a long and very intense weekend for the volleyball team. The W.C. Invitational allowed the women to match their talents against an incredibly competitive array of teams. The participating teams included Albright, Catholic, Gallaudet, Salisbury, and Scranton. It was obvious that each team was envisioning their name written into the first place slot. The teams had all come to not to play, but to win it all; they let it be known with each powerful hit and serve, punishing the other team in their scrambling to dig it up.

The Shorewomen proved once again that there is nowhere else that they would rather be than out on the volleyball court. The weekend's games adhered to the standard two out of three games format; all of the Shore-women's five matches turned into three game competitions.

The women started off the tournament on Friday night against Gallaudet. Gallaudet took two of the three games played to win the match.

The volleyball team took a break after Gallaudet to regroup before they came back out on the court to meet Scranton. The pace of this game was greatly accelerated in comparison to the Gallaudet games. The Sho'women proved that they were ready to fight to the finish. In the first game against Scranton, the team developed the great momentum and intensity for which they are known. At one point in the game, the score faired 4-11. Courtney Myers did not let this discourage her as she served point after point, drawing the score up to 11-10. As Myers served each consecutive point, a hitting error occurred in the team's play. The court came alive with the superb hitting of Beverly Diaz and Becky Stephens complemented by the tough defense provided by Cat Barrett.

Tina Smith started the women off in the next game by serving a quick two points. As Scranton raised their level of play after the shock of Smith's serves, Washington pushed themselves to play even harder. With a tied score in the teens, the tension in the air was thick. The Sho'women pulled together to take a 13-12 victory. Unfortunately, although the team worked hard, the third game of the match was not chalked up as a win.

With the loss of their two matches, the first day of the Invitational was a disappointing one for the team. They had proven to themselves that they could compete against the other difficult teams. The intensity found in the second game against Scranton was only a mere foreshadowing of the hard-fought battles yet to come.

The women started off the Saturday series of games with a win against Albright. Tina Smith displayed her skill as a setter as she paired up with Becky Stephens to create a strong offense for W.C. Albright had a difficult time returning the powerful spikes of Diaz, Stephens, Barrett, and Myers. Albright provided a challenge to the Sho'women, but it was nothing that they could not overcome. The final scores were 15-4, 6-15, and 15-10.

What really needs to be said about the game against Salisbury? It was by far the most memorable match of the weekend - correction, make that the most memorable match of the season. These were the games in which W.C. really pulled together, combining every ounce of their stamina and skill which produced the most impressive match of the Invitational. Salisbury did not give up easily; the scores of all three games went beyond the usual fifteen cut-off mark, a good indication of the extreme intensity felt by both teams on the court. Kari Lee, a sophomore member of the team, summed up the thought of the Shorewomen.

"The most exciting part of the weekend was the third game against Salisbury," commented Lee, "the intensity was unbelievable!!" The team captured their second win for W.C. with a 16-14, 15-17, and 16-14 match.

Despite just coming off a physically and emotionally draining match against Salisbury, the Sho women competed hard against Catholic University; they gave their all, returning kill for kill and ace for ace. The Shorewomen couldn't manage to beat their unyielding competitor. The 15-8, 12-15, and 11-55 scores are an accurate reflection of the ardently fought battle between the two teams.

The results of the W.C. Invitational placed Gallaudet in first place. Tina Smith, one of W.C.'s amazing setters and the Elm's selected Player of the Week, looked back on the game and commented, "We played so well during the whole tournament. It's too bad we couldn't have beat Gallaudet. I think that if we had, we would've taken the whole tournament."

This weekend the Sho'women will have the chance to settle the score and hope to turn the tables as they travel to D.C. to meet Gallaudet once more. The Gallaudet Tournament will introduce the women to a new pool of competitors. The team is anxious to take on the challenge. Ω

Freshmen show their strength in a 3-0 week

Peggy Busker

Thursday, coming off of their win against Goucher College, men's soccer took on another non-conference rival, Lebanon Valley.

The men arrived with little time to warm up but the desire to win. The ball was mainly on Washington's offensive end. There were several good shots on the Valley's goal. On the third shot Valley's keeper did not have total control of the ball and freshman Scott Helm capitalized on it and passed the ball to freshman Erik Dahlen who then finished it off, putting the Sho'men on the scoreboard.

The Sho'men did not settle back after their goal. The offense kept pressure on the Valley goalie. In the first half the Sho'men fired 17 shots at Lebanon Valley's keeper.

Sho'men defense kept the ball on the offensive side of the field. Valley only had two shots on goal in the first half and Miller saved them both.

The second half was more of the same for both teams. Miller made two more saves in response to their two shots. Washington had another thirteen shots on goal. The Sho'men had several corner kicks in the second half as well. Once again all the scoring was done by freshmen. Dave Meyers took the corner kick and found Rodney Roman in outside the goalie box and Roman shot the ball past the keeper. The score was 2-0, Washington.

Coach Todd Helbling was pleased at how well and focused Washington played. They kept Lebanon Valley from having dangerous scoring opportunities. On the offensive end, Washington had many good shots on goal.

Saturday was a home conference game for the Sho'men. Ursinus was a big game for Washington; they are a conference rival and therefore are a very capable and challenging team. Washington was still feeling the effects of two wins in one week and came out strong.

Scott Helm scored the first two goals for Washington, one in the first three minutes of play when freshman Erik Dahlen gave him a drop pass to the left which Helm put away. The second goal for Helm came off a right cross from freshman Chris Dailey. Washington was on its way to its first conference win.

Ursinus was not going to roll over however. They had many (10) shots near the goal and Miller made four big saves in the first half.

Chip Helm came out of his defensive end to put in one more goal before the half. Miller found the net off of a corner kick by Shawn McMahon. The score was 3-0 at the half, Washington.

Mid way through the second half Washington pushed and scored once again. This time it was sophomore Andrew King, off of a throw in. Dailey assisted this goal as well. This was King's second goal of the season.

Miller made three more saves, giving him two shut-outs and three winning games this week. This season it has been hard to play everyone with thirty men and only ninety minutes in a game. With ten minutes to go Helbling put fresh legs in the game: sophomore Brian Dorst, junior Matt Murray and junior goal keeper, Chris Downs. Downs played with confidence and came up with two huge saves for Washington. Freshman Dan Ardito played solid defense the entire second half for the Sho'men.

Once again Coach Helbling was pleased with Washington's solid play. This was the first 3-0 week for Coach Todd Helbling and he looks to continue this at Haverford on Wednesday. Ω

Recreational Sports

W.C. to compete in Timex Fitness Week

Will Brandenburg

In an effort to improve the exercise habits of college students, Washington College will be among 300 colleges and universities across America participating in the sixth annual Timex Fitness Week presented by Ocean Spray. The event, held during the week of October 17-23, is sponsored by Timex and Ocean Spray, with support sponsorship from Concept II and is endorsed by the National Intramural-Recreational Sports Association (NIRSA).

During the week of fitness, each school's recreational sports department will showcase a variety of running, rowing, swimming, cycling and aerobics activities ranging from introductory clinics to triathlons. Three noteworthy events headlining Timex Fitness Week are: "Timex Condition Competition," "World's Largest Aerobics Class," and "Concept II Team Row."

The "Timex Condition Competition" measures students' fitness against national standards and reinforces the value of wearing a specialized timepiece during exercise or athletic competition. The week's largest participatory event, Ocean Spray's "World's Largest Aerobics Class," will be held on Thursday, October 20 at all 300 schools. Last year an estimated 25,000 students sweated it out in the aerobics marathon. And Concept II, Vermont based manufacturer of the Model C Rower, will sponsor the inaugural, "Team Row" competition, a stationary rowing event that will pit participating Timex Fitness Week schools against each other.

Timex's best selling sport watches and t-shirts will be awarded as prizes, free samples of Ocean Spray will be distributed at selected events, and Concept II will award Model C Rowers to winning schools.

"With all the diversions available in college, many students do not develop a regular fitness program," explains Gregor McCluskey, Manager of Sports Marketing and Sales for Timex. "We believe that by sponsoring Timex Fitness Week on 300 campuses, we can show students how to integrate exercise into their busy class schedules and beyond."

This is your chance, Washington. Come out and show us how athletic you are.

Also coming up in Rec Sports:

Sunday October 9 - the annual Greek Games on the campus lawn. Come out and support your favorite sorority or fraternity or campus.

Monday October 10-12 - Outdoor Volleyball Tournament. If interested call Adele Poe at x. 8903.

Saturday October 22 - Washington College Women's soccer has their home opener against St. Johns. Come out and watch them kick butt.

Monday October 24 - Wallyball Tournament. If you want to test your skills call Steve Dashiell x. 8891. Ω

Becoming and Staying Strong, Healthy and Fit

Jemima C. LaClair

Fall is the perfect time to start an exercise program, usually as the weather cools, the sweaters, sweats and jeans come out of the closet and those few extra pounds don't seem to matter and the list of reasons NOT to work out - not enough time, too cold, too far to walk to the gym - seems to grow. However, beginning an exercise program tailor-made to suit your needs is not a great way to 'stay in shape" over those cold winter months and tempting holiday seasons.

Getting started on an exercise program begins with setting REALISTIC, personal goals, whether it be weight loss, toning muscles, or bench pressing 250 lbs. by Christmas. Once a goal or several goals are decided upon, set up an exercise schedule that works for you-AND STICK TO IT! Try out several routines to see which fits you and your busy schedule. For example: 3-4 evenings a week - aerobics for 30 minutes, lift weights for 30 minutes. Create a program that works to help you reach your goals.

To be successful in reaching any goal there are three main components to be contained in a program: Nutrition, aerobic conditioning and strength training. Good nutrition is essential to good health. By cutting back on fat, cholesterol and calories, the benefits of your hard work in an exercise program will be felt much sooner. Cutting back on smoking, drinking, and drugs can also make a difference if you're serious about your health. Be sure to include all of the "food groups" in your diet. Pay attention to the new food labels to see just what these products contain - you may be surprised! Include lots of fruits, vegetables and carbohydrates.

Aerobic conditioning is a phrase that defines any exercise that elevates heart rate to a certain percentage over a given period of time. Some aerobic activities are jogging, running, cycling, swimming, hiking, rowing, ergoing, stepping, aerobics classes, intramural and varsity sports and many others. These type of exercises improve cardiovascular health, making your heart stronger and more efficient. These same exercises done at a lower heart rate over a period of time are considered aerobic fat burning exercises. Also, the Johnson Lifetime Fitness Center has plenty of Lifestep, Lifecycle, ergometer, and Nordictrack skiers available, and there are aerobics classes taught in the LFC Dance Studio each weeknight.

Strength conditioning exercises include weight lifting, swimming, nautilus equipment, toning exercises without weights and often parallel aerobic activity. While some of these can be done outside, most require some sort of equipment, therefore are perfect indoor activities for winter. The Lifetime Fitness Center has all of the equipment you will need and a great place to workout. It is important to learn to do these exercises correctly, especially when weight is involved, because injuries can result. If you're unsure of the proper technique don't be afraid to ask a staff member or someone who looks like they know what they're doing. There are diagrams associated with each machine to demonstrate the correct way to use each machine. There are also diagrams of free weight exercises on the wall, showing a variety of exercises for specific muscle groups.

These are some other important factors to keep in mind regardless of exercise level. It is important to start each workout with a warm-up of 8-10 minutes, getting your muscles ready to work, and to finish with a cool down and stretch completely and thoroughly. Start exercise slowly and gradually increase intensity. If you sustain an injury take care of yourself. Allow your body time to heal and recover. Basically, PAY ATTENTION TO YOUR BODY!

The benefits of regular exercise are endless, however perhaps one of the greatest benefits is the amazing increase in energy and productivity. You will look better, feel better, and be better inside. There is nothing better than feeling healthy and alive, by establishing goals, setting a schedule, maintaining good nutrition, participating regularly in aerobic and strength conditioning. Ω

Player of the Week

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

After having all of the teams at home this past weekend and all of their faithful fans by their side, we had to sort through all of the nominees for Player of the Week. We want to commend the performances of Jen Hanifen for her defensive display against Swarthmore by marking the best offensive player in the Centennial Conference, Scott Helm for the highly coveted honor of being named Centennial Conference Men's Soccer Player of the Week, the entire defensive unit of the soccer team, and the entire volleyball team for hosting the Washington College Invitational.

Because of the success of the volleyball team this weekend, we have decided to pick Tina Smith by unanimous decision. Smith is a sophomore from Taneytown, Maryland where she played for Francis Scott Key High. Tina is a setter for the v-ball squad and had amazing numbers throughout the tournament this weekend. She had 13 blocks, 35 digs, 9 kills, and 10 serving aces. The most notable of the stats was the 91 assists for a 4.8 assist record. She is the type of player that does everything, but most notably you can see her making the saving dig while hearing her body flatten to the floor once again. Tina is a member of ZTA fraternity and enjoys galloping by the countryside with her "Magnum-Man", J.P. So if you spot Tina around campus let her know that you appreciate her rough style of play!

Intramural Football gears up for playoffs

Christian Thorton gets friendly with Andy Neville while Ken Pipken is taken aback.

Intramural football is quickly coming to a close as the teams are being evaluated for the playoffs. Theta Chi leads all with an undefeated record. Goose Lounge follows with a perfect season excluding their 34 -20 loss to the Theta's. Smashmouth was put in an unfortunate position having to play the Theta's and Goose Lounge twice each losing all four games. A plus for them is the fact that they have not lost to anyone else. The KA's and Phi Delts have exchanged wins and losses placing them practically equal. The Devils and Rugby teams lie near the bottom, but one of them may get a chance at post season play. Gisihp basically disappeared in the standings due to numerous forfeits and a winless season.

The Theta's stand strong with their overpowering offensive and defensive lines led by Kevin Roland, Tom Obara, Frank Frisbie and Tom McLemore. Brian Tipton has continued to score and lead the secondaries on defense. Craig Flury continues to light up the scoreboard with his stellar performance down the field on offense and defense.

Goose Lounge has to come back from a tough loss and an injured Bucky. Greg Burns and Chris Welch continue to badger offensive lines, while Boone and Herbie round out the defense. If their offensive line can hold the Theta's back, QB's Herbie and Munda can create some havoc for the Theta's defensive backs.

Smashmouth needs more organization or they will never make it to the finals. This team is full of individual talent, but they rarely play the same players from game to game.

The KA's and Phi Delts both also lack the ability to field consistent squads. It definitely makes them struggle on the field, but if they have full teams present, the playoffs could be very interesting. Dave Dennehy leads a small but quick squad on the defensive end, while Ron Lockhart continues to connect with key receiver Brian Bird. Skip Meissner pretty much rounds up the KAs' offensive with his quick scrambling. Their sizable line does tend to keep scores low in most of their games.

The Devils continue to get better but lost another one on a tough goal line stand versus the Phi Delts in sudden death overtime. Andy Moore stands out as their most potent receiver in his simple release from the line. John O'Hearn has been playing very well, but his often under-manned team just can't seem to get things together.

Although the Theta's are the strong favorite, anything can happen on the field. Goose Lounge is surely geared for revenge, while Smashmouth, KA, and Phi Delts stand to knock off the top two teams.Ω

The W.C. Hall of Fame

by Athey

The Washington College Athletic Hall of Fame held its 14th annual induction ceremony on Saturday, October 1 in Hynson Lounge. A reception, sponsored by the Sho'men Club, preceded the formal dinner and was held in the Johnson Lifetime Fitness Center.

Six former outstanding Washington College athletes were inducted, bringing the total number so honored to a total of 114. The inductees are as follows:

Dr. Stanley Porter (deceased), class of 1912. He was outstanding in football and baseball. He returned to College in 1912-13 as head of the athletic department and coached the football team. He obtained his law degree and practiced law in Baltimore for five decades. He served on the College Governing Board from 1936 through 1943.

Edward Stevens, Class of 1931, was a five-letter man, participating in football, basketball, lacrosse, track, and tennis. Stevens was an exceptional basketball player. The sport of lacrosse was started while he attended W.C., and he scored the first official goal registered by a Washington College lacrosse team.

Milton Hubbard, Class of 1950, was an outstanding track participant. During which he competed won two Mason-Dixon Athletic Conference championships and another finished second. During his junior year, he was defeated in the 100-yard dash. He also competed in the 220-yard dash, the 440-yard dash, the broad jump, and the pole vault. In addition to track, he played football and ran cross-country.

Howard Tilley, Class of 1950, participated in soccer, basketball, and baseball. He was an outstanding fullback in soccer and after his senior year was invited to try out for the regional Olympic squad. In baseball, he caught and played first base.

Norman Phillips, Class of 1960, was an outstanding backcourt performer in basketball and had no peers as a second baseman on the diamond squad. He holds the record of 11 consecutive hits. Phillips is presently the owner of the Team Distributors Sporting Goods Company, located in Annapolis.

Arnold Sten, Class of 1958, was selected to the Mason-Dixon All Conference Soccer Team in each of his four years at W.C. In the spring season he was an outstanding pitcher on teams that consistently competed for the conference championship. He was selected to the All-Conference Baseball Team in his senior year.

Also honored was the 1958 Shoremen baseball team that won the Mason-Dixon Conference championship. Members of the team were presented certificates in recognition of their accomplishments.

Anvin Smith, Class of 1936 served as Master of Ceremonies and the program included remarks by Charles Trout, president of the College; Ed. M. Athey, president of the Alumni Association; and Bryan Matthews, newly appointed director of Athletics. Current W.C. junior Chip Helm offered both the invocation and the benediction. Ω

Women's Soccer Club shines against St. John's

Christy Belliveau

The Women's Soccer Club played its first outstanding game against St. John's University on Saturday, October 1st. Washington's three goals were scored by Curtina Arnold, Natalie Smith, and Curtia Arnold. The support provided by freshman members: Allison Breidenstein, Erin Wade, Sara Woutzel, Jennifer Canatella, and Marie Persina kept the team running down the field to make shots on St. John's defense. Eileen Kuriger played as the goalkeeper in the goal. In her first game of the season Eileen proved to be a great asset to Washington's team. Due to a couple of handballs, Eileen was forced to stare one on one with a St. John's offender three times during the game. She held her position well and knocked away balls with skill and confidence. Other key players for the game include Kelly Eakin, Amy Harmon, Kamala Gordon, Amy Povlonis, and Kelly Scott. Cary Kelly was back in the sweeper position the entire game and put on a tough defense. Washington introduced their new offensive move called the "Whoopsee" during the game. Corner kicks are going to be definite goals with the perfection of this move. The most prominent feature of the game was the teamwork displayed by Washington's Club. Each member proved that she can work together and put pressure on the opposing team. Washington's next home game will be October 22nd. Come out and see for yourselves! Ω

A guide to Field Hockey for non-athletes or confused athletes

Penalty Corners - A chance for Jen Hanifee to score and a chance for Nicole Mills to fly. A punishment for any foul committed within the 16 yard circle. It is a hit into the circle and is a ten on five match up.

Flyer - A kamaze defensive player. Nicole of Leanne, who rushes at the person about to take the shot on a penalty corner and uses anything, hopefully her stick, to block the shot.

Penalty Stroke - similar to a penalty shot in soccer, except smaller. The shooter is closer, the goal is a little smaller and so is the ball.

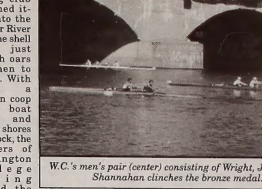
Stick Obstruction - We are still not sure on this one, usually left up to the referee's discretion.

Foot - beyond being attached to the ankle, if the ball hits a foot the other team gets a free hit.

Lift - a free hit that resembles a field goal more than a worm killer.

Free Hit - when a foul has been committed anywhere outside the 16 yard circle, the other team gets an indirect hit on the ball. Sometimes occurs when the referee feels that the other team should just get the ball because it's their turn.

Drive - with a full back swing this is a very powerful hit on the ball that can go the length of the field. Right Shannon?



Block Tackle - a defensive move that was perfected by Jen Hanifee and Marcia Flinn. The ball is won by laying your stick down parallel to the ground and, thus stopping the offensive player in her tracks.

Washington College Crew

27 years, 249 wins in '93-'94 and still counting ...

Y. Jeffrey Lee

In 1967, the men's rowing club launched itself onto the Chester River with one shell and just enough oars and men to get by. With only a chicken coop for a boat house and muddy shores for a dock, the pioneers of Washington College Rowing began the program with few resources but an abundance of dreams.

W.C.'s men's pair (center) consisting of Wright, Jewett and Shannahan clinches the bronze medal.

After being recognized as a varsity sport in 1974, Washington has come to be known as one of the elite college powers in the Eastern Seaboard. Under the guidance of head coach Mike Davenport, W.C. has continued the tradition of success.

In Spring 1994, Washington began the season winning several races down in Orlando, Florida. Over the spring break and since, Washington has swept seven races from Union, captured the Caspersen Cup at the first Caspersen Cup Regatta. Additionally, Washington took two first place finishes at the LaSalle Invitational in New Jersey, winning out of races in the fourth annual Washington College Invitational and with six of seven boats finishing in the top three at the Mid-Atlantic Championships Regatta in Occoquan, Virginia.

At this year's 56th annual Dad Vail Regatta, all men's boats advanced to the semi-finals. With the exception of the men's novice four, all of the men's varsity boats advanced to the grand finals. The men's pair, consisting of coxswain Karen Wright, Eric Jewett and John Shannahan rowed to a bronze medal with a time of 8:14.96 (8:02.79) and Jacksonville (8:02.79) and Lehigh (8:08.87). The straight pair consisting of Doug Peterson and Adam Scholl also got bronze medals. The straight pair finished with a time of 7:25.48. The pair was narrowly defeated by Stockton St. (7:22.25) and Mansfield (7:24.06).

The lightweight four, consisting of coxswain Amy Osborne, Leroy Gatell, Mike Beardsley, Ray Herndon and Brendon Norris captured silver medals finishing behind Brock University (6:41.76). Toronto (6:46.76) finished with a tie for second place and Johns Hopkins trailed with a time of 6:46.98. With the second place finish, Washington had the fastest non-Canadian lightweight boat at the Dad Vails.

With the season winding down, both the varsity pair and the open four participated in the National Intercollegiate Rowing Association Championship Regatta which was held in Syracuse, New York during the first week of June. The pair consisting of Scholl and Peterson captured bronze medals with a time of 7:33.00. Hobart finished first with a time of 7:19.00, while Miami came in second with a time of 7:26.00. Minnesota (7:41.00), Dartmouth (7:42.00) and Santa Barbara (7:49.00) came in fourth, fifth and last place respectively. Washington's varsity pair was officially declared the third fastest collegiate crew in the country.

Finally, the open four, consisting of coxswain Osborne, Gatell, Beardsley, Herndon and Norris also captured bronze medals with a time of 7:16.8. Washington early won its heat by 10 seconds, before advancing to the finals. The first place went to Navy (7:08.5) and the silver medal was awarded to Massachusetts Institute of Technology (B), which narrowly defeated Washington with a time of 7:16.2. Columbia (7:20.00), Oregon (7:23:00), Georgetown (7:28:00), and Boston University (7:35:00) finished in fourth, fifth, sixth and last place respectively.

With an overall record of 249-97-01, W.C.'s Crews hope to continue their success and furthermore surpass last year's achievements and carry through the winning ways that typified the program in the years past.

With the fall season underway, the Sho'men will travel to Boston to compete in the Head of the Charles Regatta on October, 23. The remaining races are Head of the Occoquan, Virginia, on November 5, and the Frostbite Regatta in Philadelphia on November 19.

The Washington College Sports Information Office and the Kent County News contributed to this article. Ω

On the current crew scene

Liza Dickson

On Saturday, October 1, Washington College crew hosted its annual alumni races as well as a boat dedication ceremony. Many alumni returned to Trasiow Boathouse on Saturday morning for informal races against the varsity men's and women's team. After the races, alumni, coaches, team members and friends of Washington College Crew gathered to dedicate two brand-new Vespoli racing singles. One single was dedicated to Dr. Harry Ross and the other to his wife, Dr. Susan Ross. The Ross family has been actively supporting Washington College rowing for about 26 years. The rowing department recognized their contributions and honored them with the singles bearing their names.

The new boats won't be sitting in the boathouse for very long. On October 23 the Varsity crew team will be heading to Boston for the Head of the Charles Regatta. Mike Beardsley, Melisa Olson and Tonya Howell will be competing in the singles divisions. A women's eight and a men's four will also be going. The line-ups for these two boats will be picked in the next week. On November 5, the varsity and novice teams will travel to Virginia for the Head of the Occoquan. On November 18, the crew team will end the fall season at the Frostbite Regatta in Philadelphia. The following week the varsity team will move inside for land training in preparation for the competitive spring racing season. Ω

By Kelly Yonkaitis

With blistering speed, sheer athletecism and grace, Washington's freshman powerhouse, Sarah Sobon dribbles through the Bryn Mawr defense.

Scores

Soccer

Washington	4
Ursinus	0
Washington	2
Goucher	1
Washington	2
Lebanon Valley	0

Volleyball

Washington	9	15	15	15
Haverford	15	4	10	3
Washington	15	8	8
Gallaudet	7	15	15
Scranton	15	12	15
Washington	11	15	15
Washington	15	7	15
Albright	4	15	10
Washington	16	15	16
Salisbury St.	14	17	14
Catholic	8	15	15
Washington	15	12	11

Field Hockey

Washington	1
Swarthmore (overtime)	2
Washington	2
Bryn Mawr	1
Washington	1
Salisbury	4

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Friday, October 7

- Volleyball at Gallaudet, 4 p.m.

Saturday, October 8

- Soccer vs. Catholic, 1:30 p.m.
- Volleyball at Gallaudet tournament
- Field Hockey at Dickinson, 12 p.m.

Tuesday, October 11

- Soccer vs. Delaware Valley, 4 p.m.
- Field Hockey vs. Johns Hopkins, 4:30 p.m.

Wednesday, October 12

- Volleyball vs. Salisbury and Wilmington, 6 p.m.

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Seven

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Board of Visitors and Governors visits campus for fall meetings

Rachael Fink

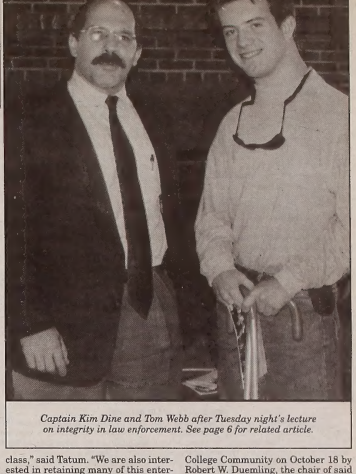
As classes hit their mid-semester peak, and students start counting the days until winter break, the Board of Visitors and Governors converged on Washington College to hold its regularly scheduled round of fall term meetings. Seven different board committees met officially, the full board gathered together for its meeting, and it is doubtless that many off-the-record conversations and pow wows concerning the current state of Washington College took place during the two day gathering. After the summer resignation of then Dean and Provost Gene Wubbles, and the resignation of College President Charles Trout, the board had a number of new issues to deal with in addition to the already full agenda of old business.

Highlights from the full board meeting on October 7 at 1:15 p.m. include a report from the Buildings and Grounds Committee, chaired by Christian Havemeyer and including Henry Beck, David Burris, Michael Macielag, Karen Price, Clifford Schroeder and Dietrich Steffens. Havemeyer reported that the lawsuit over the division of the Customs House property as granted to Washington College by the late William Hubbard has reached the Kent County Circuit Court, after Washington College's claim to the entirety of the property was upheld by the Orphan's Court. Havemeyer estimated that some decision by the Circuit Court concerning the Customs House would be made by late December or early January. In the meantime, the committee suggested the drawing up of a formal use plan for the Customs House, so as to avoid further delay once the lawsuit has been settled.

A report by the Student Affairs Committee, chaired by Dale Adams and including John Conkling, Jay Griswold, Christian Havemeyer, Sally Hopkins, Clare Ingersoll, Brien Kehoe, Craig Lewis, Karen Price, Lawrence Wescott and George Wills, dealt largely with a review of the orientation process, including the pre-orientation trips that took place for the second time this year. Also under discussion were retention efforts focusing on the freshman and sophomore year programs, the residence life and staffing programs, and international students. Adams invited all the board members to become involved in the Student Affairs Committee.

"The Student Affairs Committee is the Board's outreach to the students," said Adams. "And so I encourage the Board members to come to the Committee" with suggestions and ideas.

Other members of the Washington College community were also given the chance to address the board, including SGA president Jamie Baker and Elm editor Rachael Fink. As the faculty representative to the Board, Dr. Nancy Tatum spoke of the freshman class from the faculty stand point.



"The faculty are pleased and excited about the size of the entering class," said Tatum. "We are also interested in retaining many of this entering class."

Tatum also reported that 75 percent of the full time faculty have joined the AAUP, the American Association of University Professors.

The next full meeting of the Board of Visitor and Governors is planned for December 3 with committee meetings taking place on December 2.

Of pressing concern for the Board at their next meeting is the success of the Presidential Search Committee, the members of which were announced through a memorandum to the members of the Washington College Community on October 18 by Robert W. Duemling, the chair of said committee. The committee consists of Board members Jeannie Baliles, Joyce Huber Cafritz, Michael Macielag and Kevin O'Keefe; Administration representative Dean Joachim Scholz; Alumni representative Edward M. Athey; Faculty Robert P. Day, Michael T. Kerchner and Tahir I. Shad; and student representative Jamie Baker.

The first meeting of the Presidential Search Committee is slated for late October or early November. Ω

Captain Kim Dine and Tom Webb after Tuesday night's lecture on integrity in law enforcement. See page 6 for related article.

Parents' Day activities planned

Beth McLaughlin

Parents' Day, Saturday, October 29, 1994, is an opportunity for the families of Washington College students to come get to know the college. In the past, the fall Parents' Day was reserved for the parents of freshmen, followed by another in the spring for the parents of upperclassmen. This year, Student Affairs has combined the aims of the two and has provided a day for both families of freshmen and upperclassmen alike.

"It is a forum for the parents to meet the Deans, professors, other students and other parents," Dean Maxcy remarks.

"This is as important many times for the parents of upperclassmen as it is for the parents of freshmen," Dean McIntire adds. "We found that it was more beneficial to combine the resources into one Parents' Day," the Deans said.

One reason that the Fall Parents' Day is particularly important, the Deans explained, was its proximity to the mid-term. "It gives the parents an opportunity to sit down and discuss certain issues with both their son or daughter and their professors," Dean Maxcy says. "It also can simply serve as a time to get to know more about their professors and learning experiences."

Parents' Day serves several purposes. Besides giving parents the chance to meet with the faculty, it gives them the opportunity to attend a panel discussion of the Administration discussing the current concerns and events on campus. They have the opportunity to become more involved in the activities of the college if they are so inclined and lets them have quality time to get to know the other parents of the students here.

See "Parents' Day" on 4

Boots, not just for feet anymore

New parking regulations and penalties

Paul Bayne

This week's security article will focus on campus traffic regulations. Washington College does have its own specific policies with regard to traffic regulations. The department of Public Safety will not hesitate to issue citations to those who violate these regulations. So far this year, Public Safety has issued over 1000 citations. This is an extremely high number, considering that citations were not issued in the first week of school.

Any student who plans to drive a car on campus must have it registered with Public Safety. The fee of registration is ten dollars a year. Even students who live off campus must have their cars registered. The permit allows one to drive and park on campus.

There are currently nine specific violations which involve fines. Many of the students who have not paid their fines will soon have another fee to pay. The Department of Public Safety will be using auto-boot immobilizers on the car of students with outstanding fines. The auto-boot, for those students who have never seen one, is a large steel device that is locked onto the wheel of a car, rendering it immobile. Attempting to operate a vehicle with a boot will seriously damage the car. If the student tries to operate the vehicle with the boot still attached, he or she will have to pay to replace the damaged boot. The cost of having a boot removed is $25 dollars in addition to the fines one already has accumulated. A boot will be placed on a car if it is unregistered and has three or more outstanding fines or if it is registered and has five outstanding

See "Boots" on 4

Inside This Week's Elm

Parents' Day activities
A complete schedule of the planned Parents' Day activities
4

Not getting along?
Forty ways to confuse your roommate
7

Only You
T.M. does it again. A must see.
9

We get you discounts!
or not, as the case may be 12

Rock Steady

In 1987, Sting released an album that took my breath away. Well, I was young, what can you expect? The album was … Nothing Like the Sun and many consider it one of his best solo efforts.

The first thing I did when I got the album home was rip the liner notes out of the plastic cassette case and drool over the four tiny pictures of Sting (I was really, really young). After succeeding in disgusting even myself, I decided to see what the man had to say, and sing.

I still think that the album is one of the best in my collection (some would argue that's not saying much). One of the things that I liked most about the album, and more specifically, the liner notes, is the inclusion of a bit of personal background about every song, connecting Sting the person to Sting the musician.

In particular, I enjoyed his explanation of the title of the album. Nothing like the sun is a part of a line of one of Shakespeare's sonnets, one that I had not read yet (Don't worry, Professor Tatum, I have since read that sonnet along with most of the rest). The encode that Sting tells, about calming down a drunk by quoting a line of Shakespeare, struck me as one of the most useful uses for literature (this coming from an English major).

Another little piece of Sting history that I enjoyed and actually pondered for a while is the bit about the song "Rock Steady."

"A great uncle of mine who was a seafaring man once gave me the following advice 'Never board a ship unless you know where it's going.' Sometimes it's hard to tell the game shows from the TV evangelists."

Being only 14 at the time, I wasn't sure what he meant about the game show / evangelists thing, but I did understand the ship part.

Unfortunately, understanding and taking to heart are two different activities. Lately, like all of us here at Washington College, I've been taking a cruise on the S.S. Academia. But not heeding Sting's great uncle's advice, I got on board without knowing where academia, or Washington College's version of it, would take me.

Saw an ad in the newspaper that caught my eye
I said to my baby this sounds like the ticket for you and I
It said volunteers wanted for a very special trip
To commune with Mother Nature on a big wooden ship

I still don't know.

This old guy was the boss, he said,
"I won't tell you no lie
But there's more to this journey than is apparent to the eye"

Now would be the perfect time in this editorial to launch into a rant about the state of Washington College, everything that is bad and / or getting worse, but I won't. I'll save that for another week, when I am feeling a bit more sure of my sea legs. Right now, I'm just turning green and clutching the rail.

I said "Just tell me something before it's too late and we're gone
I mean just how safe is this boat we'll be on?"
"It's Rock steady Rock steady"

In less than a year, I and most of my classmates have to magically become real people, without the dining hall to cook for us, the housekeepers to clean our bathrooms and the professors to engage us (don't try to anyway. It really isn't a very easy thing to do I'm told). We have to have kitchens and scrubby things and jobs. There, I said it, the 'J' word. Despite the fact that many of us have been working for years, either to support ourselves, or simply our habits, in May (Is it to early to be worrying about this?) we won't have the same plethora of diversions and excuses. In other words, we bought a one way ticket and have to get off this boat.

It rained for forty days and forty long nights
I'd never seen so rain like it and it looked like our old friend
Was being proved right

The inevitability of this disembankment doesn't make me any happier about it, or any more ready to figure out which particular island upon which I want to be deposited. I do know that it won't be the tropical paradise that I really want it to be, but at the same time it won't be populated by carnivorous animals demanding their Big Macs. Well, at least I hope.

Everyone keeps telling me about the wonderful advantages to a liberal arts education, and some even try to convince me that I can do something with my B.A. in English that doesn't involve conning others into believing they want one too. At the moment, I am too sea sick to believe them, but I do truly hope that they are right.

Mom always told me I could be anything I wanted, do anything I want. She wasn't exactly right (I can't be a rock star. I can't carry a tune in a bucket with a handle. Not that that has stopped others). But I don't hold that against her, and I do realize that I can be almost anything I want. And in admitting that, I guess I'm also admitting that I do see some advantages to the liberal arts education. I just wish it came with a map a little more specific than a medieval star chart.

Woke up one morning and something had changed
Like a room in my house had just been rearranged
She said "It's stopped raining and I know the guy's kind but if we stay here much longer
I'm gonna lose my mind."

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Feature Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan
Arts & Entertainment Editor
Carolyn Puss
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Nicole Zemanski

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Richard McKee, Jr.
Office Manager
Steve Kim
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and Crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or secured over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8295.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

W.C. students commended

This week, our students at Washington College will observe National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week. It's a time for all of us to commend these students for the progress they are making on the issues of illegal and abusive drinking.

Too often we are quick to scold students. We are too quick to point to those who do not take responsibility for their actions and too quick to associate all students based on the actions of a few. We would be better served by recognizing and praising the majority of our students that do develop responsible lifelong decision-making processes about alcohol, its use, non-use and the role it plays in their lives. Call it positive reinforcement, call it a celebration of what is right and good about our students who come to Chestertown to learn not only academic course work but how to live and become part of our community.

Throughout the week, as part of our involvement in the National Intramural-Recreational Sports Association's Project Natural High, we have participated in the Timex Fitness Week and have coordinated with the SGA and several organizations (namely Dale Adams Exchange as well as the Interfraternity and PanHellenic Councils) a weekend of activities focused not on alcohol consumption but on a wide range of social activities in the Student Center and Residence Halls. I am especially proud of the joint efforts of the WC Dining Services and Office of Public Safety in assisting our students in organizing activities that focus on responsibility rather than restrictive containment. It is this type of cooperative effort that allows our students to grow a sense of responsible community and it is the essence of student life.

The students at Washington College have incredible power to make a difference on drinking issues. In fact, they have more power than any of us. Let's acknowledge this reality and feed that power.

-W. Dennis Berry, Director
Student Activities and Campus Recreation

Campus recycling program explained, again

The article entitled "Campus recycling program explained" in the October 7th issue of the Elm gave a rather narrow viewpoint regarding recycling efforts here at Washington College. I believe credit should be given where credit is due and therefore the history of recycling at WC needs to be clarified. The article made it sound as though students had contributed nothing to the program, when in reality it has been the students who saved a dying program from extinction.

Prior to the 1992-93 academic year, recycling at WC existed on a small scale. The average dorm hall contained a small, beige, square, bin for aluminum cans; some floors were fortunate enough to have a large bin, but many halls offered neither. Some students, interested in recycling, implemented cardboard boxes to collect recyclables. Glass collection was inefficient because colors were often mixed together.

Terra Firma, the environmental club, became interested in recycling about this time and saw a tremendous opportunity for improvement. Andrea Nolan and Mary Holmes through contact with Joe Hamilton (an employee at Infinity and a WC graduate) solicited ideas for improving recycling efforts. Terra Firma also contacted campus groups to Infinity, a practice which I have continued. Terra Firma also researched the way recycling was currently being handled on each hall.

At this time Infinity Recycling was looking for ways to improve the program at WC. Infinity was upset with the amount of extra time their workers had to spend sorting materials each week due to their disorganized state. Because the staff spent 50% of their time sorting rather than collecting, Infinity threatened dramatic collection fee increases and the possibility of discontinued service if conditions were not improved.

A meeting was arranged on November 17, 1992 to discuss problems and solutions. The following attended: Ford Shumann, Marilee Schuman, Wayne Jacki, Mike Tyson, Joe Hamilton, Reid Raudenbusch, Lynn Willis, Ethel Squares, Jeff DeMoss, Jessica Davies, Andrea Nolan, and Keith Morgan. Infinity stated that "WC recycles in an unorganized way, using facilities that are not fairly convenient, sometimes overloaded and

See "Letters" on 3

This Week on Campus
Oct. 21 - 27

Film Series
Blown Away
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 21
Only You
Tawes, 8 p.m.
1st Party Back, 9 p.m.
2 a.m., $3, Student Center

Saturday 22
Only You
Tawes Theater, 8 p.m.
The Frogs, 10 p.m., Student Center

Sunday 23
Mandatory Elm Editors' meeting
7 p.m., Elm office
anyone interested in writing is welcome

Monday 24
GALA meeting
6 p.m., basement of Reid Hall

Tuesday 25
Concert Series: Samuel Bartos, pianist
Tawes, 8 p.m., students free

Wednesday 26
International Poetry Reading
basement of I. house, 7 p.m.

Thursday 27
Peer Education organizational meeting
6:30 p.m., Hynson study lounge

Thinking through ...

my previous mistakes

by Paul Briggs

Aristide is back in power.

The Clinton administration has actually succeeded in persuading the junta to step down, allow the disarming of its paramilitary forces and leave the country. This agreement was, of course, worked out mostly by Jimmy Carter, and with numerous U.S. troops breathing down the necks of the junta. The accomplishment, however, remains considerable.

I, for one, did not believe it would work out nearly as well. My first column in this space expressed doubt that the President would consider sending troops at all. My exact words were, "Right now this doesn't seem likely - neither the administration nor Congress is prepared to enter into anything that looks like a Somalia-type entanglement." Later on, when troops were sent, and then ordered to stand by and watch while Haitian thugs attacked demonstrators, I was certain that this was a loss of whatever credibility the United States had managed to salvage from last year's USS Harlan County fiasco. I was also certain that at some point there would be a violent confrontation between American soldiers and Haitian "security forces," and that this would cause a public outcry and immediate demands for ignominious withdrawal.

Fortunately, I was wrong. So far, it hasn't worked out like that at all. There have been plenty of opportunities for just such a confrontation, and yet the anti-Aristide forces, even while being disarmed, have for the time being been as cooperative as their leaders. If I didn't know better, I'd swear President Clinton knew more about foreign policy than I did.

In other foreign-policy news, Saddam Hussein's troops are withdrawing from the Kuwaiti border. Why he tried bringing them close enough to threaten Kuwait with American armed forces still in the area is still something of a mystery. The best guess is that he was hoping to re-negotiate the measures taken against Iraq, such as the economic sanctions and no-fly-zones. In any case, the administration sent more troops and ships to the Persian Gulf, and Saddam reacted as might have been expected.

Also, the administration has signed onto an agreement with the government of North Korea. Under this agreement, North Korea will shut down all aspects of its nuclear weapons program and allow full inspection of all its facilities in exchange for U.S. economic aid, much of it in the form of fuel supplies. Fuel supplies are needed because part of the agreement involves North Korea shutting down its nuclear power plant and abandoning efforts to build two more - and say what you will about nuclear power plants, they do produce enormous quantities of energy. As such, when shut down they are very difficult to replace. (At last report, what's left of the one at Chernobyl was still operating.)

There are aspects of this agreement about which I have some reservations, such as the delayed inspection of several key sites and the provision that allows Kim Jong Il to hold up the start of the most core-rods for some years. By the time you read this, no doubt many commentators will be denouncing it as a sell-out for North Korean. I, for one, am not willing to pronounce final judgment on it just yet. Ω often abused with trash and unsorted materials." To rectify the problem an outline was created which called for: hallway bins for 3 colors of glass and a separate container for aluminum, procedure for emptying bins, and collection sites at Kent-Somerset, Cardinal, and Middle, publicity of theme: "Please participate and Separate."

From "Letters" on 2

A recycling committee was formed, and I sent out a letter to all RAs on November 30, 1992 explaining our new policy, plans to use work to improve separation of materials in the forms that semester, and RAs were asked to label bins/boxes (clear, green, brown, aluminum) and to post recycling guidelines on their halls. Part two, aimed at the spring semester, intended to motivate the campus into participating in recycling through instruction, expansion, and ease of access with the provision of new bins as the focus.

After the Nov. 17 meeting, Andrea and I drafted a proposal with the help of Marilee Schumann. A goal was stated in a letter to the SGA on February 11, 1993:

Goodbye W.C.

Bedell addresses College community

As I prepare to depart for the University of Iowa, I thought that I would like to share some thoughts with the College community.

For the past eight years I have spent most of my working hours in the Business Office. Having spent such a considerable amount of time there, I have come to know my co-workers quite well. I wanted to take this opportunity to publicly thank them for their patience, hard work, loyalty, friendship, and good humor.

Mary Etta Russum, the Assistant Controller, needs to know that she is one of those employees every organization prays for. She not only is extremely competent, but sensitive, compassionate, and (as everyone knows) cheerful all the time. One of the many unfair things about life is some jobs require certain degrees or certificates, regardless of skill and knowledge. If those were not obstacles for Mary Etta, she would be taking over for me (of course, most folks know she already is!). However, I truly hope she stays in her current position - Assistant Controller because she is extremely good. Actually I would like her to move to St. Thomas with me, but she turned me down. I would also like to point out Mary Etta receives more flowers, candy, and gifts than anyone I know, another very good reason to be located next to her. Mary Etta has been not only done an outstanding job for Washington College but has been my friend, something I value more than she can ever imagine.

Barbara Thompson, the Head Bookkeeper, has worked for Washington College for 41 years. Barbara tells me "she's seen it all." Barbara is wonderful. Every change that has occurred in the office she has faced with courage and considered a new challenge. I want her to know I respect her and the job she has done for Washington College. Together we have been through many changes and this last change, my leaving and her retiring, is the hardest.

Barbara has a wonderful memory. During one of our many moments when we were ready to tackle the next major Business Office issue, we decided we needed to organize and maintain historical financial data that had not been archived in our office. This necessitated a trip to the wall vault in Bill Smith (the former location of the Business Office - 20-30 years ago?) Barbara thought some of the very old files might be found there that we wanted to archive. And Barbara still remembered the combination. I was truly impressed! I have learned if we are out of balance and I am trying to trace a transaction Barbara can find it! Barbara thanks.

Doris Oakley, the Benefits Administrator, helps us all with our benefit questions. What would the College do without Doris? I know my health insurance bills would be a mess. Her calm reassuring presence in the Business Office helps to keep us all sane.

Nancy Toy, the Bursar, changes with grace. Each change we've needed to implement to help provide better service for our students, Nancy made look easy. She has taught me all about wearing slips and dealing with students. Thanks Nancy for all your years of support.

Michele Messick, the Accounts Receivable/Payable Administrator, with 7 years and 9 months of service, is the most recent member in the Business Office. It is wonderful to work in an office where there is no turnover. (Although it has been hard on all of us to work in an office where staff has been trimmed below acceptable levels). Michele attacks each of her jobs with such vigor that everyone knows to stand clear. Michele, it has truly been a pleasure working with you Thanks for all your support.

As I leave, I am comforted in knowing this dedicated group will continue to serve Washington College students, faculty, and staff with their usual thoughtful attention. In addition, I want to thank everyone at Washington College for their support over the years. I have truly enjoyed my time here, and I look forward to your visit to St. Thomas.

-Lauren E. Bedell
Assistant Vice President for Finance

Genocide in Rwanda
Part 1: Ethnological Background

Professor Robert Gray,
Emeritus, Dept. of Anthropology, Tulane University

October 27, 1994, 7:30 p.m., Hynson Lounge

sponsored by the Goldstein Program in Public Affairs and the Anthropology Club of Washington College

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

The Elm's one-week hiatus due to fall weekend leaves two SGA meetings to cover: those of October 11 and October 18.

The newly elected freshman class officers – President Brigid Kolish, Vice President Casey Blake, Treasurer Long Le, and Secretary Alison Parke – were sworn in at the first meeting by Parliamentarian Ken Pipkin. The freshman class's first order of business this semester is to work with the sophomore class in the planning of a proposed Freshman/Sophomore semiformal, which Sophomore Class President Leticia Lyford-Pike is hoping to schedule in early December.

Funding for this event is coming from the Sophomore class's fund-raisers: the recent "Sophomore Servant Day" and the Blood Drive. According to Lyford-Pike, the Blood Drive went exceptionally well, mainly due to the fact that there were quite a few more donors than anticipated.

Junior class President Mark Reyero is planning to have the Juniors work on a project to decorate the campus for the holidays. The initial plan has been has been given the green light, and the issue, among others, will be discussed at the Junor class meeting Thursday night at 7 p.m.

The Senior class, under President Tyler McCarthy, is still attempting to find a Commencement speaker. The class's first selection, author Tom Clancy, was rejected by the College administration. General Colin Powell, the former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff under George Bush, will most likely be the class's next choice.

College President Charles Trout has accepted the SGA's invitation to take part in a Senate meeting. He will attend the October 25 session. This meeting, like all of the weekly SGA meetings, will be open to all students. Possible topics of discussion with Trout entertained at the October 18 meeting include the goal of campus unity and what it is that is obstructing it, as well as possible avenues for the Student Government and to the next president.

Part of each meeting was spent dealing with club funding. At the first, funding was allocated for all the clubs,

"Parents' Day" from 1

A group of students volunteered ideas for activities during the Fall Parents' Day. One of the concerns this year is that there are no home athletic events, although there is the Alumni Lacrosse Game against the current W.C. team. Several groups came together and are responsible for the list of things for the parents to do and see.

The highlights of the schedule include a Panel Discussion in Tawes Theater, with President Trout moderating, "Washington College Today...and Tomorrow." There is a picnic luncheon followed by the Alumni / Student lacrosse game and an Open House at the O'Neill Literary House. There are several discussion sessions, including one in the Sophie Kerr Room led by the Parents' Committee, followed by a wine and cheese reception. Other activities include the International House bake sale and the talent show sponsored by Cleopatra's Daughters. The evening ends with save for the Riverside Players and Cleopatra's Daughters. Funding for these two clubs was passed in the second meeting. The funding application for the Sailing Club was not discussed until the second meeting due to the fact that it was turned in past the deadline. For this reason primarily, the funding recommendation was for only one-fourth of the requested amount. Several Senators voiced disapproval of this measure, and a motion was passed which will allow the Senate to vote on the issue next week, after finding out about the club's other budgetary options.

W.C.'s Honor Board has put its foot down for the first time this semester. Two students were caught in possession of an Acme shopping cart on campus. One was issued a written warning, the other was placed on probation for the duration of the semester.

The Social Committee, chaired by Student Life Chair Rob Moran, has discussed improvements to the campus film series. As the series stands now, students have no input as to which movies are shown in the series. Steps will soon be taken to change the policy.

The cable TV issue surfaced in each meeting. In the first, SGA faculty adviser Dr. McKillop disclosed that the Student Affairs Committee, which met to deliberate on the issue, has concluded that cable may be a feasible and helpful project for the campus. In the second meeting, SGA President Jamie Baker stated that he has yet to hear any official word confirming or denying the proposition, thus discrediting several rumors.

The question of student participation (or lack thereof) on the committee to choose a new College President also surfaced during the October 11 session. As of Tuesday night, no information on the subject had reached the SGA. The issue will certainly be pursued as fervently as possible, as the Student Government has repeatedly shown itself to be intent on taking part in directing the College's future.

Upcoming events on the SGA calendar include a party Friday night in the Student Center (sponsored by the Dale Adams Heritage Exchange), in which a DJ will be performing, and a concert by The Frogs at 10 p.m. in The Cove on Saturday night. October 29 is Jazz Night, and the anticipated Fine Wine Bottles concert is scheduled for November 12. Ω

Jazz Night, sponsored by the Dale Adams Heritage Exchange. (Admission Charge, $3.00 per person)

9 -10 Registration
10 Panel Discussion - "Washington College Today...and Tomorrow"
11 Parents / Faculty Gathering
12:30 Picnic Luncheon
1:30 Alumni / Student Lacrosse Game
1:30 - 5 Open House - Literary House
2 Meeting - New Students' Parents
3 -4:30 "Studying the Liberal Arts and Sciences in the '90s" Discussions
3 - 5 Book Signing by John M. Baker
4 - 5:30 Talent Show
4 Parents' Committee Meeting
4:30-5:30 Magical Mystery Tour of Miller
5 - 6:30 Wine and Cheese Reception
6:30 Dinner
7:30 Jazz Night

Two SGA meetings, thus two SGA issues of the week

The first deals with an aspect of W.C.'s alcohol policy not previously discussed in The Elm: the policy that applies to The Cove. One way the policy is currently organized, during social events in The Cove, anyone of legal drinking age is permitted to by beer, two glasses at a time, with no limit. Students younger than the legal age needn't have positive ID, just money to buy beer from seniors. There's an unlimited supply as long as the Cove staff doesn't notice the same person making dozens of trips to the bar during the course of the night. In addition, the Cove staff's jurisdiction ends at the door which leads down the ramp into the Student Center — drinking in the Student Center is policed by forces which are legendary for their leniency. Just keep on your feet and hold your liquor down and you'll be fine, even if you're 17.

Is this a cause for worry, or simply a cause for underclassmen to attend some SGA events?

The second issue involves on-campus parties. It seems as if there are two kinds of uninvited guests at almost every party around here — local party crashers, and the cops. The confines. Those people currently most eligible are those with unregistered vehicles.

"Boots" from 1

If students have questions about their traffic violations or any other matters, they can contact Public Safety from 8:30-4:30 Monday through Friday.

Another traffic related note: The alley behind Minta Martin is undergoing some changes. Coming in from Route 213, there is a yellow line for three car lengths that denotes a new no parking zone.

This is due a fire department regulation because when cars were parked there the fire department could not get their equipment down the road.

The alley will be made one-way towards the hospital in the near future. Both one-way and no parking signs will accompany these changes. Ω sensus seems to be that if we rid ourselves of the first, the second will also mind its own business. Two weeks or so ago, SGA President Baker met with the RA's of Cecil, Dorchester, Earp Hall, and Middle Hall to discuss what seems to be the most popular solution found thus far—checking ID's. The proposition is as follows: all students are expected to be in possession of their ID's, the presentation of which may be demanded at any time, at the discretion of the organization sponsoring the party. This is a measure aimed at prevention, and it is designed to keep non-students out of on-campus parties. True, something needs to be done, but will this be effective? Do they think the buildings have only one door? Are we going to need the cops patrolling fraternity parties as a preventive measure?

Is the SGA's reaction too light, too harsh, or about fair? How would you like to see this problem handled?

The SGA basically belongs to the students, so tell them what you want. As always , they welcome your feedback. Send some BlitzMail, post something relevant on PacerForum, or call the SGA office at x. 8500. Ω

Department of Public Safety Traffic Violation Fines

Violation	Fine*
Reckless Driving	$50 $75
Unregistered Vehicle	$10 $15
Driving or Parking on lawns	$10 $15
Failure to obey traffic control device	$15 $20
Parking in loading zone	$7.50 $12.50
Handicapped	$15 $20
Parking only $\frac{\text{Resident}}{\text{Faculty}}$	$7.50 $12.50
No parking zone / Fireline	$7.50 $12.50
Reserved parking	$7.50 $12.50
Impeding traffic flow	$25 $35

*First amount denotes fine if paid within 30 days of issue of ticket. Second amount denotes fine if paid after 30 days after issue of ticket.

"The Boot," which will be used by Public Safety to punish repeat offenders

Internship Opportunities

Department of Political Science and International Studies
Internship coordinators will be on campus on the following dates. All presentations will be in the Sophie Kerr Room, Clifton B. Miller Library from 4:00 - 4:45 p.m.

For more information contact Dr. Shad (x. 7779) or Dr. Premo (x. 7769)

Friday, October 21
Mr. Michael McCabe, Div. Chief of Police Support, Oceans & International Environmental and Scientific Affairs, Dept. of State

Tuesday, October 25
Ms. Mary Swann, Intern Coordinator,
Bureau of African Affairs, Dept. of State

Thursday, November 10
Ms. Jennifer Woody, Intern Coordinator
Bureau of East Asian & Pacific Affairs,
Dept. of State

Tuesday, November 15
Ms. Mary Baldwin, Intern Coordinator, Organization of American Studies, Dept. of State

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

W.C.'s '60s revolution

Lauren DiLossi

In the 1960s, the United States was flooded with protests and anti-war rallies. The '60s were supposedly one of the most turbulent times in America's history. The only possible alternative to defeat the intensity of the entire country at this time is the Civil War. The entire country was in a large moral debate on whether the Vietnam war was even necessary.

During this time of confusion and chaos in America, what was the view of the students of Washington College? Was it outrage over the ongoing war across the Pacific? Or was it conservative and calm in overall support of the war? Or was it neither?

Well, there were protests on our campus, but what were they about? What was the pressing issue on the students' minds that made them protest?

The answer may shock you, but it was over the rules and regulations surrounding the dormitories. The College was attempting to care for the moral welfare of the student body. The students wanted to be able to make their own choices and accept their responsibilities, while the college wanted to control the choices made and limit the responsibilities of the students. What exactly was the problem? And how could it be resolved?

The women objected to the curfew law enforced on the campus. All women living in dorms had to be in their dormitory by a certain time in order to create a specific desired conduct among the female population of Washington College. In May of 1966, and as stated in The Washington College Elm, the Women's Residence Association had a meeting on this important issue of control. The meeting was for the senior women to be able to set their own hours for entrance into the dorm. The request was made to appreciate the maturity of the students, and to give each person responsibility for their own actions.

We can reap the benefits of that request today, because we are free to come and go as we please all the while knowing we are responsible for our own actions. This '60s revolt at Washington College may not have affected the entire world, but it has affected our own lives. Ω

Get Ready, Get Set, Earth Jump!

Watch upcoming issues of The Elm for more details.

Campus Voices

Question by Philip McQuade

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What's the closest you've ever come to being arrested?

When I was caught by a Chestertown policeman on the way to crew practice in my boyfriend's car without a license.

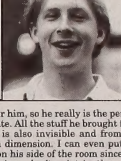
Leti Lyford-Pike, Sophomore

I have been arrested. For being intoxicated and indecent exposure. You're not going to write that are you?

Kellie Harrison, Freshman

My freshman year I was at a Sig. party that was busted by the cops so my friend (ed. note - friend = Eve Zartman) and I jumped over a fence and a couple of guys were peeing by it.

Laura Heidel, Senior



White steel on the edge of panic. Policemen are your friends. Support your local precinct.

Aran Downs, Junior

Going to a party with my friend at the I-house.

Martha Kimura, Senior

Very far away. That's as close as I've been.

Chris Watkins, Sophomore

crud.

creative ranting under duress.

by Jeff Frank

Single White Male

The thing I feared most about going to college was ending up with a large roommate named "Bubba" who would, as soon as I arrived, proceed to take me to one of the walls in the room we were to "share", and use me as a target for lacrosse practice. I didn't get to meet "Bubba" my first day at college ... or my second day ... or ever. I actually started to worry that "Bubba" had been fatally injured (heh heh) in a car accident on his way here. Why my roommate never showed up remains a mystery to me, but hey, more room for me.

After the first week, I was told by my R.A. (I haven't even announced my major, and the college already supplied me with research assistant!) that Student Affairs was sending another student to talk to me about moving in. I waited all day in my room for someone to show up, when finally there was a knock at my door. No, that was someone else's door (damn acoustics). I waited all day in my room for someone to show up, when finally there was a knock at my door, and it was my door. There was even someone there when I opened the door (how about that!?). He started to speak, but shut up as he looked past me at the disarray of my belongings, including fake vomit, Zippy cartoons, and a Magritte calendar. "I think I have the wrong room." He left, and I never heard from him again.

I guess Student Affairs realized that it was a hopeless situation to try to get me a roommate, so they've stopped trying. In case they decide to try again, I've invented a mythical roommate. George, my roomate, is an invisible mute from the fourth dimension (Note to any interdimensional travelers that attend W.C. - to get to the fourth dimension, take 213 north). No one can see him, feel him, or hear him, so he really is the perfect roomate. All the stuff he brought from home is also invisible and from the fourth dimension. I can even put my stuff on his side of the room since our belongings don't exist in the same plane. He never complains when I have my loud and obnoxious friends over, and I can't see, hear or bump into his friends, so we get along fine. As anyone who's been to the fourth dimension knows, the inhabitants of the dimension four are quite friendly. I put a nametag for George on our door (which cites exactly who he is), which serves as a thief deterrent, a roommate deterrent, and unfortunately, a wacky person attractor.

The mythical roommate was a good idea ... or at least better than my other idea, which involved constantly changing clothes and pretending I was two different people. If I can manage to scare roommates away for four more years, I'll never have any problems studying (if I ever feel like it).

*Important Note - The writer has nothing against people named "Bubba," so there is no need to break out the tape and lacrosse sticks. Ω is now accepting submissions for the 1994-95 edition.

THE WASHINGTON COLLEGE REVIEW

The REVIEW is a high-quality magazine edited by students and faculty. Its purpose is to publish the best of Washington College student essays, fiction, and poetry.

Submissions should be sent to humanities editor, Amzie Parcell; creative writing editor, Kathy Wagner; sciences editor, Don Munson; social sciences editor, Dan Premo; the editor-in-chief, Jeanette Sherbondy; or the student editor, Erin Rowe.

BAY TO BAY TRADERS

207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442

Off Street Parking Next To The Store
Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm

Ray-Ban · Patagonia · Columbia Sportswear Company · REEF · Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks · Hanes · JANSPORT · ORIGINAL UGG · Barrecrafters Car Racks

10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS

WITH STUDENT I.D.

Dine addresses issues of integrity in law enforcement

Rachael Fink

The second lecture sponsored by the William James Forum for this semester turned out to be a big hit. Over 30 people, including many students, faculty, staff and interested visitors, were in attendance to hear Captain Kim Dine speak on the topic "Can We Ensure Integrity in Law Enforcement?"

A 1975 graduate of Washington College, Captain Dine began his talk by praising W.C. and the tradition of liberal arts education.

"A liberal arts education is a wonderful and firm foundation on which to stand," said Dine, who also admitted to becoming interested in law enforcement while here at W.C.

Dine went on to discuss the nature of integrity as it applies to all professions, not just law enforcement. Citing many statistics about the professions of law and medicine, Dine stressed that all professions are guided by a code of ethics and that "corruption and public mistrust are not unique to law enforcement."

Dine made the point that police officers represent the most visible aspects of the government and that compared to lawyers and doctors and such, "society must absolutely trust the quality and decency of the police from the bottom up."

A factor of law enforcement that to a large degree does not exist in many other professions is the extent to which temptation is a daily part of a police officer's life. Dine spoke of friends in the narcotics department who routinely come across large quantities of money in situations where their honesty is the only thing standing between them and a life of dishonest luxury. The violence of the profession is another key factor separating the enforcers of law from other professionals.

"Every 57 hours an officer is killed in the country," stated Dine.

After this general discussion concerning integrity, Dine went on to outline some of the ways in which the D.C. police force was changing to help ensure the much needed integrity. He cited a restructuring of the internal affairs office, making it completely separate from the main body of the police force and answerable only to the Captain, the revamping of the recruiting and training processes and the internal promotional process.

He noted that the D.C. police force now has civilians in key leadership positions in an attempt to not only bring the public and the police closer, but to help ensure the integrity of the professional police. Other changes include multi-cultural and diversity training for all employees of the department and a new proposal to erect new stations throughout D.C. Ω

The Ethics of Caring Beyond Curing in Hospice

Edmund D. Pellegrino, M.D.

John Carroll Professor of Medicine and Medical Ethics at Georgetown University Medical Center, Director of the Center for Clinical Bioethics and Director of the Georgetown University Center for the Advanced Study of Ethics, acting chief in the Division of Internal Medicine at the University Medical Center

November 2, 1994, 7:30 p.m., Hynson Lounge

co-sponsored by William James Forum and the Kent Hospice Foundation

It is a dark and stormy night ...

Well, a Darkover and exciting night anyway

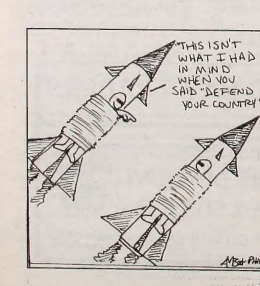
Mindie Kaplan

Occasionally, among the mounds of snail mail that crosses the feet of Elm Writers during the course of a semester, you find something truly unusual. The "Darkover Grand Council Meeting XVII" is such a flyer. This Fantasy Convention is dedicated to those who love the books of Marion Zimmer Bradley and other novels in the Fantasy Genre. It also appeals to the many devotees of the Maryland Renaissance Festival and other similar events.

What is Darkover Convention? It's a group of fantasy lovers and filkers (folk music in the fantasy genre) getting together for a weekend of constant partying. There will be a movie room running all the best (and the worst) SF and Fantasy movies Hollywood has to offer 24 hours a day. There will be an art show and a Regency Ball Saturday afternoon. The costume competition promises to be dazzling with participants competing for the funniest presentation in addition to best costume. There will be a series of presentations on various topics. In the past, there have been jewelry making sessions, comic book workshops, song writing workshops, creative writing workshops, and discussions of various aspects of fandom. Special guests at the convention will include James Marion Zimmer Bradley (if her health permits) and Katherine Kurtz. The artist guest of honor is Rikk Jacobs. Other author/artist guests include Lisa Barnett, Julia Ecklar, Janet Kagan, Jacqueline Lichtenberg, Nancy Janda, Diana Paxson, Don Sakers, Melissa Scott, and Hannah Shapero. Musical guests include Bob and Sue Esty, John Huff, MrFanwy, On the Mark, Peregrynne, and Ed and Kathy Sobansky.

Darkover is located in Timonium, Maryland and will take place the weekend of November 25-27. Weekend memberships cost $25 each until November 1. After that, and at the door, they will be $30. If you are interested in attending the convention, please contact Mindie Kaplan for further information and possibly a ride to the convention. A room at the convention costs $61 a night, but last minute crash space is usually available for as little as $10. Ω

Washington College Staff Profile



Head Switchboard Operator Sara Ann Dadds-Elburn has been a part of the W.C. community for five years. She worked in the dining hall for four and a half years, and moved to the switchboard in January.

A native of the area, she loves working for Washington College."I love the campus," said Dadds-Elburn. "I love the people. I came to the switchboard with high hopes of helping Virginia [Bakker, Switchboard Operator] improve the quality of service for the college community as well as the outside community. I enjoy being in here around everybody. I like being a part of the team."

Dadds-Elburn is divorced, with daughter named Darcy who is four and a half years old. "She's a good baby," said Dadds-Elburn. "I'm very fortunate."

Asked about her outside interests, Dadds-Elburn replied, "Lately it's helping needy people." She is active in her church and arts and crafts. She enjoys singing, and lends her talent at weddings and enjoys karaoke, which "the whole college knows - I sang at the Alumni Picnic."

Dadds-Elburn's other outside interest is her boyfriend. "We co-habitate," she said. "I'm a co-habitator. I'm a sinner."

HOROSCOPES

Libra (9/24-10/23) • Fall break proved to be more of a diplomatic mission than a vacation. Be satisfied with the knowledge that you accomplished something that will aid you in future dealings on the home front.

Scorpio (10/24-11/22) • You have worked hard to get in touch with your needs and desires while keeping control. Your birthday brings a solar flare to a new relationship and confirmation that a long lasting partner's intensity has increased by your inner growth.

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21)• You have finally gotten back on track with what you want. Don't let this sway you from jumping the train you're riding and switching to another more exciting line.

Capricorn (12/22-1/20) • The moon has shown full face this week and you're howling like a beast in heat. Stop yawling, you're attracting the wrong people and the right ones think you're a total freak.

Aquarius (1/21-2/18) • The heat has gone down and some souls are now saved. Beware, if the humidity rises; you'll be on your way to the gas chamber.

Pisces (2/19-3/20) • We saw you skinny dipping in that ugly fountain downtown! Be careful, someone may catch you on candid camera and enter the tape at the next film series.

Aries (3/21-4/19) • You are a fermented bird on a telephone wire. You follow electricity where it flows. Pay your bill or you'll be disconnected.

Taurus (4/20-5/20) • What are you made of? Don't be a sucker to be licked dry by carnivorous beings.

Gemini (5/21-6/21) • Stop taking that Ether, people can see your limbs dangling from car windows.

Cancer (6/22-7/22) • This town is possessed by leaden spirits. Read Allen Ginsberg to get pointers on levitation.

Leo (7/23-8/22)• The moon is just into the wan of its cycle and this unleashes the dark side of your soul. Let this feed your creative energy and look forward to the balance of light at the beginning of next month.

Virgo (8/23-9/23)• Stop hovering by the metal gate, the employees may soon file harassment charges. Take the time to reaffirm your friendships by exercising your fingers. Write!

by Luna and Ember

40 ways to confuse a roommate

1. Every morning, when you get up, say, "Well, time to go to class." Sit on your bed and act like you're turning your room key in the ignition. Then act like you're driving, turning an invisible steering wheel and making, "Rrrrrrrrrrrr, rrrrrrrrrrrrr" engine sounds. Then, one day, chug a few beers before "driving" to class. Add the "Rrrrrrrrrrrr" sounds, and then say, "Screeeeeeeeeeeeeech" and act like you've had a car accident. Bring yourself off the bed and across the room, and pretend to be hurt. Spend the day in bed with an icepack on your forehead.

2. Whenever your roommate sneezes, immediately call the Rescue Squad and report that your roommate is spreading a highly contagious, infectious disease around the building. If your roommate protests, go on a tangent about health codes.

3. Every night, when you do your homework, put a balloon on the chair before you sit down. When the balloon breaks, act like you've been startled. Scream occasionally for the next few minutes. Then, stop suddenly, and start on your homework, as if nothing happened.

4. Wear earmuffs, all the time. Act like you can never understand what your roommate is saying. Pick up the phone at random, say "Hello?" and act confused, as if you don't understand why nobody's there. Answer the door at random, as if somebody had knocked, and look around the hallway as if somebody's supposed to be there. After about a week, stop wearing the earmuffs. Advise your roommate to never buy a hearing aid at a garage sale.

5. When you return from a class, instead of opening the door, break it down with a big piece of lumber. Tell your roommate you forgot your key.

6. Every night, when your roommate comes home, wait on the other side of the door. When your roommate opens the door, act like he / she hit you in the head, and that you've been knocked unconscious. Spend the night sleeping on the floor. After about a week, go to bed as you normally would. Complain loudly that you can't sleep.

7. Get lots of tomatoes. Sit with them in a corner of the room and have secret meetings. Inform your roommate that you've been nominated for president of the tomatoes. Put up campaign posters around the room. Select one tomato to be your campaign manager. Make speeches in front of the tomatoes. Then, one day, when your roommate comes back, give him / her a tomato, and continue on a tirade about fixed elections, and tell him / her that you really didn't want to be president of the tomatoes anyway.

8. Get a hamster. Keep it in a cage, with a little exercise wheel. Whenever the hamster runs in the wheel, stand next to the cage and jog in place. Tell your roommate that the hamster is your "personal trainer." Someplace outside the room, let your roommate catch you eating a candy bar. Beg him / her not to tell the hamster about it.

9. After you take a shower, instead of drying yourself with a towel, stand in the middle of the room and spin around 100 times. Spend an hour in bed, complaining that you feel dizzy and sick.

10. Chew gum often. When you're finished chewing it, store it in a drawer until you've amassed a huge wad of used gum. If your roommate inquires, go on a tangent about recycling. When the gum wad gets big enough, sit it in front of the TV and let it watch cartoons. Complain to your roommate that the gum wad never watches anything educational.

11. Stick your head out the door and announce whatever your roommate is doing to the rest of the building. "He / She's getting out a book!" "He / She's taking out his/her glasses!" Go around the building and take requests for what people would like your roommate to do. Report the results to your roommate.

12. Bring your roommate gifts, but act angry and upset when you give them to him / her. If your roommate inquires, yell at him / her and shout "It is better to give than to receive, you stupid moron!"

13. Get a duck. While your roommate is out, put on some dance music, and wait for your roommate to come back. When he / she does, let him / her catch you dancing with the duck. Act surprised, turn off the music, and immediately go to bed. Get rid of the duck, and refuse to ever acknowledge that the incident occurred.

14. Turn out all the lights, and wait for your roommate to come home. When he / she does, whack him / her in the head with a golf club. Apologize, and explain that you thought he / she was a burglar.

15. Make your roommate show you two forms of ID before you let him / her use the bathroom, drive you home, etc. If he / she ever refuses, scream for help, and accuse your roommate of being an impostor.

16. Whenever your roommate wears something red, act like a bull and charge him / her with your head, knocking him / her down if possible. Suggest that your roommate sign up for matador lessons.

17. If your roommate snores, make a tape recording of it. Play it at full volume out your window. Tell your roommate that you're trying to summon a hippopotamus.

18. Every time you want to leave the room, stand and knock at the door until someone in the hall lets you out. If your roommate inquires, give him / her a lecture on politeness.

19. Collect various types of insects. Keep them in jars. Complain to your roommate that the insects seem lethargic. Start running bingo games for the insects. One day, while your roommate is out, release the insects and paint insect bites and bee stings on your body. When your roommate returns, advise him / her to never cheat while playing with bingo-obsessed bugs.

20. Get an extension cord. Put one end in your mouth, and plug the other end into the wall each night while you do your homework. If your roommate asks about it, act as though you're ashamed for having been so foolish. The next day, pretend to drink some gasoline before doing your homework, and explain to your roommate that gas is cheaper than electricity.

21. Offer to shake hands, all the time. Immediately afterwards, go to the bathroom and wash your hands for about half an hour. If your roommate inquires, tell him / her, "Better to be safe than sorry."

22. Keep a goldfish in your room. Watch it for hours, writing down all of its movements and actions in a notebook. Then, one day, stuff the notebook in the fish bowl, and write down all of its movements and actions on the fish. If your roommate looks, explain that the notebook is a lot easier to keep track of, and doesn't eat nearly as much.

23. Use your VCR as a toaster, stuffing bread or pop-tarts into it every morning. When you eat them, complain that something doesn't taste quite right. Adjust the tracking on your VCR, and from then on rave about how good the food is.

24. Keep a plant by your telephone. Every time you enter the room, ask the plant if anybody called. Complain to your roommate that the plant has been making up wild stories about important phone calls.

25. Get a Pet Rock. Sleep with it, and read it bedtime stories. Every night, as soon as you turn out the light, start screaming at the top of your lungs. Explain to your roommate that the rock is afraid of the dark.

26. Get a trampoline for your room. Invite your friends over and jump on it all the time. Then, while your roommate is gone, get rid of the trampoline and draw a chalk outline of a human body on the ceiling. If your roommate inquires, say that you don't want to discuss it.

27. Set your alarm for any time during the day. When it goes off, immediately go to bed, letting the alarm clock continue ringing or buzzing until your roommate turns it off. When he / she does, get up and go about your normal daily business.

28. Stuff yourself into a big plastic bag. Tell your roommate that you've contracted a rare case of the Bulgarian Measles, and you're now being quarantined by the Health Center. Tell your roommate you've been using his / her toothbrush.

29. Light firecrackers and toss them into your roommate's bed while he / she is sleeping. When he / she wakes up, pretend to be asleep.

30. Get a sponge and draw a face on it. Take it to class with you. Let the sponge help you with your homework. Leave notes to your roommate, from the sponge, accusing your roommate of not living up to his / her academic potential.

31. Make "small talk" with your roommate, asking questions like, "How was your day?" and "What are your plans for today?" Act interested and write all the responses down, muttering things like, "Hmmm ... Very interesting." Call a local radio station and report the results.

32. Dump all of your roommate's laundry in the center of the room in one big pile. Burn it. If your roommate protests, explain that it was a sacrifice to the "fashion gods."

33. Wait until your roommate is very tired. Insist that you are a master of massage. Ask your roommate to lie down. When he / she does, whack him / her in the head with a baseball bat. If your roommate is still alive, and protests, say, "Oh, I must have done it wrong. Let me try again." If your roommate is dumb enough to let you try again, once more hit him / her in the head with a baseball bat.

34. Complain often about having a loose tooth. When your roommate isn't looking, stuff your mouth with white marbles. Pretend to sneeze, and spew the marbles all over the place. Scream, and run out of the room.

35. Come into the room with a fire extinguisher hidden behind your back. Ask your roommate if he / she has a light. If he / she gives you one, spray him / her with the fire extinguisher. If he / she doesn't give you one, spray him / her anyway.

36. Put an umbrella up over your bed. Sleep underneath it at night. If your roommate asks about it, respond by saying, "A storm is brewin'." Then, one night, get a bucket of water and dump it on your roommate while he / she is sleeping. Get back into bed. If your roommate asks about the incident, claim that you don't know what happened.

37. Get a gasoline can and fill it up with water. Keep it under your bed. Wait until your roommate is around, and start running around the room. Then, collapse, and say, "Damn, I ran out of gas!" Crawl over to the gasoline can and drink from it. Get up, and start running around again.

38. Get two mannequins and keep them inside the room. Every day, dress up one to look like yourself, and the other to look like your roommate. One day, position them so that your mannequin is shaking the roommate mannequin's hand. Later that day, shake your roommate's hand. The next day, position them so that your mannequin is kicking the roommate mannequin. Later that day, kick your roommate. The next day, position them so that your mannequin is stabbing the roommate mannequin with a really big knife. Glare at your roommate for the rest of the day.

39. Keep a variety of bugs and insects inside a jar. Use a stethoscope to "listen" to what the insects are talking about. Act like you can't understand anything. Then, at night, get up suddenly, turn on the lights, and start yelling, "Shut up! I'm trying to sleep! God, you guys are so damn loud, I can't hear myself think!" Continue complaining for about half an hour. Do this every night until all of the insects are dead, at which time, sob, sniff, and say, "I'm gonna miss those guys."

40. Get an air pump. Put the end in your mouth, and start pumping. Do so for a few seconds. Repeat this action every day, eventually extending the amount of "pumping" time to several minutes. Then, one day, while your roommate is out, get some blood, intestines, and anything else you can find at the local butcher. Scatter and smear these things around the room, leaving the air pump in the center. Leave your roommate a note that reads, "I'm sorry, I just can't stand living with you any more. So, I'm ending it all. Sorry about the mess."

This feature was taken off of the internet with this note attached to the end:

Feedback! We love your feedback!

Send it to:
GLANOWDD@ALFRED.BIGVAX.EDU

Also send requests for previous lists if you haven't seen them.
I have written, altogether, 150 ways to confuse your roommate. If you haven't seen them, trust me, they're great. Thanks for reading!
- Dan

Walrath, Swoboda discuss Human Factors Engineering

Mindie Kaplan

One of the hottest departments on campus is the Psychology Department, at least if you ask Dr. James Walrath, Human Research and Engineering Directorate at the Army Research Labatory. He and Jennifer Crouch Swoboda (class of '91) gave a talk Wednesday afternoon on Human Factors Issues in combat ID systems. Speaking of Swoboda's education at the college, he said "the background that she got here is exceptional. Jennifer has the strongest bachelor's degree I've ever seen." When asked to comment on her experiences at W.C., Swoboda added "You're learning exactly what you'll use in the real world." She explained that she had worked as a clerk typist for the government during her summers while she majored in psychology and received a minor in business. Upon graduation, she was given a place in an intern program where she received special training which enabled her to move into her present position.

The presentation was interesting even to the non-psych major. Walrath explained that a Human Factors Engineer is the "human's advocate in a person-machine system." In other words, while technology has increased dramatically over the last hundred years, human abilities have pretty much remained stable. It is his job to try and narrow that gap, ensuring that human error is reduced and faith in the abilities of technology is increased. This branch of research is an outgrowth of experimental psychology that affects all individuals. Walrath gave an example of an early design for a pilot's ejection seat. The ejection lever looked identical to the lever right next to it which adjusted the pilot's seat. Simply reaching for the wrong lever caused many deaths. Dr. Spilich had a more mundane example of a poorly designed computer keyboard where the escape button (which erases all currently running documents) was placed right next to the backspace button. This is called, Walrath said, "a design-induced human error. The design causes the human to make an error."

The meat of the presentation was the explanation of how Human Factors Engineers are trying to reduce the risk of misidentification of tanks on the battlefield, resulting in fratricide (better known as "friendly fire"). In Desert Storm, 107 out of 613 deaths were the result of mistakenly being labeled the enemy and shot by one of their own troops. The Army, in response to this unacceptable number, developed a mechanical system to identify friendly tanks 90 percent of the time. Walrath and Swoboda discovered, however, that the overconfidence of the tank pilots caused them not to use the system. Implementation of this new system would merely be a waste of a considerable amount of money and would not reduce the risk of death by friendly fire.

The Psychology Department will continue to sponsor a series of presentations. Students of all majors are encouraged to attend and explore other branches of knowledge. After all, isn't that what college is all about? Ω

Dancing across campus

Mindie Kaplan

Getting in shape is supposed to be work, right? Why can't it be art instead? The Dance Club offers something for everybody from Ballroom Dance to Tap. Since each class is adjusted to the amount of experience the participants have in that dance form, each session will be exactly at your level. Classes are small, so you get individual attention and best of all, they're absolutely free. You'll never have an opportunity like this again!

You can even dance for college credit! Get started now and you'll be ready to dance your way to an A next semester.

You can dance every day of the week if you like. Modern Dance is offered from 3:00 to 4:30 on Monday. Jazz class is offered from 4:30-6:00 on Tuesday and you can prepare for Jazz Dance with a relaxing session of Yoga from 2:30 to 3:30 that same day. Wednesdays, you can tap your heart away from 3:30 until 4:30 and then swirl around the studio in Ballroom Dance from 6:30-7:30. A second offering of Yoga is on Thursday from 2:30-3:30, followed by Ballet from 4:30 until 6:00. All classes are located in the LFC Dance Studio except for Tap which meets in the Cain Studio.

The Dance Club offers other special opportunities for those interested in the art of movement. Look for the Dance on Film Series once each month. Earlier this semester, the W.C. Dance Club hosted the Maryland State Dance Festival on campus. The Dance Club also prepares a series of 17th century court dances to be performed at the Renaissance Christmas Dinner. Rehearsal starts next week so anyone interested should see Prof. Karen Smith (x. 7237) as soon as possible. Also, the Catholic University of America is hosting a dance festival in D.C. on November 4-6. Any and all interested in Ballroom dancing are invited to attend.

Dance is a fun, energizing way to feel good about yourself and unwind at the end of a tough day. Dance can help you move more confidently and gracefully in your everyday life. Unlike many other sports, dancing is something you can do for the rest of your life; it's a very useful and versatile skill, helping you to improve coordination, balance, and give your body a thorough workout. There's no time like the present to learn, so come join us and see what it's all about. Ω

Miller Library is pleased to announce ...

Thanks to a gift from a friend, we have been able to augment the library's on-line catalog, adding the capability of searching other selected library catalogs from our own. This will by no means replace the campus gopher. It does, however, give users of our system the option, for example, to examine the catalog of the University of Maryland or to search for citations to periodical articles of interest via CARL's (Colorado Alliance of Research Libraries) Uncover data base while using our system. We hope everyone will find it useful.

The following instructions will tell you how to get into and out of the currently available databases from library terminals or by way of your Mac through the campus network. While using another library's catalog you are, naturally, subject to the idiosyncrasies of that system. We will add other libraries to the list as we determine which ones are both available on the Internet and useful to the community. Please avoid connecting to any new library until the TESTING phase is over and that posted warning goes away. We will update the instructions for each new library added to the list of choices.

As always, your suggestions and comments will be most welcome.

MILLER LIBRARY SYSTEM GATEWAY OPTION

• At the main menu select B (Connect to another database)

• Then type the number of the database you want to use. Subsequent commands can be in upper or lower case (EXCEPT Library of Congress MARVEL gopher and SAILOR. See below). For each system, read the instructions carefully, especially for that of the Library of Congress. The various systems look and work differently, and it is easy to get confused or even lost.

PLEASE DON'T WALK AWAY FROM A LIBRARY TERMINAL WITHOUT QUITTING COMPLETELY FROM THE OFF-CAMPUS SYSTEM.

• Though it will generally be clear how to log off, if you have any trouble, you can disconnect from most systems by typing an end bracket sign (i.e.]) while holding down the "control" key.

• In the instructions, <return> = carriage return key

1. CARL (Colorado Alliance of Research Libraries) — UNCOVER = an index of periodicals
   a. Terminal line # = 8 <return> (i.e. HARDCOPY)
   b. Quit / end / stop / exit / logoff = // EXIT <return>

2. Library of Congress catalog
   a. Quit / end / stop / exit / logoff = END <return> or QUIT <return> followed by 12 <return> and 12 <return> as prompted

3. Library of Congress MARVEL gopher n.b. commands must be typed in lower case.
   a. Login = marvel <return>
   b. Terminal type
      Library public terminals = tvi950 <return>
      Macs on the network = vt100 <return>
   c. Quit / end / stop / exit / logoff = q Confirm this by typing y

3. Loyola-Notre Dame / Hood / Mt. St. Mary's (A CARL system)
   a. Terminal line # = 8 <return> (i.e. HARDCOPY)
   b. Quit / end / stop / exit / logoff = // EXIT <return>

4. SAILOR (The Maryland state library network) n.b. commands must be typed in lower case
   a. Login = gopher <return>
   b. Password = <return>
   c. May need to type <space> to get past the introductory screen
   d. Terminal type
      Library public terminals = wyse30 <return>
      Macs on the network = vt100 <return>
   e. Quit / end / stop / exit / logoff = q Confirm this by typing y

5. U. of Maine (An Innovative Interfaces system similar to ours)
   a. Login = URSUS <return> (as shown on screen)
   b. For Macs on the network — Terminal type = V (i.e. VT100) Confirm with Y
   c. Quit / end / stop / exit / logoff = L

6. U. of Maryland (A CARL system)
   a. Type PAC <return>
   b. Terminal line # = 8 <return> (i.e. HARDCOPY)
   c. Quit / end / stop / exit / logoff = // EXIT <return>

We will add other options as we are able. Your suggestions are welcome.

International Poetry Reading

October 26, 1994,
7 p.m., International House Basement

sponsored by the Department of Modern Languages

CELEBRATE HALLOWEEN with the purchase of CANDYGRAMS
for $1.00
SALES OCTOBER 17 - 28 IN THE CAFETERIA DURING LUNCH AND DINNER!
Fundraiser sponsored by
THE DALE ADAMS HERITAGE EXCHANGE
*For any sales not being purchased in the cafeteria during the specified times, contact Eboni or Tiffany at x. 8523.

All alone in Tawes:

So bring your several closest friends to see Only You

Katie Meagher

Only You, a play written by Timothy Mason, will be presented in Tawes Theater this weekend. There are five main characters, with a special appearance by "twentieth-century man."

Steve Brown is Leo, a quirky waiter, hopelessly in love with a systems analyst named Miriam, played by Lisa Swann. Leo finds it hard to let go of Miriam. After one date, she's ready to say goodbye, while he practically breaks stalking laws in his pursuit of the woman he loves.

Leo has a tendency to complain about about his life with such exclamations as, "God, I am such a fool!" and "My life is over!"

Miriam is looking for her "prince," and her standards are too high for any human to meet.

Dave Johnson plays Beau, Leo's depressed friend who single-handedly ruins Leo's second chance with Miriam. Beau, an employee of a discount orthopedic appliances shop, has been celibate for eight and a half months, and has developed a prostate problem as a result. He feels that he has no background. "It's like I was found in a hand bag," he says.

Richard McKee plays Leo's friend Eddie, a bachelor who tries to give Leo advice about women. Unfortunately, his luck is no better. Miriam's friend Heather, a compulsive eater, played by Cleo Patterson, latches on to Eddie and admires his cooking ability.

"You are respectful of the egg," she tells him.

Heather is not the most intelligent woman. At one point, Miriam is complaining that her intelligence gets her nowhere, and Heather agrees, saying, "Take me – not a thought in my head, but I get by."

The five characters' lives intertwine in strange and twisted ways. Miriam and Beau sleep together, and in the morning she is "totally and utterly consumed with guilt." When she tells this to Beau, he replies, "Fantastic! We're sharing!"

Miriam asks Beau which name he prefers, Beau or Beauregarde, and he replies, "Call me Shaft."

"Not for $12 billion!" she answers.

"It didn't catch on in school either," Beau says, disappointed.

The comedy is directed by Timothy Maloney. Kelli Youngblood is the stage manager. Only You will take place on the stage in Tawes Theater, with seating positioned on the stage as well. There will be performances on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, October 20, 21, and 22 at 8 p.m.. Because of the stage set-up, seating is limited, so early arrival is recommended. Ω

Vandalism on campus

KT strikes again, this time with men

Becky Bryant

The first two Broadsides poets were female; the next two featured poets are male. Hmm, I'm sensing a pattern here. Yet notable differences exist between writing styles and personalities alike. Brandon Hopkins, a first time accessory before the fact of vandalism by poetry, hails from Frederick, MD. A second-semester sophomore, Brandon predicts that when he declares a major, he will formally claim the Humanities Department, with concentrations in English, Philosophy, and French. He wrote poetry in high school, and continues this practice in college. When he arrived at Washington College, Mr. Hopkins enrolled in Professor Day's Creative Writing Workshop. His writing portfolio includes a broader spectrum than one might first suspect of a creative writer. His philosophical essay, "Consciousness, Freedom, And Morality: Jupiter Tonans (An Application of Sartre's Philosophy In A One-Act Play) submitted for the Washington College Review, was mistakenly inserted under the Fiction heading; evidence of a common presumption that he is indeed only a fiction writer.

Brandon's reportoire now also includes short story writing. He started his first short story this summer. When asked why he prefers writing poetry over prose, Brandon responded, "With prose writing, you have too many choices. I write prose that is not in story form (many of his poems are prose poems-ed.). A poem is short enough that the decisions for it are simplier. I guess I'm too indecisive, yet I always wanted to write short stories."

With any luck, the students of W.C. might be readers of his story entitled, "The Somnabulist," a story still under revision. Somnabulists walk in their sleep or perform other activities while under sleep's spell. Consisting of three parts, the plot weaves together characters of different gender, places and time. The somnabulist starts the action by sitting up to write a letter. Forgetting the address of the woman he plans to write, he wanders outdoors into a city landscape. The second scene is of a woman in the room in which the man just left. In the third scene, both characters come together and the story is now in the present tense.

Brandon plans to exercise his editing skills as editor of a student interdisciplinary publication. He hopes to put out four issues of essays, excerpts from novels in progress, and poems from thesis portfolios. His idea is to include works in his publication that might have appeared in The Washington College Review, but to distribute the work with a greater frequency than the Review.

Before writing his Broadsides poem "Elsewhere, Brandon read a personal favorite, Ezra Pound's "Alba." Pound's poem lies on a mere two lines. Brandon's poem is similarly petite, existing in two stanzas of three lines. Comments from campus readers have ranged from high praise to a contemptuously stated assertion that "I could write that." In Brandon's defense, I feel a recount of a William Stafford anecdote is in order. Once asked by a student after a reading of his poetry, "Mr. Stafford, your poetry is so simple it seems as if anyone could write one," Mr. Stafford (one-time Consultant in Poetry to the Library of Congress and celebrated poet) replied, "Yes, but you don't."

"Fooling The Young Man" features poetry and artwork by the fourth featured poet, Ryan Walker. The substitution of clip art by an original drawing makes Ryan's Broadsides unique. Ryan Walker claims Stephen Crane as a major influential figure. In high school, Ryan wrote plays, but expanded his craft in college. He now writes both poetry and short stories. Mr. Walker, like Mr. Hopkins, finds it easier to write poetry. He expounds by confessing, "If you get an idea for a poem, you busy yourself for a few days. But writing short stories is a much longer process."

A second-semester junior from Arnold, MD, Ryan has declared an English major. He may further add a Philosophy major. His writing experimentalism is not unfamiliar in Professor Kathy Wagner's Freshman Creative Writing Workshop. He continued writing after his freshman year, submitting to many student publications including Clean Teeth and Broadsides.

Ryan wrote his poem "Fooling the Young Man" this summer. The story follows a young man walking on a beach. Encountering an old woman kneeling in the sand, he soon falls victim to her antipathy. The old woman, "gnarled and spotted", her body "almost eaten by age," exacts her revenge on the youth by encasing the young man in a cage of black metal. The poem ends with her last declaration, "I have fooled you, young man. I am a sick old woman who will spend her last days designing your end."

Ryan's immediate plans include editing the student publication, The Finely Calibrated Vomit Vender. He is still seeking submissions from students. He has applied to Junior Fellows, but is still undecided about locations for a summer abroad. He would like to apply to a summer writing workshop, possibly outside of the States. Graduate school is also an appealing educational option for Ryan. He admits he wants to teach college-level English someday and admission to graduate school will aid in this ambition. But more importantly, graduate school means "not having to have a job" right after graduation. Whichever course he chooses, W.C. wishes him well. Ω

Featuring Dick Durham and an alumni from W.C., John Harris as the main performance.

W.C. proudly presents the third annual

Jazz Night

October 29 at 7:30

Held in the Student Center in conjunction with Parents' Day, this event is structured to give musicians from the College the opportunity to show off their talent.

If you are at all interested in performing contact Douglas Beckworth, Jazz Night Coordinator, at x. 8803 or through BlitzMail.

What Would You Be Willing To Do For 100 Bucks???????

Would you be willing to sing, dance, play an instrument, be a comedian, or act out a monologue? I know I would, if I could win 100 Bucks. Think about all the things you could buy for a 100 Bucks?
Gee, with $100 I could buy some new underwear, a jacket to beat the cold weather, a toupee for my dad, and still have money to support all my Friday Night bad habits.

On October 29, 1994 at 4 p.m. Cleopatra's Daughters will present The Apollo Talent Show.

This talent show will be no ordinary, boring, lame, talent show. It will be fun and exciting because there are no official judges. The audience is the judge!!!!! Just think how much fun you can have if you and a group of your friends get together and imitate a favorite entertainer, athlete, professor, or administrative staff of W.C. It's even a great opportunity to mock rival Fraternities and Sororities!!!!

So if you are spontaneous, funny, determined, outgoing, or just want to try to get the 100 Bucks, please don't hesitate to call. Pick up the phone right now and dial extension 8927 to register and to get more information about this exciting event that's going to be the talk of W.C. for weeks to come.

Making use of an empty seat:

Bill damages his car and actually enjoys the concert anyway

William Denton, III

Friday night, September 30:

Not only did I mangle my car's exhaust system while swerving out of my way to liquidate a defenseless animal on Route 213, but I had to drive through Delaware and thus be reminded why I live in Chestertown now. My friends procured my ticket while I laid on my back in the parking lot gazing at the shrapnel dangling from my car's underpinnings. I looked at my ticket—fifth row! I might get to mosh with some over-made-up twelve-year-old Slower Delaware girls! Of course, the three people I had so graciously chauffeured to the show were seated in the upper deck. When I decided to check out their seats, I remained there, thanks to the hundreds of empty seats caused by Cracker's cancellation.

The opening act, a reggae singer named Vinx, appeared on stage at the outset with a bongo strapped between his legs, standing alone in front of some disorganized Marshall cabinets and a silent set of dw's. Vinx performed three or four songs and did some crowd warm-up before bowing to the Gin Blossoms. The crowd reacted extremely well to the opening performance, especially considering that they had no clue what to expect, and that his musical genre is so different from that which they came to see.

When the Gin Blossoms went on stage, I had to look twice. The guitars played so hard-edged as they are on "Hey Jealousy" throughout the entire show (listen to the song again, I haven't lost my mind). Not only that, but, combined with the loudest snare drum I've ever heard, they drowned out singer Robin Wilson's melancholic vocals, thus making the band into almost a heavy metal outfit. Even well-known ballads like "Until I Fall Away," which Wilson introduced as "something you might've heard on VH-1," sounded almost obnoxious (and that's great!). All the songs, many of them unfamiliar, were very straightforward, and the band waited until late in their set to play their three released singles, closing the performance with "Hey Jealousy." While I would definitely characterize the music favorably, the crowd was another story ...

The crowd reacted enthusiastically to the uncharacteristically high amount of energy the Gin Blossoms threw into this, the last show of the group's two-and-a-half-year-long tour. The band's uncustomary energy shocked the kids down front (kids they surely were). They actually began moshing (this isn't a Biohazard show, is it?). I found this humorous since there were wall-to-wall chairs on the floor of the arena. It was so ridiculous. A kid would rise up on eight or ten hands, they'd have nowhere to send him, and they'd summarily drop him back onto the floor. The band's last-show energy translated into a lot of interaction with the crowd, especially by Wilson. At one point, he performed for several minutes with a two-foot inflatable Mighty Morphin Power Ranger that had been jettisoned onto the stage stuffed down his pants. The band exited (rather graciously) to thunderous applause. I don't think it took too many of us long to get over Cracker's absence.

With my ears hurting badly, I staggered back into the show to see another performance by Vinx. He performed another three songs or so, this time with accompaniment by Spin Doctors frontman Chris Barron and the band's new guitarist, whom Vinx introduced simply as "Anthony" (if you know what happened to Eric Schenkman, let me know). Strangely enough, the new guitarist looks and plays exactly identically to his predecessor. After the stage was prepared, the three performers left and the stage lights went out.

The squealing riff to "Jimmy Olsen's Blues"—that's the song you probably think is called "Pocket full of Cryptonite"—cut through the black and nearly everyone rose to their feet. Apparently they had not heard what I had said about how bad the Spin Doctors are live.

I was already standing because of the small group of idiots who insisted on viewing the concert from the walkway one row in front of me. The jumping around and moshing seemed much less strained during the Spin Doctors' set; everyone got what they expected, and a damn good version of it. Barron made several remarks of gratitude for the audience's positive response throughout the performance. They deserved every bit of applause they got; all the band members' performances were outstanding: Barron's vocals did not reflect the fact that he had been singing on tour every night for several years, and both the solos and groove for the every guitarist, drummer Aaron Comess, and bassist Mark White were nothing short of outstanding. While the Gin Blossoms actually toured down the number of songs left in their performance, the Spin Doctors' set ended far too early for everyone's liking. Personally, I was ready to hear "What Time Is It?" about five more times. Barron said a rather genuine-sounding thanks and goodbye and the band hailed out. It wasn't even eleven o'clock yet, so none of us left or shut up until they returned to the stage. It took about a minute. The foursome then launched into a ten-minute version of "Mary Jane," their new release. About seven minutes into it, Chris Barron looked out into the crowd and said, "Anyone figured out what this song is about yet?" After the ode to weed finally burned out, the band finished out the show with "Two Princes." The only technical glitch of the night occurred in this, the final song. During the second verse two technicians had to come out and repair Anthony's amp just in time for the solo, which he executed brilliantly.

I consider myself a convert; I want to go see two bands I liked very little and was nearly overwhelmed by the quality of the music. However, be warned: if you ever see me at a R.E.M. concert, blow my head off. Ω

Popcorn & Jujubes:

A review of The River Wild by Sarah Bell

I went home this past Fall Weekend to find that Easton's movie theater was actually playing The River Wild. "They must have taken down Jurassic Park," I thought as I passed the Ted Avon "shopping complex". It was quite a surprise, you see, because Eastern Shore theaters only get the movies after they come out on video and sit on a shelf collecting dust. When mold starts forming is about the time when we get them. But enough bashing of the eastern shore...on...on...and on!

I settled down into my seat, with my stale popcorn and watered-down coke, and the movie began. The opening scenes are breath-taking...Meryl Streep is sculling across the Charles River and this scene is set against the backdrop of the the beautiful city of Boston. Streep plays the role of an avid rower in this movie, not to mention the wife of a dedicated architect and the mother of a small girl and boy.

It's her son's birthday and for that his parents plan to take him on a rafting trip down the...the...well, a river. But Streep's husband is too wrapped up in his work and will not be able to make it, again. We have this whole father-son/husband-wife tension sort of thing occurring throughout the movie. So Streep and her son end up going, leaving the little girl at granny's house.

Kevin Bacon comes into the picture when they arrive at...at...uh...at the place where they are suppose to go for the rafting trip. And from that point on, Bacon tries to squirm into the lives of Streep and her son. But lo and behold, Streep's old fuddy-duddy husband shows up and decides to go on the rafting trip. After all, it is his son's birthday.

So they are off, down the...the...the wild river, with Bacon and his sleazy friends following behind closely. I will not go into detail about the rest of this kickin' movie; you will just have to see it for yourself. But if I had to sum it up in a couple of words, this is what I would say: Bacon and his friends end up being not so friendly and they need someone to take them down the "gauntlet," which is at the end of the river that they are going down. No one is allowed to row the "gauntlet" because it is too dangerous and requires a very, very skilled person. Well, guess who that skilled person is...right, Meryl Streep! So, Bacon has Meryl, Mr. Fuddy-duddy and the little boy, and oh, don't forget about Maggie, their faithful dog, at gunpoint while Streep is trying to get them safely down "the gauntlet!"

I'll leave the rest up to your imagination, or you can go see the movie, but let me just say that Mr. Fuddy-duddy does come through in the end. Oh, and also let me say that you had better hold on to your seat tightly while watching this movie because you will be taken for the ride of your life! So, go to your nearest Eastern Shore movie theater (where they will be playing The River Wild and Revenge of the Nerds) and watch Meryl Streep risk her life down the...the...um...the...well, you know what river I am talking about, don't you?

The Washington College Department of Drama presents

ONLY YOU

by Timothy Mason

Thursday, Friday, & Saturday, October 20-22

8:00 p.m., Tawes Theatre

Love, disappointment, sex, cappuccino, personal relationships, depression, parties and punch, Pablo Casals, the orthopedic appliance salesman meets the Brazilian folk dancer, and iffy Hungarian pushing hors d'oeuvres, pink balloons, prostates, and a whole lot more ...

Limited seating available

Chestertown Natural Foods

"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"

101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1677

Andy's

Friday, October 21
The Kid Davis Band A country-rockin' trio. Bring your favorite dance partner.
Saturday, October 22
C'town Wildlife Festival Andy's open 1 p.m. Music in the park:
noon - Chris Noyes
2 p.m. - Angie Miller & 'Topher
9 p.m. at Andy's Angie Miller & 'Topher
Acoustic jazzy rock ... heavenly voice, wicked guitar!

The Dale Adams Heritage Exchange
invites you to their

"First Party Back"

October 21, 1994, W.C. Student Center, 9 p.m. - 2 a.m., Admission - $3

Entertainment provided by DJ C-Jay and the Mad Blunted Productions

Must be 18 years or older with proper ID

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

Ranting about Giant Sand and Tower Records ... It's gonna be a long one

Well, it's another week, so I guess it's time for the revelation of another musical gem by yours truly. This week's album comes to us all the way from out West, where the longhorns graze lazily among the cacti, and modern day cowboys cruise along the empty highways in dirty trucks with injured engines, surrounded by miles of dead land. Staring at land that flat and brown does something to a person's mind. You get a little weird. Yep, they like their music on the eccentric side out there in the flatlands. And from the midst of the iguanas and the Indians comes a band called Giant Sand, and they call their contribution to the musical world Long Stem Rant.

Giant Sand consists of two men, John Convertino on drums, and Howe Gelb on guitar and rant. They have a sound that is reminiscent of old, downhome blues...only done by a couple of white guys who have probably smoked too much pot and spent much too much time in the sun. Their trademarks are a cheap, strummy guitar, simple drum kit, and vocals that always seem just on the verge of being off key.

But that's not all there is to Giant Sand. the album is pleasingly eclectic, going from the semi-bluesy style described above, to over-amplified, percussion driven rock pieces that sound better and better the louder they get. But surprisingly enough, the listener never suffers from musical whiplash. The songs, held together by generous amounts of late night in-studio weirdness, flow in a sort of epic crescendo-decrescendo that lends variety, not awkwardness to this fine album. It suddenly seems totally natural to go from a solo-guitar ballad about lost love to two guys with the volume turned all the way up on their amplifiers beating away at their instruments, because in the end, it's all righteousness and good times with Giant Sand.

If you find yourself with the inclination to pick up a copy of this album, there are certain songs that you should especially listen for. "Sucker in a Cage" is a sort of building, rambling rant that starts out soft and ends up loud. Howe's folk-influenced vocals indict the self-righteousness of the cold hard world with the refrain, "Who's the sucker in the cage now?" Listen for the 13 second piece, "Patsy Does Dylan." at the end. It took me a while to figure out just what it was that the little girl was saying, but I laughed my ass off when I did. Moving on we find the trio of songs that I consider the high point of the album: "Loving Cup," "Paved Road to Berlin," and "Anthem." These three songs build on one another, starting out with a lonely balled of lost love, and ending with the blissfully imprecise cacophony that marks Giant Sand's sound. In the middle is "Paved Road to Berlin," possibly the best song on the entire album (well, it's certainly my favorite). This is the classic "driving-down-the-road-singing-at-the-top-of-your-lungs" song. It's catchy, yet avoids the vacuousness that most songs described as such possess.

Hopefully by now you are saying to yourself, "Wow, this sounds like it might be a pretty good album. I should go out and buy a copy of it." Well, guess what boys and girls, I had to go all the way to Richmond just to find it (well, to replace it...I used to have a copy that I bought in Austin). And that's what I want to take this opportunity to talk to you about. Despite the fact that they have it in their catalog and that they are perfectly capable of ordering it, Tower records failed to provide me with a copy of Long Stem Rant. I even tried ordering it several times, but with no success. This is not the first time that this has happened, either. Time and time again, I have gone to Tower (being just about the only nearby music outlet in that direction) hoping against hope to find what I am looking for, only to be met with a surly staff that seems to suffer from chronic apathy. DON'T LET THIS HAPPEN TO YOU!!! Demand the service that you pay for. I am an avid music consumer (some would even say rabid) and this kind of disdain by a business for its clientele enrages me. If they expect us to give them our money, we should expect service in return. After all, isn't that how capitalism is supposed to work? Ω

Bartos to play at Concert Series

Pianist Samuel Bartos will be performing on October 25 in Tawes Theater.

As part of the 43rd season of the Washington College Concert Series music lovers will have the opportunity to enjoy a performance by Samual Bartos, a highly acclaimed pianist.

Samuel Bartos receives critical acclaim for his guest solo orchestral engagements, chamber music collaborations and recital performances throughtout the United States and Europe. His playing is described as "robust, refined and imaginative."

A prize-winning artist, Bartos is a recipient of highest awards from the prestigious Bach International and the Aeolian Piano Foundation Competitions. His highly successful European tours have included appearances in London, Berlin, Zurich, Brussels and Gstaad, as well as at the Salle Chopin-Pleyel and Hotel Clermont-Tonnere in Paris. Among his recent guest artist engagements are solos with the Baltimore Symphony, Denver Chamber Orchestra, and the Nassau Pops Symphony Orchestra. In addition, Bartos is heard on a series of live radio broadcasts with WQXR (New York) and has been featured on National Public Radio "Performance Today."

Samuel Bartos is a premier interpreter of the works of J. S. Bach on the piano. His CD recording of Bach's 'Goldberg Variations' was hailed by Germany's leading newspaper Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung as "delectable and dazzling ... Bartos ends up blazing a trail toward its future potential." Equally at home with a wide range of literature, Bartos also champions works by emerging contemporary composers. He has collaborated successfully as a duo-parnter with the Israeli violinist Sergiu Schwartz, and with the Essex Quartet in chamber works. Bartos' performance at Washington College will include the "Goldberg Variations."

The concert will be held in Tawes Theater in the Gibson Fine Arts Building at 8 p.m. Tickets for this concert can be purchased at the box office at performances and cost $12 for adults, $5 for youth 18 and under. Washington College students recieved free tickets to the Concert Series through campus mail some weeks ago. Season tickets for the W.C. Concert Series cost $40 per person. Ω

PLEASE (!!)
all writers: submit Writing
(poetry, short fiction, essays, art, photos)
to
The Collegian

W.C.'s Official Lit. Mag.
in care of Kelli Youngblood, editor
ext. 8505
via BlitzMail, Lit. House mail, or Campus mail

BROADSIDES
is now accepting submissions of poems, prose poems, and short stories (up to one page in length) for publication. Submission is open to any WC undergraduate. Submissions should be sent by campus mail, Lit. House mail, BlitzMail, or any other mail to Katie Degentesh.

SUBMIT NOW.

The Washington College Dance Program presents

Ballroom Dance for the '90s instruction in all those big band dance steps

Jitterbug, Swing, Jive, Foxtrot, Waltz, Cha Cha, Merengue, Rumba, Tango, Lambada, Mambo, Samba, Texas Two Step, Electric Slide

Come to learn the socal dances you've always wanted to know or to polish your technique. Partner not required. Students and faculty invited.
Lifetime Fitness Center, Dance Studio
6:30 p.m., every Wednesday

Life / Work planning sessions
(two, 2 hour workshops, 4 hours total time)

Monday Afternoon Series
(October 31 & November 7)
2:30 - 4:30 Career Center Library, Span. House

Tuesday Afternoon Series
(Novermber 1 & 8)
1:30 - 3:30 Career Center Library, Span. House

Thursday Afternoon Series
(November 3 &10)
2:30 - 4:30 Career Center Library, Span. House

Join the Career Center staff and a small group of students for these informal, fun, activity-oriented sessions. Assessments include Campbell Interest Survey and Myers Briggs Personality Indicator.
To register call Dawn Baker (x. 7888)

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin and Jeff roam Chestertown in search of bargains.

Kevin and Jeff visit Procolino's in search of a W.C. discount.

Kevin: Can I have your name please?

Mr. Procolino: Salvatore.

K: How long have you been at this location?

Sal: 14 years.

K: How have you liked it?

S: Very good. Very good.

K: In particular, how have you liked the Washington College students?

S: The College students are good to us in the wintertime. They support us.

K: Do you ever have any problems with understanding any of the hip new slang words teenagers use?

S: No, but we did have a little problem a few times last year when students stole pizzas from us.

K: They stole pizzas?

S: I left the door open to the car when I was delivering pizzas to the dormitories, and students took the other pizzas out of the car. The first time they took three pizza; the second time we lost two.

K: Were the people that ordered the pizzas the ones who stole them?

S: No, it was other people.

K: Pizza thieves?

S: Yeah, pizza thieves.

K: Did you talk to police about that?

S: We talked to the security guards, and they found the box. That was during Christmas break last year.

K: Merry Christmas, Procolino's! They just stole your pizzas.

S: We have been delivering pizzas to the College for 11 years. They were stolen again this year, so that's three times that pizzas have been stolen.

K: Jeff, have you met any pizza thieves on campus? Do you know who this might be?

Jeff: No.

K: Joseph, Come here. This is our translator, Joseph. He helps us out in case we have any problems understanding a language. What do you think, Joseph?

Joseph: I haven't met any pizza thieves yet.

K: I didn't realize that pizza thievery was a big problem on campus. It's a shame, because pizza thieves give all Washington College students a bad name.

S: Not at all. It's only a few bad people. They don't steal it because of money, they just do it because of crazy things. If somone doesn't have any money, and they want a pizza, I'll give them the pizza.

K: Along those lines, have you ever considered giving a discount to Washington College students?

S: No. We give them free delivery.

K: Did you ever think about giving away sodas with the pizzas?

S: No, because delivering is a lot of work.

K: How about a discount if they come pick up their pizza?

S: No, no, no. We don't do that at all. No break. Our pizza is too good.

K: I've noticed a very distinctive Procolino flavor. Is this a special family recipe? I enjoy your pizza very much. I've never stolen one, but I do enjoy them.

S: It's good pizza, cause it's always made the same way. When students come back to Chestertown, they always want to eat this pizza. The pizza brings back memories to them, and the pizza is still the best.

K: Is this a family-run business?

S: Brothers and cousins.

K: Do you ever have family squabbles over pizza that end up in food fights?

S: No, we don't get into fights.

K: Can you introduce us to some of the Procolino's family?

S: Well, some of them don't speak English.

K: That's okay. We brought a translator. Joseph, can you translate for us?

Joseph: I don't speak Italian.

K: Where did you learn to make pizzas like this? Is it an old family recipe?

S: Yeah.

K: Did you watch your mother make pizza at a young age?

S: No, we learned from our uncle.

K: Did your mom ever cook for you?

S: Yeah! When I go back to Italy, she still does.

K: Can you tell us about the history of pizza?

S: The best pizza is made here, in the United States.

K: You're going to make some Italians very angry by saying that.

S: We make the best pizza, in the United States. In Italy, it's different pizza. You cannot compare.

K: What did you think about the World Cup this year?

S: The World Cup has great success here. In other countries, people don't go to the stadiums. I was happy that Italy didn't win, because they didn't deserve to win.

K: Did you see an increase in pizza sales when Italy came in second?

S: No, but every time Italy won, people would give us a lot of compliments.

Jeff: What do you think of BaroDaney?

S: It sucks. I think it was a big mistake. There's only one Disney World, and you've got to go to that one. It's the greatest.

K: Have you been to Disney World?

S: Yes, and I want to go back.

K: Did you get your picture taken with Mickey Mouse?

S: No.

K: Did you ride Space Mountain?

S: Yeah, I did everything once.

K: Did you ride the teacups?

S: Yeah.

K: Did you sample any pizza in the Magic Kingdom?

S: Every night at MGM Studios.

K: How about the prices in the Magic Kingdom? They're pretty expensive.

S: It was $10 for a real small pizza.

K: That's too much to pay for a pizza. You might even be tempted to steal a Magic Kingdom pizza at that price.

S: It was too much money, but I didn't care. Everything's expensive there. When you go on vacation, they rob you anyway.

Jeff: How do you feel about your home country being shaped like a boot?

S: At least we look like a boot, we have a form. Some countries aren't shaped like anything. And look at America. It's shaped like a cow with big titties.

K: Do you wear a lot of boots over there?

S: No, no.

K: I have to ask this one more time: Can we have a discount? The students of Washington College are desperate for Procolino's pizza, and with College tuition, they just can't afford it.

S: Compared to tuition, pizza is pennies. The pizza here is the best, and it is very inexpensive. You can't get it like this at home.

K: My mom makes some mean Korean food, but she just can't touch the Italian.

S: A long time ago, because we were very well known, they put us on the yearbook. It was right there in the beginning. It said: "And don't forget about Procolino's...the best pizza in the world!" Ω

Upcoming Events

October 22:
The Connells, Ocean Blue, Marshall Crenshaw, Lotion, The Greenberry Woods • Bohager's, benefit show for Baltimore Reads Inc., for information call (410) 563-7720

October 24:
Dinosaur Jr., Kyuss, and Juned • Hammerjacks, call (410) 659-ROCK
Frente! • Kraushaar Auditorium, call (410) 481-SEAT

October 25:
Samuel Bartos, pianist • Tawes Theatre, W.C., 8 p.m., tickets $10 free admission for W.C. students
The Samples • Hammerjacks, call (410) 659-ROCK

October 28:
Michael Hedges • Shriver Hall, Johns Hopkins University, call (410) 481-SEAT
Blues Singer Koko Taylor • American Legion Hall, call (410) 444-1716

October 29:
Offspring and Rancid • Hammerjacks, call (410) 659-ROCK

October 31:
Beck • 9:30 Club, call (202) 393-0930
Jesus and Mary Chain • Radio Music Hall, call (410) 481-SEAT

November 2-3:
Seal • George Washington University, Lisner Hall Auditorium, call (410) 481-SEAT

November 16-17:
Live, Fatima Mansions, and Weezer • Radio Music Hall, call (410) 481-SEAT

Now through October 30:
The Cherry Orchard • tickets as low as $10, Center Stage, call (410) 332 - 0033

Now through November 6:
42nd Street • Timonium Dinner Theatre, call (410) 560-1113

Now through November 13:
West Side Story • tickets $29.95 - 39.95, Burn Brae Dinner Theatre, call (301) 384 - 5800

International House trip to

New York City

$20 per person

Departure 8 a.m. behind Bill Smith Hall

Contact Angela Panton (x. 8758) or Ryan Vigent (x. 8759)

laundry Park drycleaning

RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

Spider's
(Formerly Newt's)
Hillside Bar
Special Draft Night
Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Midnight Madness
Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Must be 21 or older

Women winning in tennis

Peggy Busker

Washington sent two women to the ITA/ROLEX Southeastern Regional Women's Tennis Tournament. Freshmen Paulina Sierra Samano and Megan Brumby represented the Shorewomen.

Brumby won her first match against Christopher Newport College's Jennifer Duffy, 6-4,2-6,7-6. Brumby played solidly and aggressively. She went on to play Amy Carney. Brumby played hard but lost a two sets, 6-1 twice.

Freshman Paulina Sierra Samano from Cuernavaca Mexico played her first two games very well, winning 6-1 twice and 6-1, 6-2. She ended her third match in two sets as well, winning the first set closely 7-6 and her second one 6-4. Samano advanced to the fourth round, playing the number one seed Marilyn Baker from Washington and Lee. Samano played hard and with heart. Samano lost in two sets, 6-2 and 6-1. Baker went on to win the entire tournament. Ω

Take a look at what is coming up in Rec. Sports this week

Friday, October 21, starting at 6:30 in the LFC as part of the Timex Fitness Week is the most exciting event of the week: the female couple fitness competition. Come out and see if you are the most fit -- or a couch potato.

On the upper soccer field, this Saturday, the Women's club soccer team with the Elm's Nicole Zemanski in goal, takes on St. John's at 2 p.m. Come out and envy their skills.

Wallyball starts next week. For information, call Steve Dashiell at x 8891.

WC Swimmers Honored for Academics

Washington College's men's and women's swim teams were named to the all-academic team compiled by the College Swimming Coaches Association of America.

The CSCAA recognized the Shoremen for their academic achievement for the spring semester of 1994. 46 NCAA Division III men's swimming teams were named to the list and Washington College was the only Centennial Conference school to earn the honor.

The men's team, which qualified for the first time, compiled a 2.84 average among its 15 team members--which include Julien Gaudion of Chestertown.

The Shorewomen were among 60 Division III teams on the women's list. The team qualified for the second consecutive semester, compiling a 3.07 grade point average among 23 swimmers. This earned them an excellent rating.

Bryn Mawr (3.21), Western Maryland (2.9) and Gettysburg (2.8) were other Centennial Conference teams which made the list.

To qualify, a team must have compiled a 2.8 GPA (on a 4.0 scale) during the spring semester. Any team which compiles a grade-point average of 3.0 or higher is recognized as excellent by the CSCAA. A team that compiles a 3.25 GPA or higher is recognized in the superior category. Ω

Conference Honor Roll

Sarah Sobon received recognition in Field Hockey. Sobon had a solid all around game in the 3-2 loss to JHU, playing outstanding defense and tallying the second goal.

Greg Miller continues to receive praise, this time for registering his fifth straight shutout in the 0-0 draw with Delaware Valley, giving him seven for the year. His biggest save came on a penalty kick with four minutes left in overtime.

What to expect in Cain this winter

Lee Ann Lezzer and Allison Wentworth

Last year in its charter season, the Sho'women basketball team compiled a record of 11 wins and 13 losses. The team is ready to make even greater strides this year with pre-season workouts in effect already.

With four returning players (all sophomores), Lee Ann Lezzer, Liz Mangano, Eboni Taylor, and Allison Wentworth, and several newcomers, the team is prepared to surprise some teams in the Centennial Conference. This year's squad is ready to improve their record and hope to participate in post-season play.

The new players will strengthen the backcourt and the post positions. While the post players provided the foundation for last year's offense, the new recruits will add depth to the frontcourt and flexibility to the perimeter. Improved ball-handling and shooting skills, combined with aggressive defense and rebounding, will make the Sho'women contenders this season.

Team members are enthusiastic about the outlook of this season due to the team being so young and energetic.

"We'll definitely improve our record this year," said Taylor.

In addition to the returning players, this year's squad consists of sophomore Marcia Flinn and freshmen Tara McKee, Megan Miller, Jen Nauta, Anne Petracco, Hilary Rainey, Shannon Rump, Karen Sieger, and Kristen Snell.

Look out for this extremely young team to make an impact in the Centennial Conference this season. Ω

Theta Chi takes championship

Tom McClemore

This year's intramural football season has come to a close. Theta Chi finished in first with Goose Lounge following in a close second. Phi Delta Theta came in third place and Smashmouth and KA had to play a wild card game for the fourth seed.

KA's easily overcame Smashmouth's defense, ending their season. This matched up the KA's with the powerhouse Theta Chi. Goose Lounge was put up against the Phi Delt's in a interfraternity battle.

Goose Lounge slid by with a 20-14 victory over the Phi Delt's taking them to the final. The KA's put up a great fight but the Theta's hung on to win by a score of 6-0.

Goose Lounge was matched up with Theta Chi in the championship. The Theta's came into the game with an undefeated record while Goose Lounge only suffered one loss to the Theta's during regular season action.

Goose Lounge was definitely the underdog with a string of injuries including offensive standout Chris Welch. Bucky returned from a tough lead injury to help alleviate the loss of Welch, but their line was still questionable. The Theta's showed up with a full squad minus free safety Keith Whiteford due to bowling alley duties. The game slowly rolled forward with the Theta's scoring consistently until the end. Goose Lounge struggled greatly on the offensive end but refused to let the Theta's make any extra point conversions. In the end, Theta Chi was victorious with a 24-8 win to capture the title and remain undefeated for the season.

A special thanks is issued to Toby, without whom no one would have gained the inspiration they did. Thanks again, Toby.

The Theta's look to be tough again next season. They lose one quality defensive lineman in senior standount Tom "TO BABY" Obara. With the returning abundance of size, they should be able to fill that spot. Goose Lounge on the other hand will lose several of its members, but good recruitment could help build them up for next year. Ω

Field Hockey continues to play hard with each game

Nicole Zemanski

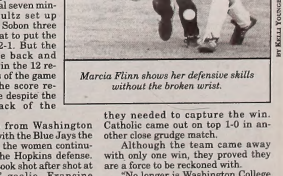
The Washington College field hockey team had a tough couple of weeks with four games, but the good thing is that three of them were held right here in Chestertown. On October 6, the Sho'women faced a struggling Franklin and Marshall team which is near the bottom of the Centennial Conference. Two days after that, the team traveled to Dickinson to face a very powerful squad and third in the Centennial Conference with an overall record of 11-4. The Shorewomen came back home to go up against Centennial Conference foe, Johns Hopkins University, who were ranked fifth in the Conference with an overall record of 5-7. The game against Randolph Macon University was canceled due to the weather. A game against Catholic University was the next contest, rounding out a very competitive schedule.

Franklin and Marshall came into town not knowing what they were about to encounter. This Conference game turned out to be one in which the Sho'women paced the entire time. From the beginning of the game until the end, the women played their game. After scoring, the team did not look back or hang their heads low when F&M scored.

Through the leadership of junior co-captain Jill Schultz, junior Kourt Coleman, and junior Shannon Metcalf on defense, the team powered their way through the offense when needed and abruptly stopped F&M when they tried to make a run for the goal. Junior goalkeeper Peggy Busker stated, "we never looked back after we scored in the first half." The team was mentally and physically prepared to face this Conference foe and ended up on top with a 2-1 win.

After this Conference win, the Shorewomen of W.C. made a road trip up to Carlisle, Pennsylvania at Dickinson. Because Washington College plays a fast-paced game and the field conditions at Dickinson are extremely slow, the Sho'women had some problems getting adjusted to the circumstances. The squad was also missing two key players in sophomores Marcia Flinn and Amy Scarlett. Flinn, who broke her wrist in a practice prior to the game, was unable to play against Dickinson. Scarlett was struck with an opponent's stick right below the knee in the middle of the first half and the injury required stitches. With both of these players unable to play, the bench was called upon to step up and provide depth for W.C.

Sophomore Nikki Chumura replaced Scarlett at the end of the first half and answered the call with excellent defense and passing. Sophomore defender Kristen Barlow has played solidly by coming into the game and stopping some crucial attempts of the opposing offense. Barlow has developed into a player who can be counted on to provide stellar defense when needed. Sophomore goalkeeper Stephanie Seif had an outstanding game, allowing only one goal to slip by and tallying 26 saves throughout the game. The whole team came together to overcome the field conditions and injuries. The team played an intense game but couldn't hold on for win. Dickinson prevailed in the end with a score of 1-0.



Johns Hopkins rolled into town and barely survived. Junior co-captain Jen Hanifee came back for her first game since her knee injury and played extremely well on the defensive end. This game turned out to be a grudge match with the teams swapping goals back in forth and the defenses responding by impeding the attack. Hopkins scored first, but freshman "attack wonder" Nicole Mills responded with an unassisted goal seven minutes later. Schultz set up freshman Sarah Sobon three minutes after that to put the Sho'women up 2-1. But the Blue Jays came back and scored two goals in the 12 remaining minutes of the game to go up 3-2. The score remained the same despite the relentless attack of the Shorewomen.

The women from Washington College kept up with the Blue Jays the entire game and the women continuously attacked the Hopkins defense. The Sho'women took shot after shot at the Blue Jays' goalie, Francine Brennan, but she had a tremendous game with 14 saves and only allowed two goals to slip by.

The team continued to strengthen throughout the week. They then faced Catholic University. The Sho'women kept up with the Catholic squad, but could not put the ball in the cage. The team had many opportunities, but could not finish them off. Although the game remained scoreless throughout the first half, Catholic scored with about 15 minutes left and that was all they needed to capture the win. Catholic came out on top 1-0 in another close grudge match.

Although the team came away with only one win, they proved they are a force to be reckoned with.

"No longer is Washington College field hockey an easy win like in years past, we are a competitive team that can hang with anybody," commented Busker. The team plays the last two games of the season against Widener and Centennial Conference foe Muhlenberg. Come out for the last home game against Muhlenberg this Tuesday and cheer the ladies on as they look to crush the Mules! Ω

Marcia Flinn shows her defensive skills without the broken wrist.

PHOTO BY KELLY YOUNGBLOOD

Soccer improves their record

It was a rough two weeks, but they made it

Peggy Busker

Believe or not, even though there was not an Elm last week, soccer games were played. So hold on to your seats because soccer played six games, two of them Conference and one an exhibition game.

The first of these six games was at Haverford. This was a tough conference match for the Shoremen. Before this meeting, Washington's record with Haverford was 3-16-2, the wins coming ten or more years apart. In 1988 they won 3-2, in 1974, 5-2, and in 1954, 1-0. In the past three years the Shoremen were outscored by the Fords 11-0. In the 1993 season the Shoremen tied Haverford 0-0 in double overtime. The Shoremen were still missing Geoff Bley and most recently lost midfielder Brian Rush. Nonetheless, the Shoremen came out strong and ready to win. They were coming off of the great Conference win over Ursinus and a winning week. Greg Miller, proving to be Washington's most valuable player, was totaling four shutouts for the season before the Haverford game.

The Shoremen took some time to get into their game. They really were not playing as well as they could have. Yet as seen in the past, a good team can have a bad game and still pull away a win.

The play was even in the first half. The Fords had seven shots on the Washington goal in the first half, with only two from inside the 18-yard penalty box. Miller held tough to make four saves and keep the Fords from getting on the scoreboard.

Washington, however, finished their attempts on goal. 40 minutes into the first half, Shoreman Chris Daily received the tap from junior Chip Helm off of an indirect penalty kick and got the ball past the Ford's keeper to take the 1-0 win that a Shoremen ahead 1-0. The Shoremen did not stop there.

Andrew King wanted a goal as well. Three minutes after Daily's goal, King followed a shot on goal that had hit off the post and scored. The score was 2-0 at the half. Scoring before leading at the half is a crucial element to their style of play in the second half.

Many teams have the potential to be very strong in the second half. Haverford is one of those teams. But Washington was not about to lose. In the second half the level of play was increased. Washington had five shots on goal compared to Haverford's six. Miller saved every one to post another shut out. Washington would not score in the second half, but neither did they stop trying. Teams in the Centennial Conference do not allow teams to play defensively and win. Washington knew this and they continued to play aggressively and offensively. The game was intense and Washington played a clean game, not drawing any yellow cards.

Washington took home their fourth win, and their second Conference win.

That Saturday the Shoremen took on Catholic at Kibler Field. Washington had an impressive 6-4-1 record coming into this game. This was to be another challenging match. The Shoremen were ready to play well and win. Adjustments were made after the Haverford game and the team adjusted well, but there was still room for improvement.

Washington pounded Catholic's goalie in the first half with eight shots. Their keeper saved them all and really kept his team in the game. Washington dominated the game. Miller made four key saves in the first half to tie with the Catholic goalie.

The intensity level once again was high for both teams. The score at the half was 0-0. After the half Washington was hungry for a goal and a win. The Shoremen did not want overtime or a tie. Rodney Roman, off of a pass from Andrew King, did it for the Shoremen. With 30 minutes remaining in the second half, Roman bustled and scored.

Being ahead by one did not satisfy the Shoremen. They continued to work hard. Washington took seven more shots on Catholic's goal for a game total of 15. Miller made two more saves out of the six shots at the Shoremen goal. Miller totaled six saves, and posted yet another shutout.

Three days later the Shoremen took on Delaware Valley on Kibler. The Valley proved to be a good team. They had speed and skill. Washington stepped up and outshot the Valley 10-4 in the first half but could not get on the scoreboard. Delaware only forced Miller to make one save in the first half.

In the second half, Washington kept getting off some shots on goal, but to win Washington needed good shots on goal. Delaware was consistent with another four shots on goal. Miller's saving to save two. Tom Hiebler and Chip Helm continued to play solid defense for the Shoremen. At the end of regulation time the score was 0-0.

Hiebler was going for the ball on a potential one-on-one and the Delaware player went down. This resulted in a direct penalty kick on goal in the first period of overtime. Miller once again saved the day. The ball went low, hard and to the left, Miller dove and saved it. This sparked the Shoremen. Washington had four shots on the Delaware goal compared to their two. Washington could not finish their attacks to score.

Delaware's sweeper really kept them in the game. Washington played tough and with a lot of heart. They played a solid 120 minutes of good soccer. The final score was a tie, 0-0.

Washington does not like to tie. They traveled again over the weekend to Conference rival Western Maryland. The Green Terrors have always proved to be tough. But this year they are 0-6-1 in the Conference. The chance was there for Washington to put another notch in their Conference belt.

The game proved to be some of Washington's best soccer all season. The first half was great for the Shoremen. They maintained possession, worked well and there was good communication between the offense and defense.

Andrew King, with a few minutes left in the first half, received a high pass from Chip Helm and headed it past the Terrors' keeper to score. At the half the score was 1-0 in Washington's favor.

Western Maryland had five shots on Miller, forcing Miller to make three saves. Washington outshot the Terrors six to five in the first half.

Western Maryland came back strong in the second half. They scored two consecutive goals on Miller. The W.C. defense had two slight lapses which gave the Terrors the opportunity needed to score. The Terrors took the lead. They wanted the game.

Washington was not about to let up in a Conference game. After two shots on the Western Maryland goal, freshman Chris Daily scored, tying the game at two. The Shoremen proceeded to pound away at the Terrors' goal. They had nine more shots on goal. This proved that the Shoremen were not giving up and they did not want a tie.

The game went into overtime once again and the Shoremen continued to try to get the win. As time ran out neither team had scored and Washington came away with another tie.

Shawn McMahon executes a perfect kick - was it a shot on goal?

© Robert Schoenberger

Washington most recently played at Widener. Widener was on a winning streak. They had scored thirteen goals in two matches. Washington was not ready for Widener.

Midway through the first half, on their third shot, Widener got a shot past Miller. Washington got off six shots on the Widener goal. Washington tried to fight back. They could not get on the scoreboard before the half.

Widener continued their level of play into the second half. Washington got 12 more shots on Widener's goal, but they could not cash in. Widener had nine more shots on goal and scored on three of them. All the Widener goals came off of passes from the weak side. Washington's defense could not cover the cross and clean hard shots were taken on Miller.

Widener was hungry for the win and played up to their potential. Washington's losing coming off of a tough week and could not meet their level of play. The final score was 4-0.

Both coaches feel that Washington is playing well late in the season. Their level of play however, comes and goes. The Shoremen have not peaked yet. They have two key Conference matches remaining and four games total. The Shoremen can make or break their record at this point in the season. Ω

POW

As the men's soccer team had a streak of seven straight games without a loss, we have decided to choose two players from the squad. Junior defender Tom Hiebler continues to hustle for W.C. by supplying stunning defense through his determination and spirit. Hiebler is a Biology major and a third year starter for the team. He is also a member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity. Hiebler also wants everyone one saw his picture in The Elm a few weeks ago to know that he not only can take it like a man, but he can dish it out even more! Hiebler's teammate, freshman midfielder Chris Daily, has been a great addition to the squad. Daily is from Voorhees, New Jersey. Daily provided the crucial goal that kept this seven game streak going in the Western Maryland game last Saturday. He scored in the 87th minute off an assist from Andrew King to tie the score. Both of these guys have been major reasons for the streak of the soccer team!

We would like to commend some of the athletes who deserve honorable mention for their play on the field and court this past week. We would like to honor co-captain Beverly Diaz for her four years of that Diaz did not want to leave the court after her last home game due to her determination and leadership. play on the volleyball court at W.C. For anyone who was present at the Johns Hopkins match, you could see. While discussing volleyball, Tina Smith should also be commended for her first place ranking in the category of service aces. Smith leads the Centennial Conference with 22 aces in 23 games and a .96 average. Midfielder Sarah Sobon has had an excellent first season for the field hockey team. She has played outstanding defense and tallied the second goal in the Johns Hopkins game. Co-captain Greg Miller had another outstanding week in the goal for the soccer team. Miller registered his fifth straight shutout in the Delaware Valley game, giving him seven for the year.

Not available for picture: Chris Daily

Also making soccer news ...

Ursinus bows to W.C

A team consisting of both starters and nonstarters played an exhibition game at Ursinus Thursday October 13. The Sho'men came out strong and ready. They were only outshot by one in the first half. Sophomore goalie Mike Gill played solidly, getting a shutout for the first half, with five saves. At the half the score was tied at zero.

The Sho'men came out aggressively in the second half and five minutes into the half junior Yoseph Bekele scored off of a pass from Shawn McMahon. About one minute later Yonatan Alemu came off of the bench to score from another assist from McMahon. The Sho'men were up by two.

Ursinus' Harold Griffith, with less than ten minutes remaining in the game, took a high corner shot from inside the 18-yard box past on junior goalkeeper Chris Downs. Ursinus got seven shots on the Washington goal in the first half and Downs came up big with four saves.

Washington came away with the win, 2-1. This was an impressive exhibition for the non-starters. It gave the coaches a chance to see them play. With close to 30 players on this year's squad, it is hard for the coach to play every player. Both goalies, Gill and Downs are in a position to step up into the starting position next year when Miller graduates. Ω

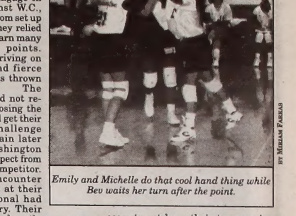
Shorewomen on the go: Two weeks and counting

Mariah Geissler

The W.C. volleyball team traveled into D.C. to meet Ferrum, Christopher Newport, Gallaudet, and Greensboro at the annual Gallaudet Tournament. The Shorewomen began Friday evening and continued through Saturday, competing against a group of highly skilled teams.

There was a general consensus among the women that they definitely had the potential to successfully compete against and beat many of the teams that they encountered. Unfortunately, due to the combination of illnesses, aches and pains, and fatigue that inhibited the team, they could not quite pull it off. It is understandable that they did not emerge as victorious as desired; as we all know, the team has adhered to a very rigorous schedule this season. If the volleyball players were not on the road heading for a competition at another college, they most likely would be within the next 24 hour period.

W.C. started off Friday's competition with a match against Ferrum. Unfortunately, the Shorewomen had to endure a tough loss against this team before they were warmed up and ready to play at their usual level. In their second match on Friday against Christopher Newport, W.C. proved talented to be the "masters of the court with a win. Saturday was to be a great disappointment for the team due to their loss to both Gallaudet and Greensboro.



The weekend was not viewed as a defeat; there were many instances where players got to prove to Coach Fall that they could be a great service to the team. When W.C. was showing signs of weariness, Coach Fall looked to Kari Lee, Laura Hobbs, and Jade Shockley. This was a good move on her part; the high levels of energy and enthusiasm that they brought out onto the court were assimilated into the rest of the team's play. Kari Lee had a terrific day in the back row, providing some very tough serves and digging difficult spikes that were dealt out by the other team. Jade Shockley and Laura Hobbs helped the team get back the serve with some needed kills. Despite the aggressive attitude that was reflected in their tactful play, the Shorewomen left Gallaudet with one win and three losses.

"We were disappointed about the weekend no matter how hard we tried, it didn't seem to click. But now we have refocused and redefined our goals for the remainder of the season. I know that if we go out there and enjoy ourselves, it will all come together naturally," commented Courtney Myers about their weekend at Gallaudet.

Last Wednesday the women played against Wilmington and Salisbury. Wilmington came out onto the court with a record of 18 wins and one loss, providing Washington with a difficult match. Wilmington's style of play was a bit of a shock; instead of providing the intense rallies that the more highly-skilled teams engage in when put against W.C., Wilmington seldom set up their offense. They relied on free balls to earn many of their points. Washington, thriving on long rallies and fierce competition, was thrown off guard. The Shorewomen did not recover in time, losing the match. They will get their chance to challenge Wilmington again later this week. Washington knew what to expect from their second competitor. The team's encounter with Salisbury at their home Invitational had ended in victory. Their confidence soared as they came out onto the court; the entire team contributed their talents, providing an intense game. Both Michelle Chin and Tina Shultz contributed a considerable amount of digs, along with their carefully placed sets, to help set up the women's offense and defense. The full force of concentration was maintained throughout the entire match, allowing for W.C. to gain another win.

The volleyball team met Johns Hopkins in their last home match of the season. As in the Wilmington match, there were few notable instances of rallies. The team could not seem to get keep their tempo going and there were moments when communication between the team members was lacking. After four games, Johns Hopkins overcame Washington and took the win.

With two weeks remaining in the season, the Shorewomen are looking forward to proving their ability to work as a team as they meet many tough competitors for the second time. The Shorewomen's next games are this weekend against Bryn Mawr and Franklin and Marshall. Ω

Emily and Michelle do that cool hand thing while Bev waits her turn after the point.

Check out the men and women who wear the suits

A fall preview of the Swimming Programs

Dave Kraft

The Washington College Men's and Women's Swimming programs are looking forward to one of the most exciting seasons in the history of their sports. Extensive recruiting for both the men and women promises to promote W.C. with another award winning season. Coach Kim Lessard returns for her fifth year at the helm of the women's team and her fourth year with the men. Lessard has been recruiting vigorously and is extremely optimistic about the upcoming season: "I'm very excited. This will be the most talented men's and women's group that Washington College has ever had." Assisting Lessard this year will be 1994 graduate and school record-holding diver Jennifer Ernest.

On the men's side, the Shoremen are looking to have their strongest team ever. Lessard predicts that they will be pounding on the door of Centennial Conference Champion Gettysburg. Last year, the Shoremen swam to an impressive 6-2 record, defeating the likes of Dickinson, Widener, Elizabethtown, and Swarthmore; teams who had finished ahead of them the year before. They then swam a fantastic Centennial Conference Championship meet, avenging their loss to Franklin & Marshall and finishing second to Gettysburg. F&M had defeated the Shoremen in regular season competition in the last event, the 400 Free Relay. So it was only fitting for the Shoremen to return the favor in that time final event at Championships as Dave Ciola, Peter Woodall, Chris Freisheim, and Jason Campbell took second to Gettysburg in school record time. The men's season was nearly complete with their first showing as Academic All-Americans, compiling a 2.84 grade point average. All 17 men will return, as there were no seniors on the team last year. Added are four newcomers to assure the Shoremen's place in Conference prominence.

This will be the final season for the seven seniors largely responsible for making the team what it is today. Leading the way again will be co-captain Dave Ciola. At last year's Championships, Cola placed second in the 200 Free and 1650 Free, and 3rd in the 500 Free, all in school record time. He then went on to swim on four school record relay teams. Cola was named co-MVP for the 1993-94 season. Chris Freisheim, the other co-captain, will continue to earn his reputation as a great relay swimmer as he swam on the three school record Free Relays. Freisheim also placed in the 100 Free And 400 IM.

"I am looking forward to the input the new swimmers are going to have," says Freisheim. "It's taking a good team and making it even better.

Jason Campbell was good for fifth place and a school record in the 100 Breast, 8th in the 50 Free, tenth in the 100 Free, and four school record relays. The Shoremen seemed to be strongest in the backstroke events, due to the efforts of Tyler McCarthy, fifth in the 100 and seventh in the 200 Back; Tim Whitier (So. Paris, ME), seventh in the 100 and eighth in the 200; and Dave Czekaj who placed in both and in the 1650 Free. Mike Bowman and Jeff swim the sprint Free and Fly events.

This year's junior class swimmers include Peter Ward, who took second in the 100 Back, third in the 200 Back, and ninth in the 200 IM all in school record time, then swam on four school record relays. Ward, last year's co-MVP, also swims sprint Free. Scott Steinmuller was fifth in the 200 Fly for a school record, swam in the school record 400 Free Relay, and placed eighth in the 100 Fly and the 200 IM. Hometown hero Julien Gaudion was named the Centennial Conference's swimmer last year. He took fifth in the 200 Breast for a school record and was seventh in the 100 Breast. Dave Kraft took ninth in the 100 Back, swam on the school record 800 Free Relay, and also swims middle-distance Free and Breast.

The sophomores feature Tim Parent, who took second in the 100 Fly in school record time, swam on two record relays and took seventh in the 50 Free and eighth in the 200 Fly. Peter Woodall was ninth in the 400 IM and swam on the 800 Free Relay, both school records. Woodall also ran things in the distance free events, taking seventh in the 1650 and tenth in the 500. International swimmers Marcello Brutti and Ryu Kawai have placed in the grueling 400 IM. Brutti also did the killing in the 200 IM; Kawai in the 100 and 200 Fly. Perry Hollard returns to swim the sprint Free events.

Joining the team this year is transfer Erric Hetzer, who will swim distance free and breaststroke. The freshmen include Dave "Bama" Potter, who is already under school record times in the sprint free and butterfly events; Drew Fritch, an outstanding distance free and IM swimmer; and Rob Cronin, a high school standout in IM and backstroke. Like the other freshmen, Cronin is looking forward to showing what he can do. "I'm looking forward to helping out the team. Hopefully we'll have a good season."

The women's team is expecting great improvement this year. Lessard believes the women "will be the up and coming team in the conference this year." With the addition of seven new freshmen, the team nearly doubled in size. Considering their size, they performed admirably, going 2-9 and placing eighth in the Centennial Conference, an extremely tough conference which produced a number of female All-Americans. All eight women that swam in the Centennial Championship Meet scored points, the first time this has happened in W.C. history. Jennifer Green lowered her 100 Back record, and the team of Green, Colleen Roberts, Jen Dow, and Jen Voss broke the six-year-old 400 Medley Relay record. The women's team was also named Academic All-American for both semesters as they compiled an impressive 3.0 cumulative grade point average.

Co-captain Amy Draper is the team's only senior this year and will swim the 100 and 200 Fly, the events she placed in at Championships. Draper also will see action in the freestyle events. She is optimistic about the upcoming season: "We had a good recruiting class and only lost one senior so I think we'll be more competitive in the conference."

Junior co-captain Jen Dow will concentrate on her trademark 100 and 200 Fly, but also will swim IM and distance free. Dow also predicts improvement: "Already we are working as a team, which should prove for a successful season." Colleen Roberts, the team's co-MVP last season, excels in the breaststroke and IM events. She placed in the 200 and 400 IM and the 200 Breast. She also could swim the 100 Free and butterfly. Denise Hakanson will swim the sprint free and backstroke events. Robin Woolens, the women's most improved swimmer last year, will swim freestyle and breaststroke. Liz Likens will swim distance Free and breaststroke as well.

The sophomore class includes Jen Voss, who will continue to be a force in the sprint Free events. Voss placed in the 50 and 100 Free and swam on all five relays. Erin Miller will step up in the backstroke events. She placed in those, as well as the 400 IM. Eileen Kuriger will add to the distance free events. She placed in the 1650 Free last year. Amy Peterson will also swim distance freestyle.

This year's large freshman class contains exceptional talent. Casey Bane is an outstanding sprint freestyler. Meredith Bathgate is already under school record time in the sprint free and back events. Megan Bradley brings tremendous talent to the distance free and fly events. Two women will join Amy Draper from Lake Forest High School: Heather Beauchamp, who swims Free and Fly, and Barbara Murphy, who will add to the Free, Back, and IM events. Darlene Schaub is a fine breaststroker, and Danielle Sullivan specializes in the sprint Free events. This group is also showing their enthusiasm: "It's a great bunch of people and it looks like everyone is into it," remarked Bane.

Both squads will have a scrimmage on November 5 at the Casey Swim Center and will open dual meet competition on the road against Salisbury on November 12. The teams return home to face Western Maryland on November 19. Come down to the Casey Swim Center and see for yourself the exciting, competitive teams Coach Lessard has put together. Ω

BY KELLI YOUNGBLOOD

Last intramural game of the season - Sure / Unsure

Many thanks!

The Elm Sports staff would like to take some space in this week's issue to recognize a few people. There are many people who do not play sports but without whose dedication the sports could not be played. They include those in the training room, the equipment room, and the offices, and on the sidelines keeping stats.

Nancy and Bill Marsey come in early every morning to get uniforms, equipment and practice clothes ready for the athletes, including many Saturdays. They have a great housekeeping staff that spends several hours at the crack of dawn washing and folding the equipment, uniforms and practice clothes. There are also many people who travel with the teams. The trainers will often travel the several hours with the team on the vans so that they can wrap or tape the athletes before the game and be there during and after the game in case they are needed. Then there are the student workers. They are the statisticians, camera crew and keepers of the clock. When needed they travel with the team as well. They give up their free afternoons and Saturdays as well. They have kept very good stat sheets for all the games this fall and we, the Elm Sports staff, appreciate their accuracy. The training room staff are the following: Head Trainer Mark Laursen and assistants Roni Threlfall, and Kelly Moore. The student trainers this semester are Elizabeth Mogs, Greg Gibson, Rebecca King, Daniella Bonazzoli, Alison Deliberto, Becky Stephens, and Kristen Snell. They see many atheletes every day at all hours and we appreciate their time and dedication. In the sports information office this year are Cherie Gallini, Matt Murray, Sarah Sobon, and Amy Osborne. Statisticians include Patrice Stanley, Lindsey Ledwin, Iris Lewis, Alicia Carberry, and Tod Hall . We'd also like to thank the members of the men's soccer team and others who serve as line judges for volleyball. Thanks also to Marcia Flinn for the idea.

Scores

Field Hockey

Johns Hopkins 3
Washington 2

Catholic 1
Washington 0

Soccer

Delaware Valley 0
Washington 0
(2 OT)

Western MD 2
Washington 2

Widener 4
Washington 0

Volleyball

Salisbury 9 15 6
Washington 15 10 15
(W)

Wilmington 15 15
Washington 10 13
(L)

Johns Hopkins
Washington
(L)

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Saturday, October 22

Volleyball @ Bryn Mawr, 11 a.m.
Soccer @ Johns Hopkins, 1:30 p.m.
Women's Soccer vs. St. Johns, 2 p.m.

Tuesday, October 25

Field Hockey vs. Muhlenberg, 4 p.m.
Volleyball @ Western MD, 7 p.m.

Wednesday, October 26

Soccer vs. Beaver, 3 p.m.

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Eight

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Adjustments in the English Department

Students react to departure of popular professor

Kate Meagher and Rachael Fink

The seventh full-time English position, currently held by Professor Audrey Fessler, is undergoing transition from a concentration in Victorian prose to one in Twentieth Century American Literature.

The decision to change the concentration and requirements for the position, thereby excluding Professor Fessler, has caused a strong negative reaction from many students and some faculty members.

A group of over 20 concerned students met Tuesday night to discuss the issues raised by the reclassification of this position and its effect on the English Department and the College community as a whole.

"I believe her to be one of the, if not the, most caring, active, and just overall nurturing faculty members here," said Bob Brown, a junior majoring in English who counts Fessler among his "truest friends."

During the meeting, students considered effective avenues of protest. A petition was drafted and circulated, plans to start a letter-writing campaign were made, and students discussed the possibility of involving alumni in their efforts.

Three objectives for the student protest were outlined by Brown. The group hopes to "keep Fessler here." They also plan to send a "strong, student-based message to the administration that these are the people who shape our education. Their lives are what they teach and who they teach," said Brown. The third objective, should these methods fail to reach the administration, is to send a message to both Professor Fessler and her husband, Visiting German Professor Jeff Vahlbusch, that they "will be missed."

"As a duo, they're incredible educators who love what they do and who they do it for," said Brown. "You can't buy that."

Many Fessler supporters attended the weekly Student Government Association meeting, at which President Trout was to address the SGA and respond to student questions.

On behalf of the substantial student presence at the meeting, Senator Max Walton expressed concern about the release of Professor Fessler. Citing her contributions to the Honor Code and the Honor Board, Walton called her accomplishments "unbelievable."

Trout indicated that he felt the Student Government Association was "not the best body in the world to discuss personnel matters." Trout continued by saying that Walton's use of the word "release" was misleading, and that the position would be maintained, but the field redefined.

Responding to questions concerning the apparent de-emphasis on English, Trout said, "Student preferences are changing. The last two entering classes ... expressed more interest in math or one of the natural sciences."

When asked how students can best convey their sentiments concerning personnel decisions to the administration, the President emphasized the rules governing the Committee of Appointments and Tenure.

Consisting of four faculty members (currently Professors Rosette Roat, Jeanette Sherbondy, Garry Clarke and Judith Hymes), the dean, and the president, the Committee on Appointments and Tenure receives a recommendation involving personnel matters from the academic department. The Committee in turn makes a recommendation to the president, who serves as a non-voting member. The president has the authority to accept or reject, at his discretion, the recommendation of the committee.

When asked how the English Department came to its decision to request the reconfiguration of Fessler's position, Trout responded "I presume they looked at the balance of their course offerings ... intellectual needs ... enrollment patterns ... their own staff and their areas of expertise. I think they also looked at what the external review team had to say about the department."

"The English Department does have a say in it," said faculty liaison to the SGA, Professor of Psychology Dr. Kevin McKillop. "Traditionally, what the department wants is what happens. Trout ultimately has the power to do something about this if he chooses to."

At the SGA meeting, McKillop indicated that not only was the English Department divided on the issue of the reclassification of Fessler's position, but the head of the Department, Professor Bennett Lamond, did not agree with the decision. Although unwilling to comment further, Lamond confirmed this statement.

Fessler's position, originally advertised in October 1990, called for a specialist in Victorian prose to fill a three-year terminal position. After four years, the position is being re-advertised as a two-year non-tenure track position to be filled by an English generalist with a concentration in Twentieth Century American Literature.

"The change is meant to correct a perceived imbalance in terms of the areas they (the English faculty) cover," said Dr. Emilie Amt, president of the College chapter of the AAUP. "One wonders what this does to correct the imbalance - nothing."

The possession of a Ph.D has been added to the requirements for the position. According to Trout, "the completion of a doctoral dissertation is very important." All tenure track faculty are encouraged to finish their Ph.D. by the third year of their employment at Washington College. The Faculty Handbook for 1994-1995 states that "the quality of the individual's teaching, scholarly promise in addition to the Ph.D. dissertation, and service to the College" are considered the basis of the third-year review for tenure track professors.

"It's true that it doesn't apply directly to her," said Trout. "Implicitly one would imagine that after three years, having the Ph.D. becomes some consideration. However this was not the grounds for the recommendation of the English Department as far as I know."

According to many faculty members, the decision to redefine the position held by Fessler so as to exclude her from it, is a symptom of a larger problem.

"This is an issue that goes way beyond the English Department," said Amt. She continued by explaining the problems with irregular appoint-

See "Fessler" on 4

PHOTO BY KELLY YOUNGBLOOD

Bob Brown (right) takes signatures for a petition demanding the reversal of the administration's decision concerning Fessler from English majors Todd Lineburger and Mark Murphy

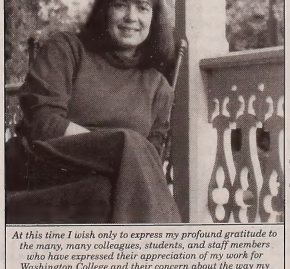


PHOTO BY BECKY BRYANT

At this time I wish only to express my profound gratitude to the many, many colleagues, students, and staff members who have expressed their appreciation of my work for Washington College and their concern about the way my situation has been handled.
- Professor Audrey Fessler

Inside This Week's Elm

Parents' Day schedule 3

Scholarship report
Information concerning scholarships available to W.C. students 4

Earth Notes
Couch potato environmentalists, and less than environmentally friendly outdoors enthusiasts 6

Dropped a Whole Degree
Aaron is disappointed by Marsalis but offers some great substitutes. 7

Timing is everything

Mother Nature has impeccable timing. Just in time for Parents' Day the weather turns nice and gray, the trees orange and yellow and there is just a hint of winter to come in the nippy air. This is Washington College at its best; a picture perfect place to obtain a liberal arts education. Vibrant colors poised on tree limbs and tumbling to the ground contrast beautifully with stately red brick, white columns and gray sky.

As far as I am concerned, Mother Nature is not the only governing body that has wonderful timing. The administration managed to pull one of its ever popular stunts just in time for the Parents' Day issue of The Elm. For this, I have to say, "Thanks, y'all." I will go on to thank President Trout for some sterling comments made at the last Student Government Association meeting. It is weeks like this that make my job such a joy.

What I am not enjoying about this week is having to report the news. Yes, Professor Audrey Fessler is leaving. That makes twice in my three and a half years here that I have had to say good-bye to a professor who has made a positive contribution to Washington College.

We've got no money
But we've got our lives
A voice that's louder than any picket sign
Don't take away what is ours to keep
This very land that lies beneath our feet
Don't know about this mess we're in

I know that there are a million different issues raised by the redefinition of Fessler's current position; the problems with irregular appointments, the division of the English faculty and the faculty as a whole, the shifting of demographics placing more students in the sciences as opposed to English, the miscommunication and misunderstandings between administration, faculty, staff and students, etc., etc., etc. In my mind, and in the minds of most students I have talked to, the biggest problem we have in all of this is the insistence on the part of the administration, and in particular, President Trout, that students have no, and should have no say in the personnel who educate them. It is my understanding that students are a large part of what makes a college; without students, why have an institution dedicated to teaching? As students (not faculty or administrators) are the basic unit of importance in a learning environment, and well-educated students are the product that a learning environment should produce, it would seem only logical that the student voice be the loudest and most important.

Personally, I think it comes down to an issue that I have more than once ranted about in my editorial space, that of the students' positions as adults in a world of adults. The message being sent to the student body is one that undercuts our belief that we, as consumers, have any control over those from whom we buy the product of our education. It seems that the administration, and others responsible for this type of decision, do not see the student body as being capable of deciding who best teaches, and from whom we learn most. There are lots of people in the world peddling education, and as consumers looking for a best buy, students have a vested interested in who is chosen to do the job of teaching.

At the SGA meeting, Trout said that he felt the Student Government Association was not the body to discuss personnel changes. In reality, it is the student body that is most greatly affected by changes in personnel. It is our area of concentration that changes; they are our courses that are limited; it is our education that is affected. By effectively cutting students out of the decision-making process and by denying us the right to voice our opinions in a constructive manner, the administration is sending the message that this is not a college for students, but for administrators to scared to run the public office.

Last year there was an outcry from the student body over the decision not to renew the contract of a popular art professor, Tex Andrews. Nothing was changed by our protest, nothing concrete came out of it, except a general feeling of disappointment on the part of the student body and concerns on the part of Art majors as to whether or not they would be able to, or wanted to finish their majors. I did not think that I would be in a position to fulfill the requirements of an Art major. Nor did I want to take all of my remaining courses from two professors. I dropped my Art major.

This year, there is outcry over the decision to redefine the concentration and requirements for the seventh full-time position in the English Department. With a sad heart, I admit that this student outcry, although already more organized and larger than last years, will also achieve nothing more than the disillusionment of many students. Unfortunately, I am not in a position where I can afford to drop my English major. Nor can I transfer to another college to get my degree; it is simply too late for me to do anything of that nature. I, and many others like me, are caught between a rock and a hard place. We cannot leave this institution without sacrificing many hours of work, nor do we feel that we can continue to support an institution that so blatantly disregards our needs and wants.

The smoke is clearing and we see a light
Coming together for a different fight
All of us looking, finding our way again
Out of this mess we're in Song lyrics from "The Mess We're In," Los Lobos

There is only one solution left for those of us unable or unwilling to abandon this college. We scream, yell, cry, organize, and then try to comfort ourselves with the thought that we have done all we can do without actually accomplishing anything significant.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1926

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan
Arts & Entertainment Editor
Carolyn Fuss
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Nicole Zemanski

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Richard McKee, Jr.
Office Manager
Leticia Lyford-Pike
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and cred do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8565.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

Editor's Note:
Due to technical problems, the back four pages of this week's Elm could not be printed. These four pages will be included in next week's issue. We apologize for any inconvenience this may cause and thank all those who contributed articles and pictures to this section.

To the Editor:

Give 'em a break

I come from Newark, Delaware. In Newark there are at least a dozen local bands releasing new music on seven-inch records, tapes, and even CDs. If you went into Newark on almost any weekend, you would be able to find a place where kids were playing a show. Imagine the culture shock of coming to Washington College and finding a grand total of two bands. One of those bands is Strathmore Buzz.

I wholeheartedly disagree with the treatment they were given in the sixth issue of The Elm. They were reviewed by a former Washington College student by the name of Joshua Buchman. I understand that reviews are inherently biased, but this one was extremely so. Most of the criticism was reserved for the quality of the demo tape.

I think this is absolutely ridiculous. First I must ask the question: what are you comparing them to? At this time, Strathmore Buzz is the only band on campus that has released material. Granted, there are some problems with the production. What do you expect? This band isn't on a major label. They're not even on an independent label. These are two college students paying for tuition and all the other college expenses; still they were able to put together enough money to put out a demo. I, for one, am happy that they did it. There's something great about going to a record store and seeing music by people you know, people you've seen play, people you've talked to at school. When you see a homemade zine, do you complain that the covers aren't slick? That the pictures aren't color? That it isn't as well produced as Rolling Stone or Spin? Strathmore Buzz is putting out their own tapes with their own money and doing a fine job of it. Whether or not you like their music (and I'll be honest, their music isn't a style that I usually listen to) you have to admire them for their effort.

In conclusion, I'd like to add that we should be supporting our local bands in whatever way possible (congratulating them, buying their tapes, going to their shows). This College is the only thing to do in Chestertown. We make our own entertainment. The people out there putting out magazines on campus, putting together bands, organizing shows, these people are making this a more interesting campus. I've heard a lot of people complain about how boring and apathetic this campus is. If Joshua Buchman's review of Strathmore Buzz is indicative of the treatment local artists will receive from our College community, I can only imagine that this place will become even more boring, and even more apathetic.

- Kevin Hoffman

Notice to all 1995 Candidates for Graduation

Any student expecting to complete all the requirements for the Baccalaureate or Masters degree by May 1995 must file an application with the Registrar. If you have not received this form in your college box, kindly stop by the Registrar's Office at your earliest convenience. Our order for diplomas will be mailed before the end of October; therefore your cooperation is important.

This Week on Campus
Oct. 28 - Nov. 3

Friday 28
Film Series
The Scent of Green Papaya
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Saturday 29
Parents' Day

Sunday 30
Daylight savings ends

Monday 31
W.C. Academy of Lifelong Learning: The Witches of Salem
Dr. Charlotte Bode Hynson, 4 p.m.

Tuesday 1

Wednesday 2

Thursday 3

Thinking through ...

Russian roulette

by Paul Briggs

In northern Russia an oil spill has occurred which, by some estimates, is considerably larger than that produced by the Exxon Valdez. Estimates of its size range from 100,000 to two million barrels - several rivers have oil floating six inches deep on their surface. Cleanup of the spill is hindered by the fact that the region in which it occurred - the Komi province, north of Usinsk - is nearly inaccessible.

This would not be particularly significant (not outside of Komi, anyway) were it not for the peculiar way in which the spill occurred. Since August, vast quantities of oil had been leaking from pipelines in the area. In America, the logical course of action would have been to temporarily shut down the pipeline until the pipes could be repaired. The Russians who were sent to fix the problem, however, felt that that would have been too costly. Instead of fixing the pipes, therefore, they built large earthen dams to hold back the leaking oil and prevent it from flooding the countryside. The oil spill was caused when heavy rains broke the dams.

This is not the only time that failure to pay for routine maintenance of a large system has resulted in much greater costs. The flooding of the Chicago tunnels a few years ago, for example, could have been prevented by doing $10,000 worth of repairs on the tunnel walls. Instead, the cleanup cost one billion dollars. In the former Soviet Union, however, money for routine maintenance is often simply impossible to come by.

Oil spills are by no means the only form of pollution suffered in the Russia and other ex-Communist nations. Acid rain, radiation leakage, heavy-metal contamination - all the old familiar dangers we have learned to fear and to combat - have reached endemic levels. Again, the money needed to fight them is not available. All too often, well-meaning citizens are thus constrained by circumstance to continue the environmental policies (or non-policies) of the old Soviet bureaucrats whose irresponsible practices have already created what Boris Yeltsin once described as an "ecological catastrophe."

I must emphasize that there is nothing new about pollution in the former Communist bloc. It only seems like a new problem because only within the last few years has anyone been free to speak out about it. For most of this century, the people themselves never realized the extent to which their leaders were playing a game of Russian roulette with their health and lives.

We in America are used to thinking of environmental damage more in terms of harm to wildlife than harm to humans. In Russia, the harm to humans is painfully obvious.

- According to the March 1993 National Geographic, every major river in Russia is polluted, and a quarter of all its drinking water is unsafe to drink.
- In the northeastern part of the former Soviet republic of Kazakhstan, near Semey (Semipalatinsk) hundreds of nuclear tests were conducted over the course of several decades. The inhabitants of the region still suffer from an epidemic of grotesque birth defects.
- Most Russian industrial technology is old and outdated, but still in use. In Magnitogorsk, the archetype of ex-Communist industrial cities, a third of the population suffers from respiratory problems. (National Geographic, August 1994)
- One large body of water is not only dead, but actually disappearing. Earlier in this century the Soviet government successfully established a cotton industry in Central Asia by irrigating the desert. The result was that rivers that fed the Aral Sea diminished to a trickle. Today the Aral Sea (once nearly the size of Lake Superior) covers only half its former area and is shrinking fast. As a result, it has become so saline that fish can not survive in it, and the fishing industry which once supported thousands of families has vanished. The exposed area has become an immense salt flat which, during dust storms, scatters salt for miles and gradually ruins farmland.

One may well ask what is the point of reading about medical and environmental horrors thousands of miles away. I personally have found is more likely that they will take the right courses and get good grades."

Aery credited Del. Howard P. Rawlings of Baltimore with proposing an initial, three-year pilot program in 1990 and continuing it this year.

Rawlings, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said, "The students who have benefited from this program are 'at risk' not because they don't have ability, but because they have never imagined themselves succeeding in college. No one has shown them the possibilities that are within reach or helped them make the right decisions so they're ready for college or the many challenges they must face after high school graduation."

The program provides information to students and their families about the benefits of a college education, provides guidance in selecting appropriate college prep courses in high school, provides information about financial aid programs, and addresses parents' concerns about the cost of college. Pilot programs in Western and Southern Maryland, Prince George's County, Baltimore and on the Eastern Shore also offered mentoring and tutoring by college students, campus visits, parent workshops, after-school classes and summer camps.

Students targeted by the Maryland National Early Intervention Scholarship and Partnership program (MNEISP) may later be eligible for the state's new Guaranteed Access Grant, a scholarship that covers the full cost of attending a public, four-year college for qualified low-income students.

The Higher Education Commission will award grants on a competitive basis to partnerships of secondary schools, higher education institutions and community groups. Ω that thinking about the health risks that the people of the former Soviet Union face helps put into perspective the health risks Americans are used to thinking about. Preservatives and bovine growth hormone seem somehow irrelevant when one reads about places where new mothers are warned not to breast-feed their babies because their milk is toxic. It is difficult to take the dangers of electromagnetic fields from power cables and cathode-ray tubes seriously while reading about people who live and die amid nuclear fallout. One comes to the conclusion that if they can survive, surely we can too.

There is a better reason, however. One of the dilemmas that people working to preserve the environment face is "How do we know when we've achieved something?" The more radical environmentalists, convinced that mainstream Americans will jump at any excuse to lapse into complacency, prefer to de-emphasize what has already been accomplished. However, many others would honestly like some sign that their efforts over the past few decades have not been in vain. Unfortunately, until recently there has been no way of guessing what the United States might be like today without the environmental movement.

I submit that we now have a possible answer to that question. In the United States, people who saw what was happening to the world around them were free to speak up and to persuade the public - and ultimately the government and the private sector - about the danger. Under Communism there was no such freedom, and so the government continued to play Russian roulette, oblivious to the consequences. There but for the grace of God, and our own good sense, go we.Ω

Parents' Day activities schedule

9 -10 a.m.
Registration

10 a.m.
Panel Discussion - "Washington College Today ... and Tomorrow"

11 a.m.
Parents / Faculty Gathering

12:30 p.m.
Picnic Luncheon

1:30 p.m.
Alumni / Student Lacrosse Game

1:30-5 p.m.
Open House - O'Neill Literary House

2 p.m.
Meeting - New Students' Parents

3 - 4:30 p.m.
"Studying the Liberal Arts and Sciences in the Nineties" Discussions

3 - 5 p.m.
Book Signing by Mr. John M. Baker

4 p.m.
Parents' Committee Meeting

4:30 - 5:30 p.m.
Magical Mystery Tour of Miller

5 - 6:30 p.m.
Wine and Cheese Reception

6:30 p.m.
Dinner

7:30 p.m.
Jazz Night

Federal grant will expand Maryland program to help low-income students prepare for college

An innovative Maryland program to encourage students from low-income families in both urban and rural areas to prepare for college has been selected by the U.S. Department of Education for a federal grant.

The $375,000 grant will make it possible to expand an early intervention program that targets both parents and students, including students who are not native English speakers.

"The most important time to reach students is before they start high school," said Shaila R. Aery, the Secretary of Higher Education. "If we can convince middle school students that college is a real possibility, then it

The Goldstein Program in Public Policy presents

Women, Violence, and Racism

a lecture by Alice McGrath

October 31, Hynson Lounge, 7:30 p.m.

Internship Opportunities Department of Political Science and International Studies

Internship coordinators will be on campus on the following dates. All presentations will be in the Sophie Kerr Room, Clifton B. Miller Library from 4:00 - 4:45 p.m.

Thursday, November 10
Ms. Jennifer Woody, Intern Coordinator
Bureau of East Asian & Pacific Affairs, Department of State

Tuesday, November 15
Ms. Mary Baldwin, Intern Coordinator
Organization of American Studies, Department of State

For more information contact Dr. Shad (x. 7779) or Dr. Premo (x. 7769)

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

The Student Government Association Senate meeting of October 25 promised to be eventful due to College President Charles H. Trout's appearance for a question-and-answer session, and it definitely delivered.

The commencement of the actual meeting was to be delayed about twenty minutes for the open forum with Trout, according to SGA President Jamie Baker. It was obvious, however, that twenty minutes would not suffice to accommodate questions from the 30-plus students who crowded into the CAC forum to extract answers from the College President on several pertinent issues, not the least of which being the recent reconfiguration of the position of Professor Audrey Fessler.

Of the ten or so questions posed during the forum, more than half related to Fessler. Trout, claiming that "this is not the greatest body in the world to discuss personnel matters," cited "shifting enrollment" from majors in English to those in sciences as well as an "imbalance between offerings in British Literature and American Literature" as the primary causes for the decision.

For an in-depth look at the Fessler situation, see the article on page one.

While other issues were definitely relegated, they certainly did not disappear. When asked to clarify his goal of campus unity, Trout explained that, "by unity, I do not mean movement on all issues ... I have in mind the need for agreement on the primacy of academics, the goals of the long-range plan, and at least a consensus that there is a paramount need for curricular reform, especially in the first two years."

In response to the question, "what do you particularly fear as you think about the choice of your successor?" the College President replied that his "worst fears have to do with the unlikely possibility" that the new President's "way of judging an institution's progress is almost wholly based on the bottom line, who lacks a capacious intellect based in the liberal arts tradition, and who would not be quick to embrace the diversity initiatives that have been so much a part of the last five years." He continued, "I would be distraught if my successor were to abandon the main tenets of our long-range plan or were to relegate academic emphasis to a lesser position than it currently occupies."

Deciding he'd overstayed his time, Trout exited to a smattering of applause. Then the Senate meeting began.

The reports from the class Presidents find the Junior class coordinating efforts to decorate the campus for the holidays and planning for Earth Day; the Sophomore class working with the Freshman class on the proposed combined semi-formal and arranging for a repeat performance by the Frogs; and the Freshman class planning to raffle off a television for their upcoming fund-raiser.

The Riverside Players' constitution, which was distributed last week, was approved and funding from the SGA in the amount of $200 was apportioned.

Complications in funding for the sailing club surfaced again: it seems as if no decision with respect to funding can be made until the club gains recreational sport status. Last year sailing was a varsity sport.

Funding in the amount of $200 was also apportioned to Jazz Night. The event, which will take place Saturday night, was also given $2[illegible] by both the office of Student Affa[illegible] and the Dale Adams Herita[illegible] Exchange.

A resolution has yet to be reach[illegible] on the issue of cable TV on camp[illegible] The Department of Student Affair[illegible] has referred the issue to the Buildin[illegible] and Grounds Committee of th[illegible] Senate, and they are currently deli[illegible] erating between providing the sch[illegible] with its own satellite system, or hooking the school up to the existi[illegible] cable wires.

Due to an oversight, an interes[illegible] ing situation occurred Saturday night. There were both a school-sponsored event (the Frogs concert) and a fraternity party on the same night. The Se[illegible] is considering, at the suggestion o[illegible] quite a few students, to allow this to happen more often. The activity leade[illegible] on campus on Saturday seemed quite higher than on a typical weekend, and neither the SGA nor the constituency seem to be inclined to argue with this success.

Wasting space on 'This Week's Issue' is pointless; the pressing issues on campus this week not only ove[illegible] shadows all others, but it is also co[illegible] ered extensively in this week's El[illegible]. See the news article on page one. Ω ments such as the one held by Fessler and several other faculty members. With tenure track positions, "the ground rules are clear," as set down in the faculty handbook.

"Fessler" from 1

Professor Dale Daigle, Chair of the Humanities Department, said "I think there are a great number of people who are concerned about what happened. Some people are extremely upset that along with some other personnel decisions that have been made in the last couple of years, this has sent Junior Faculty mixed signals. We have lost a number of teachers who have been able to excite, motivate and inspire our students."

"It's discouraging to faculty who want to see new things happen here," commented Amt. "I think it really a blow to new faculty who really see Fessler and Vahlbusch as key people."

As president of the College chapter of the AAUP, Amt indicated that the chapter members would be discussing the problems with irregular appointments and the mixed messages to faculty concerning tenure.

"Given the College's financial situation," said Amt, "I'm afraid that we're going to see more of these irregular appointments."

The members of the external review committee that conducted the review of the English Department wrote in their report, "In our opinion, Fessler is undervalued in her contributions to the Department as a whole because she is seen in narrow programmatic rather than broadly collegial terms. Her support of student initiatives in Women's Studies and her expertise in Composition and Rhetoric, for instance, tend to be ignored because she is seen as a 'specialist in Victorian Prose.'"

The review team also indicated in their report some possible future problems with the position held currently by Fessler. "The seventh full-time department slot seems dangerously close to becoming a three-year position to be fought over by interest groups, rather than an opportunity for departmental unity and renewal." Ω

Scholarship Report

The Scholarship Report will be a bimonthly feature designed to inform you of resources to be used. This information is also available on the computerized College Fund Finder housed in the Financial Aid Office. Call Vicky Sawyer, assistant director of Financial Aid, at x. 7214 and start the search to enhance your college and graduate school financing.

Graduate School

MBA Fellowships: Consortium for Graduate Study in Management

African-American, Hispanic American or Native-American students interested in pursuing graduate studies in business (US citizenship is required) are encouraged to apply for a merit-based fellowship to be used at one of ten prestigious universities. A student must submit only one application to the Consortium and pay a single application fee. The total value of the award is up to $25,000 which covers full tuition plus a $5,000 stipend for two years of MBA study at one of the 11 participating universities: University of California-Berkeley, Indiana University, The University of Michigan, New York University, The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, University of Rochester, The University of Southern California, The University of Texas at Austin, The University of Virginia, Washington University in St. Louis, and University of Wisconsin-Madison. Support for the Consortium is provided by major corporations. The application deadline is February 1, 1995. Write or call for a full brochure and application: Consortium for Graduate Study in Management, 1284-D Outer 40 Drive, Suite 100, St. Louis, MO 63141-8635, telephone (314) 935-5614.

James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation

Prospective and current secondary school teachers of American history, American government, and social studies in grades 7-12 are offered an opportunity to apply for the James Madison Fellowship which provides a maximum of $24,000 prorated over the period of graduate study for tuition, fees, books, room, and board. Aspiring teachers must possess a bachelor's degree or plan to complete a degree no later than August 31, 1995. Detailed information about fellowships and applications may be requested from: James Madison Fellowship Program, P.O. Box 4030, 2201 North Dodge Street, Iowa City, IA 52243-4030, phone (800) 525-6928 or internet address: Recvcpro@ACT-ACT4-PO.act.org. Deadline for applications is March 1, 1995.

Women

AARP Women's Initiative 10th Anniversary Scholarship

Targeting women age 50 or older with financial need who are pursuing an educational or vocational program to prepare for entrance or re-entrance to the work force, these scholarships range from $1,000 to $3,000 for full-time or part-time study for the 1995-96 academic year. Application packets are available between October 1, 1994 and April 15, 1995. Send 1995 application request form (your name, date, field of study and address), an enrollment verification from your school and a business-size, self-addressed, double-stamped envelop to: Scholarships, BPW Foundation, 2012 Massachusetts Ave., N.W., Washington, DC 20036 to receive the application package. Application deadline is April 15, 1995.

Glamour Top Ten College Women Competition

A $1000 scholarship, opportunities to meet with top professionals and national recognition in Glamour's October 1995 issues are awards given to the top 10 winners of this competition. The deadline for application is January 31, 1995. Applications are available in the Financial Aid Office on the third floor of the CAC.

National Community Service

AmeriCorps

Hailed as the new domestic Peace Corps, Americans have an opportunity to get things done through service in exchange for help financing their higher education or repaying their student loans. To do this one can complete a full term of service in an AmeriCorps-approved project — be it a full-time or part-time term of service to earn an education award. The award for full-time service is $4,725 and part-time service is for $2,362.50. Smaller awards of $1,000 are also granted for completing summer programs. AmeriCorps members can earn a maximum of two awards and then will become eligible to apply their financial award toward student loan repayment. National priority areas of education, public safety, human needs and the environment throughout the United States are program service areas from which members can choose. Referral forms and information on programs are available from the Financial Aid Office and the Career Center in Spanish House.

Men and Women of Scottish Ancestry

Saint Andrew's Society of Washington, DC

Scholarships for Americans to study in Scotland and Scots to study in the United States are open to men and women of Scottish Ancestry. The Donald Malcolm MacArthur Scholarship of $2,500 is available to U.S. residents planning to study in Scotland. Awards are established to foster study between the United States and Scotland and are open to juniors and seniors in college or full-time graduate students. Application forms can be obtained from the Financial Aid Office. Ω

The Ethics of Caring Beyond Curing in Hospice

Edmund D. Pellegrino, M.D.

November 2, 7:30 p.m., Hynson Lounge
co-sponsored by William James Forum and the Kent Hospice Foundation

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

crud.

creative ranting under duress.

by Steve Brown

Peace and Trees

Okay, I started thinking maybe I should change my name to World Peace and Goodness, but then I thought, "Uh oh, that would put me in a position to let more than a couple of people down ..." I am not ready to do that. I wouldn't want people to go around saying "No, don't wish for that, little snap cake, dear, he's busy making more copies." Too many people let them. Perhaps a new line of thought.

If you can trust things well enough to say that everything is connected to everything else, you can trust the many different times that life wanders off in a different direction than your mind. I had a friend in Colorado (honest) whose phone number, until it got turned off, was RED-YUGO. Everyone that he told this to was really impressed and wished that they could have such a unique number. No one really cared that the number they did have was just as unique as RED-YUGO and there wasn't a chance in the world that someone would laugh at them for actually sitting down and figuring out that 733-9346 spelled anything at all. My friend was laughed at quite a bit after the novelty of RED-YUGO wore horribly thin. This all brings me back to my original point. I hope you can see the connection there.

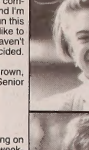
An idea struck me kind of hard one night in bed. The mind has an extremely powerful capacity for putting aside the bad and accepting only what is good. Or seemingly good. Some friends of mine recently left on a trip. They are going "West." As far as I could tell, "West" was a well-crafted metaphor for "I don't want to say that we have been there." The same distance could well be expressed by idly looking out the window and muttering something westish. It also meant, at least for a bit, Colorado. It occurred to me, several days after the teary good-byes, that the life they are going to lead will be somewhat different than the life I lead. They will encounter several (if not lots of, even) things that I will not. And they will sleep in places that I consider bad for sleeping. They will walk on packing lots and department store floors that are nowhere near here. Their lives will be, for the most part, different. That was the idea that struck me. Their lives won't be different. Just different. I guess you can see why that stuck me kind of hard.

I was brought out of my idea-induced slumber by the sound of the fire siren. According to my brain, the siren is at least forty or fifty percent louder before eight o'clock. Well, this particular morning, my sleeping self had decided I was in charge (indeed!) of this hideous noise, and it was my civic (and of course, moral) duty to make sure the siren stopped its screaming at the proper time. My control over the siren manifested itself in the small digital alarm clock next to my bed. As soon as the siren went off, I instructed myself to wait the proper amount of time and then turn it off by moving the clock ahead at least 70 minutes. This happened twice. All of this was well and good, and seemed to work like a charm, but there was the little problem of the clock now being about two and a half hours off its steady mark. I was very late to work.

If you pull of the strings coming out of this CRUD, you end up forming Cats Cradle of sorts. The ideas are the string, and the cradle is the idea. The RED YUGOs, the department store floors, the Snap Cake girl's wish for World Peace, and my seemingly powerful clock, are all sorts bound together. These are all the kind of things that make Chestertown sunsets really, really, really pretty. Everyday. Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Philip McQuade

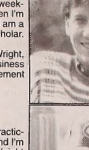


Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What are you doing this weekend and what are you going to be for Halloween?

Of course, I'm going to the boat house and I'm going to be ... drinking a lot of ducks.

Joe D'Urso, Junior



Well, my parents are coming on Saturday and I'm going to have fun this weekend. I would like to be Tinkerbell but I haven't decided.

Lisa Brown, Senior

I'm giving a talk to parents this weekend and I can't tell you what I'm going to be for Halloween but I can say you won't recognize me.

Ed Buscaglia, Prof. of Economics

I'm going to be working on my dissertation this weekend and for Halloween I'm going to pretend I am a scholar.

J. Wright, Prof. of Business Management

This weekend I'm going to take Emma away to make babies and for Halloween I'm going to be a cat.

Max Wick, Junior

This weekend I'm practicing for basketball and I'm going to be the midnight stalker running in Minta Martin preying on little defenseless girls.

Jerry Davis, Senior

Career Development: It is never too early

William Denton, III

For those of us students whose futures have yet to crystallize, Washington College provides a very valuable service: that of career development.

Inside the Spanish House (the white house with all the Elms on the front porch), one will find not only enough information to help even the most lost among us, but competent professionals willing to help any student determine and carry out his / her goals. The Center For Career Development is operated by Director Dr. Linda Cades and Assistant Director Vicky Sawyer, and assisted by Spanish House Secretary Dawn Baker. According to Dr. Cades, who has directed the Career Development Center for 10 years, the Center is willing to assist in "anything that has to do with [the students'] futures and preparing for their futures while they're still in school."

The purpose of the Center, according to Cades, is to help the students with "defining and carrying out long-term goals for themselves ... identifying skills and matching the skills with career goals." The Career Development Center certainly has the physical resources to do so: the Career Library, located on the first floor of Spanish House, alone has information on job opportunities in all fields, study abroad programs, graduate schools, admissions and standardized testing, scholarships, grants, fellowships, corporate jobs outlooks, internships, volunteer programs, training programs, and summer jobs. Also located in the Career Library is the SIGI PLUS computer, which "allows students to assess skills and interests, learn about different career options, and get specific information about requirements for entering various careers." The Career Library is open on weekdays from 8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m., and on Wednesdays again from 7 p.m. - 9 p.m.

The Center for Career Development also offers individual counseling with either Dr. Cades or Ms. Sawyer. The counseling sessions are designed to identify and help achieve the students' long-term goals, as well as gathering options, information, and opportunities for potential careers. Meetings can be scheduled by phone on Tuesday afternoons, Wednesdays, and Thursdays. Call Dr. Cades at x. 7890, Ms. Sawyer at x. 7892, or Ms. Baker at x. 7888.

Career newsletters printed by the Center are distributed to Seniors every two weeks, planning workshops are offered periodically, and vocational testing is also offered.

Career Development aims to assist students at every stage of the career development process; from assessment of skills, to career exploration, to internships and part-time work, to preparing resumés and cover letters and preparing for interviews, to getting hired or accepted into graduate school. Ω

BAY TO BAY TRADERS

207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442

Off Street Parking Next To The Store

Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm

Ray-Ban patagonia Columbia Sportswear Company REEF Old Towne Canoes & Kayaks Hanlin JANSPORT ORIGINAL UGG AUSTRALIA

10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS

WITH STUDENT I.D.

Barrecrafters Car Racks

Jazz Night

October 29, 7:30 p.m., Hynson Lounge

Alpha Chi Omega's annual

Casino Night

Saturday, November 5, 9 p.m. - midnight Hynson Lounge

to benefit Victims of Domestic Violence

Earth Notes

BY Andrea Nolan

A good friend of mine considers herself an environmentalist, yet feels nervous whenever the concrete beneath her feet is replaced by soil. Likewise, I had a co-worker who is an avid hunter and outdoor enthusiast, but does not have the time of day for conservation concerns. These two friends of mine would never get along, though in theory they should have much in common. This dichotomy, while not uncommon, I find sad. It is not merely a symptom of unbalance, but is a cause of unbalance within people's lives.

Conservation and outdoor recreation should be, indeed are, intricately intertwined. The environmentalist strives to save what the recreationist enjoys. And yet, their relationship is one of misunderstanding and unbalance, not of a continuous circle with the two perspectives feeding into the other. This circle of completeness is unbalanced, and it is a relationship that begs mending. The environmentalist needs the feel of dirt beneath his feet, and the sensation of sun dappling her shoulders through the canopy of a deciduous forest. Without this, the purpose behind striving to "save the environment" seems moot. What do they know, what can they know, of the natural workings of the world if they do not wander out to experience it?

Possibly even more common than the environmentalists who only experience the world through National Geographic specials, and conservation literature, there is another sort of conservationist — that of an outdoor-enthusiast who has become lost. I met one such misguided man a few years ago when he came to speak about the disappearance of wolves in Alaska. He first went to Alaska 10 years prior to our conversation, and spent a year there wandering and exploring in his work as a free-lance photographer. The wildness of the place reached into his very soul, and he became caught up in the fight to protect the rapidly disappearing wildness and her creatures. The man then left Alaska, with a slide show of his photographs in tow, to beat the campaign trail for saving the Alaskan wilderness. He has not been back to the wilderness, that he is striving so hard to protect, in over seven years. Indeed, he admitted to barely finding a few hours a month to find shelter in the shaded recesses of a forest. This man's plight I find to be unimaginably sad.

Likewise, I am disheartened by the fisherman who revels in the joy of his sport, and yet is unaware of the larger ecosystem that creates the prey for which he is seeking; and is likewise ignorant as to why the rivers clog up, and his quarry disappears. Several years ago there was a campaign launched to clean up Mt. Everest. A clean-up made necessary because in everyone's hurried rush to climb the world's highest peak, trash had been scattered, used oxygen tanks stacked in piles of monumental proportions, and the mountains rock faces scarred. This damage all done by individuals who spend more time proportionately in the outdoors than they do between walls.

However, this dichotomy in vision is not irreconcilable. Lately, in outdoor recreation, there has been movement towards an environmental consciousness. Minimum impact camping, and the "Leave No Trace" philosophies are heralded as the only choice in our overcrowded and overused wilderness areas. Likewise, hunting organizations are becoming powerful lobbying forces for the protection of the animals which they love, and in their love, hunt. These movements toward conservation are promising, and one can only hope that these people will keep upon the path they are treading, and move even farther along in their holistic understanding of the world which they so passionately love.

There are many environmentalists that have likewise headed out into the wilderness, seeking to discover the natural roots of the things which they know in theory. If the outdoor recreationists will take book-learned conservationists by the hand, and initiate them in the mysteries of wood-craft, I can only suppose that the environmentalist would return the favor and impart some of their philosophical learnings onto the adventurer. Out of hunters can spring conservationists, and out of conservationists can spring woodsmen. Within these people who find joy in both the woods and in the fight to preserve the woods is the balance of a harmonious nature. This balance is delicate, and yet self-preserving and self-propagating.

This year witnessed the expansion of Ivers Firma, the campus environmental organization, into an outdoor recreation / environmental group. As president, all this expansion cost me was the additional 17 letters which had to scrawl under the heading "club purpose" on the SGA club fun- ing request form. But while the cost of this expression is nil, its benefits could be manifold in its providing of a forum in which balanced world citizens can be cultivated.

I am a person who is vulnerable to the fate of the lost photographer. Thus, whenever I find myself drawn too heavily into the world of policy makers and legislators, I face up to hiking boots and head for the trees. I further remind myself of life's balance. I have taped on my wall a reading which I first heard this summer on a backpacking expedition which I undertook with the National Outdoor Leadership School. It is by Edward Abbey, whose #1 "One Final Paragraph of Advice," and it reads in part:

> Do not burn yourselves out. Be a lover and not merely a fighter. And if you are — as I am — a reluctant enthusiast — a part-time crusader, a half-hearted fanatic. Save the other half of yourselves, and your lives, for pleasure and adventure. It is not enough to fight for the land; it is even more important to enjoy it, while you can. While it's still there. Go get out there and hunt and fish and mess around with your friends, ramble out yonder and explore the canyons, encounter the grizzly, climb the mountains, bag the peaks, run the rivers, breath deep of that yet sweet and lurid air, sit quietly for a while and contemplate the precious stillness, that lovely mysterious and awesome space. Enjoy yourselves, keep your brain in your head and your head firmly attached to the body, the body active and alive

I tip my hat to you Mr. Abbey, I could not have said it better myself. Ω

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin & Jeff roan C'town in search of bargains.

Kevin: Now that we've covered a lot of the restaurants in the area, and it's getting toward that time of year when students get their hair cut, we're going to The Hair Clip in the Kent Shopping Center. Jeff, are you going to get your hair cut there?
Jeff: I will do anything for discounts, but I won't do that.
K: I'm not ready to get my hair cut either. What do you think we should do about this situation?
J: Let's get Joseph.

Later

K: Wait a minute, Joseph. I think you're misunderstanding the situation. You're the one getting the haircut.
Joseph: No. I thought you were going to get a haircut. You need a haircut more than I do.
K: That might be true, but I'm the one who has to do the interviewing. Are you having mood thoughts about this haircut, Joseph?
J: No, I need a haircut.
K: All right, let's do the introductions. This is Kevin and Jeff, from The Washington College Elm, Joseph is the one getting the haircut, and the person that's going to be cutting Joseph's hair? Your name is?
Hair Cut Girl: Mary
K: Is this unusual for people to be interviewing you while you're cutting hair? This might distract you enough that you'll make a mistake?
M: No, probably not.
K: So, this is a pretty respectable haircut place that will make sure your haircut is proper?
M: Unless you don't want it proper.
K: You're saying you can cut some of these wilder styles that are getting popular these days?
M: Yeah.
K: Joseph, How are you going to get your hair cut today? Mohawk?
J: No.
K: Shaved Head?
J: No. Shut up. Go away.
K: What are you going to have done?
J: Just a trim.
K: Mary, how long have you been cutting hair?
M: I've been here about a year. I read the book yesterday. This is my first haircut.
K: How do you feel about having your hair cut by a rookie, Joseph?
J: It's okay.
K: Jeff, do you see what she's doing to Joseph's hair?
Jeff: Oh my God!
K: Mary, I notice your hair has some red in there.
M: Yes.
K: Are you a punk?
M: No.
K: Do you like Green Day?
M: Yes.
K: Is that your favorite band?
M: No.
K: Do you ever have the urge to cut a customer's hair in the design of your favorite band?
M: No.
K: What's this whole water thing you're doing back here?
M: It just makes it easier for me to cut.
K: Joseph, how do you feel about having water in your hair?
J: It's okay.
K: If someone shows up here for a haircut, what kind of witty repartee can they expect to get from the hair cutting person?
M: It depends on the individual person.
K: What do you think Joseph wants to talk about?
M: I usually wait for them to start making conversation.
K: Do you feel uncomfortable if they just sit there and stare at you in the mirror?
M: I don't usually notice.
K: Have you ever had a stalker that came in for a haircut every week and you kind of start to wonder?
M: No, actually.
K: What would you do if that happened? Would you pretend to slip with the scissors, and cut their neck off?
M: Sure. Yeah. Maybe I'd just give them a really bad haircut, and they wouldn't come back.
K: What are those dryer things over there? I sometimes see them in cartoons, but I've never actually used one.
M: We set older ladies' hair with rollers, and put them under there.
K: Joseph is not an old lady, but if he wanted to go under there, could he?
M: He could, yes. I wouldn't put him under there, unless he really wanted to.
K: Do you want to try it, Joseph?
J: No.
K: I'm not even a customer, but if I wanted to go under there, could I?
M: Yes.
K: You would even turn it on for me?
M: I could even turn it on for you.
K: What does it do?
M: It blows air out.
K: Do you ever sit under there?
M: No, I don't really like them.
K: I noticed a lot of pictures over here, of happy people with haircuts. Did you cut their hair?
M: No. Those pictures are probably out of some magazine somewhere.
K: You've never met these people?
M: I've never met them.
K: Have you ever gotten sued for false advertising for that?
M: No. Most people know that they haven't really been here.
K: Do you ever think about haircuts when you see people?
M: I used to a lot, but I don't do that anymore. Now I try not to notice hair when I'm not here.
K: Do you immediately imagine them being bald at first?
M: No, not ever.
K: Is your dad bald?
M: No.
K: Do you cut your dad's hair?
M: Yes.
K: How long have you been cutting it?
M: Three years.
K: If you gave him a bad haircut, would he disown you?
M: I don't know.
K: My sister gave me a haircut once, and it turned out real bad.
M: We have mothers come in sometimes with their children whose hair they messed up.
K: Do you ever make a customer sweep the floor if he doesn't have enough money for the haircut?
M: Yeah.
K: Who owns this store?
M: It's a chain. None of us who work here own it. It's owned by some guy in Baltimore.
K: Do you have to clear all financial transactions with the owner, or can you do that on your own?
M: We can do that.
K: If the students of Washington College wanted a discount, is that something you could give them?
M: Probably not. The non-students would notice if your haircuts were less.
K: And that would make them angry?
M: I guess.
K: Do you think business would increase if you offered a discount?
M: Maybe.
K: Do you ever get any Nazi skinheads in here that want their hair cut?
M: In Chestertown?
K: Maybe they'll have a convention up here or something? Would you cut their hair?
M: Yeah. It would probably be an easy haircut.
K: Are you going to be open on Halloween?
M: Yes.
K: What if a zombie came in on Halloween, and wanted its hair cut?
M: It wouldn't be my problem. I don't work on Mondays. Ω

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

Ladies and Gentlemen, we have come to swing ...
But Wynton disappoints ...

No form of music is totally devoid of value. Even in the most grating of songs or the most vacuous of lyrics, we can hear the beating of our hearts, the rhythm of our breathing, indeed, the workings of our minds.

But there is one form of music that, at least to me, encompasses all that is truly great in music: spirituality, energy, a masterful grasp of the emotions that make us human, as well as the rationality that is our gift. A sound that both embraces the history of music, as well as strives to push the boundaries set up by past masters of the note. A form that is as formless and verse as the country that gave birth to it, America. It is a sound that is empowering, noble, kind, humble, subtle ... and yet still has within it the elements of a great fascism. You hear this sound in concert halls and in night clubs, in churches and in bars. Late at night or early in the morning. That sound is called Jazz.

That's why Wynton Marsalis' offerings of late disappoint me.

Marsalis is probably one of the best known and most loved names in music. Just about everyone in the family plays something, and they all play well. From Branford's playing the Tonight Show band to the gray-haired and majestic Ellis, the patriarch piano player who started it all, literally, the Marsalis name has become synonymous with music. They are the modern day Partridge Family ... only hipper and without the bell bottoms.

And shining like a star over the Jazz world sits Wynton, the revivalist trumpet player known for his dedication to the continuation of the work begun by the old masters of Jazz: Duke Ellington, and Count Basie. He is a man who has worked tirelessly to preserve the traditions of the Jazz world, and he is loved and appreciated for that work. But apparently Wynton has decided in past years that the integrity of Jazz is under fire, and that it is his job to saturate the market with as much of his Neo-Con/Neo-Bop harmonizing as possible. He has become the Stephen King of the Jazz world, releasing, it seems, a new album each week. Now, I don't have a problem with motivation and devotion, nor do I have a problem with prolific composers. But Wynton, calm down, man, take a break. The music is suffering.

In This House, On This Morning is, as far as I've bothered to check, the latest release from Wynton (the Wynton Marsalis Septet to be precise). It is a double album with an aim toward the liturgical. The music follows a church service from the very first notes of the choir to the "Pot Blessed Dinner" after the service. Marsalis' treatment of this noble and ambitious project is astounding. Over two hours of completely original and fabulously intricate music to be digested by the waiting and appreciative listener.

And it is for this that we should admire Mr. Marsalis. To my knowledge, no one in Jazz today has attempted a project of the same scope and ambition of In This House, On This Morning. It is grandiose and majestic, a monument to the spirituality that Wynton has espoused for years. This is something akin to Classical music. It is an album to be appreciated simply for its very existence.

It is also incredibly boring. Despite the fact that Marsalis has assembled some of the very best players in modern Jazz, including Wessell Anderson, Todd Williams, Eric Reed, Reginald Veal, Herlin Riley, and the incredible Wycliffe Gordon (a BIG trombone player with some serious chops), the musicians are hampered by the oppressive spirit of the album.

This seems to me to be just another instance of Wynton's all encompassing ego at work. He has convinced himself that he is the savior of Jazz, descended from the heavens on the delicate golden notes from the trumpet of God himself. His grandiose attitude pervades every aspect of the album. It gets inside the solos and homogenizes them with the perverted specters of Duke Ellington and Preservation Hall style Jazz. What was once charming has now become cumbersome and depressing.

Please don't get me wrong. I love Wynton Marsalis. Marsalis Standard Time has got to be one of the greatest albums ever recorded in the history of Jazz. It is arguable that Wynton Marsalis is the greatest living Jazz trumpeter. But when he starts banking on that fact, I get offended. Kings should not rule for the sake of glory, and their reigns should not become oppressive. As Wynton's style evolved, his soul declined. Instead of the charming, suave, precocious young trumpet player who grew up under the loving gaze of Art Blakey, we now have a man whose own pretentiousness has overshadowed his talent.

I don't hear the old Wynton on this album, nor on his albums of late. Gone are the almost viscous attempts to swing at all costs, the homage to the great and wailing gods of Jazz replaced with shallow showboating.

In This House, On This Morning does, of course, have some high points. Wycliffe Gordon for one. His solos are as power-house as solos get, especially when allowed to shine out on tracks such as the last section of a three-part piece called "Sermon." The boy just flies, doing things with a trombone that aren't supposed to be possible. Over the summer, I had the privilege (or should I say, the joy) of hearing Gordon perform live at Wolf Trap. Even muted and without a microphone, he was loud enough to split eardrums way back in the back of the audience. His playing encompasses a range of styles, from Ellingtonian swing to hard-core muted-growl New Orleans Storyville wailing. He is the gem on this album, and perhaps its saving grace.

But I still suspect that I'm being too harsh on Wynton. There are tracks on this album that stand out. The hypnotic repetition of "Recessional" is outstanding. One hears in it a sadness and reluctance to leave the warm embrace of the church. Todd Williams' saxophone solo on this cut is, quite simply, beautiful. It is that same sort of lonely and desperate sadness that you here in Coltrane playing "Alabama." "Recessional" is followed by the initially Cool-inspired "Benediction." But, after a promising start, "Benediction" finds itself wallowing in the hooky overly-vibrated cheese that Wynton seems to be embracing in his later years. It's a hard fall for the listener to have to take. Unfortunately, it's one that we have to take often when listening to this album.

And that, I think, is essentially the problem with In This House, On This Morning. The true gems of this work are set in tin instead of gold. My problem with Wynton's barrage of albums is that NOBODY WRITES THAT MUCH GOOD MUSIC. It seems that he is trying to pack the entire musical life of a Duke Ellington or a Miles Davis into just a few years.

Also, the playing on this album is just too delicate for my tastes. With a few notable exceptions, no one really cuts loose with the vigor inherent in jazz. This could be a problem of Wynton's compositional style. His arrangements are sharp and edged, his choice of musicians impeccable. But there is no life to the thing.

I've tried really hard with this album. I've listened to it quietly in solitude at the end of a hard day. I've listened to it in the morning, to try to get the day started right. I've had long involved conversations with myself and others about what exactly it is that Wynton's trying to accomplish with this offering. But I can't help it. I just don't like it. After hearing bits of it performed live, I was practically salivating at the mouth to get a copy. What I discovered, however, is that the bits that I heard where the good bits, and that they were surrounded by an hour and a half of not-so-good. It's like seeing previews that make a movie look so good and then discovering that they already showed the best parts. This is an album that I suggest you hear, simply to appreciate the effort. But don't go out and spend the (large) amount of money necessary to own it. Go out instead and get a copy of Monk's Music by Thelonious Monk, or Blue Train by John Coltrane. Or better yet, on those kicked-back evenings when you've finished your work, or decided to just not do it, those evenings when you're hungry for some good music, why don't you just slide on a copy of Kind of Blue. Listen to some of the greatest musicians known to man: Cannonball Adderly, Paul Chambers, James Cobb, Wynton Kelly, Bill Evans, John Coltrane, and Miles Davis. It still doesn't get much better than that. Ω

Chestertown Natural Foods

"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"

101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1877

Andy's

Friday, October 28
Sam Anderson (& maybe the Rev. Blind Dog Jazzbo)
Sam hails from Key West (but plays no Buffett); just the best acoustic blues we've ever heard, along with some great swing ... see you here!
Saturday, October 29
Halloween party with Red Letter Day
Come as your favorite musician - dead or alive!
Boogie with the band - jazzy rock

Washington College Staff Profile

Lisa Travis is the Meal Plan Supervisor for W.C. Dining Services. For six years she has been the students' advocate in the dining hall, trying to ensure that students are fed the best possible meal. Her position, Travis explained, is to "cater to their (the students') needs. I work for the students. That's how I perceive my job."

Lisa Travis came a long way to be a part of the W.C. family. She moved to Chestertown from Bowling Green, Ohio. She and her husband, a taxidermist, were married in 1988 and have two children, Charlene, who is 16 years old, and Joey, who is four.

Travis treats the students of the College as if they were a part of her family. With a friendly smile and greeting many of them by name, Travis encourages those who eat in the dining hall to come to her personally and let her know what they want. One of the benefits of a small school is that it is possible for the dining hall to cater to the needs of individual students. Students with special dietary needs or who just aren't interested in that day's offerings can go into the kitchen and have other items prepared. A student can even go up to Travis and say "I'm sick. Can I have some chicken broth?" and be guaranteed that she will understand.

"We just keep doing more with less," Travis explained when asked what she wanted to change about her job. Many services in the college are strained, dealing with shrinking budgets and limited personnel. "Everyone's hurting across campus."

When asked about the pizza bar, a huge grin spread across her face. "Yes, we are getting a pizza bar. Look for it after January." The food shows are another way Travis and the rest of the dining hall staff try to understand the students' desires. Dining halls across the nation are moving towards providing brand name food for their students. "We try to keep up with trends."

The Frogs for free

Sarah Bell

The sign read, "THE FROGS – STUDENT CENTER – FREE!" When I saw this sign, I didn't take much notice to THE FROGS part; however, the FREE did catch my eye. So, my friends and I walked down to The Cove last Saturday night, unsure of what THE FROGS were all about. When we arrived, the place looked desolate. Even THE FROGS were just hanging out in a booth, filling their stomachs with greasy Cove fries.

But soon THE FROGS started to warm up, and my friends and I hurriedly grabbed a seat, fighting off the vicious crowd.

When their practice session was over, they introduced themselves and began to play some of the songs from their album. It was hard to believe that such great music came out of a band called THE FROGS. There was a definite harmony in the vocals, and the music, which was often lively and upbeat.

More and more people came into The Cove, and I was actually starting to feel claustrophobic. People were beginning to dance, and I soon felt the need to break loose on the dance floor. Their music was a little hard to dance to at first. Once everyone got the rhythm down though, it was like Saturday Night Fever on the dance floor.

Besides playing songs from their album, they played a lot of cover songs: "Me and Julio Down by the Schoolyard" and "Cecilia" were two songs that were played often. Songs by R.E.M., Tom Petty, and The Monkees were also covered. THE FROGS even had a sense of humor, making fun of such eighties songs as George Michael's "Faith" and Jon Bon Jovi.

Although I had never heard of THE FROGS, they had supposedly opened for some big bands. They told us that they had just opened for The Bare Naked Ladies about a week ago. All in all, it was a fun night and now whenever I hear of THE FROGS, I will no longer think of the cute little green things that live in ponds.Ω

Freshman Literary Colloquy

Jeff Frank

On November 20, 1994, at 3 p.m., a large group of people will be gathering at the O'Neill Literary House for the Freshman Literary Colloquy. This event, hosted by some members of the freshman class, is currently being organized by a committee around the chosen topic, the "Beat" generation.

The committee consists of official members, Eva Kapian-Leiserson, Sean McDowell, Jennifer Ward, Paulina Sierra Samano, Jeff Frank, and unofficial member Kevin Hoffman. Professor Bob Day moderates the group.

The "Beat" generation included such writers as Ginsberg, Ferlinghetti, and Kerouac. The colloquy will also have readings by people who knew "Beat" writers, such as Kurt Vonnegut, and writers influenced by the "Beat" writers, like Charles Bukowsky. The "Beat" generation of the fifties and sixties was a time of experimentation in writing, with subject matters once thought (and still thought by many) to be controversial. The committee members themselves had a small controversy, which has been settled, over the appropriateness of a student film to be shown at the Colloquy.Ω

W.C.'s Lit. mags

Jeff Frank

The Collegian, Wired, and The Finely Calibrated Vomit Vender are three literary magazines currently under construction which are due to come out this semester. Washington College gives a grant to students who produce a literary magazine to cover the costs of producing it. Mike Kaylor of the Literary House Press helps students choose the format and binding for their magazine. He also will help them create their masterpiece, whether on the press in the O'Neill Literary House, or on a deluxe Canon copier.

Wired is being created by freshmen Colleen Glass and Sean McDowell, both of whom are from the Annapolis area.

Sean has had no editing or submitting experience before this semester, but he has submitted to The Vomit Vender and Wired. About the quality of Annapolis as a literary center, Sean says, "There was no such thing as a literary magazine where I come from. There was no such thing as a literary community where I come from, except for a bunch of burned-out poets who have no idea what they're talking about."

Colleen, who was on the staff of Annapolis High School literary magazine when she was a senior, has submitted to Wired and The Vomit Vender, and plans to submit to Broadsides. Glass agrees with Sean about Annapolis' literary community.

"We were offered a creative writing class in high school, and only three people signed up, so it was canceled," said Glass.

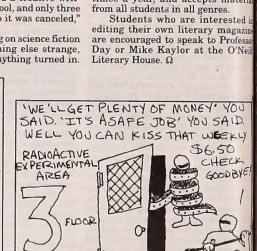
Wired is focusing on science fiction material and anything else strange, but will consider anything turned in. Among the science fiction genre, the magazine will accept: short stories, vignettes, poetry, short essays, drawings, and illustrations. A person can contribute as much as they want, though the maximum length for a single piece is 10 pages (drawings, 1 page). The deadline is November 7th, the publication date of December 1st. Submissions may be sent through campus mail, BlitzMail, Lit. House mail, or handed to in person or slipped under the doors of Sean McDowell or Colleen Glass.

Ryan Walker and Jodie Clark are the editors of The Finely Calibrated Vomit Vender. Ryan, a junior, has no editing experience but has submitted to many literary magazines over the years.

"There will probably be more than one Vomit Vender," says Ryan, which is fortunate because the deadline was last Friday.

The Vomit Vender was accepting (and will be again) just about anything in two dimensions that would gum up a copier/printer." The submissions have a maximum length of three pages. The Vomit Vender is due to come out sometime next week.

The Collegian, Washington College's official literary magazine, is always accepting work. Editor Kelly Youngblood is trying to resurrect the Collegian, which accepts poetry, prose, drawings, photography, fiction, non-fiction, and essays.



"I'd like an issue to come out in November, another in December, and two more next semester," said Youngblood.

The Collegian comes out four times a year, and accepts material from all students in all genres.

Students who are interested in editing their own literary magazine are encouraged to speak to Professor Day or Mike Kaylor at the O'Neill Literary House.Ω

HOROSCOPES

Scorpio (10/24-11/22)— The time is rushing its great river of doubt and bewilderment straight for you. Ride the white water out.
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21)— Once again you are being called upon to beat down a new path so that others may follow. Wear your hiking boots because this is one rocky mountain.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20)— Think about what that new flare is saying with their eyes … Spend this time with me Walk with me, walk with you Hold my hand your hands."
Aquarius (1/21-2/18)— "If you have a friend that's good and true, Fk him first before he Fks you." If you keep going on like this you will be found in the gutter with an empty wine bottle.
Pisces (2/19-3/20)— The cold weather has kicked in. Invite a lover to spend a warm night in your candle-lit room.
Aries (3/21-4/19)— Your outspoken personality is going to get burned in the Devil's Night fires.
Taurus (4/21-5/20)— You should know that speaking to people through their dreams is sometimes the only way to get through. Use your psychic energy and those who seem lost will travel by your side.
Gemini (5/21-6/21)— Hurry up and pull that crazy costume together. With all the parties you may get lost in the crowd if you wear all black.
Cancer (6/23-9/23)— You finally pulled yourself out of this funk you've been in. It's your turn to be the howl from beyond.
Leo (7/23-8/22)— "Rip away the tears Drink a hope to happy years And you may find A lifetime's passed you by."
Virgo (8/23-9/23)— You are stirring the cauldron of all your dreams way too fast for the mist to settle. See which direction each dream faces when they stop spinning.
Horoscopes by: Ember Luna is on Holiday on Jupiter.

Those interested in helping with the Sophomore/Freshman semi-formal

Meeting: Tuesday, November 1, 7 p.m., basement of Reid Hall

Plans need to be made for the dance, which will be held Friday, December 2 in the Student Center.

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

Spider's
(Formerly Newt's)
Hillside Bar
Special Draft Night
Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Midnight Madness
Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Must be 21 or older

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Nine

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Uproar continues over seventh English position

Rachael Fink

The furor over the redefinition of the position currently held by Professor Fessler has not ceased.

Students, alumni, administrators, faculty and even parents are currently involved in a dialogue circling around the issues surrounding the change in teaching staff and the reconfiguration of the seventh full-time English position. College President Charles Trout, Chair of the English Department Bennett Lamond, and Professor Audrey Fessler have been receiving letters and phone calls from many members of the Washington College community expressing concern for the manner in which the situation has been decided.

There continue to be meetings of the tenured English faculty, student protesters, and other concerned groups in an effort to work out the myriad of issues that have surfaced since the announcement of the redefinition of Fessler's current position.

The campus chapter of the American Association of University Professors, chaired by Dr. Emily Amt, met this week to discuss several aspects of the redefinition of the seventh English position and the methods followed by the administration.

The AAUP, of which 75% of the faculty is a member, had many reservations about the way in which Fessler's position was redefined so as to exclude her.

"The AAUP is deeply concerned about the procedures that were followed here," said Dr. Emily Amt.

Amt went on to discuss the absence of a third year review, required of all professors in a tenure-track position, that was made a stipulation for the extension of Fessler's three-year contract for a fourth year. The campus chapter of the AAUP feels that the failure to complete the third year review could indicate a problem in contract fulfillment on the part of the College.

"The AAUP is concerned that there appears to be a violation of Professor Fessler's contract," said Amt, "and we are of the opinion that she has been given insufficient notice of termination."

The tenured English faculty have also met once again to discuss the issues concerning the redefinition of the seventh full-time position in their department. According to Professor Bennett Lamond there is question about the inclusion of the phrase "two-year, non-renewable" which has been included in the advertisement for the position. The English faculty did not make any recommendations specifying a term limit to the Appointments and Tenure Committee. Lamond indicated that a two-year terminal position is highly unusual and possibly unheard of in academia. He went on to say that the advertisement is "the kind of ad that makes it look like the College is in trouble."

Another of the issues of great concern to the English faculty is the distinction being drawn between the evaluation of the position and of the professor.

"No one in this department was ever called upon to evaluate Audrey Fessler," said Lamond. He went on to say, "This has never been a personnel issue or a personal issue."

Lamond also indicated that he takes great responsibility for the failure to complete the third year review upon himself, as head of the English Department.

Nothing was decided at the English faculty meeting, it is expected that further meetings will take place concerning Audrey Fessler and the fate of the seventh full-time English position. Ω

PHOTO BY MARCIA LANDSKRONER

Long-time activist Alice McGrath

Long-time political activist visits College

McGrath lectures on "Women, Violence, and Racism"

Rachael Fink

At 77 and a half, Alice McGrath has more energy than most college students. Visiting Washington College from her native Los Angeles, California, McGrath spent several days tiring students with tales of her activism and her sheer magnetic energy.

The culmination of McGrath's visit was a lecture, sponsored by the Goldstein Program in Public Affairs, entitled "Women, Violence and Racism." Given in Hynson Lounge to a crowd of over 40 students, faculty, staff, and town residents, the lecture consisted of "my attitudes about women, violence, the press, and racism," said McGrath.

Her first question to the audience and one that was not meant to be

See "McGrath" on 3

rhetorical was, "Whatever happened to assertiveness training?"

McGrath then launched into a discussion concerning the pervasiveness of the victim mentality in the media.

"We are hearing ourselves," said McGrath, "and allowing ourselves, for the most part, to be victims."

She talked for a long time about the benefits of self-defense training, and the aspects of good self-defense training.

"Self-defense has to be practical," said McGrath, who continued, saying that it must also be personal and involve not just techniques for physical self-defense, but it must also be a means for increasing self-confidence.

She indicated that the message sent by the media concerning the frequent and violent nature of rape, that

Maintenance prepares for the winter

Beth McLaughlin

Now that the main painting projects are finished on buildings like Bill Smith, the Department of Maintenance, Buildings and Grounds is bundling up and starting to prepare for the long winter months. This actual preparation began in the summer when Maintenance completely took apart the main boiler plant, and cleaned, repaired and painted it so that it would be ready for the colder days.

Their current concerns are with the individual controls in each of the buildings. Kent House has already experienced some difficulties to which Maintenance promptly reacted. The heat controls in the Fine Arts classroom will be adjusted so that the temperatures there will not be so extreme.

"A lot of times it was absolutely stifling," reports Reid Raudenbush, the Director of the Department of Maintenance.

Another recent concern of Maintenance is the chimney connected to the boiler plant. It has been suspected that the chimney is leaning. Much to the department's relief, structural engineers reported their findings concluded that there was no need for concern; there were only a few minor repairs and mortar work that needed to be done. While the structural engineers were on campus, they inspected the Casey Swim Center. Swimming areas often suffer from structural damage due to the materials used there that condense and create a corrosive atmosphere for the metals that make up the foundations of the building. "In a nutshell, it is solid and in really excellent shape," Raudenbush assures.

Plans for November include some roof repairs to the slate roofs of Dunning and Bunting. More extensive work needs to be done on the roof of Smith. In the long-term, one of the most significant projects is to make the library more accessible to wheelchair bound persons. "It is one of the several things identified as a real need here," Reid Raudenbush says. Right now there is an existing ramp, but it is particularly steep and difficult. Maintenance plans to build a ramp from the Cater Walk to the Library terrace to the left of the existing steps (when on the terrace facing Hodson Hall). There is a beaten path through the grass and over the wall which stands there now. With this new bridge, it should make it easier and more accessible to everyone.

"We have literally a dozen projects at any one time," Raudenbush explains, but some other highlights for the fall and winter include the seasonal seeding of the grounds, inquiries into dorm room cable, and a "new experiment" in the New Dorms. In the summer, Maintenance completely redesigned a kitchenette in one of the four person suites of the New Dorms.

"The difference between the old and the new is night and day," Raudenbush reports. Due to this, three more kitchens should be worked on this fall.

Two cable options are being explored: land-based cable as opposed to See "Maintenance" on 3

Inside This Week's Elm

Historical column

The history of Normal Hall, the first W.C. women's dormitory.

p

We Don't Get You Much At All

Kevin and Jeff talk to Rep. Gilchrest, but fail, yet again, to get a discount.

p

Career Guidance on campus

The Career Development Center offers services to help students plan for their futures.

p

Popcorn & Jujubes

A review of Stargate, starring Kurt Russell, James Spader, and Jaye Davidson.

p

Strong response, negligible results

The AAUP is getting in on the game. The tenured English faculty is meeting again over the issue. Students all over campus are getting together to discuss, rant, rave, and mourn. Parents are calling. Alumni are writing letters.

So, I may have been wrong in saying there was nothing the students could do.

I still don't think so.

The general tone of the administration and faculty responses to the student outcry over the imminent departure of Audrey Fessler will have to change drastically before I decide I was, in fact, wrong.

There still seems to be a general consensus among the faculty and administration that nothing can be done to save Audrey's job (and with Audrey goes Jeff). The English faculty is discussing the post. The AAUP is discussing contract violations. Seems only the students are concerned with the person behind the position.

Now I don't mean to assume that all faculty and administration members aren't very upset about the leaving of one of this institution's best professors, and I don't mean to say that many of them will do and are doing all that they can do to keep her here. What I do mean is that the people who are most able to do something about the problem are not. They are concentrating on issues surrounding the re-classification of the seventh full-time English position.

I do have to give credit where credit is due: Bennett Lamond is being both very honest with the student body, and very concerned with the student reaction and with losing one of the best professors in his department. Emilie Amt is also very active on Audrey's part, not just as chair of the campus chapter of the AAUP, but as a friend and colleague as well.

This aside, those in power, in a position to do something about this, are not doing anything about it.

At the same time that the faculty and administration is so concerned about the issues, the students are ignoring them. I do think that getting rid of Audrey will only harm this institution, but at the same time I can understand some of the reasons behind the decision to re-define her position.

For starters, there is currently a shift from English to the sciences in terms of general enrollment patterns. This does not mean that the English department does not need the seventh full time slot. Rather, it simply means that the past several freshman classes have been full of students interested in biology.

Secondly, there seems to be an imbalance in the English department between the number of American Literature professors and the number of those offering British Literature courses. Despite this, the College did not renew the contract of an American Literature professor last year. In addition to this, there are a few professors in the English department that, in my opinion and in the opinion of more than a handful of my classmates, do not seem to be teaching as many courses as they should or could.

A third reason to reconfigure the position currently held by Audrey is monetary. Chances are, if Audrey were kept here much longer, she and others would be expecting her position become tenure-track, and that, my friends, is expensive. By defining the position as a non-tenurial position, the College will not have to worry about the added expense of a tenured professors salary.

All of these reasons add up to a pretty convincing argument for the redefinition of the seventh full-time position in the English department. They do not, however, add up to a sufficient reason to let professors like Audrey Fessler slip through the cracks and away from Washington College.

Now that I think of it, Audrey will have to be offered a position here at Washington College before I decide if I was wrong.

Up to this point, I have been right about the fact that student outcry does only two things, makes us feel alternately powerful and powerless, and sends a warm, fuzzy messiage to those we are fighting for. We bitch and moan, write and talk, network, sign petitions and sit outside of meeting room, but there is very little that we can constructively do. Despite this, we won't give up.

I haven't given up yet. I can't bring myself to give up this early in the game. I am about to complete my fourth year here at Washington College; I am about to graduate with a B.A. from this institution; I cannot abandon it yet. At the same time, I am about to complete my fourth year here at Washington College; I am about to graduate with a B.A. from this institution; I'm outta here!

i'm not the hang around kind i got a fugitive mind can't wrap me up in no chains been nice to know you is my middle name i'm insatiable as a shark been known to prowl in the dark but i've been changing my ways you make it easy for me to stay i'm too long running i've been too long running too long running i just hope i'm not too far gone i live by a code of my own sometimes i bitch and i moan i've got a right to complain the world gets crazy when you're insane i can turn my back on your shot you don't know how lucky you got that i've been changing my ways a year ago i'd have blown you away

"Too Long Running," Kristen Hall

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor Mindie J. Kaplan
Arts & Entertainment Editor Carolyn Fuss
Sports Co-Editors Peggy Busker and Nicole Zemanski

Circulation Manager Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager Richard McKee, Jr.
Office Manager Leticia Lyford-Pike
Photo Editor Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence: can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BitzMail. No-worthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

Alumna angered over Fessler issue

I am a 1994 graduate of Washington College with a B.A. in English and am currently in the middle of my teaching internship with the EdBlock program. I have been off campus for the last few weeks because of my placement at Kent County High School, but this weekend I was back on campus and some very upsetting and discouraging news came to my attention. I was told that the college has decided to not continue the employment of Audrey Fessler. This is news that I could not allow to pas my way without voicing my protest.

Professor Fessler was my Senior Comprehensive Advisor and I can truly say that she is the main reason I received Honors on my exam. Professor Fessler is an amazing teacher, mentor, and person, and I have to protest the college's decision to dismiss such an asset as Professor Fessler. She is known by students of all disciplines as one of the best professors on campus. Her extreme knowledge and pleasant demeanor are valued by the students and we will not let her go without protest.

One has to question the logic of the decision to rid the campus of one of its most talented and beloved teachers especially during these times of tumultuous campus politics. Audrey Fessler's solid reputation as a superlative teacher and caring individual precede her. She is a cornerstone in the English department, and her dismissal will rock the already shaky atmosphere of our campus. How can we consider losing a teacher who is responsible for inspiring so many students and exposing so many to what our campus proclaims to be its priority: a Liberal Arts Education? This is especially true now that the Gender Studies Program has been implemented. Professor Fessler is one of the few professors with a background in this area and was instrumental in the creation of such a program.

Audrey Fessler inspired me to explore literature in a way that no other teacher has ever done before. Her pure enthusiasm is an example to the entire campus. Now that it looks as though the campus will lose one of its best and brightest, I must demand that the decision to let Professor Fessler go be reconsidered. She is a teacher who is definitely worth a second consideration. Our campus cannot afford to let those who make it a great institution leave. Audrey Fessler's departure signifies to me a lack in commitment to excellence that this institution cannot afford to make. I plead to the administration to please reconsider their decision for the integrity and quality education of future Washington College students.

-Christine B. Smith

More student reaction to change in English Department

I am writing to express my anger that Professor Audrey Fessler is being dismissed from the faculty of this institution. I am fully aware of the reasoning behind this dismissal, and I still strongly disagree with the actions taken by the tenure committee and others.

When I arrived at Washington College in the fall of 1992, I was warmly greeted by Dr. Fessler. She was my advisor for my first two years, and not only was she responsible for a great part of my academic success (I have made Dean's list for the past two years), she encouraged me and was the deciding factor in my decision to apply for (and receive) editorship of the Pegasus. Her support during my first two years goes beyond the bounds of normal advisership. Without her guidance, I do not feel that I would be the confident and strong leader at the college that I am today.

Professor Fessler's guidance through my first two years is a large part of why I feel she should not be dismissed from the faculty of Washington College, but her teaching is an even greater reason. I have had Professor Fessler for two semesters, and to say that her teaching is dynamic, insightful, and brilliant is an understatement. She makes the subject matter of her courses highly interesting for her students, encourages students to engage in deep thought about the material in the course and, perhaps the most important, encourages students to share such thoughts in class. Her friendly demeanor and powerful teaching style combine to create a class that is enjoyable, interesting, and productive. I feel that the loss of such a young professor who could—and

See "letters" on 3

This Week on Campus

Nov. 4 - 10

Film Series
White
Norman James Theatre, Fri., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 4
KA Social, Middle Hall
Student Center video, Silence of the Lambs

Saturday 5
Alpha Chi Omega Casino Night, Hynson Lounge

Sunday 6
Gender Studies Reading Group, Study Lounge, noon

Monday 7
Attila the Hun Seminar Bunting Hall Conference Room, 7 p.m.

Tuesday 8
Genocide in Rwanda: an Ethnological Background
Robert Gray Hynson, 7:30 p.m.

Wednesday 9
Advising day, no classes

Thursday 10
How dare you assume: the life of a lesbian activist
Madeline Davis Hynson, 8 p.m.

Thinking through ...

The propositioning of California

by Paul Briggs

Mid-term elections are next week and, quixotic as it may seem, I will devote this column to a vote taking place at the far end of the country, in California. A proposition is on the ballot, simply labeled "Proposition 187" (although it has another name, which I'll get to later), which seems likely to pass. If passed and enforced, it will achieve no worthy end, do needless harm and most likely be ruled unconstitutional.

This proposition would outlaw the use of hospitals by illegal immigrants, except for emergency aid, and would exclude their children from public schools. It would require doctors, nurses and teachers to report suspected illegals to the Immigration and Naturalization Service. This ill-advised scheme, touted by Governor Pete Wilson and other leading state Republicans, was born amid panic over the specter of illegal immigrants wasting taxpayer dollars by taking advantage of California's social services. The very phrase "illegal immigrants" suggests people sneaking across the border for some nefarious purpose, such as stealing jobs from American citizens.

Actually, of course, most of them just come over to do the sort of work that very few Americans are financially desperate enough to do, and are often paid less than the legal minimum wage. As for their alleged abuse of social services, that is a myth. In Joel Garreau's book The Nine Nations of North America there is a chapter on "MexAmerica," that vast region of the southwestern United States and northern Mexico, which includes a much more intelligent analysis of the undocumentados (as they are sometimes called) than one is likely to hear in the current political climate -

"The fact is that illegals do pay both payroll and sales taxes, and, despite the stereotypes, make relatively few demands on services. Because of their fear of deportation, they shun all contact with government agencies. They most especially do not trot down to the welfare office. They often are afraid to go to the hospital ... This discourages the immigration of whole families. The wife and kids tend to stay in Mexico and rely on Mexican social services, such as they are. It's the breadwinner who faces the dangers of La Migra, as the Immigration Service is known. It serves as a filter to allow through only those most likely to be productive members of society." (p. 239)

The Nine Nations of North America was, of course, published in 1981. What about today? Here is a quote from the October 31 issue of Time -

"A recent study of census data showed that 16.9% of Latino immigrants in Los Angeles county received public assistance in 1990, compared with 41.7% of the non-Latino white population and 64.4% of blacks." (p.39)

The figure for Latino immigrants includes, of course, both the legal and illegal varieties. Nonetheless, it seems clear that cracking down on undocumentado use of public services will achieve no savings worth mentioning.

What it will achieve is to give illegal immigrants good reason to be afraid of the nation's hospitals, and to take a relative handful of children out of the classrooms and place them on the streets.* This is assuming that no legal immigrants fall victim to the law, which they almost certainly will. How will the education and health care workers being asked to report their suspicions know who is here legally and who isn't? It has historically been the case that every time a state or the federal government cracks down on illegal immigration from Mexico, legal immigrants have also fallen under a cloud of suspicion, as well as naturalized citizens and native-born Americans of Mexican descent whose ancestors may even have been here since before the United States acquired the region in 1848.

This is why Jack Kemp and William Bennett, both conservative Republicans of unimpeachable credentials, have come out so strongly against Proposition 187. Both have stated publicly that the proposition is, in their view, not only unconstitutional but a direct appeal to nativism and racism. Bennett was quoted in Time as saying that "It is going to label all immigrants, it is going to turn into a war of colors, a war of races - it is poison in a democracy."

There have been occasions in the past where Americans have, in response to some imagined threat, cracked down on "foreigners" and "foreign ideas." One of these was during World War One, when anti-German hysteria had reached the point where hamburgers, frankfurters, sauerkraut and German measles were being renamed "liberty steaks", "liberty sausage", "liberty cabbage" and - I'm not making this up - "liberty measles." Another one was, of course, the internment of over a hundred thousand Japanese-Americans during World War Two. A third, more ominously, was the mass deportations of Mexican-Americans during the Great Depression, allegedly in an effort to stop "immigrants" from taking American jobs.

These "crackdowns" are remembered now with great shame. If they served any purpose, it was as a warning to future generations (i.e., us.) We would do well now to remember that warning.

* At least until the law is found unconstitutional by the courts, as a similar Texas law was in 1982. Ω

Storyteller to visit campus

Thanks to the legacy of Sophie Kerr, Washington College students are treated to visits by some of the world's finest contemporary writers. This fall's shining star is Mavis Gallant, a Canadian writer of short stories who contributes frequently to The New Yorker magazine.

Gallant, author of over 100 stories in The New Yorker and 11 books will be reading from her work on Friday, November 18. The reading begins at 4 p.m. in Norman James Theater of the Gibson Performing Arts Center, and is open to the public.

Gallant has been writing about displaced personal leading lonely lives for more than 40 years. All her characters are specifically rooted in a time and place - Gallant's native Canada, Germany, and her adopted France.

Critics consider Gallant a master of contemporary prose. With irony and an unfailing eye for telling detail, she weaves stories of such intricate simplicity and spare complexity. According to Publishers Weekly's review of her latest book, "Mavis Gallant's finely honed prose captures the small details that illuminate a life. This collection will add to her deserved reputation as a superb practitioner of her craft." Ω

"Maintenance" from 1

the option of the college owning its own satellite system.

"No decision has been made on cable yet," Raudenbush says cautiously. The result of this decision will take time, and more ideas are being explored.

For those that complain that Maintenance does not respond promptly to situations, Raudenbush asks that instead of allowing that frustration to build, simply call. They are more than happy to hear your concerns and do whatever they can, as promptly as they can, to help you.

"Our mission is to respond as much as possible in a timely way," said Raudenbush. Contact them further about anything, but be sure to report any temperature or heat problem you may be having in your building.

Raudenbush adds, "I would rather have a few students be a little warm than one student complaining of the cold." Ω

"McGrath" from 1

women simply cannot deal with sexual assault of any kind, was not only grossly misleading, but unfair to women. McGrath posed a second question to the audience, this one rhetorical, "Are you going to allow someone to tell you that you can't cope with it?"

"The constant reinforcement of women as victims ... has diverted attention from other issues more important."

Expanding on the issue of violence against women, McGrath indicated that there should be no separation between the issues surrounding violence against women and violence in society.

"I disagree with those who define violence against women as separate from violence in general," said McGrath.

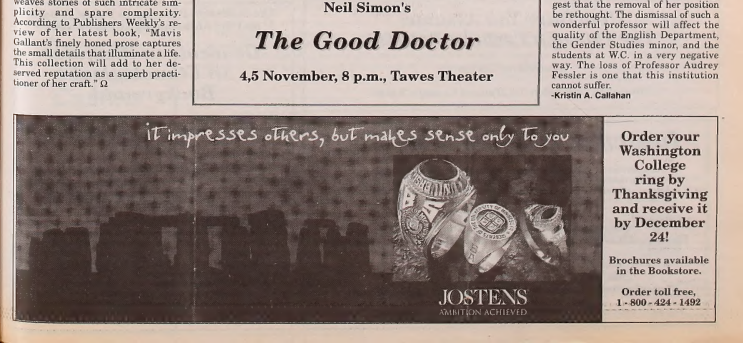
On the issue of racism as it relates to women and violence, McGrath commented, "The women who most need the things that we as women need - are black and Latino women." Ω

"letters" from 2

dents is a loss that the college cannot suffer.

Professor Fessler's academic success with students is yet another attribute in her favor. Her senior comps group from last year had the highest rate of honors in the English department. Her students and advisees are continually on the Dean's List. Many students, including myself, will say that Audrey Fessler is a driving force behind their academic success.

My personal contacts with Professor Fessler are innumerable. She has supported me in academic endeavors, extra-curricular activities, and personal problems. She has been an advisor, a professor, and a friend to me. But I think the greatest statement that I can make about Audrey Fessler is that she has become my mentor. If I could be half the teacher, friend, and wonderful person that she is, my aspirations would be complete. The loss of her presence at this institution would not only be a personal loss to myself, but to many other students.



In conclusion, I would like to suggest that the removal of her position be rethought. The dismissal of such a wonderful professor will affect the quality of the English Department, the Gender Studies minor, and the students at W.C. in a very negative way. The loss of Professor Audrey Fessler is one that this institution cannot suffer.

-Kristin A. Callahan

Neil Simon's

The Good Doctor

4,5 November, 8 p.m., Tawes Theater

Order your Washington College ring by Thanksgiving and receive it by December 24!

Brochures available in the Bookstore.

Order toll free, 1-800-424-1492

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

Several momentous issues are staring the Student Government Association in the face, and the November 1 Senate meeting was largely devoted to preparing for dealing with them.

Despite the fact that barely enough Senators attended the meeting to hold it in the first place, the major issues, such as the future of Professor Audrey Fessler at W.C., were debated. A letter destined for the President's office has been drafted by the SGA executives, who convened with the Senators Thursday in order to amend the letter and draft a resolution to approve it. SGA President Jamie Baker encouraged the Senators to discuss the situation with English majors and faculty members in the English Department, "in order to have the most educated position we can."

The SGA is drawing slowly toward a solution to the problem of conflicting social events. Student Life Chair Rob Moran had drafted an amendment stating that the Student Life Chair holds the authority to decide whether or not other social events could be held coinciding with SGA-sponsored events. This, according to Moran, is a move designed basically "to protect SGA money." At the suggestion of several Senators and Executives, the proposition was altered to state that the Social Committee should make the decision. The amendment currently stands as such, but it was suggested by Senator Max Walton that the decisions involving each event be placed before the Senate. Baker asked Walton to draft his own proposal as to how the issue should be handled, and a final resolution should be reached in the next Senate meeting, which will be held Tuesday, November 15.

The Presidential Search Committee, with sole student member Jamie Baker, met Monday. At the meeting, the President of the Committee, Robert Duemling, reinforced that, in the words of Baker, "none of [the Committee members'] roles is that of a delegate or a representative." Baker insists that, contrary to what that statement may seem to portend, the Committee is receptive to student input, and plans to hold an open forum for discussion with all students welcome. Baker, upon a suggestion by Walton, will attempt to have Duemling attend a Senate meeting for a forum similar to the meeting with Dr. Trout last week.

Three more positions on Faculty Committees (which oversee various aspects of campus life) had become available by Tuesday's meeting: one on the Athletics Committee, one on the Library Committee, and one on the Lecture Committee. All three were filled by Senators at the meeting.

In regular weekly business, two more funding resolutions were passed: funding in the amount of $200 was appropriated to the Spanish Honor Society and the funding for the Sailing Club was finally allocated. Because only $700 was recommended (compared to the nearly $2000 requested), a stipulation was provided which allows the club to return to the SGA for additional funds should they become necessary.

The Sophomore class was able to arrange for a repeat performance by The Frogs. They will be performing at the Sophomore / Freshman semi-formal on Friday, December 2.

The Freshman class fund-raiser will take place this week. Chances will be sold (for $1 each) for a 19" color television. The drawing will take place next Friday, November 11.

At the end of Tuesday's meeting, to a room full of empty seats, Baker took the time to thank the Senators who consistently attend the meetings and get involved with committees, stating, "you are fulfilling your role as representatives," and encouraged "active participation in representing your constituents." Ω

SGA statement regarding Professor Fessler:

(a) Whereas we, the members of the Student Government Association of Washington College, believe that Professor Audrey Fessler has distinguished herself as an excellent teacher, within and outside of the classroom, and
(b) believe that this excellence has shown itself in her ability to motivate students to perform, thereby increasing the quality of the education we receive, and
(c) fail to comprehend how the loss of such as asset would improve the quality of our valued education, and
(d) believe that her involvement and personal interaction with students make her a valued and proven member of our community, and
(e) believe that the student voices that have supported Professor Fessler have not been given due attention and consideration,
Therefore, be it resolved that we, the members of the Student Government Association of Washington College, recommend to the President that Professor Audrey Fessler be offered the opportunity to continue her dedicated service to Washington College.

Space expert to lecture on campus

Ever wonder what the Space Shuttle Columbia does on its mission? Dr. William H. Waller, a senior scientist with Hughes STX Corporation working out of the NASA Goddard Space Flight Center, will visit Washington College to talk about one particular aspect of space exploration taking place - ultraviolet astronomy.

His lecture, "Ultraviolet Astronomy from Spacelab: The Astro Missions," begins at 7:30 p.m. in the Dunning Lecture Hall, on Wednesday, November 16. Waller's visit to Washington College is sponsored by the American Astronomical Society.

Beyond the blue, beyond the violet, and into the ultraviolet part of the electromagnetic spectrum, the radiant universe appears strangely altered, Dr. Waller explains. At these shorter wavelengths and higher photon energies, the hottest stars shine brightly, while the cooler, more common stars like Earth's sun virtually disappear from view. Clusters and associations of young stars are dominated by a few massive ultraviolet-bright stars, while ancient globular clusters are reduced to their hottest, most rapidly evolving members. Spiral galaxies that look like graceful pinwheels in visible-light images are transformed into knotty webs - each knot containing thousands of nascent hot stars. And the space between the stars, clusters, and galaxies appears profoundly black - up to 100 times darker than the nighttime sky as seen at visible wavelengths.

Until the last decade, Waller says, the view of the ultraviolet universe from Earth was impeded by the stratospheric ozone layer that protects the planet from the sun's harmful UV radiation. Subsequent balloon-sounding rocket and satellite flights have yielded fascinating glimpses of the ultraviolet universe.

In 1990, the Space Shuttle Columbia flew the Spacelab / Astro-1 mission. Astro is the first and only true astronomical observatory to operate on board the Space Shuttle. It contains three ultraviolet telescopes that together obtained UV images and spectra of hundreds of astronomical objects. In his presentation, Dr. Waller will describe the challenge of doing ultraviolet astronomy, the experience of making telescopic observations from the Space Shuttle, the scientific results arising from the Astro-1 mission, and the prospects for the Astro-2 mission which is scheduled to fly aboard the Space Shuttle Endeavor in February-March 1995.

Waller is a senior scientist with Hughes STX Corporation and also president of his own small research and education company - Starstuff Incorporated. He currently spends most of his time with the Ultraviolet Imaging Telescope science team at Goddard Space Flight Center, analyzing astronomical images obtained during the 1990 Spacelab / Astro-1 mission and preparing for the re-flight of UIT as part of the Astro-2 mission. His other research activities include utilizing the refurbished Hubble Space Telescope to image starburst regions in the nearby pinwheel galaxy (Messier 33), using the Goddard Fabry-Perot Imager and various telescopes to image starburst nebulae in other nearby galaxies, and working with reprocessed data from the Infrared Astronomy Satellite to make and analyze detailed mosaics of the far-infrared Milky Way. Ω

International Dinner

sponsored by
The International Relations Club

Sunday, November 6, at 7 pm.

All are welcome to come along to participate in foreign cultures.
Anyone who would like to cook a dish for the dinner, please contact Angela at x. 8758.

How Dare You Assume: The Life of a Lesbian Activist

Madeline Davis

Thursday, November 10, Hynson Lounge, 8 p.m.

Internship Opportunities

Department of Political Science and International Studies
Internship coordinators will be on campus on the following dates. All presentations will be in the Sophie Kerr Room, Miller Library from 4 - 4:45 p.m.

Thursday, November 10
Ms. Jennifer Woody, Intern Coordinator
Bureau of East Asian & Pacific Affairs, Department of State

Tuesday, November 15
Ms. Mary Baldwin, Intern Coordinator
Organization of American Studies, Department of State

For more information contact Dr. Shad (x. 7779) or Dr. Premo (x. 7769)

The Goldstein Program in Public Affairs and the Anthropology Club present

Genocide in Rwanda: An Ethnological Background

Robert Gray, Professor Emeritus, Department of Anthropology, Tulane University

Tuesday, November 8, Hynson Lounge, 7: 30 p.m.

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

crud

creative ranting under dress. by Bob Brown

Throughout my two-plus years as a student at Washington College, there has been a teacher who consistently and effortlessly displayed all of those qualities which I have come to expect and cherish in an educator. That teacher is Professor Audrey Fessler.

On Advising Day, when I go to see Professor Lamond for my advising appointment, and he says to me, "Well, Mister Brown, for whom shall I sign you up?" I am assured, the first name to roll off my lips will be, "Professor Fessler." Not because she is the most caring professor on this campus, not because she attempts to involve herself in every conceivable aspect of campus life at Washington College, not even because she is my dear friend and mentor. But because when I sit in her classroom, and I listen to her lectures, and I read those works which she has assigned, I learn. I learn to better express my views and observations in regards to the texts, I learn better ways to analyze and root out important themes and symbolism in the texts, and through drafting papers, I learn to assert these views and support them through material found in the texts.

Audrey Fessler transformed me, a newspaper writer in high school, who was very much attuned to the manner in which a journalist writes, into a student who can compose clear, coherent, and solidly argued papers which receive good grades. And I carried back into the journalistic style which I used so often in my high school days, but those reversions are becoming fewer and fewer since I began working with Professor Fessler my freshman year in her English Literature survey class.

All which I accomplish in my time here as an English major I will easily and wholeheartedly attribute, in some small or great degree, to the time, effort, and patience spent on my education by Professor Fessler. She, like no other, has guided me to the position which I now occupy as a student. I am confident in my ability to continue to grow as an individual and a scholar, so long as Professor Fessler is here to lead me down the path of scholastic exploration and personal achievement. Without her, I fear for my own future, as well as that of the English department, my peers, and my College. Ω

Net Surfing

by Mindie Kaplan

The Computing Center • Macintosh PC • The Internet System • Unix Dungeon • MUD • IP Address NewsWatcher Turbogopher Telnet FTP Archie alt.barney • Pacer Forum BlitzMail • LegendMud • Broadcast

Coming soon to a file server near you is the new program Mosaic Netscape. Netscape is a revised, flashier version of Mosaic that's even easier to use than the original. They both have exciting graphics and sound capabilities, as well as an easy "just click on the blue or purple phrase" menu driven format. Mosaic Netscape, however, also adds a toolbar that makes it even easier to page back and forth through the servers, find items containing specific keywords, jump to a specific "home page," or print.

The "Welcome to Netscape home page" is the first thing that appears on your screen. Each location you "visit" through Netscape has the option of providing a unique home page that contains information found in that site. Remember, each blue and purple phrase contains a command to connect to another computer somewhere in the world. Every computer on the Internet adds a little more information to the collective "net."

More information can be found on the Internet every day, which is why Netscape provides a "what's new" section of its home page. Just scroll down the page until you come to the heading "Exploring the Internet." The second purple-colored selection is the one to select if you want to find out what new things are to be discovered. Click once on the phrase and you will be presented with a menu containing all the updates provided by Netscape since June of 1993! One of this month's updates is the announcement of a site (DansWORLD Skateboarding) dedicated solely to the art of skateboarding! You can visit it simply by clicking on the highlighted name "DansWORLD Skateboarding."). Also featured this month is a site that contains seven megabytes of maps, documents, and news about the crisis in Rwanda, a couple of sites about astronomy, and the Enrico "Vangelis Home Page" which is devoted to the famous synthesizer guru Vangelis. That particular site also contains a section for the movie Bladerunner which is the most discussed movie on the internet, according to the Netscape info on the site. Don't forget to check out all the free software for IBM as well as Mac users or the many new biology servers. Mosaic Netscape is a wonderful program in addition to providing recreation (like the "Nintendo GameBoy Page") for bored college students.

Return to the original Welcome to Netscape home page by simply selecting the "Home" icon (it has a little house on it) from the toolbar. If you want a directed search of the Internet, you can select a list of Internet directories by clicking on the purple subject "Internet Directory." Each of these directories contains dozens of useful and interesting topics.

Would you like to find the Email address of your long lost best friend? If he / she is on the Internet, you can find them simply by selecting "Internet White Pages," "Netfind," and entering his or her last name. This won't always work, but it's a good place to start looking.

Find out more about the Internet by selecting "About the Internet" from the Welcome to Netscape home page. This is where you go for finding out what the Internet is, who owns it, and who pays for it. It also provides instructions on reading newsgroups, using Gopher, anonymous ftp, and using WAIS.

"Internet Search" (also on the original Welcome to Netscape home page) lets you search various other Netscape home pages for information both by title and content. It also contains various "search engines" to help you find your heart's desire.

Mosaic Netscape for the Macintosh requires System 7. It will not run on a Mac Plus, SE, Classic, or Powerbook 100. It will, however, run on an SE/30, Classic II, other Powerbooks, and any Mac II-series machine. It will also run on Power Macintoshes. It does not require a color monitor, but at least 256 colors are recommended.This program is not yet available on the Info and Updates server. If you can't wait to try it, come to the Computing Center for a copy or use it from one of the Computing Center machines. You'll love how a few simple commands will bring the whole world to your fingertips! Ω

Reid Hall: What's so Normal about it?

Dawn R. Simms

In 1891, under the advisement of Dr. Reid, women were allowed to pursue an education at Washington College. During this time many institutions were not permitting women to attend. For this reason many problems arose concerning the college's new policy. The biggest challenge was finding suitable accommodations for the new female students. Though Dr. Reid described the admittance of females as, "improving the moral tone of the College," others preferred the women as far away from the men as possible. For this reason Normal Hall (a.k.a. Reid Hall) was put into planning.

In 1895, Dr. Reid used his considerable political weight and intimidation (he threatened to shoot kneecaps off) to create a facility for women. The board supervising the venture agreed that $3,000 was a sufficient amount of money to include everything that a building would require except plumbing (they figured the bushes would suffice). Maryland's General Assembly, feeling sorry for the women's predicament, approved an appropriation bill of $5,000 to be used for the erection of Washington College's dormitory for women.

After selecting and purchasing the correct site for the dormitory, a committee was chosen to oversee all matters concerning the construction of the building. Plans concluded that the new structure would be 60 feet by 40 feet, just enough space to house 30 female boarders (obviously these men were oblivious to how much crap women pack for just one weekend let alone an entire semester).

Finally on April 24, 1897, Normal Hall was officially opened. The dormitory had three floors and a basement equipped with a tiny kitchen and pantry. The first floor contained rooms for the teachers as well as a parlor. The second and third floors were crammed with the female students. The building was also heated, supplied with hot water, and except for the bedding, the rooms were completely furnished.

While it has been over 100 years since Washington College went coed and established proper facilities for women boarders, it seems in many ways Reid Hall has never changed. And sadly enough Reid Hall is still considered one of the nicest dorms on campus. Being a third year veteran of the establishment I am pleased to say that residents no longer have to run outside to the Chemistry behind some twisted little bush. Instead the crammed parking lot provides all the protection one needs...but ah that's another story. Ω

Alpha Chi Omega's annual Casino Night

Saturday, November 5, 9 p.m. - midnight Hynson Lounge

to benefit Women of Domestic Violence

The Dale Adams Heritage Exchange and Campus Christian Fellowship are sponsoring a night of Gospel, December 3, 1994 in the Tawes Theatre from 7 to 10 p.m. There will be many different singers, groups, and churches involved. All are welcome to attend. Please come and help us become one by growing in the Lord! A cash donation and / or non-perishable items will be accepted at the door. We would love to have you attend. Contact Tanae Coates for more information.

BROADSIDES is still accepting submissions of poems, prose poems, and short stories (up to one page in length) for publication.

Submissions should be sent by campus mail, Lit. House mail, BlitzMail, or any other mail to Katie Degentesh. Up to two submissions by any one author may be published in the same semester.

SUBMIT NOW.

BAY TO BAY TRADERS

207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442

Off Street Parking Next To The Store
Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm

Ray-Ban • Marlin • Patagonia • Columbia Sportswear Company • JANSPORT • REEF • ORIGINAL UGG • Old Towne Canoes & Kayaks

10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS

WITH STUDENT I.D.

Barrecrafters Car Racks

All right, we've been getting a lot of complaints around campus recently. Everyone thinks that we're washed up, that we've lost our touch. You think we're not dedicated to discounts? Well we're not giving up. This time around we went straight to the top, baby! We called the big man himself, Bill Clinton! Here's how the conversation went:

Operator: White House.

Jeff: Can you connect me with Katherine Super?

O: Just a moment.

J: Okay. Thank you.

O: Do you know what office she's in sir?

J: I'm not sure.

O: Sir, I don't have any forwarding numbers for her. She was here during the Reagan administration.

J: Do you have anyone we can talk to about tax breaks for college students?

O: Tax breaks for … are you a college student?

J: Yes.

O: Well sir, I would imagine you would have to call the income tax people, but there aren't any here. Did someone tell you to ask for her?

J: Uh, yeah.

O: There's no official tax office here. I don't know how I could help you.

J: There's no one there we can talk to about discounts?

O: There's an aide you can speak with.

J: Okay, that's fine.

O: Just a moment.

J: Want to talk to an aide?

Kevin: Yeah, sure.

Recording: Thank you for calling the White House comments office. We appreciate your call. At any time during the survey, you may press "0" to be connected to a White House comments operator.

Operator #2: Good morning, White House comment line, how may I help you?

K: I asked the woman to be connected to the President, and she put me on this survey thing.

O2: There's no way you can be connected to the President, sir.

K: Can I speak with Hillary?

O2: No.

K: How about Al Gore?

O2: No one here can connect you with any of those people, we're just here to take comments.

K: Can I give you a comment, and then would you pass it on to them?

O2: That's what we're here for.

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin Hoffman and Jeff Frank tackle politics to get tax breaks for W.C. students.

K: I wanted to talk to them about getting tax breaks for college students. We pay so much tuition and everything already, so we should get tax breaks for maybe 10 years or 20 years after we get out of college.

O2: I think you should talk to someone in the President's office, the president of the school that you're attending.

K: He can't control the taxes for the United States, he just controls the college.

O2: Well, what you're interested in is some sort of tax breaks for College students?

K: Yeah, like a discount.

O2: I understand that. I think that your best bet is to go into the office of the President of your college. They surely have that information.

K: Okay. There's no way I can speak to the President of the United States?

O2: There's no way at all.

K: I can't speak to Chelsea?

O2: No.

K: None of them?

O2: No.

K: Where is Bill Clinton right now, anyway?

O2: Right now, he's home, I think. But he's traveling around this week.

K: Have you met the President?

O2: Yes.

K: Have you shaken his hand?

O2: Yes.

K: What do you think of him?

O2: Very nice young man.

K: So you get to hang out with him?

O2: He's married and he has a child, and I can't tell you a thing about his personal life.

K: Okay, thanks for the advice.

So we decided to go to some local representatives to Congress and see if they could get in touch with Bill Clinton for us, and maybe help get us some tax discounts. First we needed to get some help in understanding politics:

K: This is our dorm senator, Corey Stottlemyer. We tried to get Joseph to come along, but he has a term paper to write, so the next logical person to go to was our senator. How do you feel about this escapade?

C: Well, I have my computer program to write, actually.

K: Are you saying that you're not going to be accompanying us?

C: That is correct.

K: But we're the people who elected you. How do you feel about turning your back on all your constituents? Would you like to apologize to the students of Caroline dorm, and really all the students of Washington College, for not helping to get discounts?

C: No.

K: You're not apologizing?

C: No.

K: So you would rather they pay full price?

C: I'm in favor of wide base tax cuts, for all people in America, because I believe that will stimulate the economy overall.

K: Which comes first: computer programming, or discounts?

C: Computer programming, 'cause that's due tomorrow.

We had to do some investigative reporting ourselves. We found the Republican Party Headquarters in the basement of some acupuncture therapist. No one would answer the door though, so we wandered around some more until we found Wayne Gilchrest's headquarters. He's the Republican candidate for the 1st Congressional district to the United States House of Representatives. If anyone could get a discount for us, it would have to be Wayne. We found out the Republicans were having a fund-raising meeting at Buzz's Restaurant, so we crashed it and managed to get an interview (but no breakfast):

K: How did you get into politics? I understand that you used to be a teacher.

Gilchrest: There's a bit of a long story, but I'll give you the short version. I was a teacher, a registered Independent, and I thought it would be neat to enter a primary, to run for Congress as a political science experiment, so I could teach better in my high school civics class. I got into it mostly because of curiosity, and ended up winning the election.

K: So what do you think of Rush Limbaugh?

G: Rush Limbaugh is not a member of Congress. He is not a member of the government. Rush Limbaugh is probably a very nice man. I view him as an entertainer. I sometimes argue with my father about Rush Limbaugh, and I never win the argument, so I finally said that the only difference between Rush Limbaugh and David Letterman is that David Letterman is smarter and funnier.

K: Oliver North is running for Senate down in Virginia now. Would you have traded guns for hostages?

G: Oliver North is a different story. I have not followed his political campaign. I would have done what I could for the hostages, but I would not have traded arms. If I was in Oliver North's position, I would have handled it differently.

K: On being a college teacher versus being a politician, do you find that you meet with the same kind of people?

G: People are people, I don't care if it's Bill Clinton, or the superintendent of Kent County Public Schools. No matter where you go, you have to deal with people, not as the president, but as a person; not as a Congressman, but as a person; not as a school teacher, but as a person.

K: What's your position on discounts for college students? Tax breaks, maybe?

G: Discounts? Like at a grocery store?

K: Yeah.

G: I think I would leave discounts up to the individual grocer. I don't think we should get into legislating discounts for college students.

K: How about tax breaks?

G: Tax breaks? You could have IRA's for education so you wouldn't have to pay taxes on the money saved for college. You could withdraw that money without paying a penalty on it. That's a great idea. Ω

Career Center opportunities

Cheryl L. Bull

Now that the fall semester is well under way, you may be assessing what you have accomplished as a student so far and planning for the future. Maybe you are wondering what to major in or you'd like to get an internship or other work experience, or perhaps you'd like to study abroad. The Career Development Center can help in answering these, and many more, questions.

You might ask yourself, "How can I work or go to school in another country and/or how can I earn academic credit for an internship?" These questions and many more can be answered at the Career Development Center. The Career Development Center offers a wide range of services: preparing a resume for a possible job placement; finding organizations and companies that do the sort of work you are interested in; choosing a country to spend a year, semester or even just a summer in; finding an internship in a field of your interest, or simply assisting you on your decisions about your future goals.

The Career Development Center can help you research internships. Internships serve many purposes. First, they allow you to "test the waters" in a field that you always thought you wanted to go into. What better way to understand exactly what a specific job entails than to experience it hands-on? Secondly, it puts "one foot in the door" with your internship sponsor when you are looking for future employment. And thirdly, many internships count for academic credit from Washington College. One W.C. student spent her summer as an intern in one of U.S. Senator Bill Bradley's New Jersey state offices. She reports, "The internship provided hands-on experience in my field and the chance to make connections for possible future employment. I would recommend the experience to anyone who looks forward to a future in political science."

Study Abroad programs are also a valuable experience. What better way to learn about another culture than to spend time living in another country? The interaction with a different culture is an experience that cannot be duplicated in the classroom. I spent six months in Australia, where I attended a University while living with an Australian family. Spending time with another culture allowed me to learn more about their way of life, while also continuing my academic education, which enabled me to see the differences and similarities between the cultures. It was an education that could never be gained in the classroom and an experience that I highly recommend.

Virtually every student who has ever spent time abroad has only had positive comments about the programs and the experience itself. The Career Center has information on many study abroad programs worldwide.

Information on Internship and Study Abroad programs, along with job placement ideas, assistance with resumés and other valuable information can all be found at the Career Development Center in the Spanish House. Our hours are Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Wednesday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m. Ω

Wired is a student literary magazine focusing on science-fiction and fantasy topics as well as bizarre, unusual, and thought-inspiring material. We are accepting short stories, poetry, vignettes, essays, drawings, illustrations, and anything else we think is cool.

Deadline for submissions is NOVEMBER 7. Make a note of it! Date of publication will be (we hope) December 5.

There is NO limit to the number of submissions an individual may send. Each written work may be up to 10 pages in length; drawings and illustrations may be up to one page in size. Anonymous submissions will be considered.

Submissions may be sent by BlitzMail to Colleen Glass or Sean McDowell, placed in the submissions box (in the Lit. House mail room), placed in our Lit. House mailboxes, handed to one of us in person, or slipped under our doors.

Chestertown Natural Foods
"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"
101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1877

Popcorn & Jujubes:

A review of Stargate by David Labowitz

Hmmm... where to start. Well, the movie that I am reviewing is called Stargate, and it stars Kurt Russell, James Spader, and Jaye Davidson. Beyond those three actors, I could not name another member of the cast if my life depended on it.

Stargate is about a linguist / anthropologist (Spader) who is given the opportunity to research a top-secret military discovery, the Stargate. Apparently, the Stargate was created by the ancient Egyptians, but it is still in working order. Kurt Russell then enters the story as the military officer in charge of the research and experimental team. Davidson comes into the movie later on as a bad guy. That is about all I can tell you without giving away the story.

If you are a science fiction or mythology fan, you would probably enjoy Stargate. The special effects are really well done, and as far as I am concerned, were the coolest part of the movie. The plot was a lot more original than I thought it would be, although it did tend to drag on in some places. The time spent involving the ancient Egyptian religion was interesting and accurate, although I wish that some of the conversations between the natives had been subtitled. In addition, the romance between Spader and the native who was chosen for him was remarkably forced and just plain corny. There was no need for a love story in this movie, and I do not think it really fit.

As usual, Kurt Russell did an outstanding acting job. It was an appropriate role for him because his character was an atypical, aloof, slightly anal, control-loving, military prick. James Spader has never been one of my favorite actors, but I have to admit he did a pretty good job too. I did not like his character; he struck me as being a spineless type of person. This was simply my gut reaction to his character. But the combination worked out pretty well, although I had to allow myself a sadistic laugh when Spader got decked by a soldier on his own team.

On the whole, I would have to say that Stargate is a good movie. It is not the kind of movie to bring a tear to your eye or make your sides hurt; it is just suspenseful and fun. Of the people I have talked to about it, the general consensus is that it is indeed a movie worth seeing, but probably not more than once. However, if you do plan on seeing it, do not wait for it to come out on video, go see it in the theater – some of the special effects will make it worth the extra money.

HOROSCOPES

Scorpio (10/24-11/22) You'd like to crush a few enemies like flies to a wall, but don't dwell on Scorpio's stinger. Take a few deep breaths. Your anger and depression can be overcome with a little planning. Wake up earlier, fix yourself a steaming cup of joe or hot tea. Your great self-control becomes an asset, overriding your dark side.

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) Don't waste away. Come on now, let's take some interest in your appearance. Grunge is out. The weather is an excuse to take some of your new clothes out of the closet. Try color coordinating with a hat or scarf (this is unisex advice- that means you too men).

Capricorn (12/22-1/20) So you lost a game. Things could be worse. You're friends could laugh at those silly boxers hanging out your jeans. You have still maintained much dignity. Laugh it off good-naturedly. Next time, victory is yours!

Aquarius (1/21-2/19) Be bohemian. Throw all the pillows you own into a pile in the center of the room. Wait until your roommate leaves, then invite a "Friend" over. Don't leave until first class on Monday. If your roommate has the audacity to stay here this weekend, find a giant heap of leaves to throw 'em in. Luna does not recommend any foul play. You don't want to do the jail time, do you?

Pisces (2/20-3/20) Silly rabbit, Trix are for kids! Start acting your age, not your shoe size.

Aries (3/21-4/20) The moon is with you, granting strength. This sudden empowerment makes everyone putty in your hands. Handle with care. Please?

Taurus (4/21-5/21) Come on now, you are discredited your sign. Tauruses are hard-workers, but you haven't opened a book in weeks. I'm sorry but partying this weekend is completely out! You WILL be handcuffed to your desk by omnipotent spirits. Sorry, make the most of your miserable position. The cuffs can be loosened for good behavior.

Gemini (5/22-6/21) Your grace and generosity humble the people around you. What skill and diplomacy! Have you considered an international studies major? Consider teaching or continuing school abroad. You have great gifts for making good first impressions and adapting to new friends and environment.

Cancer (6/22-7/23) You haven't seen "Pulp Fiction" yet?

Leo (7/24-8/23) Sleep is fine and everything, but you can't get rid of your loser aura that way. The only course to follow is to jump out of bed to shake it off. Go out this weekend. Points are earned for leaving campus, you gain even more if you leave the state.

Virgo (8/24-9/23) Your charm has not proved successful lately. You need a new line. Next time at Andy's or the 'vern, try leaning casually over and whispering in her ear, "Hey, baby. Let's get horizontal together." If she swings, duck!

Libra (9/24-10/23) O.K. She is a beauty, but she is also spoken for. You think he's a Baard, but remember she doesn't, and doesn't appreciate you telling her so. So you remember the wise words of Dinosaur Jr., "Don't let me f*ck up will you, cuz when I need a friend it's still you."

by Luna. Ember apologized for her behavior last Saturday night, cackled, then spirited away into the darkness.

Upcoming Events

November 12:
Violent Femmes • Hammerjacks, (410) 659-ROCK

November 15:
Prong • The Bayou in Georgetown, (202) 333-2897

November 17:
Sugar with Magnapop • Hammerjacks, (410) 659-ROCK

November 16-17:
Live, Fatima Mansions, & Weezer • Radio Music Hall, 481-SEAT

November 3-12:
Love Letters • Church Hill Theatre, (410) 758-1331

Now through November 13:
West Side Story • Burn Brae Dinner Theatre, tickets from $30-40, (301) 384-5800

Now through November 19:
City of Angels • F. Scott Fitzgerald Theatre, tickets $8, call (301) 403-1080

November 22-27:
Grease • Lyric Opera House, call 1-800-669-STAGE or (410) 481-SEAT

Andy's

Friday, November 4
Common Bond
the rockin' acoustic duo returns - originals and your favorite covers
Saturday, November 5
August West
We award them Most Improved and possibly Most Popular as well. Acoustic originals and covers.

THE WASHINGTON COLLEGE REVIEW

is now accepting submissions for the 1994-95 edition.

The REVIEW* is a high-quality magazine edited by students and faculty. Its purpose is to publish the best of Washington College student essays, fiction, and poetry.

Submissions should be sent to humanities editor, Amie Parcel; creative writing editor, Kathy Wagner; sciences editor, Don Munson; social sciences editor, Dan Premo; the editor-in-chief, Dr. Sherbondy, or the student editor, Erin Rowe.

laundry Park drycleaning

RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets

next to the court house

Spider's
(Formerly Newt's)
Hillside Bar
Special Draft Night
Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Midnight Madness
Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Must be 21 or older

Question by Philip McQuade

Campus Voices

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: When was the last time the Dining Hall served something you like and what was it?

Tuesday, they had turkey salad and I ate it for both lunch and dinner.

Ryan Walker, Junior

When my parents dropped me off at orientation they had something good but I don't remember what.

Kathleen Gauthier, Freshman

November, 1992.

Katie Degentesh, Senior

I can't remember. I just eat cereal.

Tim Parent, Sophomore

Washington College Staff Profile

Maintenance is an integral part of any college campus, caring for the aesthetic as well as the practical aspects of college life. Hidden away behind the scenes, they receive little of the credit they richly deserve.

John Markus has helped maintain our campus for ten and a half years. He is frequently found around campus with his trademark cigarette dangling from his lips. Markus cares for the grounds, planting trees and bushes and providing for their care. He also takes care of the necessary details that students tend to ignore — until a student slips in a pile of leaves or has to crunch through snow on the way to class. Then Markus becomes vitally important to student life, insuring that all the leaves are raked and that the snow has been cleared during the winter.

Men's, Women's Crew at Charles

Mike Beardsley

The largest single-day rowing event in the world was held on Sunday, October 23, in Boston, Massachusetts. The thirtieth annual Head of the Charles ran, as scheduled, from eight in the morning until well past five in the evening. The regatta, known as the "Head," included events for both men and women with age and skill level classifications. Both disciplines of rowing were competed in, sculling (the use of two oars by each rower) and sweep (the use of one oar by each rower).

Original acceptance to the Head is by lottery, then every subsequent year's eligibility is determined by the previous year's performance. A crew must be within five percent of the first place boat's time to be automatically invited back to that event the following year. A "club" event is limited to "persons who in any sculling or sweep-oared event did not finish high enough to earn a medal at the previous year's Head or during that calendar year did not compete beyond the quarterfinals of the Henley Royal Regatta or place in the top six in any of the 'major' college or international regattas." This is a lower skill level classification than "champion" events at the Head, which have no restrictions on competitors. Lightweight women must, as a crew, average 130 pounds with no one rower weighing over 138 pounds and lightweight men must, as a crew, average 160 pounds with no one rower weighing over 170 pounds.

This was the third time Washington College has competed in this event and each year we have had more boats accepted than the previous year. This year we boated crews in both the Women's Club single scull, the Men's and Women's Lightweight single scull, the Men's Championship single scull, the Men's Championship Four-Cared shell with coxswain, and the Women's Club Eight-Oared shell with coxswain. The men's four and the women's eight were both invited back for last year's performance at the Head.

The first men's crew to brave the winding course on the Charles River was Senior Leroy Gatell. Gatell competed in the lightweight division of the single scull. He finished thirtieth, in a time of 20:55.65, out of the 37 scullers competing for the Ernest Arlett Trophy. Gatell, who competed in the World Championships of Rowing this summer in Indianapolis, Indiana, was again in the familiar position of being on the water with the finest rowers in the world, since there is no separation of the club and champion divisions in the lightweight events at the Head.

In the afternoon, the Men's Championship four with coxswain went out on the water to race with some of the fastest fours in the world. Of bow, Graduate Doug Peterson, Sophomore Regis de Ramel, Senior Brendan Norris, stroke, Senior Adam Scholl, and coxswain, Senior Karen Wright started seventeenth out of a pack of 30 boats. Spurred on by the boat starting only 10 seconds behind them, the World Championship's Silver Medal United States Men's Four with coxswain, the Washington crew pulled to a fifteenth place finish in 17:17.71. Two-seat, Sophomore Regis de Ramel said of the race, "I'm really happy with our performance and look forward to next year's race." The strong finish by the Washington boat out of the 30 competitors racing for the Circle of Sports Trophy bodes well for the spring racing season.

The last men's boat to race on Sunday was Sophomore Mike Beardsley. Mike competed in the Championship Single Sculls. Outsized by his competitors by six inches and 30 pounds, Mike held in to come across the line in 34th place out of 39 boats in a time of 20:42.86. Although the Lawrence Curtis Trophy and the course record set by 1984 Olympic Bronze Medalist John Biglow went untouched by Mike, he still had a good time just being on the water with the best in the world. "My goals were to not run into anyone or anything and to not come in last. I have to be happy with my performance since I met my goals," said Mike of his race.

The Head is an experience not to be forgotten by collegiate rowers, and Washington's crews looks at this last weekend's performance as a bright indicator to the Spring Season. Having seen the World Champion United States Men's Eight and other such competitors race on the same course as themselves, the Sho'men crews returned with high spirits. Ω

Jennifer Dougherty

The varsity women's rowing team participated in "America's Fall Rowing Festival" — the Head of the Charles Regatta, in Boston, Massachusetts. The Head of the Charles is one of the most prestigious head races in the United States. Spanning 5,000 meters, covered by seven bridges and with five considerable turns, the Charles River is one of the most challenging course to navigate for coxswain and rower alike. This year, on the thirtieth anniversary of the regatta, the total number of entries exceeded 1,060 boats. The Sho'women were proud to be numbered among those. The women's boats entered were: a club single raced by Tonya Howell; a lightweight single, raced by Melisa Olson; and a club eight, raced by (from bow to stern) Amy Peterson, Alisa Johnson, Erika Wilson, Katie Lambrou, Lisa Dickson, Laurel Anne Harris, Jennifer Dougherty, and Stacey Hammond, with Lisa Brown at coxswain. The women faced some very tough and challenging crews, hailing from the state of Washington to Washington D.C., from recreational rowers to members of the National Team. The women put forth their best effort and hope to be invited back next year. The next race of the women's fall season is the Head of the Occoquan Regatta in Fairfax, Virginia on November 5. Best of luck! Ω

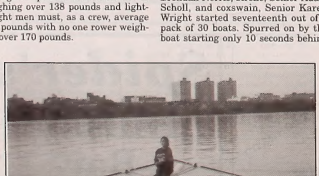

Photo by Lisa Brown

Tonya Howell in the club single.

The women's eight: (L-R) Amy Peterson, Alisa Johnson, Erika Wilson, Katie Lambrou, Lisa Dickson, Laurel Anne Harris, Jennifer Dougherty, Stacey Hammond and coxswain Lisa Brown.

Photo by Lisa Brown

Sho'women wrap up season with a victory

Mariah Geissler

The W.C. Volleyball team has experienced many ups and downs this season. They have encountered difficulties in finding and maintaining their momentum during the early phases of competition. Oftentimes, these lows in the cycle are followed by moments of sheer intensity, leaving the spectators to wonder if they are watching the same team that occupied the court just a game before. One thing can be said about the Sho'women; regardless of the score of the game, they always pushed harder and demanded from themselves just a little bit more. Whether it necessitated hitting the floor to make that save or instantly snapping back into gaps after a missed point, the women never gave up until the referee blew the whistle for the last time.

The last few weeks of their season were packed with a seemingly endless slew of competitions. The Bryn Mawr and Franklin and Marshall matches were the most anticipated events of the entire team. As always, the Sho'women played with a great deal of enthusiasm and determination in their favor. The Sho'women traveled to Bryn Mawr for the second time this year with high expectations of achieving the same victory that was earned just a week and a half ago against Ursinus. This time, however, the Sho'women found themselves competing against a team that accomplished set of teams. Both Bryn Mawr and Franklin and Marshall had very impressive win percentage records this season. In fact, Franklin and Marshall ranked at the top of the Centennial Conference, with a five win and zero loss record, when they met W.C. on the court. Encountering these teams for the first time, the Sho'women had only the other teams' reputations to assess the difficulty of the battle in which they were about to engage.

The women maintained a fairly consistent level of play throughout their matches against Bryn Mawr and Franklin and Marshall. Although they did not seem to reach their full potential, they exhibited a lot of skill and determination on the court. Everyone played well for the team; Beverly Diaz, the team's senior co-captain, proved to be the standout player that weekend. She demonstrated her valuable expertise and determination by her powerful spiked serves and excellent defense. As always, she steered on her teammates, keeping spirits high. Despite a great deal of effort on the part of the entire team, both competitors gave the Sho'women the challenge that they were not able to meet with success. The final scores of the matches provided Bryn Mawr and Franklin and Marshall with the wins.

Then next Tuesday, the Sho'women embarked on the most difficult of their many road trips journeyed this year. They played Western Maryland, a team that had a high percentage of wins this season. The team, expecting a difficult match, knew that they must put forth all of their effort and concentration for the game ahead. The first game provided a wake-up call for W.C. Instead of accepting the staggering defeat, the women came back like champions. They competed fiercely against Western Maryland in the second and third games of the match. Maddie Stockley, one of the Sho'women's freshmen, earned herself a starting position in the games on Tuesday. She served the team well with her strategically placed hard spikes. Courtney Myers and Catherine Barrett also led the Sho'women's offense a charge with their excellent front row play. Despite their vigorous play, the women never fully recovered from the loss of their first game.

The Sho'women wrapped up their season last weekend as they traveled to Messiah for their final tournament. This tournament was characteristic of the trend of play seen throughout their season. The team's fourth to fifth match against Catholic University, only to come back and defeat Penn State Behrend in one of the most satisfying wins of the year. During this match, they lost their first game with a score of 10-15. The team pulled it all together and launched their play into high gear. They beat Behrend 15-12 in the second game and 15-6 in the third game. Not only is this win significant in the drastic improvement that can be seen in each successive score, but also in the teams they defeated; they reigned victorious against the team that achieved first place in the tournament. From there, the team progressed to their third match, which resulted in defeat against York College. Then came the Sho'women's fourth and final match of the season. The team started off by losing their first game against Baptist Bible. The Sho'women were determined not to end their season on a bad note. They came back and played brilliantly against Baptist. Their display of hard work would pay off in the end. They worked together to win the match, scoring 10-15, 15-3, and 15-7 in the games.

Overall, the team's play was strong during the tournament; the competition was fierce and only made the Sho'women. There is most definitely a recognizable pattern in the team's play. The first games usually prove to be a problem for the Sho'women, but once they get a firm grasp on their momentum, there is no stopping them. Unfortunately, because of a lack of consistency in play, the level of momentum tends to go through a wide fluctuation of highs and lows. And, of course, when the most difficult challenge is presented, they rise to the occasion.

The team regrets the loss of their seniors Sabrina Lugindin and co-captain Beverly Diaz, as well as Courtney Myers, who will be attending the University of Maryland. All three of these players have had a tremendous impact on the outcome of this season, giving their support and skill to the team and sport that they love.

"The game against Penn State Behrend was the best we've played in weeks," Diaz commented, "We ended up 2-2 in the tournament; we're the most up and down team I've ever seen. I wish the team luck next year and I hope they know that I'll be there for them." Diaz led the team in kills with 269 for the season with Becky Kessler coming in at a close second with 222. Stephens came out on top with her 73 solo blocks, and Emily Kessler contributed a strong 42. Tina Smith accounted the picture with an amazing 72 serving aces, sure to rank high among the other top players in the Centennial.

The Sho'women completed their season with an overall record of 17-21, with a 5-5 record for their Conference matches.

"I was disappointed with the season, and the team was disappointed with the season," Coach Fall commented. "We started out fast, but never could sustain our intensity; therefore, we never had any long winning streaks. We had a hard time to do with injuries and team chemistry. We also had some midterm stress problems; this group is very strong academically and were feeling the pinch. This was the most difficult season schedule-wise that we have ever had, which helps account for our below .500 record. However, there were some matches that we just should have won. Since we are only losing two starters, we will put it back together again." ❑

Centennial Conference Honor Roll

Sho'women receive Centennial Conference Academic Honors

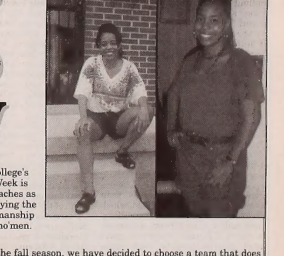
Senior co-captain Beverly Diaz made the Centennial Conference Volleyball Honor Roll this week due to her excellent performance over the last couple of games. Diaz tallied 24 kills, two blocks, four aces and 41 digs for the Sho'women. The senior from Gaithersburg, Maryland will play in her final game this Saturday at Messiah. Good luck Bev!

As the fall sports are over, the Centennial Conference has published their list of students who made the Conference Academic Honor Roll. These students have a cumulative GPA of 3.40 or better. This year we are proud to have two Sho'women on the team: Juniors Jill Schultz and Courtney Myers. Schultz is a powerful force on the field hockey team. She scored three goals and had one assist this season while studying hard for her degree in Sociology. Courtney Myers showed her athleticism on the volleyball courts this season with 66 kills and 245 digs. Myers is working towards a degree in Engineering. Congratulations to both!

Ice Hockey at W.C.? YES!

Dave Kraft

Don't worry if the NHL is on strike, W.C. has something just as exciting coming to an ice rink near you. The Washington College Ice Hockey Club is preparing for their third and most competitive season. The team will again play in the competitive Mason-Dixon Collegiate Hockey Association, facing many of the same rival teams W.C. faces in the Centennial Conference. The club will play 15 games, six of which will be at home. The home rink is just outside of Easton, MD, about 35 minutes away.



The club will look to its veteran founding members for leadership this season. Senior Tim Reardon will take over as team captain. Reardon scored 6 goals and 12 points in 9 games last year and has scored more goals than anyone in the brief history of the team. He will be joined at forward by junior Dave Kraft, who is looking to score some goals at forward after playing goalie the last two years, and junior Tim Reath, who has contributed both offensively and defensively.

On defense, the club will look to senior Topher Head and his breath-taking end-to-end rushes and reckless diving shot-blocks.

Returning for their second tours of duty are senior Graham Mundel, who led first year players last year with three goals and eight points, as well as junior Scott Dewyea, and juniors Jon Paine and John Moreland.

Unlike last year, a large crop of freshmen will join the club. Ben Feld will take over as goalie. Feld was an All-League high school goalie in Harwood, Vermont last year. Mike Mullen joins the strong group of talented forwards as does Bill Brawner. Both sport full-life experience in hockey. The club's freshman class also includes soccer players Chris Daily and Todd Barto.

Please come and support the club. If you have any questions about the club or need directions to the rink, call Dave at x. 8854.

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

To close out the fall season, we have decided to choose a team that does not have varsity status but is desperately seeking this goal. This week's co-players of the week are Curtis and Curtina Arnold of the Women's Soccer Club. The dynamic twin duo hails from Edgewood, Maryland and attended Joppatowne High School. The two started playing soccer about nine years ago and have stuck with it ever since. The twins lead the attack for the Sho'women this season with Tina scoring two of the three goals in the win against St. John's two Saturdays ago. After Tina sparked the scoring against St. John's, Tia scored all three goals for the Sho'women in the Goldey-Beacom game this past Saturday. With the twins scoring five out of the six goals in the last two games, they will be greatly missed next season.

The twins are both honor students and are on the Dean's List again this semester. The Arnolds are both Business majors and would like to start a business together in Jamaica following graduation. They also are cheerleaders and co-treasurers of Cleopatra's Daughters. These seniors stated that they will miss the team and wish the soccer team the best of luck next year!

We would also like to commend the play of junior Christy Belliveau who scored the second goal in the women's soccer game to make the score 3-2 over St. Johns. Freshman Sara Neutzel sparked the defense as the women's soccer team captured a 3-2 win over Goldey-Beacom College last Saturday. Senior Patty Diaz continued to play extremely well for the volleyball squad with 24 kills, two blocks, four aces, and 41 digs during this last week of the season which put her on the Centennial Conference Volleyball Honor Roll once again! Senior goalkeeper Greg Miller broke the W.C. record for shutouts in a season with a win against Beaver College for his ninth of the season . . another W.C. record broken! We would also like to commend the play of the entire field hockey team because their four Centennial Conference wins this season marked a great improvement over the winless season in Conference play last season. Good job guys and thanks to all the seniors for their great play in their last season at W.C.

W.C. record set in the season's home finale

Miller leads the team as they close out their second season in the Centennial Conference

PHOTO BY KELLY TOUGHTON

W.C. gets the ball past Beaver.

Peggy Busker

Washington took on non-Conference rival St. Mary's College in the first of their last four games. Assistant Coach Dax sums up the game in four words, "Good game, tough match." St. Mary's has a tough team this year. They are a team that works very well together in games and is really aggressive.

Washington saw this right away and stepped up their level of play. The Sho'men kept their heads in the game and began to work as a unit on the field. Towards the end of the season, the players were getting more used to playing with each other, and it all came together in this game.

Brian Rush made his way back from injured reserve to play and Will Merriken also started the game in the midfield.

Washington had five shots on St. Mary's keeper Timothy Zapp, compared to St. Mary's eight on Miller. He had to make only two saves in the first half.

The Sho'men's shots came from five different players. Two players, Long Le and Shawn McMahon, came from off the bench and took their shots from at the top of the penalty box. Underclassmen Chris Daily, Andrew King and Scott Helm took their shots from near the top of the 18-yard box as well.

The shots on Miller came from all directions. All but three were from less than 12 yards away. The Sho'men defense and senior keeper Greg Miller let nothing in. The defense played the ball well and stopped many dangerous situations near the net.

Neither team could score. Both teams were hungry for the win. The score at the half remained tied at zero.

The second half went much like the first. St. Mary's continued to have more shots on the Washington net. Washington's offense let down somewhat, only getting off two shots on St. Mary's goal. King had both of the shots on St. Mary's keeper. St. Mary's shots continued to go wide of the goal. Miller saved the two shots that were taken near the six-yard goal box, the only two shots out of 14 that were on goal.

Washington's midfield remained strong and aggressive. Merriken, Roman, Rush, and Daily played well. They played the transition game solidly and with confidence. Chip Helm continued to lead the defense with powerhouses Hiebler and Strohl.

The score at the end of 90 minutes of regulation time was tied at zero and for the third time this season Washington went into overtime, hoping to win.

The level of play was increased as the game went into extra time. Washington had two shots on goal from inside the penalty box. King once again had them both. Erik Dahlen fired a shot on goal from just outside the center of the penalty box. St. Mary's did not let up. They had seven shots on the goal: four from inside the penalty box and three requiring Miller. Both goalies played as well as the defense did. Junior defender Chip Helm went out in the first overtime period with a possible broken arm.

Overtime, like regulation time, consisted of even play between sides and in the midfield.

Washington played with determination and aggression. Even as the clock ran down, the Sho'men never let up. They knew that they did not have many quality shots on goal but were not about to let up. The Sho'men, always encouraged by the bench, kept their heads up and continued to play hard.

"We played our hearts out," said Matt Murray. "We had scoring opportunities, just could not put the ball in the net. We could not get it to click."

As the last 15-minute period of overtime came to an end, neither team had scored. The final score was 0-0. Miller posted his eighth shutout of the season and had a total of seven saves for the game.

The game was a good experience for the Sho'men, coming off of the 4-0 defeat by Widener.

"This game exemplified the season," Assistant Coach Dax remarked. "We played well but just could not finish."

Washington took what they learned from St. Mary's into their conference match against Johns Hopkins on Saturday in Baltimore. Coach Helbling felt that the team needed to come out prepared to fight for the win, score early, and hold onto the lead. Against a team like Hopkins it is key to score early and control the game. Helbling kept the same line-up from the St. Mary's game to go against Hopkins.

The Sho'men did come out strong and did score early, less than 15 minutes into the game. Freshman Rodney Roman, off of a throw-in from Brian Rush and an assist from Andrew King, got the ball inside the penalty box and fired a shot into the back of the net. It was to be one of only four shots taken on the Hopkins net.

On the other end of the field, Miller, Hiebler, Helm, and Strohl played hard and held off much of the Hopkins defense. Johns Hopkins' key scorer for the season, Eric West, had to be shut down. He was only given one shot in the first half. Miller had seven saves in the first half compared to the Hopkins keeper who did not touch the ball once throughout the game.

Fifteen minutes into the game, the Washington offense shut down. Hopkins dominated play at their offensive end.

Washington made adjustments at the half, putting Scott Helm more as a forward to try to create more offense, but Hopkins continued to dominate the possession game. Washington was forced to play a defensive game. With three and a half minutes remaining in the second half, West got a shot off from a rebound and scored, tying the game.

Washington did not create any more shots on the Hopkins goal in the second half and for the second time within a three day period went into overtime.

About midway through the first overtime period, West took advantage of a Washington defensive lapse, as he shot into the upper corner from inside the penalty box and scored what would become the winning goal. Washington's Rodney Roman had the ball just outside Hopkins' six-yard goal box but his shot went wide. The Sho'men would not shoot on the Hopkins goal again.

Hopkins took several more shots on Miller in overtime. Miller had a total of 12 saves in the game. The Hopkins keeper made no saves and Hopkins won the game 2-1.

Washington was well-prepared for Hopkins. They felt pretty comfortable on the crowned turf and adjusted well to the speed of the ball off of the pitch. Hopkins is ranked seventh in the region and Washington is in the middle of the pack.

"It's one of those things, where flukes happen," Junior reserve keeper Chris Downs said about the loss. "Two good shots, and we ended up on the bad end."

For the season's last home game, Washington took on another non-Conference rival, Beaver College, at Kibler Field. The game started with strong defensive play from the Sho'men. They had several good shots on the Beaver goal early on, setting the tone for the game. Scott Helm caused the bench to jump to their seats as his volley shot hit the crossbar on a cross from Andrew King.

Most of the first half was played in Washington's offensive half. Miller came out on a one-on-one and came up with the ball. Tom Hiebler denied Beaver another one-on-one with a textbook slide tackle.

Less than 20 minutes into the first half, Shayne Bates received the ball in the upper corner of the penalty box and made the pass to Rodney Roman who then nailed the ball into the upper left corner of the goal. The score was 1-0. Washington needed another goal to increase their lead and defenseman Matt Strohl answered the call. Fifteen minutes later, King, in the lower corner of the penalty box, made two attempts to cross the ball. On his second attempt, Matt Strohl made the header past the goalie into the net to make the score 2-0. Washington was on a roll. They continued to test Beaver's keeper. Long Le came in on the offense and had several speedy one-on-ones with the Beaver goalie. Washington was ahead by one at the half and Miller was on his way to another shutout.

Washington got even more hungry in the second half as they pressured the Beaver defense. Shayne Bates followed his shot and the keeper had a loose grip on the ball, but the referee called the play and gave Beaver the ball. Ten minutes later Erik Dahlen got the pass from Rodney Roman and shot the ball past the keeper, hard and on the ground into the right corner of the net to give the Sho'men three.

The team then brought in several players off of the bench. Matt Murray, Brian Dorst, and Jesus Hernandez came in and with fresh legs they pressured the Beaver goal. Murray had several close shots on goal and played with grace and courage in his last home match. Andrew King, on an assist from Brian Rush, took the ball into the box and in a flurry around the goal nailed the ball past the keeper into the net. The score was 4-0 and that was as high as it would go. Defenseman Tom Hiebler had a shot on goal late in the second half as well, but it went wide. Dorst had a beautiful shot that went over the crossbar.

This win was very important to Washington as they prepared for Saturday's Conference match against Dickinson. It was also nice to win the last home match.

"Congratulations for Greg and Matt for their last home victory of their career," said Chip Helm. "Miller set a new school record for shutouts, nine shutouts for the season."

Washington finished their season against Conference foe Dickinson College.

The game was a tough game for the Sho'men. Dickinson and Washington came out aggressive. Washington's King, Roman, and Scott Helm took shots on the Dickinson goal but could not get on the scoreboard.

Dickinson retaliated with 14 shots on Miller, who was looking for his tenth shutout. Washington looked good at the half, but the score was 0-0.

The second half was a breakdown of the Sho'men. Less than 10 minutes into the half, Dickinson's Chris Kissack scored from inside the 18-yard box and five minutes later he did it again, putting Washington down by two. Washington never recovered as Dickinson kept firing on the Washington goal. Miller saved eight of the 13 shots on him in the second half. Dickinson scored five goals in the second half, three on one-on-ones. The defense struggled the entire second half and could not stop Dickinson.

Adjustments were made on the field and fresh legs were brought in, but Washington only had four more shots on the Dickinson goal. Matt Strohl and Chip Helm had chances as did Shawn McMahon, coming off the bench. Jesus Hernandez and Brian Relyea came in to support the attack. Dan Ardito came in on the defense to give some relief and sophomore keeper Mike Gill came in with less than 10 minutes remaining. Gill made two key saves in those 10 minutes. Matt Murray came off the bench to play the forward line once more to end the three year career for Washington. Miller played his last game as well.

It was not a good ending for the Sho'men, as Dickinson won 5-0. All goals were scored within 45 minutes.

Free Yoga classes:

Tuesdays & Thursdays, 9:30 - 11a.m., dance studio Wednesdays, 5:30 - 7 p.m., Kent County Library

Relaxing, Toning, Strengthening, Stretching, Focusing ... The practice of yoga is about 5000 years old. Maybe it could be significant to your life in these stressful times.

No experience necessary. For more information, call Wendy Morrison x. 7296 or 778-2514 evenings

Field Hockey finishes season with great improvements

Nicole Zemanski

The Field Hockey team completed their season last Tuesday against the Mules of Muhlenberg. The women entered the game with a 6-7-1 overall record and a 4-4 record in the Conference after losing a close one to Widener 2-0 two weeks ago. The women were looking forward to finishing their season at the .500 mark for the first time in three years.

The women started off the week's play by traveling to Widener University looking for another grudge match. Although the defensive unit kept Widener from scoring, the offense struggled and simply could not get it through to score.

"We wanted to play hard and come out ready for the game, but we just couldn't put it all together," Freshman Nicole Mills stated. "We did our best, but after they scored we just didn't have the extra thing we needed to get pumped up to score and fight back." Although Widener is a competitive team, the Sho'women could have stuck right beside them and given them a battle. After Widener scored the second goal, the women were mentally taken out of the game. Although the team fought hard, Widener ended up on top with a score of 5-0.

After coming off of this tough loss, the women were ready to face Muhlenberg for the finale of the season. The Sho'women were ready for this game because they were out to get the .500 record to show the Centennial Conference that they were an up-and-coming team. After holding the Mules scoreless in the first half, the women came out ready to turn the game into an offensive one.

But the Mules had other strategies on their minds. With 29:35 remaining, Muhlenberg came out with a vengeance and tallied their first goal. The Sho'women tried to maintain possession of the ball, but the Mules came right back and scored 65 seconds later, making the score 2-0. Through solid defensive efforts by co-captain Jen Hanifee, Shannon Metcalf, Elizabeth Barlow, Nicole Chmura, and goalkeeper Stephanie Self, the defensive unit tried to push the ball up to offense in order to start the attack. The offense of Mills, Sarah Sobon, Jill Schultz, Helen Pitts, Marcia Flinn, Cindy Matalucci, and Kouri Coleman tried to penetrate the Muhlenberg defense, but just could not put the ball in the cage. With 10:01 left in the game, the Sho'women's defense broke down and allowed the third and final goal of the game. Self had a solid game with 12 saves. The Muhlenberg offense came through with a final score of 3-0.

The game was played through a total team effort because everyone received playing time and the players responded by hustling and fighting as hard as they could. "We wanted the game so bad in order to end at a .500 mark for the season, but we just couldn't do it this year," Self commented. "But we will be back next year without losing any players to graduation. Next year will be our year!"

This game would have been played two Saturdays ago, but the Mules asked to have the game postponed due to the fact that several of their players had the opportunity to be elected onto the homecoming court. So the season was prolonged in order to fit in this game.

Though W.C. ended the season in a slight slide, there was a tremendous improvement on last year's 3-9 record. Although the attack suffered through a drought over the last two games, the Sho'women scored 18 goals this season – 7 more than they did last year. By almost doubling their scoring and allowing fewer goals, the women were able to come away with a 6-8-1 overall record and a 4-5 Conference record. Both Self and junior Peggy Busker split time in the cage and came up with excellent results in allowing an average of only 1.43 goals per game.

Photo by Kelly Youngblood

Cindy Matalucci and Sarah Sobon take charge in the midfield.

Although the team ended on a sour note, Coach Sarah Feyerherm feels that the team improved significantly from last season. Coach Feyerherm stated, "This year was a stepping stone for us. Our team is young and we really improved from last season. We showed the Conference that we are a program that deserves respect and we earned it." Coach Feyerherm feels that the team will be even better next season because everyone has learned how each other plays and no one will be lost due to graduation. Coach Feyerherm also commented on the potential players for next season by stating, "This year's recruiting pool is a very solid one and by having some players on the team that have attended strong hockey programs in high school, we are looking to attract many of their former teammates." Along with a truly young team and a talented one at that, the Sho'women are out to stir things up in the Centennial Conference next season! Good job guys! Ω

The women win their first home contest

Peggy Busker and Nicole Zemanski

Ahh ... The skill and grace of the Sho'women, now field hockey, not volleyball, but soccer – yes – women's soccer. The women's soccer club team took on the scary team from Annapolis, St. John's, two Saturdays ago.

Washington came out strong and aggressive in the first half. St. John's appeared as if they did not know what hit them. After several attempts on their goal by the offensive double threat, Tina and Tia Arnold, it was only a matter of time before the Sho'women scored. The scoring opportunity came on a scramble in front of St. John's net. There were several shots and assists in the scuffle and Tina Arnold came away with the goal as she nudged the ball over the goal line.

The crowd (and there was a good size crowd) went wild and the team rejoiced. The defense held steady; Mary Kelly came away with the ball on a breakaway with a crowd pleasing slide tackle. Goalie Eileen Kuriger was not tested much but when needed she came through with the save. Christy Belliveau put one into the back of the net as well to give the Sho'women a comfortable lead.

The first half score was 2-1 with the Sho'women ahead.

The score was quickly increased in the second half when Tina Arnold scored for the Sho'women. This gave the Sho'women their biggest lead of the game, 3-1. Washington's Amy Povloski continued to dominate the midfield as St. John's tried several times to advance the ball. The Arnold twins kept up their high level of play on the offensive end as well. Freshman Sarah Neutzel and sophomore Amy Harmon, who played several positions, were solid in the back, making second half goalie Nicole Zemanski feel bored.

There was one lapse in the Sho'women's level of play and St. John's recognized it and got the ball past Nicole. The remainder of the game was played at both ends of the field but neither team was able to score.

The final score was 3-2, a Washington Club win! The women looked strong and played aggressively to get the victory. Coach Bill Griffin was pleased with their play and felt that they really played as a team. They played the possession game well and finished their offensive strikes with three goals.

This past Saturday at home, the women's team took on Goldey-Beacom College on the upper field of Kibler. With the large Parents' Weekend crowd, the Sho'women attacked the Goldey-Beacom squad at the whistle. Senior Tia Arnold scored within minutes of the start of the game and then two more times to come away with three unassisted goals for the team. Along with her accomplished feat, her twin, Tina, responded by setting up some nice cross patterns throughout the game to maintain the high caliber of offense between these twin powers!

The defense of Neutzel, Kelly, Harmon, and Jen Canatella stopped the powerful strategical attack by not even allowing them to take many shots. Goalkeeper Zemanski had a very solid first half by stopping everything that came her way. The defense showed their dominance by only allowing one goal in the first half. At the end of the half, the Sho'women led 3-1.

The second half started with Kuriger replacing Zemanski in goal. Although the defense remained strong, the women came out sluggish and just could not get the offense started up again. With Goldey-Beacom maintaining possession of the ball for a good amount of time, shots were fired at Kuriger and she responded by making save after save. Belliveau on both sides of the field displaying her offensive maneuvers as well as her defensive capabilities. Povloski showed her power through her strong corner kicks that nearly ended up in the goal. Neutzel was the defensive gem by defending the entire field. Zemanski returned to the goal and was put to work once again. The Sho'women were having trouble maintaining possession of the ball and Goldey-Beacom came down the field on a break away to score their second goal to make the score 3-2.

Photo by Kelly Youngblood

Cary Kelly fights for possession of the ball.

During the final minutes of the game, the Sho'women regained possession of the ball and started firing aimlessly at the goal. The final score resulted in a W.C. Club win 3-2. The team was extremely excited with this win due to the previous beating Goldey-Beacom put on the Sho'women earlier in the season (a 6-0 loss). The team severely missed junior Kelly Eakin who was out because of the flu. She continuously sparked the team through the season with her determination and hustle.

Belliveau, the Arnolds, and Kelly will be missed next season due to graduation, but the team still strives to gain varsity status. Coach Griffin will be missed because of his leadership and offensive strategies which he devised. The team is looking forward to next season with its young team, so come out and support them ... next year! Ω

Intramural Basketball begins Tuesday, November 8 in the LFC.

To get on the schedule, submit a team roster by Monday afternoon to Brian Tipton (Dorchester - no BlitzMail), Will Brandenburg (LFC - no BlitzMail), or Dennis Berry (Student Activities Office - will take Blitz-registrations).

Men's Hi-Comp Division
Men's Division 2 and 3
Women's Open Division

Photo by Kelly Youngblood

With sheer force and determination, Elizabeth Barlow pulls back to send the ball downfield.

Scores

Men's Soccer

Dickinson 5
W.C. 0

Women's Soccer

W.C. 3
Goldey-Beacom 2

Ice Hockey

Western MD 8
W.C. 5

Last Week's Scores

Volleyball

Bryn Mawr
15 13 15 15
W.C.
11 15 11 6

F&M
15 15 15
W.C.
6 9 3

JHU
15 15 6 15
W.C.
12 3 15 4

Wilmington
15 15 15
W.C.
4 13 5

Western MD
15 15 15
W.C.
0 6 6

Soccer

JHU 2
W.C. 1
(OT)

W.C. 0
St. Mary's 0
(OT)

Beaver 0
W.C. 4

Field Hockey

W.C. 0
Widener 2

W.C. 0
Muhlenberg 3

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Ten

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Faculty discusses retention, deficit, student input

Kate Meagher

The monthly faculty meeting took place on Monday, with the school's "large and significant deficit," as described by Vice President for Finance and Administration Anita Gottlieb; "urgent need for curricular change," as described by Dr. Steven Cades; and the Student Government Association's reaction to the reconfiguration of Professor Audrey Fessler's position in the English Department as three main topics of discussion.

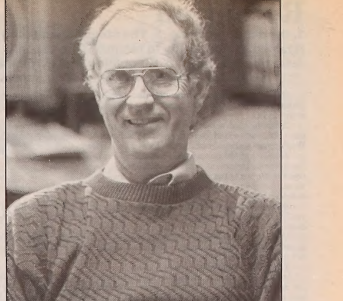
Several administrators and faculty members addressed the financial problem faced by Washington College. Gottlieb attributed the school's deficit to "revenue decreases and expense increases." Having recently completed the look at last year's figures, Gottlieb placed the deficit at $370,000.

Remedies for the financial problem were suggested. Gottlieb, when asked about possible cuts in the budget of each department or the deferring of certain costs until next year, rejected these plans as temporary fixes to what has become a permanent problem.

"I don't see [deferring costs] as a solution," said Gottlieb. "... What concerns me is not a one-year deficit, but a deficit that seems now to be a continuing [trend]. We're now on year four."

When it was suggested that the school increase its draw on endowment from the current figure of five percent to six percent. It was argued that this would decrease the deficit by approximately $400,000. The deficit draws on endowment already, and the increase would not provide any long-term financial relief.

"The issue is: we are not generating sufficient revenue," said the VP in Charge of Finance and Administration. She believes that the only way in which the College can get out of the hole is to increase revenue.



"There has not been significant growth for a long period of time," said Gottlieb. "Something has to happen. It's just a straight mathematical equation."

There is a concern that the College gives out more institutional aid than do comparable schools, and that those students who receive large amounts of aid are "bound to this institution," according to Cades. Those students who can pay are those students who leave, as they can afford to go to other schools.

"We are selling our product at heavy discount," said Dr. Cades. "A product whose perceived value is high doesn't need big discounts." He listed the condition of school buildings and dormitories along with curriculum among the factors affecting the "perceived value" of any school.

In exit interviews with students transferring from Washington College, financial difficulties, student and dorm life, and curriculum complaints were found to be the most common reasons for attrition. Students complained of the lack of challenge and excitement on campus, and were dissatisfied with the ordinary first-year courses.

"The faculty is not the problem," said Cades. "There is substantial work to be done [with the curriculum]." He pointed out the "need to make significant changes quickly. If we ignore that, we risk staying where we are."

Dr. George Shivers, proposer of the faculty resolution commending the SGA for its commitment to Professor Fessler and urging the English Department and the Appointments and Tenure Committee to reconsider the decision to redefine the seventh full-time English position

Sonja Wilson, Vice President of the Student Government Association, updated the faculty on SGA matters, and presented the November 3 Statement to the President [which ran, in full, in last week's Elm] to the faculty and administration present at the meeting. The SGA, speaking for the entire student body, expressed concern over the lack of student input in personnel decisions.

"The spirit of the student body [in response to the redefinition of Professor Fessler's position] has continued full-force," said Wilson. Speaking on her own behalf, Wilson continued, "I realize the numerous issues the English Department addresses [with the decision to change the seventh full-time position]."

With regard to the lack of student input in such decisions, Wilson described the student voice which she represented as "angry, concerned, and confused." That voice, she said, "must play an important role" in decisions affecting the education offered at Washington College.

The SGA urged that the recent decision be reconsidered.

"The quality of our education depends on it," said Wilson.

The faculty responded to the SGA's statement with support. Dr. George R. Shivers expressed his "wholehearted support."

Dr Ruth C. Shoge asked that the faculty make officially respond with support to the SGA's action. She wished to let the SGA know that the faculty has "heard and taken seriously" their statement, and that "due consideration will be taken."

Shivers moved that the faculty commend the students for their initiative and urge those involved [in Fessler's situation] to take it into consideration. The movement was passed unanimously. Ω

Presidential search commences

Rachael Fink

With the semester drawing to a close, the search for a replacement for College President Charles Trout is gearing up.

The Presidential Search Committee, the body charged with presenting the Board of Visitors and Governors with a list of candidates for the position, had their first meeting on October 31. Over the next six to eight months, the Committee will be meeting frequently to accomplish the intensive work need to fill the position of Washington College President.

In an interview with The Elm, Presidential Search Committee Chair Robert Duemling explained the process followed for compiling a list of presidential candidates.

The Presidential Search Committee members were chosen by Duemling, who was appointed as Chair of the Committee by Chairman of the Board, Louis Goldstein. After having "conferred with quite a number of people" and having "sought other people's advice and suggestions," Duemling chose the following members of the Washington College community to serve on the Committee: Board members Jeannie Balides, Joyce Huber Cafritz, Michael Decielag and Kevin O'Keefe; Administration representative Acting Dean Joachim Scholz; Alumni representative Edward M. Athey; Faculty members Robert Day, Michael Kerchner and Tahir Shad; and student representative Jamie Baker.

The Board agreed that the Committee should be kept relatively small to be workable," said Duemling. "Every person who was invited to sit on the Committee is doing so as a privilege."

Duemling indicated that in looking for Committee members, commitment to the College, a broad view of the College's needs and goals, and a

See "Search" on 3

"The Fessler case" continues

Rachael Fink

Now in its third week, the discussion and debate over the seventh full-time English position, currently held by Professor Audrey Fessler, is just as heated and emotional as it was in the very beginning.

At the faculty meeting, held Monday afternoon in the Dunning lecture hall, the issue was not raised until Sonja Wilson, representing the Student Government Association, read a resolution passed by the SGA concerning the student reaction to the decision not to renew Fessler's contract. As previously reported in The Elm, the student body has not been pleased with the decision, nor with the "absolute disregard of student voices and concern," in the words of Wilson.

At the faculty meeting Wilson pointed out that student involvement has long been a thing desired and even sought after at Washington College, but rarely existed for longer than it takes a commercial to change back to the regularly scheduled program.

"We wanted involvement, here it is," said Wilson.

She went on to indicated that, while aware of the many issues surrounding the seventh full-time English position, students are mainly concerned with one thing, the retention of Fessler.

"The student body, as it has expressed to the Senate," said Wilson "is not willing to release an outstanding, dynamic member of the faculty in exchange for the currently proposed position."

Citing the "glowing" student evaluations of Fessler, and her ability to motivate many students, Wilson indicated that the SGA felt "that these evaluations have been given due consideration."

"We strongly urge that this decision be reconsidered," Wilson said,

See "Fessler" on 3

Inside this week's Elm

Thinking through ...

the results of the '94 Congressional Election. What happens now, Paul? 3

We Get You Discounts!

A bowling brouhaha creates a rift between our two young discount boys. 5

An ode to duct tape

Andrea urges her readers to fight the system, save money and the environment; use duct tape. 6

Dropped a whole degree

Aaron reviews The Sporting Life, not an album for the squeamish. 9

Retention

1. the act of retaining. 2. The condition of being retained. 3. The ability to retain. 4. The capacity to remember; member. 5. Something that is retained.

-The American Heritage Dictionary, Second College Edition, 1992

Retention is the new buzz word on campus. Every time a group of administrators, board members or faculty members gets together, someone is bound to mention it.

It seems that retention is our biggest problem. We lose more students after their first or second year than other schools of a comparable nature. In fact, Washington College retains 12% less of its students than comparable colleges.

Increasing retention would solve all of our problems, so some say. Specifically, the new vice president in charge of finances, Anita Gottlieb, thinks that if we increased our retention rate, we could do away with what they are now calling a structural deficit (read - we can't cut any more so the problem has to be solved by someone else).

Seems feasible. Get more students to pay for a full four years of college and you'll make more money. Or at least not lose as much. Sounds like a great plan, doesn't it?

Well, the actual logistics of the plan are a little more complex. First, we have to convince that 12% to stick around. Second, we have to convince that 12% to pay full price for four years.

Who's going to do this?

Amazingly enough, everybody seems to think it is the faculty. Yeah, you know, the incredible-shrinking-teaching-pool. It would seem that the faculty is the group best able to excite students about learning the liberal arts. Imagine that.

Now the question is how the rapidly diminishing and, I dare say, demoralized faculty is going to accomplish this herculean feat.

Decreasing attrition has nothing to do with publishing academic articles in prestigious quarterlies. Nor will increasing time spent by faculty members in committee meeting of one sort or another have a positive affect on our retention rate. What is going to have an effect on the attrition of students at this college in an increase in involvement of faculty members outside of the classroom, and a stronger awareness on the part of the faculty, as well as the administration, of what it is that really excites students about learning at Washington College.

What is it that really excites students about learning at Washington College? Beats me. I haven't managed to figure it out, even though I am one of the excited (or used to be, before I landed this job). There are some people at the College who seem to have a pretty good idea about what it is that will keep students here and motivated, both inside and outside of the classroom

Audrey Fessler is one of those people. For me, Tex Andrews was as well. Jeff Vahlbusch can be added to the list too. And Beth McCoy. And Kathy Wagner. I'm sure there are others, but this is my list, and I really haven't been forced to take too many courses with professors I don't enjoy. Lucky me.

I hate to sound like I am disregarding important issues, or glossing over significant statistics, but, as I see it, "the Fessler case" boils down to an ordering of priorities. Either we decide that keeping that 12% of the student body here is important, or we decide that those moving into the sciences won't be excited by professors like Audrey and so we should replace them.

As a die-hard fan of the Humanities, I vote for keeping the exciting faculty members and that 12%. Granted, the liberal arts do not consist of the humanities alone, but cutting out wonderful English professors doesn't seem to me to be a great way to encourage the liberal arts or the retention of students either.

If I knew the way, if I knew the way, if I only had direction, know I'd find the words to make you stay. Your eyes were closed and your heart was the same. Well your head is hard sometimes, but I know that I am to blame, 'cause I could not see your hazy blue eyes. You would not let me come along for the ride.

- If I knew the way, August West

It has been suggested that members of the faculty might be interested in having a regular or semi-regular column in The Elm, something along the lines of "crud."

The Editors are very excited about the possibility and would be willing to provide several column inches weekly to faculty members wishing to use the space to express their opinions on any issue relate to the College or not, as the case may be.

Interested faculty member should contact either Rachael Fink, Editor-in-Chief or Kate Meagher, News Editor with ideas, concepts or columns.

We should also like to throw the decisions concerning the title of such a column open for discussion.

What do y'all think?

-The Editors

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher

Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan

Arts & Entertainment Editor
Carolyn Fuss

Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Nicole Zemanski

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Buckner, Jr.

Advertising Manager
Richard McKee, Jr.

Office Manager
Leticia Lyford-Pike

Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. The deadline for letters is Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8565.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

I'm not one for personal crusades, and though there are certainly (just ask Bob Brown) larger issues to address these days, this is not the time to be letting the rest slide. So I'm officially throwing off my anonymity to talk in print: what can be done about this meal plan nonsense? We all know, but don't know what to do about it, that WCDS is, and has been, exploiting the consumers who keep them solvent. For those who've forgotten, that's the students. Also, for those who've misunderstood, I'm not damning the dining hall workers; they're the best. So just who am I damning? I don't even know. Others don't seem to know, either. Shouldn't we? Shouldn't we know, like good little consumers, who is deciding what they charge and what for?

Okay, specifically--and I'll make this short and sweet because it's not a difficult concept--I pay for fourteen meals per week. So Joe Dining Hall has "x" number of dollars to buy cereal for me for seven days. But Saturday rolls around and I haven't had a single bowl of Cheerios. (And I won't even get started about just why I'm avoiding the provided fare; we'll leave that for another letter.) I have five meals left, and my dear, darling mother, who helps pay my tuition, visits. And though a whole week's worth of paid-for cereal is just waiting for us, I have to again pay for her meal. What kind of logic, what kind of business sense, hell, what kind of common sense are these people using that to make money, they have to charge their customers twice for what's overpriced to begin with? Does anyone have an answer? Or even know to whose attention these discrepancies should be brought? Because I'm sick of it. As is often the case with our delinquent dining service.

-Kelli Youngblood

The following letters were written to College President Charles H. Trout by students in response to the decision to redefine the seventh full-time English position so as to exclude Professor Audrey Fessler.

I am writing to express my extreme dismay at Professor Fessler's termination of employment. I am concerned that in relieving Professor Fessler of her position, the college will be losing one of the most dynamic professors on campus.

I currently have Professor Fessler for "The Victorian Age." Hers is one of the most engaging classes that I have ever experienced. She is truly interested in the students' responses and eager to learn as she teaches. To let go a teacher of such caliber would be a grievous error. I am writing to help you avoid such a mistake.

I can honestly say that Professor Fessler is one of the few professors left on campus who are able not only to make me want to read 500 page novels, but happy that I have read them. Please reconsider your decision.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

-Jennifer M. Dougherty

I understand that there is a questionable phrase in the advertisement for the full-time English position which Professor Audrey Fessler currently holds. The phrase states that the position is "two-year, non-renewable." This is absurd. Does Washington College now utilize the hiring tactics of Walmart? Faculty positions in a college should, by their nature, be of a more substantial period than two years. The College should be searching for unique individuals to fill these positions. Individuals like Professor Audrey Fessler.

Audrey Fessler is the epitome of the type of professor that should be sought after by students and administration. Many of the students who know her consider her a true friend and she values those students. A college professor should not be considered an untouchable omniscient person; they should be perceived as part of the support system at an institution. Being away from home is, in many ways very difficult; the fact that Audrey Fessler is a knowledgeable and caring individual who would do anything for her students makes me not only feel more comfortable, but also and more importantly proud to be a part of the Washington College community. We simply need people who care and the way to create a safe and amiable environment is not by amputating the basis of an academic institution, fantastic professors like Audrey Fessler.

-Jason M. Tommell

This Week on Campus

Nov. 11 - 17

Film Series

Maverick

Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 11
Program Cards due at Registrar's Office
SGA Band: Winebottles, Student Center

Saturday 12

Sunday 13

Monday 14
Margaret Holley reading from her poetry
Sophie Kerr Room, Library, 8 p.m.

Tuesday 15

Wednesday 16
Student recital
Norman James Theatre, 7 p.m.

Thursday 17
South Africa - Transition & Transformation
Hynson Lounge, 7:30 p.m.

Thinking through ...

the new Congress

by Paul Briggs

Yet another seemingly impossible thing has just happened. For the first time in nearly half a century, the Republicans control both houses of Congress. They have a 53-seat majority in the Senate and a 230-seat majority in the House. These are admittedly not large majorities, but if the GOP maintains the same level of party discipline that it did as a Congressional minority, it will be more than enough for whatever they plan to achieve.

So, now that they have Congress, what they are going to do with it? Don't expect to get much out of them in the subject for the next few years. You'll be too busy celebrating their victory.

Well, they have earned themselves a grace period. Nonetheless, when the next session of Congress begins, the demands on the Republicans will be much greater. If the government re-divided, the GOP will be expected to offer an alternative vision to President Clinton's. It is one thing to base one's campaign on the simple anti-Washington nihilism, and another thing to try to run a whole branch of the government on that basis. So, do they have any ideas?

The answer is, yes and no. Their main set of ideas- indeed, the only one that has a name- is the so-called "Contract with America." This, you may recall, was the promise that several hundred Republican candidates, standing on the front steps of the Capitol, made on national TV. If granted a Congressional majority, they said, they would push for a number of reforms, including a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget by the year 2000, a "family tax credit," increased defense spending, a capital gains tax cut, term limits and welfare reform- all without touching Social Security or Medicare.

Individually, these are for the most part defensible ideas, but, taken as a package, they don't quite add up.

Consider the two tax breaks- the family tax credit and the capital gains tax cut. You may remember that during his Presidential campaign, Clinton promised a middle-class tax cut. This was shelved when deficit reduction became the top priority of the 1993 budget agreement. If, however, Congress were to pass a middle-class tax cut or family tax credit next year, Clinton would have little choice but to sign it, whether or not any effort was made to make up for the lost revenue. As for the capital gains tax cut, this is something that Republicans have been demanding for years now. It is easy to imagine a scenario in which it is passed into law as part of a deal the President cuts with Congress on some piece of legislation.

So what's wrong with a tax cut intended specifically for average citizens? Or one which is intended to assist businesses? Nothing at all- except that they conflict with another Republican goal, a balanced-budget amendment.

Balancing the federal budget is in itself a desirable goal, and will probably become necessary at some point in the indefinite future. It is not yet clear, however, that the government is actually capable of doing so. In 1990 and 1993, lengthy and bitter political battles were fought over relatively minor spending cuts and tax increases. Much more will need to be done if we are to eliminate the deficit entirely within the next six fiscal years. Reducing taxes now will only make it that much harder.

The task seems even more formidable when one considers the nature of the work remaining. At one time, many people believed that scaling back welfare, trimming "pork-barrel spending" and cutting "waste, fraud and abuse" from the federal budget would be enough. Welfare, of course, comprises an insignificant fraction of the budget. Much of the "pork" and "waste, fraud and abuse" consists of federal programs which constituent groups not only approve of, but expect as their birthright. Republicans, every bit as indebted to constituents and special interests as Democrats are, find it just as difficult to resist their demands. In any case, by now we have learned that the deficit cannot be solved so easily.

In order to actually balance the budget within anything like the allotted six years, it would be necessary to freeze or cut spending in certain vital areas. These are the "entitlements," those programs which benefit Americans of every sort, but mostly the middle-class voters whom both Clinton and the GOP seek to please. Conservative intellectuals realize this, but conservative politicians go to great lengths not to acknowledge it, and for good reason.

At a Sunday rally in Flint, Michigan, Clinton charged that Republicans would bring about "cuts to Social Security, Medicare, student loans, AIDS prevention, and Head Start." This was your basic campaign fearmongering- in fact, no one on either side of the aisle dares suggest such cuts. Social Security, in particular, is often called the "third rail" of the U.S. budget (as in "touch it and you die"). In my opinion, this is as it should be. After all, we ought to expect something in return for our votes and our tax dollars. Yet if the Constitution requires the budget to be balanced by the year 2000, then (unless taxes are immensely increased) such cuts will probably have to be made.[1] Otherwise, there would be a serious risk of a United States budget being challenged and defeated in the courts on grounds of unconstitutionality.

In politics today, the best way to win short-term support is to make promises one may not be able to keep. Clinton did this in 1992. It worked for him then, but he has since paid the price in lost faith and increased cynicism. Just as the novelty of a Democratic White House has long since worn off, so too will the novelty of a Republican Congress. What then?

In the meantime, it would be best to leave Social Security alone. This program actually brings in more revenue than it spends. Ω

---

[1] Another seemingly impossible thing has just happened. For the first time in nearly half a century, the Republicans control both houses of Congress. They have a 53-seat majority in the Senate and a 230-seat majority in the House. These are admittedly not large majorities, but if the GOP maintains the same level of party discipline that it did as a Congressional minority, it will be more than enough for whatever they plan to achieve.

So, now that they have Congress, what they are going to do with it? Don't expect to get much out of them in the subject for the next few years. You'll be too busy celebrating their victory.

Well, they have earned themselves a grace period. Nonetheless, when the next session of Congress begins, the demands on the Republicans will be much greater. If the government re-divided, the GOP will be expected to offer an alternative vision to President Clinton's. It is one thing to base one's campaign on the simple anti-Washington nihilism, and another thing to try to run a whole branch of the government on that basis. So, do they have any ideas?

The answer is, yes and no. Their main set of ideas- indeed, the only one that has a name- is the so-called "Contract with America." This, you may recall, was the promise that several hundred Republican candidates, standing on the front steps of the Capitol, made on national TV. If granted a Congressional majority, they said, they would push for a number of reforms, including a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget by the year 2000, a "family tax credit," increased defense spending, a capital gains tax cut, term limits and welfare reform- all without touching Social Security or Medicare.

'Search' from 1

willingness to work with other members of the Committee members all played a part in his decisions. He insisted that every member of the Committee was serving "as an individual" and "not serving any constituents."

"I don't expect anyone to bring their own personal agenda to this Committee," said Duemling.

According to Duemling, the Presidential Search Committee, which will be meeting again November 18, will be "starting with an effort to define current need and objectives of the College at this time." Taking their cue from the Long Range Plan, the Committee will also put into words the professional and personal characteristics that we hope to find in a college president.

In addition to this, the Committee will also be considering professional help.

"The Committee will also interview executive search firms to determine if we wish to use one to assist us," said Duemling. Executive search firms, of which there are several in the general Washington, D.C. area, specialize in the activities related to creating and culling an applicant pool of the nature need to choose a president.

On November 30, the Presidential Search Committee will be holding a forum from 4 to 7 p.m., during which they will "welcome input from a broad spectrum" of people." The forum will be open to any member of the College community and the Committee "warmly welcomes suggestions from any quarter," said Duemling.

By the December 3 meeting of the Board of Visitors and Governors the Committee hopes to have a statement concerning the current needs and objectives of the College and the personal and professional characteristics needed for the next college president. Stressing that it is "fully the responsibility of the Board to choose the President," Duemling indicated that the Committee will be keeping the Board abreast of all developments in the search for a new Washington College president. Ω wrapping up her presentation to the faculty, "The quality of our education depends on it."

"Fessler" from 1

In an interview with The Elm following the faculty meeting, Wilson went into detail concerning many of the issues paramount in the minds of the student body in general and the SGA specifically.

"The SGA is going to do everything in its power to keep Professor Fessler," said Wilson. "She's really helped a lot of students here. I've talked to so many students who said straight-out that they wouldn't be here if it weren't for Fessler. ... Not one student I've talked to has been passive about this."

Please with the faculty response to the SGA report, Wilson said "I totally appreciate the three faculty members who said something. It was great." Concerning the motion, presented by Dr. George Spilich, Wilson said "I would like to say that while we appreciate the consideration ... We don't want a pat on the back. We want this decision reversed."

Referring to the work on the Long Range Plan and the many hours of discussion concerning involvement, retention and diversity. Wilson said "Releasing Professor Fessler is going against everything that the administration, faculty and students have been talking about."

Wilson also indicated that there maybe financial reasons for keeping Fessler on the faculty.

"Given our current financial state," said Wilson "it hardly seems wise to alienate 600 future donors by releasing Professor Fessler."

With the floor was opened to new business, several faculty members then expressed their support for the action taken by the SGA. Dr. Ruth Shoge, Reference and Instruction Librarian for Miller Library indicated that she felt that the SGA had taken an important step in officially voicing their opinion to the faculty. Following this, Dr. George Shivers made a motion to commend the SGA for its action and urge all those involved to reconsider their positions. The motion passed unanimously.

"I think there are a lot of faculty members who are upset," said Shivers in an interview with The Elm.

As the secretary for the campus chapter of the American Association of University Professors, Shivers indicated that the AAUP would also be becoming more involved in the debate over the decision not to renew Fessler's contract. Citing the third-year review of Fessler which was required by the College in order to extend her contract for a fourth year but never completed, Shivers said that "indicates that at that point, as least, the administration was treating her as if she were on tenure track." He indicated that the manner in which the situation has been handled since then is in conflict with national AAUP standards and shows an irregularity with the college practice. In addition to this, Shivers said that the AAUP was investigating the possibility that the letter received by Fessler informing her of her termination was too ambiguous and therefore is clearly in violation of standards of due notification.

College President Charles Trout would not speak to The Elm about "contract issues," but he was willing to discuss some of the issue surrounding what is now being called "the Fessler case."

About the AAUP concern that irregular appointments could be abused by an institution, Trout said "As the Long Range Plan takes hold and we move to 1150, you'll see more of this." He continued by indicating that irregular appointments of this nature were better than the alternative.

"Do you think it is better to have an army of adjuncts?" asked Trout, then answering himself "I think not."

Referring to the discussion over the terms placed on the English Department by the Appointments and Tenure Committee concerning the length of term for the redefined position, Trout again referred to the shift of students from the Humanities to the Sciences.

"We here the foot falls of students moving into fields other than English," said Trout. "The College has got to respond to that."

Concluding, Trout said "the case is still open," and that the Appointments and Tenure Committee was waiting for a formal reaction from the English Department. Ω

Message to students with calling cards:

Those at the switchboard would like to warn students with Washington College calling cards that giving out your calling card number to other people is a way to avoid problems is to keep your number totally secure. If you lose your card, report the loss to the switchboard as soon as possible and it will be deactivated immediately.

Using someone else's calling card without permission is theft, as well as a clear violation of the Honor Code.

Alcohol laws and their application on campus

Paul Bayne

For this week's security article I met with Mauritz Stetson. Stetson is the alcoholic beverage inspector for Kent County. His job involves enforcement of the laws that pertain to the purchasing of alcohol. This usually centers on the use of fake I.D.'s by people under 21 years old. Stetson provided me with information that students should be aware of involving the sale of alcohol.

Some of the most important things to know are the laws. Kent County has some specific laws that don't apply in all of Maryland. For example there is not one generic liquor license that applies to all venders of alcohol. The licenses are very specific and involve the amount of income an establishment takes in from the sale of alcohol. Class D establishments, or bars, are some of the most likely areas for fake I.D.'s to show up, with the exception of liquor stores themselves. To misrepresent your age at a class D establishment can lead to a maximum $500 fine for a first offense. If a judge feels your offense warrants it he can revoke your Maryland license. As far as liquor stores go, you may not even enter into one unless you are 21. Stetson wanted to make it very clear that he does not have to catch anyone in the act of falsely identifying themselves. He can get information secondhand from bartenders, liquor store employees, or anyone else, and still be able to arrest you.

Stetson, however, does not want his job to appear like it is him vs. the students. He does his job to protect the students or anyone else who might try to illegally obtain alcohol. He is in no way against students having fun and drinking in a responsible manner.

"These laws are made to protect", says Stetson, "... alcohol is a catalyst" when used irresponsibly. Crimes such as malicious destruction and fighting are often times the result of excessive drinking.

Stetson does think that things are getting better as far as the use of alcohol in and around W.C. He believes that the students of recent years are of a higher caliber than in the past and that they are more responsible for their actions. He attributes the changing views on alcohol to such groups as MADD and SADD. These groups have educated the public and pushed for tougher legislation on alcohol related crimes.

"Ten years ago drinking was an accepted right of passage for college students", says Stetson, "In more recent times "society has said no," to drinking. Compared to past years, drinking is down and so are related crimes and injuries. Many more students refuse to drink, and there is even a system called dry pledging for the fraternities where the pledges don't have to go through the traditional drinking rituals.

Another factor that has helped Stetson's efforts is the cooperation from the alcohol venders. Shopkeepers are more responsible about checking I.D.'s and reporting offenders. Bartenders are also more responsible about serving minors. Some of this increased consciousness is due to social change. Some is due to legislation. For example, some states have DRAM Shop laws. These laws allow the families of a victim who is hurt in an alcohol-related incident to sue the bar that served them. This places much more responsibility on the shoulders of the venders. Fear of lawsuits caused them to be more careful about serving minors and serving people who are already intoxicated. Maryland does not have such laws, but according to Stetson they are coming soon. He says that most venders in Kent County are very cooperative with him. He feels that very few would willingly sell alcohol to minors. But some venders are lax and just do enough checking to get by.

Stetson also pointed out some specific information about kegs. When someone buys a keg, he/she must sign for it. This person is then, by law, responsible for all those who drink from the keg. There is a seal on the keg to identify it and there is a $500 dollar fine for removing this seal. If it is removed, Stetson can easily find out where the keg came from since there are only 12 places that sell kegs in Kent County. With some quick phone calls, he can track a specific keg and find out who purchased it.

Stetson realizes that if people really want alcohol, they are going to get it somehow. The bottom line is responsible drinking. I'd like to thank Stetson for his time. If you have any specific questions for him you can get his number from Public Safety. Ω

The Vomit Vender: new venue for the views of various, vehement vriters

Becky Bryant

The Finely Calibrated Vomit Vendor Reception occurred at the O'Neill Literary House this past Wednesday night at 8 pm. Despite being an advising day, over 15 people showed up to munch on cheese (apparently a staple at all Literary House functions) and to witness the two editors, Ryan Walker and Jodie Clark, distribute their gifts to each contributor. No speeches were made as Katie Degentesh was handed her pink golf ball cleaner from the "Golf For Her" collection. Lucky for Katie, golf is becoming a new trend for Generation X-er's (check out the latest Newsweek. R.E.M.'s Mike Mills and Mike D. from Beastie Boys can be seen sporting the golf look on the greens). Marianne Culbertson, also a contributor, immediately opened her sponge toys and began fishing. She mentioned crabs and behold ... Edith Wharton appeared (the cat and house mascot).

The Finely Calibrated Vomit Vendor is, believe it or not, Ryan Walker's first student publication. The format was quite unusual. Some thought it was an accident, others responded with mock outrage. Dave Johnson, hands on hip, entered the room and cried, "Heh, this is all folded funny." When asked if the design was patented, Jodie Clark answered proudly, "No, but we have the template." The magazine is folded so that two triangular shaped flaps boldly protrude from the inside announcing the publication's name, The Finely Calibrated Vomit Vendor. The cover does not follow the usually proscribed modesty of previous student works. No blank page with just the title or a literary quote, this cover has the bold face title of Cortney Clulow's poem, "Gickle Fuld" sprawled across its top. The Finely Calibrated Vomit Vendor laughs in conventionality's face again with its binding. Each work was bound by a split straw and staples, making the selection from the pile difficult. Sean McDowell carefully weighed his options, "Should I choose The Vomit Vendor with the solid pink colored straw or the white straw with green stripes, or maybe red stripes?" After careful deliberation, Sean opted for the yellow straw binder. His mind would only be swayed if bendy straws were available.

Kevin Hoffman praised the format, adding that the short, quippy entries were smart considering "we have no attention span (I assume "we" was another allusion to Generation X). He called the pictures "brilliant" and considered the old guy in glasses his favorite. "The glasses make the picture." Colleen Glass wanted a public reading, but Marianne Culbertson initially declined, retorting, "Just eat it! Eat it!" Marianne and Katie later did an impromptu rendition of "Song for Old People."

The tension mounted, amid thrown food and pillow fights, due to contributor Cortney Clulow's absence. Two impostors, Dave Johnson and Paul Smail, finally confessed that they were not Cortney, but admitted that they were members of "P.W.W.T.T.A.C.C. - People who want to talk about Cortney Clulow". When Cortney arrived, she blinked and said, "This is it?" to an admiring assembly of Cortney fans. Ω

First-year Experience Task Force calls for student involvement

A task force has been formed to review the Freshman year experience and the curriculum in general. The purpose of this task force is to make revisions, subject to faculty approval, which will hopefully improve the quality of our education to make this a school that is held in high esteem for its strong academic standards, and a place where students want to be. Right now we are in the beginning stages, trying to decide what it is about Washington College that can be improved, or most definitely be changed.

I, Leti Lyford-Pike, am one of three students on this task force. My opinion is that to make our work successful, there needs to be strong student input. We have to be an important part of this if there is to be any change. After all, this is our education and we are the ones who will benefit or lose from the changes that are made. On November 23, the students in this task force will present a report on the opinions of students. We all need to make this a strong report that is backed up with serious and real concerns of the student body of W.C. Please answer the following questions and send them to Katie Langan, Siu Yee Ng, or Leti Lyford-Pike through BlitzMail or student mail. What you have to say is VERY important and this is the time to say it because something is being done!

- What did / do you dislike about the freshman year? What can be improved?
- Specifically discuss what you think about distribution.
- If W.C. was your first choice, why?
- If not, why did you come here? What did the other schools offer that we do not have?
- Are you satisfied with the choices of majors and their requirements?

Please add your own comments on anything else that concerns you. Thank you very much.

China & Capitalist Reform
Siu-Yee Ng,
Junior Foreign Service Officer

New Zealand & the South Pacific: View from Auckland
Marcia Mowbray,
Junior Foreign Service Officer

International House, 16 November, 7 p.m.

The Goldstein Program & the Anthropology Club present

South Africa - Transition and Transformation

Professor Steven Stedman
School of Advanced International Studies,
John Hopkins University

November 17, Hynson Lounge, 7:30 p.m.

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

crud.

creative ranting under duress.

by Sarah Bell

don't know what to write ...
don't know what to write ...
creative writing under duress ... can writing be creative under duress ... doesn't duress have something to do with pregnancy ... no ... maybe not ... so much to do ... have to write this article ... another article about yoga ...

yoga ... how can people be so flexible ... i failed my flexibility test in high school ... i couldn't even touch my toes while everyone else around me was doing flips and placing their arms and legs in positions which i thought inspector gadget could only do ...

go go gadget arm ... i loved that show ... no i hated that show ...

so beautiful out today ... the leaves have all changed their colors ... letting fall have its way with them ... carelessly discarded on the ground ... i remember when i was little playing in the leaves ... jumping in them ... not a care in the world ... taking for granted all that life had to offer ... i still do that ... how can you not ...

what's the time ... two hours until crew ... where has the day gone ... time is going by so fast ... slipping through my fingers like sand in a sieve ... seems almost abnormal ... maybe it's just me ...

what to write ... think ... i can't think anymore ... all i ever do ... why can't someone else do the thinking for a change ... too much work ... can never say no ... wanting to do everything ...

why is it so warm ... thought it was fall ... feels like spring ... wish it would just get cold ... stop teasing me ... my pits are dripping ... need more Degree ... how does it know when your body gets hot ... when life turns up the heat Degree ... Degree ... Degree does something about body-heat activated ...

i hate commercials ...
just a good ole boy never meaning no harm na na na na na na na trouble with the law since the day they were born making their way the only way they know how that's just a little bit more than the law will allow ... the dukes of hazzard rock ... good ole boy and roscoe ... luke ... boss hog ... daisy duke ... where did they go ... not even reruns anymore ... last i saw of them was when i switched on the tv and the country music channel came on and there was luke singing his heart out about ... i don't remember ...

i'm so tired ... just want to sleep ... dream about something nice ... leave this world for a while ... why am i so stressed ... only a freshman ... maybe i like to think that i am stressed ... makes me feel like i actually have a life ... feels good to complain and whine every now & a while ... my head hurts ... my legs hurt ... no one loves me ... no one cares ... i think i'll go eat worms ... feel much better ... feel a lot lighter ... the weight has been lifted ... but i am still tired and my legs still hurt ...

what makes me think i can start clean slated the hardest to learn was the least complicated ... december third ... philly ... spectrum ... i am there ... never been to philly ... haven't been much of anywhere ...

have i really been on the eastern shore of maryland for a good part of my life ... that's sad ... really sad ... need a change of scenery ... tired of small towns ... probably end up living the other half of my life here ... even more sad ... no ... shouldn't say that ... love it here ... most of the time ...

can't think anymore ... too many thoughts flying around ... can't catch them ...

better off ...
should have called this creative writing under stress ...

Campus Voices

Question by Philip McQuade

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: If you could travel anywhere in the world, where would it be?

I have no idea. Probably Australia. It's a place I've always been interested to go but never have. It's kind of far.

Danielle Green, Freshman

New Orleans, for Mardi Gras. Just one big party -- my kind of place.

Kurt Kroeger, Freshman

I want to go on a cross-country tour of all the Sizzler Steakhouses in the U.S. Maybe I could get on a TV commercial. I could be like the Snapple lady.

Greg Walker, Junior

I'm going with Kurt.

Wenona Daniel, Freshman

Tennessee. I like it.

Brett Gaba, Freshman

Hawaii -- to visit my family there, and to party a little. OK, a lot.

Peter Torigoe, Freshman

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin and Jeff roam Chestertown in search of bargains.

This week we went to a bowling alley, for lack of anything better to do. We discovered that bowling is more than just fat, middle-aged white men. It is a family sport, enjoyed by generations of Americans from all cultural backgrounds.

Kevin: Can you introduce yourself, and where we are?

Bowling Alley Manager: Tom Fantasy, Manager of the Queen Anne's Bowling Center in Chestertown.

K: Is bowling a popular thing to do around this area? Do you get a lot of business?

T: I don't get a lot of business, but it's still pretty popular with a few people.

K. How's the business with the college students?

T: Slow.

K: Not many college students come up here?

T: Not as many as I would like.

K: I know a lot of the people at my school like to bowl, but most of them just don't know where to go. I see a lot of people throwing things, so maybe if we gave them a bowling ball, they'd throw that.

T: Last year, I ran an ad in your paper, offering fifty cents a game, and nobody came up that much.

K: Would you be willing to do that again?

T: I might think about it, yeah.

K: Something like a discount?

T: They already get a discount. If they come in before six o'clock, before leagues, on weekdays, they can bowl for a dollar and a quarter a game.

K: Is that a discount that everybody gets?

T: That's for students only. Doesn't matter if you're in kindergarten, up through college. As long as you have a student ID.

K: What kind of stuff happens here?

T: We have 12 lanes of duckpin, and 12 lanes of tenpin.

K: I noticed a sign that says: "No Lofting", why is that?

T: No lofting. Lofting hurts the lanes.

K: Do you ever have anyone come here in a real bad mood, and just start throwing the balls at people, and lofting them around the room?

T: They loft it; they get barred. If they give me a hard time, I call the police.

K: Did anyone ever start throwing bowling balls at the police?

T: No, we haven't had anything that serious.

K: Have you ever bowled a perfect game?

T: Yes. Do you have student ID's?

K: Are you trying to dispute the fact that we work for the paper?

T: I'm just making sure, is all.

K (after flashing his student ID) : Did you think we were renegades that just go around interviewing people that run bowling alleys, or something?

T: No.

K: Are you convinced now that we are, in fact, college students?

T: Yeah. I mean, I could tell you that I was from the FBI.

K: That's true, but you work in a bowling alley. I figured you ran the place, but you very well could be an FBI agent disguised as a bowling alley manager. Can you give us some form of proof that you are who you're claiming to be?

T: There's my license on the wall.

K: Is that authentic?

T: It'd better be, or I'd be in trouble.

K: What's with the bowling shoes? Is there a specific place you buy them from? A company?

T: Either from New York, or Pennsylvania, or way out west.

K: Do you have a problem with people stealing bowling shoes?

T: Just a little bit.

K: At college I noticed one guy wearing bowling shoes, but I don't think he stole them.

T: I'm kind of busy right now, so I'm going to have to work.

K: Okay, thank you. Should I mention to the students that they have a discount?

T: Well, let me think about the fifty cents-a-game discount, but they do have the student discount - just a dollar and a quarter a game.

K: Thank you.

Jeff: All right! Time to bowl.

K: No, we're going to Burger King.

J: No. Bowling time now.

K: I'm hungry.

J: So? I need to bowl.

K: I had to do all the talking. I worked up an appetite. I need some food.

J: Yeah, how about that? You always get to do all the talking.

K: That's because you don't talk.

J: I'd talk if you ever gave me the chance. You never shut up!

K: Look, I put up with that funny hat of yours. That's why the bowling manager didn't think we were students. What kind of college student wears an Indiana Jones hat?

J: Shut up. It's your fault that we never get discounts. If you'd just let me talk for a change, I could talk them into giving us a discount.

K: What happens when I shut up? Huh? What happens? Dead silence. It's like you're in a coma over there under that funny hat of yours.

J: Look, I don't have to put up with this. I'm the one with a car on campus. Without me you'd have to walk to get discounts.

K: I'll walk!

J: Walk to where? Are you going to get a discount at the dining hall or something?

K: Maybe I will! It's my recording equipment! How are you going to get an interview without a microphone?

J: I'll bring Joseph along to transcribe the conversation as it happens!

K: What conversation? You never talk! You can forget about Joseph coming with you. He's coming with me!

J: Joseph is my roommate!

K: But he likes me better! He throws pretzels at you!

J: No, he thought I was hungry and was trying to give me some food.

K: Forget it, Jeff. This just isn't working out. I think it's time we went our separate ways. I'll just do the discount column myself.

J: You got it all wrong. I'm going to be doing the discount column, and I'll really get discounts. Ω

Earth Notes

BY Andrea Nolan

This weekend I found a fossilized shark's tooth, and got to thinking about duct tape. I owe a great debt to that magnificent silver tape. My very existence at this college is credited to duct tape in more ways than one. When I wrote my college essays so many eons ago I was wearing my lucky Chuck Taylors, which were held together by many layers of duct tape. Shoes, which by all rights should have died in 1989, were preserved until late spring of 1991, sustaining me through the final stretches of high school. Last week my right Teva broke into two — splitting right across the mid-sole. Duct tape rejoined the separated sandal, and should sustain it through the winter. But duct tape extends far beyond mere shoe maintenance. I have found that if you can get duct tape to make it through the dryer the first time, the hole that it is covering will remain patched for at least six months. With duct tape I have patched canoes, hung posters, mended fences, and insulated drafty windows.

Beyond duct tape, I have always sworn by the Swiss army knife. I have owned one since my thirteenth birthday, and had not passed a day without it in my pocket until September 5, when I lost my knife. Oh, it has been many sad months that I have passed without my knife. However, the only good thing that has come of this trauma is that I discovered the many virtues of a room key. A room key can cut things (such as duct tape), it can be used in self-defense, it can scratch names into plaster walls. I watched a show on wilderness safety, and they recommended keys as one of the best gripping agents to use to climb out with if you ever fell through ice. Heck, keys can even be used to open up a room.

Which brings me back to the shark's teeth. I found it this past weekend on a camping trip with my Chesapeake Regional Studies class as we explored the upper stretches of the Wye River. It seems that some 10 million years ago the Wye River did not exist, but rather was buried underneath a coastal sea, along with the rest of the Eastern Shore. Where we now sit, studying all the secrets of the universe, a coastal sea teemed with many creatures, including sharks. Not just little sand sharks either, but gigantic, 50-foot great white sharks. Fifty feet is a lot of shark. These gigantic sharks prowled the warm seas, with nary a thought of the flabby two-legged things that would take over their terrain once the seas receded in the earth's endless succession of ice ages.

The shark's tooth I found led me to think of these more basic times, to almost yearn for them. In the modern world it is impossible to be completely self-sufficient. There is simply too much technology to master every tool you use. But don't get me wrong, I am not arguing for a return to the caves — or the seas. My only point is that we should make some attempt for simplicity. To move away from using every and all gadgets. Moreover, to cease being afraid of the gadgets we do have. My rebellion against civilization is manifested in duct tape, a very product of the modern world. Fight fire with fire I say. With duct tape I can forestall the death of favorite clothes and more importantly, I make a slight step towards self-sufficiency. I cannot make a new pair of Tevas, but I can lengthen the life of the Tevas I own now. Sure, I could buy some cobbler's glue, and mend my sole that way, but that really only increases the complexity of my life. What do I need with shoe glue? What other use would I ever have for it? The glue might work a little bit better than my tape, but I don't care. I like my duct tape, and I'm sticking with it.

So mount a rebellion against the world. Fix your worn-out wallet with duct tape, and carve open a jammed lid with a room key. Make your own tools out of what you already own, and fly in the face of convention. I personally think the coming senior class should buy the school a gigantic roll of duct tape as their senior gift. With enough tape you can save anything — even Washington College. Ω

Tied up in knots

Sarah Bell

Wendy Morrison has been a yoga teacher for over 18 years. Eighteen years! She must really know her stuff. She has been teaching here in Chestertown for about ten years.

"I came across this book about yoga and I tried some of the different positions," Morrison said. "I liked it from the beginning. Then I met with a yoga instructor and realized that there was a lot more to it. I learned the importance of breathing and how it connected both your mind and body."

She has had many teachers in her 18 years of yoga. One is Rama Vernin, who has put together many organizations dealing with yoga. She believes that if yoga were brought into today's society, conflicts could be resolved and peace could be won.

"In India, yoga is a practice used to quiet the mind. It is a body-mind system," Morrison said. "It is not only physical postures but breathing techniques and meditations, as well as living by good rules. But in the West, we seem to think of it as more of the physical postures. That is one part of it, but it is also a way of learning to keep your mind focused on one thing at a time while you are in the postures.

"Yoga strengthens the body and balances hormonal systems. It stretches you out and makes you more limber. A lot of people think of yoga as tying oneself into knots. In yoga, you work at your own level, working with the "edge" of strength and stretch ... paying attention to your body."

Morrison's classes meet Tuesdays from 5:30 to 7:00 in Washington College's dance studio and Thursdays at the same time in the Kent County Library. In her classes, you will learn about the postures and how they are properly done, chanting, breathing, and a little of the philosophy behind it all.

What you will get from the classes is learning how to relax and focus. Your muscles will gradually become strengthened and balanced.

"Relaxation is the main theme in yoga," Morrison said. "It's a practice that grows with your life. It is always changing and you can always adjust a pose to fit your body situation. You can never grow out of it.

"When you are young, yoga could be more of a physical thing to you but as you get older, it could turn into something more metaphysical. I have some 70-year old women doing head stands in my classes. There are no limitations. Someone told me once that yoga was like a good friend."

A good friend or not, Morrison's yoga seems a lot different than the local YMCA's course in yoga. Yoga goes back a long way, written in Sanskrit in India. There is a lot of history and philosophy behind it. It is no longer the act of tying oneself in knots. If you want that, watch Inspector Gadget. Ω

IBM Club: The Adjusting Minority

Karen Sieger and Colleen Glass

Despite the domination of Macs on this campus, there are a number of IBM users about. The IBM club has been organized by and is designed to bring together this minority and give them the problem-solving help which the college is unable to provide, be it technical support or problems with those tricky DOS commands.

The IBM club meets once every two weeks and discusses a variety of topics from the future of DOS and Windows to technical support to new variations for a BBS (Bulletin Board System) on campus. Members can access other members if any problems arise with their system. The Realm of Unconsciousness BBS is almost ready to be accessed by students. This board, which will probably be multi-line, will give IBM users access to a number of conferences, shareware files, and other areas much like the BBSes found on the Internet. Some types of shareware and PD (public domain) files which will be accessible from the BBS are Windows and DOS utilities, virus scanners, video games, various text files, and sound files. These files will provide fascinating additions to an IBM-using college student's repertoire.

Until now, in order to access BlueMail, for instance, an IBM user would have to go to the library or to a Mac hooked up to the network. The college has provided a slip into the Macintosh system, so now even the IBM users can access the network from the comfort of their own rooms. This slip allows IBM users with a modem to access E-mail clients, Turbo Gopher, etc., just like on a Mac. While the speed of connection and file transfer may be slower than that on a Mac computer, the convenience of being able to connect to the Internet from your own room is a welcome change.

The IBM Club would like to thank Tim Kirk, the acting head of the Computing Center, for his valuable support. Without his help, none of this would have been possible. One of the purposes of the IBM club is to provide a unified group for the College to work with and insure that the needs of the non-Mac using student are met.

The next meeting of the IBM club is on Monday, November 21 at 9:00 p.m. in the Hynson Study Lounge. We hope to see you there. Ω

New Yorker writer

Mavis Gallant

will be reading from her work

November 18, 4 p.m.
Norman James Theater
presented by The O'Neill Literary House

The Sophie Kerr Committee presents

Margaret Holley

reading from her poetry

Sophie Kerr Room, Library, November 14, 8 p.m.

Chestertown Natural Foods

"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"

101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1877

BAY TO BAY TRADERS

207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442

Ray-Ban Off Street Parking Next To The Store Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm Montis

patagonia Columbia Sportswear Company IBEX Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks

10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS WITH STUDENT I.D.

TANSPORT ORIGINAL UGG Australia Barrecrafters Car Racks

Get your message across:
A few tips for advertising on campus

Mindie Kaplan

Though the walls of Washington College are littered with the dozens of posters placed around campus each week, students often complain that they are not hearing information about what is happening around campus. One of the reasons for this is that campus advertising, when it happens at all, is often ineffectual because it is done improperly.

Take, for example, the SGA's regular band earlier this semester. I, personally, remember seeing one large, relatively plain poster in front of the dining hall a day or two in advance. There might have been a second one in the CAC. At least, that's what the other students I asked seemed to remember, if they realized that it was advertised at all.

The second SGA event, The Frogs, was a considerable improvement. There were plenty of posters about and they even BlitzMailed reminders to all the students on campus. No one mentioned exactly who (or what) The Frogs were, but that air of mystery might have even added to the turnout.

The fact remains, campus advertising is pretty bad. Everyone on campus has been inundated beyond the point of saturation with the SIG Halloween Party. Perhaps the Sig's were right in shunning printed posters (at least, if there were any, I must have missed them). They all look the same after a while, except for a few creative suggestions like those found in the posters for Wired and The Vomit Vender.

Now The Vomit Vender, a campus literary magazine, had the best poster campaign I have ever seen on campus. Posters were funny, contained creative photos and drawings, and best of all, there were a bunch of different posters designed to appeal to different people and motivations.

Don't overlook the importance of having one or two different posters appear at a time only to be replaced by even better posters when students become bored with the first few. The Vomit Vender had the perfect plan for long-term poster campaign and, sure enough, they're not hurting for submissions for their magazine.

The most effective short-term poster campaign I've seen was done by Brigid Kolish when she ran for Freshman class president. If you happened to miss the huge, glittery, multicolored posters that appeared in strategic points all over the heart of campus, then you are quite simply blind.

The fact is that many students are bored and feel that there is little to do on campus. This can be easily changed if the administration would advertise properly. How can this be done? Well, here are a few suggestions that will probably increase the attendance at your club's next big meeting or special event:

1. Advertise at least a week in advance.
2. If it costs money, be sure that there is a campus payday between the day your campaign starts and the event so that students can put aside a dollar or two.
3. A day or two before the event, replace all the posters that have been removed. The biggest problem with posters that are put up well in advance and forgotten is that they tend to get destroyed.
4. Don't let your poster get lost in a sea of similar pieces of paper. Make sure it stands out either because of its design or because it is placed where there are few other posters.
5. The more the merrier! Put posters everywhere (but don't forget to take them down and recycle them when it's all over).
6. If you can't flood the campus with paper, make every piece count. Use lots of different colors and glitter or magazine cuttings so it stands out.
7. Both WacHappenings and The Elm provide free advertising. Be sure and let The Elm know at least seven days in advance to insure that it gets placed before the paper goes to print.
8. Most importantly, don't assume that everyone knows what it is all about. The infamous "in your face" GALA campaign of last semester could get away with it, but probably your group can't— especially if you have a history of not advertising well.
9. Last but not least, have fun with your campaign. Isn't that what it's supposed to be all about? Ω

Making the most of your Mac:
Computer workshop offered on campus

Mindie Kaplan

Washington College now offers computing classes for the Macintosh user. These classes will offer everything from basic computing skills to the use of advanced scanning and layout programs such as Aldus PageMaker and Quark. The classes are run by Jeff Chaffin, who first thought of offering them as a solution to meet the obvious need on campus. Chaffin's animated conversation immediately sweeps one away into the fascinating world of electronic information.

"People have to develop their own skills," he explained. "You can't always have someone to do it for you." Chaffin sees these classes as a way of empowering students, staff, and faculty alike. Up to this point, people were being given the equipment, but there was little organized training for its use. Each new Mac user was individually tutored by the computing center, a process that wasted both time and limited resources. These classes will work much more efficiently. Offered three times a week, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, they are specifically designed to become an integral part of the work week. There has been some discussion about also allocating Monday evening to be a fun, student-oriented session to specifically cover the needs and desires of the students at Washington College.

Chaffin originally BlitzMailed the campus with this idea and the response was overwhelming. Over 90 people replied within a 24-hour period to his query. Even the response to this week's first, most basic, training session was encouraging. Six people, primarily staff, showed up at 9:45 Wednesday morning to learn how to operate their Macs. One staff member walked happily and animatedly toward the computing classroom Thursday afternoon, expressing her eagerness to master the mighty Macintosh. The purpose of these classes is to, in the words of Jeff Chaffin, "empower individuals." A computer should be an aid in both the classroom and the workplace, not a hindrance or a source of anxiety. These classes are developing skills that can be taken anywhere and are useful in many future academic, work environment, and social situations that may be faced. Chaffin sees a dividing line growing between those who are computer-literate and those who are not.

"If you can't maneuver through the computer world, you're dead," Chaffin explained pointedly. The impact of information technology on the world is remarkable. It has transformed the college environment, for example, into "continuously learning communities," according to Chaffin. "What that means is that it's not just the students who are here to learn. So much is available and it is changing so rapidly that we all have to learn from each other."

Chaffin is a man on a crusade. He is trying to "find ways to energize Washington College" through computer technology. "E-mail can break down hierarchies and is a wonderful thing in discussion groups. Suddenly you can talk to people in your academic or professional discipline and receive instant feedback. You can talk to people with similar interests globally."

The first week of classes covered Mac Basics, such as how to get the machine going, what the finder is, and how to select, open, close, adjust, file, drag, copy, print and trash applications and files. The next week will cover BlitzMail. Then Chaffin expects to cover campus connections to printers and servers. After this, classes will cover the library system and other specific programs.

The most important part of the structure of these classes is that they are incredibly dynamic. Topics are chosen only a week in advance, so they easily mold themselves to the needs and wishes of the campus. Any office and department can schedule a special class. Chaffin has also offered to go to classes, department meetings, and anywhere that it is convenient for those who need instruction. Students and staff or faculty members who wish to teach a class on a specific topic are encouraged to do so. E-Mail Chaffin to teach your own class.

Computers cannot be ignored. Professors Shad, Wright, Scout, Malone, Briggs, Cades, Wolff, and the entire psychology department as well as many others have used computers as a part of their classrooms. Even the task force on curriculum reform is setting up an E-Mail address so people can easily BlitzMail them with suggestions. Jeff Chaffin does not see himself as generating all of this; he is responding to a need.

Classes are offered Tuesday and Thursday mornings from 8:45 to 9:45, Tuesday and Thursday afternoons from 3:30 to 4:30, and Wednesday afternoons from 3:30-4:30. Chaffin expects to cover two topics a week, adding one new topic each week. Don't miss this valuable opportunity to become a part of the information age! Ω

Attention all IBM users!
Announcing a new service from the Computing Center

If you own an IBM and have a high speed modem, you can use it to dial into the Washington College network and use the wide range of network clients that you've seen your Mac friends use.

This will give you direct access to mail, news, mosaic, gopher and telnet.

Contact Tim at ext. 7277 for further details.

Andy's

Friday, November 11
Greg Greenway is one of the most impressive singer-songwriters we've heard. Funny, passionate, lyrical ... incredibly energetic. A MUST SEE.
Saturday, November 12
The Bay Country Gentlemen Bluegrass and country from our favorite local artists (+1 from Balto.)

Miller Library and Academic Computing present

Making the Most of Your Macintosh

Weekly classes on a variety of Mac topics

BLITZMAIL:
Tues.: 8:45 - 9:45 & 3:30 - 4:30
Wed.: 3:30 - 4:30

USING THE CAMPUS NETWORK:
Thurs.: 8:45 - 9:45 & 3:30 - 4:30

Casey Computing Classroom contact Jeff Chaffin for more information

The Good Doctor is in

Sarah Bell

How could I pass up the opportunity of seeing my lovely yet slightly neurotic roommate Cortney in Neil Simon's "The Good Doctor"? It was an offer that I couldn't refuse. So I went and saw her Saturday night and absolutely loved the play, not to mention Cortney. I was also very excited to see that my good friend Chris also had quite a few roles in it.

The first act was made up of four well-done scenes (I feel like I am describing a steak). The first scene, titled " The Writer", starred Chris Watkins. Did I mention he was a good friend of mine? Chris fit the character well, being a writer himself. His character spoke directly to the audience, telling us about his study where he wrote his stories. He was constantly interrupting himself, "making a note" of an idea for a short story that had occurred to him. The change into the second scene was smoothly made, with Chris telling us one of his short story ideas.

I will not ramble on about all the scenes, but I will tell you about my favorite ones, which is hard because I liked them all. "The Sneeze"; however, was one of the funniest, perhaps because I have seen it happen before. OK, OK ... I have been in a similar situation before. All right .. it's happened to me! I have sneezed on someone before! Yes! Yes! The scene was written about me! My secret is out ... my life is over! (Sarah looks around with a wild look in her eyes, realizing that she must get more sleep). Anyway, Jake Mullins, Jennifer Friedman, Rachel Roll, and David Johnson all were wonderful. I especially loved the part when David Johnson did the sneeze in slow motion.

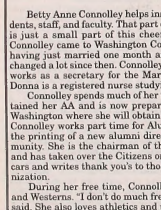
Another one of my favorite scenes was "The Surgery". Marshall Norton played Kuryatin while David Johnson ... do you mind if I call you Dave ... played the sexton. Unfortunately, to the sexton's dismay, he had a bad tooth that needed to be pulled out. You can only imagine what this scene was like with Dave in it. With his shoe falling apart and flapping in the breeze and both of them rolling on the floor, trying to get Dave's tooth out ... it was hilarious. It was one of those scenes where you were unsure where the script started and where it ended. Dave was sliding one way while Marshall was skidding another way across the stage. It was truly an owmy-stomach-hurts-because-I-laughed-too-much scene.

Of course I can't forget the whole reason why I saw the play ... Cortney. She was outstanding in both of her scenes but I liked "The Audition" the best. Hey, I didn't know my roommate could act. Didn't know she even had talent. Didn't know she could speak. Didn't know ... just kidding, Cort. She fit well into the role of the quiet, timid, young girl, trying out for a part in a play. She was well deserving of those flowers that I bought her.

My last favorite scene was "A Defenseless Creature". Richard McKee led another brilliant performance along with Emily Grush and Elizabeth Ellinghaus. I think I hyperventilated during that scene because I was laughing so hard. One question ... was the desk supposed to fall over?

Well, my hat would go off to you all ... if I wore a hat ... on an excellent job. Cary Kelly, the director, produced a fine ensemble of actors and actresses. I look forward to seeing more plays with this group of actors in it. And to think ... I live with one of them! Ω

To all interested students and faculty members:



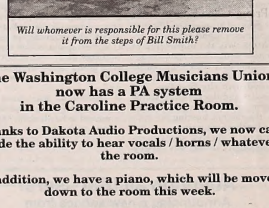
the Dale Adams Heritage Exchange and Campus Christian Fellowship are sponsoring

A Night of Gospel

December 3,1994 , Tawes Theatre, 7 to 10 p.m.

There will be many different singers, groups, and churches involved. If you know someone who would like to participate, let Tanae Coates know and they will be put on the program. If there is a special someone, or even your church from home, that you want invited feel free to contact her. She'll put them on her mailing list. All are welcome to attend. A cash donation and / or non-perishable items will be accepted at the door. We would love to have you attend.

Washington College Staff Profile



Betty Anne Connolley helps insure that mail is properly delivered to students, staff, and faculty. That part of her life, the only one many students see, is just a small part of this cheerful, mild-mannered woman's busy life. Connolley came to Washington College in 1957 with a high school diploma, having just married one month after her arrival in the area. Things have changed a lot since then. Connolley has two children, Mary and Donna. Mary works as a secretary for the Maryland Commission on Higher Education. Donna is a registered nurse studying for her BSN.

Connolley spends much of her time outside of work studying. She has obtained her AA and is now preparing at Chesapeake College to transfer to Washington where she will obtain her bachelor's degree. In addition to that, Connolley works part time for Alumni Development Services, preparing for the printing of a new alumni directory. Connolley is also active in the community. She is the chairman of the Old Chestertown Neighbor Association and has taken over the Citizens on Patrol organization where she organizes cars and writes thank you's to those who participate and donate to the organization.

During her free time, Connolley enjoys watching "Unsolved Mysteries" and Westerns. "I don't do much free reading because of all the studying," she said. She also loves athletics and used to play softball and basketball.

Things have changed at the college since she first began her employment here 35 years ago. Back in 1957 the school had only 300-odd students. "Back then you knew all the students," she said. "You still get to know a lot of the students by name and by face but you can't know them all now." The college has gotten a lot more extravagant in that time as well. "If we had a couple of pencils and pens we were doing good!" Connolley laughed.

Will whomever is responsible for this please remove it from the steps of Bill Smith?

The Washington College Musicians Union now has a PA system in the Caroline Practice Room.

Thanks to Dakota Audio Productions, we now can provide the ability to hear vocals / horns / whatever in the room.

In addition, we have a piano, which will be moved down to the room this week.

All this and the "Musicians' Personal Service" are available to anyone who joins the Union.

If you are a musician of any kind, and want to play with other people, contact Luther 'Duder' Dudich, either by Blitzmail or at ext. 8924.

HOROSCOPES

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21)
Your sex life is lacking virility. Pay more attention to the spiritual aspects than the physical relief.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20)
Several of your acquaintances have remarked on the aesthetic value of your family line. Pick the right partner and this will be passed down.
Aquarius (1/21-2/18) Your fish tank is leaking. Seal up those cracks or you'll be gasping for air and there won't be anyone around with an oxygen tank.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) Stop telling your friends that they would look better with a different haircut or nose ring. This will increase your ability to attract finely basted turkeys.
Aries (3/21-4/19) Don't be put off by others' insecurities. Their inability to understand you is a fault of their own.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) Paranoia is not fertilizer for the soul. If you think everyone is a member of the agency, you should stop doing those background checks. Being cynical will get you nowhere.
Gemini (5/21-6/21) Your inner is clashing with your outer again. Make tea for each side and pour sugar into your differences.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) That anger is endangering those around you. Put some Neosporin on your wounds instead of inflicting pain on everyone else.
Leo (7/23-8/22) You lost a job, but now you have more free time to give that boyfriend lessons. Other men have commented on your bodacious body so bask in the attention. It won't last.
Virgo (8/23-9/23) O.K.. We've seen those cat eyes electrifying the night. WATCH OUT! There's a big chonkin' dog comin' after you!
Libra (9/24-10/23) What happened to that tranquil pond? All we see now is the Loch Ness monster.
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) Your lashes are long and so are the hours that you are in need of your lover's kiss. Don't be devoured by the pain of parting.
by Luna and Ember

Spider's

(Formerly Newt's)

Hillside Bar

Special Draft Night

Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Midnight Madness

Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Must be 21 or older

Dropped Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

Beauty and the Beast Together At Last ... Diamanda Galas and John Paul Jones Engage in The Sporting Life

Rock and Roll is a man's world. Or so the corporate greed heads and MTV vampires would have us believe. Sure, we occasionally get some pop pabulum like Madonna or Tiffany (whatever happened to Tiffany anyway? Did she ever graduate from high school?), but except for a few notable exceptions, Rock n' Roll has remained an almost exclusively male medium. In the words of the mighty and magnificent Mr. James Brown, "It's a man's man's man's man's world. But it don't mean nothing without a woman or a girl."

Well kids, the times they are a-changing. More and more "girl" groups are making the scene and showing the boys what it means to rock. The Indigo Girls, Bikini Kill, Hole, etc. have found it within their hearts to change the rock world from a male-centric playground where the only girls allowed to join in are the ones in spandex waiting backstage, into a bit more of a diverse medium. More power to 'em! From the time that white boy Elvis decided to play "black" music, rock and roll has prided itself on its ability to challenge the norms ... and it should stay that way, but it's not going to do it by latching itself to the tits and, let's face it, offensive principles that happened to be around during its inception.

Which brings us to this week's musical selection: Diamanda Galas with John Paul Jones (yes, that John Paul Jones) together on an album entitled The Sporting Life. This one is not for the kiddies. I'm assuming that you know who John Paul Jones is. Diamanda Galas, I imagine, is a different story. Well, she's got a voice like a rabid hyena with a three and a half octave range, and politics designed to scare the poo out of anyone with even a hint of a penis. This woman (some would say demon) has been kicking around Avant Garde circles for a number of years, releasing such notable works as Masque of the Red Death, The Divine Punishment, and Plague Mass, a work dealing with the AIDS epidemic. She is abrasive, inflammatory, and downright scary.

Listening to the music of Diamanda Galas takes a certain amount of self-loathing. You've got to either be in a bad mood or really want to be in a bad mood to sit through even a few minutes of her wailing wall of sound vocals. However, the woman has quite a set of lungs and her work, though not exactly aesthetically pleasing, has a weird sort of appeal to it. To paraphrase a quote I once read describing the Butthole Surfers, "Dance to it? I don't know, but you could kill to it."

Behind the shrill screams and creepy piano (oh yes, she's also an accomplished keyboardist) lies the reason for listening to Diamanda's work - power. She is without a doubt one of the most powerful vocalists I have ever heard. When speaking of her work, Diamanda likens herself to the shamans and witches of old, using her voice as a tool to conjure up spirits and emotions. Her live performances function as art on two levels: what she is doing on stage, and what is going on in the audience. People squirm, curse, and ponder in confusion the sounds emanating from the throat of this almost-beautiful-but-not-quite woman. There is something unholy in her voice ... the sound of Doomsday coming on all around you the day that you decided to be on God's bad side. It takes over your head and kicks around, daring you to ignore it. It is a vocal power unparalleled in music today. Some would probably call it obnoxious, just as they would call Diamanda herself obnoxious. But the fact cannot be ignored that the girl has talent in truckloads. She just happened to choose to use it for evil.

I don't even consider the above an adequate description of Diamanda Galas. She is one of those people that you just have to hear to understand. The Sporting Life is a good place to begin. Think of it as a primer for her more, shall we say, Avant Garde stuff. The album is a melange of moody cabaret music, ethereal sound collage, layered screeching, and rhythm-heavy heresy. With John Paul Jones at the wheel accompanying on 4, 5, and 8 string bass, the vocals are surprisingly accessible, and at times even pleasing. In fact, at some points this album could almost even be described as "danceable" ... a new adjective for Diamanda.

That's the sound, what about the message? I think the song that sums up the feeling of this album the best would have to be the title track, "The Sporting Life," in which we listen as a group of women / harpies decide what to do to the man that they have found. I tell you, it ain't pretty. Guaranteed to send the pulses of every male listener through the roof. Diamanda is not a kind woman ... she is an angry one.

In general, I would have to strongly suggest going out and getting a copy of The Sporting Life. You may not find yourself popping it in the stereo at your next party, but it makes a hell of a mood piece for a date. Ω

Upcoming Events • Upcoming Events

November 15:
Prong • The Bayou in Georgetown, call (202) 333-2897

November 17:
Sugar with Magnapop • Hammerjacks, call (410) 659-ROCK

November 16-17:
Live, Fatima Mansions, and Weezer • Radio Music Hall, call (410) 481-SEAT

November 18:
The Connells • Radio Music Hall, call (410) 481-SEAT
Steel Pulse • Hammerjacks, call (410) 659-ROCK

November 26:
Widespread Panic • Hammerjacks, call (410) 659-ROCK

November 27:
Green Day and Pansy Division • Patriot Center, call (410) 481-SEAT

November 28:
Candlebox, Flaming Lips • Patriot Center, GMU, call (410) 481-SEAT

November 29:
Danzig, Type O-Negative, Godflesh • Michael's Eighth Avenue, call (410) 768-7901 or (410) 481-SEAT

November 3-12:
Love Letters • Church Hill Theatre, call (410) 758-1331

Now through November 13:
West Side Story • Burn Brae Dinner Theatre, tickets run from $30-40, call (301) 384-5800

Now through December 18:
Two Trains Running • Center Stage, call (410) 332-0033

November 18-20:
The Nerd, by Shue • Humanities Building, Chesapeake College, admission $3, call (410) 822-5400

Now through November 19:
City of Angels • F. Scott Fitzgerald Theatre, tickets $8,
call (301) 403-1080

November 25-27:
Wizard of Oz • Norman James Theatre, WC, 7:30 p.m. on 25-26, and 2 p.m. on 26-27, call 778-3831

November 22-27:
Grease • Lyric Opera House, call 1-800-669-STAGE or (410) 481-SEAT

THE WASHINGTON COLLEGE CREW TEAM IS HAVING A T-SHIRT DESIGN COMPETITION.

IT'S REAL SIMPLE! COME UP WITH A T-SHIRT DESIGN THAT INVOLVES ROWING. EITHER GIVE THE DESIGN TO A MEMBER OF THE CREW TEAM OR SEND IT THROUGH CAMPUS MAIL TO WILL BRANDENBURG.

THE WINNER OF THE COMPETITION RECEIVES $50.00.
ENTRY DEADLINE IS NOVEMBER 13.
THE CREW TEAM WILL VOTE ON WHICH DESIGN THEY LIKE BEST.

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

Crew at Occoquan

Mike Beardsley

On Saturday, October 5, the Sho'men crew competed in the Head of the Occoquan held in Fairfax, Virginia. Just outside of Alexandria, VA on the Occoquan Reservoir lies George Mason University's boathouse. The 3.2 mile course winds through the forest to end right in front of the GMU docks.

This is the first regatta for the freshman / novice teams to test their skills against other schools. In the Woman's Novice eight with coxswain, coach Wil Brandenburg had two boats compete. Coming in ninth out of 25 boats with a time of 20:41 was the first eight; of bow: Jen Sands, Robin Ridgway, Hillary Rainey, Jessica Woltman, Kim Stuckey, Heather Beauchamp, Carrie Smith, Keeling Harris, and cox Chris Chiarchiaro. The second boat on the Washington team came in twentieth out of the 25 boats with a time of 23:12. The members of that boat are Barbara-Jane Mocella, Ann Petracco, Crystal Barker, Lynn McGlaughlin, Niki Santella, Brigid Kolish, Sarah Bell, and Beth Moser. The Novice Women were excited about their performance, as was their coach, who knows University of Virginia will be the team to watch in the spring, placing first and second last weekend more than a full minute ahead of the competition.

The Men's Novice Team also raced at the Head of the Occoquan, boating a four with coxswain and an eight with coxswain. The eight finished 22 out of 27. Of bow: Jason Oosterwyck, Dan Biscoe, Brian Schriefer, Kevin Quinn, Tyler Benedum, Rodney Curtis, Fredi Kanther, Andy Stein and cox Patrick Walters. The four, who finished fifteenth out of some 20 boats, was rowed by coxswain Mike Haggerty, stroke, Chris Pelz, Paul Taylor, Ryan Heard, and bow Tim Tawney. The small novice team was up against some large universities this last weekend and looks forward to showing strong Sho'men form in the spring.

The varsity team sees the Head of the Occoquan as a time to relax and do things a little differently in the fall season. We generally pick our own boats and choose the line-ups, leaving less stress on the outcome and more on the aspect of having fun. The first eight Washington's varsity teams combined rowers with Johns Hopkins University to compete in the Championships eights this last weekend. The men's boat came in a strong second to UVA, only 0.8 seconds behind over the 3.2 mile course (GMU was a mere 0.9 seconds behind in third). The women's boat pulled across the line in third, showing that W.C. and JHU are two teams to be respected within Division III rowing. The varsity also boated singles, doubles and quads with all boats placing well, including a first place finish by the women's quad.

Sights are set on this weekend's regatta in Philadelphia, the Frostbite Regatta. With unseasonably warm weather the last two weeks the name seems unfitting, but it is nonetheless the fall season-ending regatta and a spring-board into the sprint season (the races at the Frostbite are the sprint distance of 2000 meters). The novices will have one more chance to get out on the water against their competitors in Philadelphia and it ends the time on the water for Sho'men rowing until we return from Christmas and the river thaws out. Ω

Washington College's Players of the Week are chosen by the coaches as athletes displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

Four women chose their own boat, their race and their coxswain, they won and were also chosen as this week's Players of the Week. The women's quad, consisting of sophomores Alisa Johnson, Robyn Mitchell, and Stacey Hammond, and freshman Laurel Harris with senior coxswain Lisa Brown, raced 5K (three miles) against three other boats at the Head of the Occoquan in Virginia on Saturday. The entire crew team did well at the Occoquan but these four ladies stand out because they ran a clean and precise race to win first place.

Coxswain Lisa Brown led her team to their first victory. The women of this boat had never raced together before. Brown has much experience, being the only senior on the team. Brown coxswained Washington College's freshman and sophomore year, and in her junior year she went abroad. In France she continued to coxswain. She participated in the championships there and was in two boats: the men's eight, which placed thirteenth and the women's eight, which placed an impressive second. Lisa is finishing up at Washington this year with a degree in Spanish with a minor in French.

Harris, the freshman on the boat, sat the third seat. She is not new to the sport, having rowed in high school. She is a strong addition to the Sho'men this year. She enjoys the team and plans to row in the spring as they begin their traditional season.

Hammond, a sophomore, rowed the stroke position. In her second year on the team she has proved her talent time and time again. She plans to row in her second season this spring. Hammond rowed in high school for the Cincinnati Rowing Club. She hopes to have much support in the spring from her favorite lacrosse goalie, Kevin.

Alisa Johnson, a transfer from Roanoke College, sat the second seat on the boat. She is on the 3-2 nursing program with Johns Hopkins. This is her first year at Washington and she plans to row in the spring.

Robyn Mitchell, a sophomore, starts her second year on the crew team. She sat bow on the winning boat. Mitchell did not row in high school but shows great capability on the Washington team.

Action on ice against the Skidi' Youngbloods lose, but are still skatin'

Tim Reath and Topher Hee

On Sunday November 6, 1994, the Washington College "Youngbloods" faced off against the Midshipmen of the Naval Academy. The ten-man Sho'men team faced a 24-man Navy squad that coach Tim Reath said was "highly trained but not highly skilled."

Rookies Mike "Ponch" Mullen and Chris "Tuuk" Daily led the offensive attack against a strong Navy defense. Senior captain Tim Reardon and junior Dave Kraft helped stabilize the improving defense. Rookie goalie Ben Feld saw a lot of rubber, making 36 saves throughout the intense game.

Bone-crushing senior defenseman Topher Head said, "Feld only let in six goals during the Midshipmen's onslaught." Too bad Topher did not know what the actual score was, due to the fact that Head was ejected in a first period altercation.

"First he stopped my breakaway illegally by hacking me in the loins," said Head. "And then he taunted me a second time. He obviously had it coming."

The Sho'men's lone goal was scored by junior forward John Moreland late in the third period, with an assist from freshman Todd Barto. Moreland lofted a menacing blue puck the Midshipmen goalie into the upper corner of the net, resembling a professional player. This was Moreland's first goal as a Sho'men. Nice job, dude.

The referee for the engagement called a very tight game which led to costly penalties for the Sho'men.

Senior forward Graham Munda was quoted as saying, "The referee angered me." Munda, playing his second

A look ahead...

Sports Information

A young basketball team and a lot of talent will make all the difference this year.

With three returning starters, eight returning lettermen and a promising freshman class, the Washington College Sho'men look to resume where they stopped at the end of last season. Gone are All-Centennial selection Charles Cummings and 1000 point scorer Geoff Rupert, two seniors whose experience and 30 points per game left with the 13-12 Sho'men win seven of their last nine games and reach the Conference play-offs. Several players are ready to step up and continue the winning tradition.

Senior center Jerry Davis returns for his fourth season and second as a starter. Jerry, last season's Most Improved Player and a strong athletic player with a soft touch will be called upon to anchor the Sho'men's inside game. Jerry's numbers (5.9 points per game / 7.2 rebounds per game) will have to continue to improve for him to be the presence inside that head coach Tom Finnigan feels he needs to be for the team to succeed.

Sophomore captain Ben Harris enjoyed an outstanding season, establishing himself as one of the top guards in the Conference. Ben was among the top five in the Conference in four statistical categories. Among those he averaged 14.2 points per game. Another sophomore, Derek Luff, will be looking to fill one of the vacant spots. Derek possesses a strong baseline game and has improved his shooting range. Ben and Derek play well together and will continue to provide Sho'men fans with some exciting basketball.

Junior Edmund Hicks, fully recovered from his ankle problems, is back and will be looked upon to provide more of a presence inside. Hicks, a very versatile forward, started 14 games last season averaging 4.7 points per game and 2.9 rebounds per game.

Two key reserves last season, juniors Adam Poe and Ken Lapp will be competing for starting positions. Poe, a good perimeter shooter, has added strength and a strong drive to complement his game. Lapp has a nice touch for a big man and he sees the court and passes the ball well.

Sophomores Mark Awantang and Paul Kenny improved greatly last year and will be pressing the others for playing time.

A crop of fine freshmen will add depth to the Sho'men in several areas. Frontline players Joe Burke and Jason Samus will improve the inside game. Brad Burkhart will bolster the swing position. The backcourt will have a great deal of depth with the addition of James Carney, Charles Hunter, Mark King, Joe McDonald and Greg Metrinko.

As usual the Sho'men face a demanding schedule with many tough challenges including Division III schools UMBC and Delaware. The Sho'men will participate in a John Hopkins Thanksgiving tournament and the Moravian Holiday Tournament. As in the past, this year's eighteenth annual Wild Goose Tournament will host a strong field of competitors, including NCAA tournament participants Rowan College, Cabrini College, and Wilmington College. The Centennial Conference schedule will again show why it is one of the most competitive conferences in Division III basketball.

With the extremely challenging schedule facing us this year, our goal is to continue to improve each outing so that we can maintain a team in order the return to the NCAA Tournament" said Coach Finnigan. "For this to occur, we need our freshman class to provide the right depth and chemistry. This additional talent along with our returning veterans should give us the balance we've provided we are willing to work hard to achieve this level of play." Ω solid offensive game for the Sho'men, seemed never to show signs of exhaustion, which ran rampant through the rest of the squad.

The Sho'men began to weaken in the third period as the sheer numbers and strength of the Midshipmen came into play. The rest of the Sho'men offense, junior Jon Paine and the team's undisputed penalty minute leader Scott Derveas worked furiously to try and penetrate the defense, but unfortunately could not get through.

At the end of the game, the Shoremen went back to the locker partitions and wreaked instead of exhilaration. The Midshipmen had beaten them 8-1.

Coach Tim Reath inspired his troops by saying: "Don't worry about the game guys, the Midshipmen do more before 9 A.M. than the average college student even thinks about doing in a week."

Our fans still show support for us and we don't know what we'd do without them. The Sho'men Youngbloods record has fallen to 0-2 in the season. Yet the team remains confident that, having skated together only three times, their day in the sun is yet to come.

It may well come this Sunday, November 13 at 10:45 p.m. at the Penn Arena against 0-3 Widener University. That same Widener team will come to Easton on November 20, so put it on your calendar. For directions, concert info, or anything else you may want to say, call Dave Kraft at x. 8854.

Thanks for your support and LET'S GO RANGERS! Ω

The Sho'men finally do it

Peggy Busker

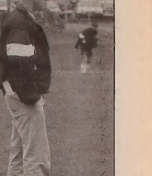
The fall '94 season of Sho'men soccer was a winning season for the first time in 15 years and the first time for Coach Helbing. For the season overall the Sho'men were 8-7-4 and in the Conference, 2-5-2. This was an impressive record for the young team. The last four games epitomized the Sho'men's season. They had their ups and downs. At their peak, midseason, despite injuries and adjustments made, they had a five-game winning streak, three of the games in the Conference.

The team graduates goalie Greg Miller and mid-fielder Matt Murray this year. The seven juniors are expected to return to lead the team next year. Chris Downs and Mike Gill hope to fill Greg Miller's shoes in the net. The Helm brothers will continue to dominate the field along with Tom Fiebler, Yoseph Bekele, Merrit Burke and Shawn McMahon. Brian Rush should be fully recovered from his preseason injury. The freshmen and sophomores will continue to play solidly and will work well with next year's new players.

Washington made impressive stats this season. They totaled 26 goals and 23 assists. Andrew King led the count with five goals and four assists. Defenseman Chip Helm tied with him in assists and scored one goal. Rodney Roman and the other Helm (Scott) each had four goals. Roman had two assists, tying with Erik Dahlen. Dahlen and Rush had three goals apiece and Rush had one assist. Chris Daily had three assists and tied with Kevin Myers at two goals. Matt Stroh had one goal and one assist. Long Le came away with one goal for his freshman year. Tom Fiebler, Yoseph Bekele, Shawn McMahon, and Shayne Bates each got an assist this season. The statistics for underclassmen look promising for next season.

Greg Miller posted a new school record with nine shutouts for the season. He had a saving percentage of 85.9%, allowing 21 goals and making 128 saves in 19 games. Chris Downs and Mike Gill split time in goal during three games, not letting any goals in, and together made four saves.

Washington, in comparison to their opponents, looked good as well this season. The Sho'men made 26 goals and took 286 shots on goal compared to the opponents' 21 goals and 277 shots on the Washington goal. Co-captains Greg Miller and Chip Helm have much to be proud of when they look back on the season.



Even though the Conference record may not reflect it, Washington was very competitive this season. Four of the five Conference matches were lost by one goal and three of those were early on in the season. As the season progressed, Washington won three Conference matches in a row, all shutouts. Five games went into overtime this season, and Washington tied all but the loss to Hopkins. With so many overtime games, Washington played 1890 minutes of soccer. The team played hard and with heart the entire season.

Two men in particular have stood out the entire season for their skill, athleticism, and leadership. The Centennial Conference has recognized these men. The coaches had a meeting and voted on the All-Centennial Teams.

Greg Miller was chosen for the first team as the goalkeeper. He was second team last year and has earned a position on the first team this year with his record nine shutouts and 86% save percentage.

Defender Chip Helm, who received honorable mention last season, earned a position on the second team this year. As a defender, he had four assists and notched one goal for the Sho'men this year.

To have two members make the Conference team in this conference is a great accomplishment for the Sho'men. Ω

Coach Helbing had his first winning season this year with his young squad.

Intramural basketball starts

Brian Tipton

Intramural basketball is about to begin again and the interest has been impressive due to the past exciting seasons. The official start of the season was Thursday night, November 3. The games will be played at 7, 8, and 9 p.m. in the Lifetime Fitness Center. The teams have been divided into two divisions: Division I is the high competition league and Division II is the slightly lower competition league.

In Division I, the Phi Delta Theta fraternity returns with a solid squad, as does the Theta Chi fraternity with the losses from last year's squad. The Buffaloes return to defend their championship title from last year. They look to have the strongest team this season even with losses of Ian McVeigh and Cliff Howell due to contract disputes. The Coaches once again bring their leadership and knowledge of the game into the D-I league. Although they are sure to bring another talented crew to the court, they have been very secretive about who will be in the lineup. The Crew will be led by the assistant basketball coach Sonel Shropshire.

A new team this season will be the Young Guns, composed of freshmen. There is little known about who is on this team or about their caliber of play, but it probably will be a strong squad. Smashmouth comes off a rough flag football schedule with just about the same team. This team can be unpredictable, but they have a good group of athletes so just about anything could happen.

In Division II, the fraternity teams seem to be running the show. GISIHF are the reigning champions, but as of now they are not going to have a team. There are two Theta Chi teams, one KA team, and three Phi Delta Theta teams. After that, only the Ralphanators are left to compete with. They should be a tough team to beat this season.

Come out and support the teams through this harsh season of competition!

Pre-Season Rankings:

Division I:	Division II:
1. Buffaloes	1. Theta Chi 1
2. Theta Chi	2. Phi Delta off-campus
3. The Crew	3. Ralphanators
4. Phi Delta Theta	4. Theta Chi II
5. Smashmouth	5. Phi Delta Soccer
6. Young Guns	6. KA
7. Coaches	7. Phi Delta Theta Lax

Men's tennis team continues to win top tournaments

Sander and Beran lead the path to victory for Washington College

Paulina Sierra Samano
and Nicole Zemanski

Last year was the first time that a team from Washington College won a National Division III Championship title. Although W.C. has come close in the sports of lacrosse and basketball, we had never won the big one until the men's tennis team captured the National Division III Championship in May in Dallas, Texas. Because of a superb season, the Sho'men are looking forward to the spring season to make it back-to-back championships. With their skill and depth, they are again top contenders to make it to the championships this spring. The team used this fall, non-traditional season to refine and strengthen their skill in some top tournaments such as the Rolex National Small College Tournament. Just to go to these high caliber tournaments is a huge honor, but the Sho'men went beyond this and captured title after title this fall.

The members of this fall's team consisted of returning players Christopher Beran, Jason Sander, Andrew Moffat, Max Nilsson, Damian Solla, and Robin Sander. They started the fall season off by playing in a tournament right here in Chestertown in the beginning of October. The Sho'men not only played against Division III college teams, but also competed with powerful Division I teams from around the area. Such teams as the U.S. Naval Academy and George Mason University came to Chestertown to face our national champs. Through the team's consistent play, determination, and unbelievable skill, the Sho'men came out on top with an advantage of 4-3 against these D-I schools.

In the middle of October, the top six players were invited to a tournament down in Virginia to play against some stiff Division I competition. With top Sho'men Sander and Beran injured for this tournament, the men were still determined to capture the title in this tourney. Although the situation did not look favorable for W.C. due to Sander's absence, Beran stepped up in his place and played extremely well throughout the tournament. Beran reached the finals but then lost against some tough competition.

Beran and Sander represented W.C. by going to the Rolex National Tournament in Virginia. Both players demonstrated determination through the tournament and both pushed them to win the doubles portion of the tournament. In the singles bracket, Beran and Sander faced each other in the finals by beating the top two players in this stage of the tournament. Although this was an odd situation with both players facing each other, Sander came out on top 6-1, 6-0.

These victories enabled Beran and Sander to journey to the next stage of the Rolex tennis tournament in Georgia. Both players played together in the doubles competition and Sander represented W.C. in the singles bracket. Again, the outcome was good for the Sho'men. The singles and doubles competition was captured by W.C. Sander beat UC-Santa Cruz player Noah Hopper to capture the singles title, 6-2, 6-4. Beran and Sander played the UC-Santa Cruz team of Hopper and Harper in the final. The doubles final of 7-6, 6-7, and 6-4 was an intense game played by both players and their service breaks are what secured the victory.

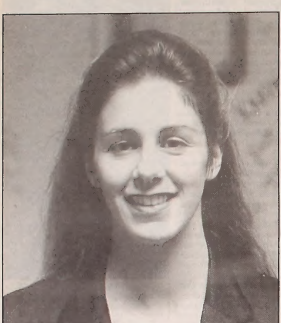
After this achievement, the two went into the third and final stage of the Rolex which is called the "Super Bowl." The doubles partners lost in the semifinals, 3-6, 7-5, and 3-6 after a hard fought battle. Sander continued to power through the competition in the singles event. Sander went all the way to the finals of this high caliber tournament which is something that no W.C. player had accomplished before. Sander was up 4-2 in the first set, but his opponent came back to take the crucial first set 7-6. Sander went on to lose this battle, 6-7, 6-2, and 3-6. Although Beran and Sander did not capture the national title for this tournament, they came away with pride and strengthened skills.

This team is extremely young but the Sho'men are ready to face the competition not only with outstanding skill, but also tournament experience. This is the beginning of a new era in tennis for W.C. With this skill, experience and Tim Gray's coaching leadership, the Sho'men are ready for the spring season to begin! Ω

W.C. places two on All-Centennial Men's Soccer Team

Nicole Zemanski

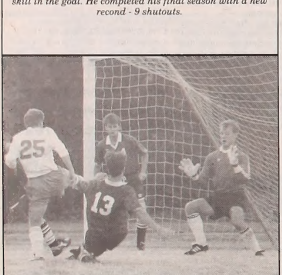
The two top defenders for W.C. received well-deserved recognition from the Centennial Conference this week by being named to the All-Centennial Men's Soccer First and Second Team. Senior goalkeeper Greg Miller of Catonsville, Maryland was named to the team for his outstanding performance throughout the season. Miller recorded a school record of nine shutouts for W.C. during the 1994 season. This record shutout came against Beaver College on October 26 in the last home game of the season. This was definitely a great way to end his last home game of the year. This First-Team honor came off of the Second-Team All-Conference status in 1993.



Miller also came in second place for the voting of Player of the Year. He was just behind Johns Hopkins freshman forward Eric West. West is the freshman sensation who has led Hopkins to the national tournament being played this weekend.

Miller's co-captain and junior defensive standout Chip Helm was named to the All-Centennial Men's Soccer Second Team. Helm, from Port Deposit, Maryland, led the defensive unit which demonstrated one of the best performances this season. Many consider the defensive unit of 1994 the best ever assembled at W.C. That is definitely something to receive recognition for!

Both Miller and Helm demonstrated leadership, desire, and excellent skill to gain this distinction of being two of the best defenders in the Centennial Conference this season! Ω



Club sports are a welcome addition to the Sports section of The Elm. To continue complete coverage of the club sports we need club athletes or interested people to cover these sports. If you are of one those people, call Peggy (x. 8793) or Nicole (x. 8564).

Good luck Seniors

Top: Senior Beverly Diaz

Bottom: A young Greg Miller (now a senior) shows ease and skill in the goal. He completed his final season with a new record - 9 shutouts.

Top: Senior Matt Murray

Bottom: Senior Sabrina Luginbahl

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Saturday, November 12
Swimming at Franklin & Marshall, 1 p.m.

Coming soon to a court near you ...
Sho'men Basketball!
Men's Basketball, Nov. 18 at Hopkins Tip-Off
Women's Basketball, Ramada Tip-Off

Students take center court in Schick Super Hoops

Wil Brandenburg

Schick Super Hoops, the largest 3-on-3 intramural basketball tournament in the nation, is back at Washington College. 3-on-3 teams will compete to win prizes and the opportunity to represent their school at the Schick Super Hoops Regional Finals.

Now in its eleventh year, Schick Super Hoops provides a competitive tournament for more than 200,000 students at 800 colleges and universities nationwide. Campus prizes include Schick Super Hoops t-shirts, athletic bags, Schick razors and blades. Regional champions and runners-up will win Starter warm-up jackets and Schick Super Hoops Sweatshirts respectively.

Schick Super Hoops is the official 3-on-3 collegiate basketball tournament of the National Basketball Association (NBA) and is endorsed by the National Intramural Recreational Sports Association (NIRSA). The program is sponsored by Schick, with support sponsorship from Starter, and managed by National Media Group.

For more information please contact Dennis Berry at x. 7235 or W. Brandenburg. Ω

The Washington College

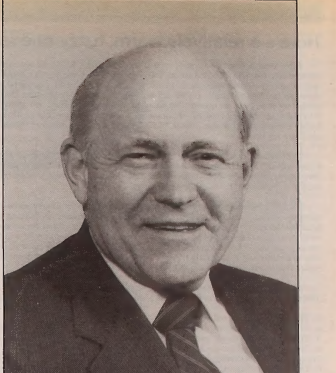
ELM

Volume 66, Number Eleven

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Dr. John toll to serve as acting president of Washington College

Dr. John Toll, Chancellor Emeritus and professor of physics at the University of Maryland, has been nominated to serve as acting president of Washington College. Dr. Toll's appointment as interim president of the College is expected to be finalized at a meeting of the College's 36-member Board of Visitors and Governors scheduled for December 3, 1994.



John A. Moag, Jr., secretary of the College's Board of Visitors and Governors, said, "The Nominations Committee of the Board has unanimously selected Dr. Toll as the College's acting president. The Board of Visitors and Governors has been polled and is expected to endorse the nomination unanimously."

From 1978 through 1989, Dr. Toll served as President of the University of Maryland and as the University of Maryland System's first Chancellor. From 1965 through 1978, Dr. Toll was a professor of physics and the first president of the State University of New York at Stony Brook.

Until Congress last year eliminated funding for the Superconducting Super Collider project in Texas, Dr. Toll had served as President of the Universities Research Association, the managing entity for the Super Collider and the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory.

"We are ecstatic that John Toll has chosen to bring his leadership skills to Washington College at such an important moment in the College's distinguished history," said Moag.

Dr. Toll will serve as acting president beginning January 1, 1995, when the College's current president, Dr. Charles H. Trout, begins a sabbatical leave. Dr. Trout announced his planned resignation as president in August and his presidency formally concludes at the completion of the 1994-95 academic year. A Presidential Search Committee is currently engaged in conducting a national search for a permanent successor. Ω

Dr. John Toll, acting president of Washington College

Nothing resolved in "Fessler case" amidst increased community response

Kate Meagher and Rachael Fink

Amid increased student protest, the tenured English faculty met once again to discuss the various issues surrounding the seventh full-time English position.

Rumors flew following Monday afternoon's meeting, but according to Chair of the English Department Bennett Lamond, "It's all still in the works."

Lamond indicated that the meeting was simply the first part of a long discussion that will be continued next Monday at another meeting of the English faculty.

"It's all very tentative at this moment," said Lamond.

Members of the Gender Studies faculty have now added their voices to the growing numbers speaking for the retention of Professor Audrey Fessler.

According to Dr. Emilie Amt, a member of the History Department and the Gender Studies faculty, the "Fessler case" was mentioned at Monday's meeting of the Gender Studies faculty by the lone student in attendance, Rachel Roll.

Following that meeting, Dr. Amt drafted a motion urging the English Department, the Appointments and Tenure Committee, and others involved to "work to retain Professor Fessler as a continuing, full-time faculty member."

Citing her "fine teaching and mentoring of young women and men," the motion received a positive response from a majority of the Gender Studies faculty and will now be sent to the English Department, the Appointments and Tenure Committee, President Charles Trout, and Dean Joachim Scholz.

With things heating up on the administrative side, the strong student response to the "Fessler case" may have escalated into criminal activity early Tuesday morning.

At 10:12 a.m., the Department of Public Safety was informed by Assistant Director of Buildings and Grounds Joe Cathers that a sign was hanging from the roof of the Casey Academic Center. The sign, which was made from a white plastic tablecloth, read "Protect Your Assets – Keep Fessler – voice of the speaker in the crowd," in glitter-covered letters and was weighted with an attached stapler.

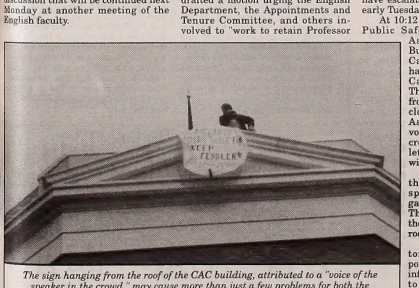
It is not yet known how the person or people responsible for the sign gained access to the roof. The sign was nailed into the wooden molding of the roof of the CAC.

Jerry Roderick, director of Public Safety, reported, "We don't have any information at this time as to who's responsible for putting the sign up."

"Though we understand that this is a very emotionally charged issue," if entry to the roof was forced, then Public Safety will be dealing with a case of breaking and entering, said Roderick.

As to the consequences which will face the as yet unknown perpetrator, Roderick is "not sure at this point. I haven't looked at all the angles so I'm not prepared to comment on that at this point."

Ken Haines, Operations Supervisor for Public Safety, pointed out another aspect of the action taken in response to the redefinition of the seventh full-time English position. That aspect is one of safety. The roof of Casey Academic Center is both sloped and slick. Not only is it risky to be up there, but in order to get to the roof, one must go through a "mechanical room" full of wires.



For someone who does not know his or her way around the room, it is dangerous.

"You don't know what you're getting into," said Haines.

There was some damage to the molding caused by the nails used to secure the banner, but it is "very minimal – fortunately," said Roderick.

"I think there are more appropriate places to hang signs, said Roderick, "rather than to turn these expressions into criminal problems. There are better avenues to express those opinions."

Some of those avenues are being utilized by student protesters. Petitions urging the reinstatement of Fessler are still circulating, and letters from students, alumni, and parents are continuing to be sent. Ω

The sign hanging from the roof of the CAC building, attributed to a "voice of the speaker in the crowd," may cause more than just a few problems for both the Maintenance Department and Public Safety.

Inside This Week's Elm

Message to the community

John A. Moag, Secretary for the Board, introduces W.C.'s acting president. 2

Thinking through ...

anarchy and the alternatives? Which way are we headed, Paul? 3

Next year's freshmen, beware

The past provides interesting hints on how to deal with freshmen. 5

They finally did it!

Kevin and Jeff split up, but accomplished their mission. The discount kings got discounts! 6

Here's a relatively warm, fuzzy one for ya

After over a month of angry, rant-filled editorials, I figured we could all use some warm fuzzies; I know I could. In an attempt to come up with some topic not only worth the editorial space, but warm and fuzzy as well, I scoured my mind, then my heart, and finally my soul. I did come up with one thought that warmed me to my toes - winter break. The thought is warm because I am going home, to Florida. I am hoping that all of the snow, slush and miserable weather will exhaust itself before I make it back to the frozen north in January. Yeah, well, let me have my dreams.

There was one other warm, fuzzy running around in my psyche – graduation. Fates willing, I will be among those receiving their undergraduate degrees in May. (everybody get in the groove and let the good times roll / got to stay here 'til we soothe our souls / if it takes all night long)

Shortly after the glow of happy thoughts hits full force I had a somewhat startling revelation – both of my warm fuzzies centered around my leaving the beautiful Washington College. Well, who can blame me? I am just an over-educated southern belle – I want to be where it is consistently warm, and I want to have some proof that I have done all the work that I'm supposed to have done. (might be one o'clock and it might be three / i don't care 'cause time means nothing to me / ain't been swingsing since i don't know when)

All of this rumination about leaving made me start to feel guilty, so I sat down and made a list of reasons I would be glad to stay. My list went as follows:

1) The fall trees are really beautiful.
2) The spring flowers are really beautiful.
3) There are some really wonderful people here.
4) Some of the classes are actually interesting.
5) Some of the lectures are actually entertaining.
6) This is a great location with access to several major cities without the hassles of living in a city.
7) There are opportunities to become a student leader or fade into the woodwork without much trouble.
8) Interaction between students and faculty can be as formal or as relaxed as comfortable and
9) many of the faculty and staff are willing to go beyond the call of duty to form friendships with students.
10) All in all, Washington College is a safe, supportive, and friendly environment in which to receive an education.

All this aside, I am happily temporarily leaving in December and joyfully ending my education here in May. All of these things in mind, I'll be back (yes, this is a threat). I've grown twistedly attached to the rain, slush, and tension that make up Washington College.

Well, I have managed to be somewhat warm and fuzzy this week. I am shocked, and even a little appalled, but the fact remains that man (or woman) does not live on tension alone. Even though I want to see Audrey stay as much as the next student, and I really want some constructive things done in the way of curricular reform, and it would be really great to have a student body that is actively involved and not taken for granted, everyone needs a vacation.

Happy Thanksgiving y'all!

(Song lyrics from "Good Times" by Phoebe Snow)

Despite the lack of response from last week's suggestion of running a faculty column, the editors still think it is a great idea. So, any faculty member interested in writing the occasional column along the lines of "crud." should contact either Rachael Fink, or Kate Meagher, or contact The Elm through BlitzMail, campus mail or leave a message on the answering machine. If we do not receive any response soon, we will have to start pestering those we most want to hear from, and we all know, that could get ugly. To avoid being stalked by a member of the Elm staff, simply submit your thoughts on anything from abortion to xenophobia or any of the fun and interesting topics in between. Columns should be no less than 2000 characters in length, and if using BlitzMail or delivering on disk, should be composed in Microsoft Word.

Thank you in advance,
The Editors

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor Mindie J. Kaplan
Arts & Entertainment Editor Carolyn Fuss
Sports Co-Editors Peggy Busker and Nicole Zemanski
Circulation Manager Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager Joshua T. Lawrence IV
Office Manager Leticia Lyford-Pike
Photo Editor Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and Crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-2805.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

A Message to the Faculty, Staff, Students, Alumni, and Friends of Washington College

It is with a great deal of excitement and pride that I announce on behalf of the Nominations Committee of the Board of Visitors and Governors of Washington College that Dr. John Toll, the former Chancellor of the University of Maryland System, has been nominated to serve as the Acting President of Washington College beginning on January 1, 1995. The appointment will become official at the December 3rd meeting of the Board. Dr. Toll has made clear that he will not be a candidate in the search for a permanent President of the College.

Dr. Toll's nomination was the unanimous selection of the Nominations Committee. Board members have been polled by phone and I expect Dr. Toll to receive the unanimous vote of the full Board.

Dr. Toll is eager to meet with all faculty, students, and staff as soon as he begins his service as Acting President.

Change is inevitable in any institution — be it the United States Congress or Washington College. Concern and anxiety also inevitably accompany change. The Board believes that any anxiety that has existed on campus will certainly be eased by the knowledge that this wonderful institution we know and love has attracted an internationally respected academic leader to steer us through this period of challenge and change.

The Board is absolutely committed to a partnership with the administration, faculty, students, alumni, and friends of the College to enhance academic excellence, attain long-term fiscal stability, and meet the challenges of the 21st century with innovation, creativity, and discipline. We recognize that each constituency of the College needs the others. We have demanded more of ourselves as Board members: to give more of our time, money, and talent; to acquaint ourselves more intimately with faculty, students, and staff, to take whatever steps are required to ensure the College remains ahead of the curve.

So too, we ask each of you to open your minds and hearts to the challenges ahead. We ask that you muster all your great resources and thoughts and share them with each other, with Dr. Toll, and with the Board.

The Board looks forward to a future marked by cooperation, tenacity, and an insatiable appetite for excellence. We could not be more proud and pleased that John Toll will lead us in this, Washington College's next, most important, journey.

John A. Moag,
Secretary for the Washington College Board of Visitors and Governors

To the Editor:

Just A Reminder

The end of the semester cram is upon us again. Long papers and exams are in the works. This is just a reminder: do not let stress get the best of you. Times may get hard and we might be stuck in the corner with tons of work that needs to get done. Just remember there are people here to help us in our times of distress. We should talk to our professors; let them know when we might need extra help and or time for that matter. They love to help students who are willing to speak up and ask for a little assistance. Don't find yourself making compromises. In this stage of our education we can not afford to slip up on stupid mistakes like academic violations. Some academic violations are revealing answers, copying from another's exam, and plagiarizing. Plagiarizing is willfully present-

See "Reminder" on 3

The answer is no

I am a fifth year student who has lived off campus for all but one year of my five at W.C. Over the past years here I have seen many changes at this college. I was recently asked by a family member if I was happy with my decision to go to Washington College.

Looking at the state of the college and the way they have handled recent events, the only answer I could possibly give was no.

Our school seems to be cutting off a limb with its retirement of Professor Fessler through a redefinement in the English Department. I had the distinct pleasure of being in one of her first classes here at W.C. four years ago. I still think she is one of the finest teachers at the college. If I had a question about a paper the night before it was due I knew I could call at eleven o'clock at night and talk to a caring voice. She took the time to actually read a student's work. She usually put

See "No" on 3

This Week on Campus
Nov. 18 - 24

Film Series
The Client
Norman James Theatre, Fri., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 18
Mavis Gallant reads from her work Norman James, 4p.m.
Blood Wedding
Tawes, 8 p.m.

Saturday 19
Apollo II Talent Show
Norman James, 8p.m.
Blood Wedding
Tawes, 8 p.m.

Sunday 20
Jazz Band Concert
Tawes, 4 p.m.

Monday 21

Tuesday 22

Wednesday 23

Thursday 24
Thanksgiving
School Closed

Thinking through ...

the non-collapse of civilization

by Paul Briggs

Probably ever since the first Neanderthal noticed that his pile of stone tools was bigger than that of most of the other Neanderthals of his acquaintance, the more thoughtful members of the upper classes have been asking the question – Why do the poor put up with us?

This question has achieved greater significance today. In February's Atlantic Monthly appeared a now-famous article by Robert D. Kaplan entitled "The Coming Anarchy." The thesis of this article was that political, environmental and social stresses would render much of the world ungovernable within the next few decades, particularly in the so-called "South" or "Third World." Since February, things have happened which could certainly be seen as signs of this. Rwanda springs immediately to mind. Of course, other things have happened which point in the exact opposite direction, such as the election in South Africa.

Now another article has appeared in the December issue of that same publication, this one by Matthew Connelly and Paul Kennedy. Entitled "Must it be the Rest against the West?" This article is based partially on a novel by the French writer Jean Raspail, entitled The Camp of the Saints, in which Western civilization is destroyed by giant mass migrations consisting of millions upon millions of people from the poorest nations on earth. These days the concept of "the West" is being replaced by that of "the North"which includes wealthy Eastern nations like Japan, Taiwan and Singapore. Nonetheless, this article attempts to raise the possibility that something along the lines of Raspail's novel may ultimately happen to the North.

It is difficult to dismiss this idea out of hand. One is inclined to think of the destruction of Rome by Germanic barbarians, or the overwhelming of China and Persia by Genghis Khan's Mongol horde. Yet the fact is that civilizations are generally not destroyed by people who are less advanced, or – more importantly – less organized than themselves. As a rule, "barbarian hordes" tended to be not only less numerous than their "civilized" opponents, but just as well armed and far better organized. Usually, by the time the barbarians arrive the empire has already broken down.

In fact, it may be said that the greatest power on this earth is not money or knowledge, but the power to organize people effectively. An angry mob disappears as quickly as it appears, whereas an army can function indefinitely. Historically, the rich have been better at effective organization than the poor. As one of Orwell's characters once said of the "proles": "Until they become conscious (i.e. organized) they will never rebel, and until after they have rebelled they cannot become conscious." If Robert Kaplan may be believed, the ability to organize effectively, on a large scale, is precisely what is being lost by the wretched of the earth. This is one reason why they are so wretched.

Meanwhile, the "rich nations" are becoming better than ever at organizing. This was dramatically demonstrated Wednesday, when 18 Pacific Rim nations, including the United States, signed an agreement to remove all tariff barriers between them by the year 2020, forming a new free-trade zone like NAFTA or the European Union. These nations were Australia, Brunei, Canada, Chile, China, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Singapore, South Korea, Taiwan and the United States. Note that many of these nations are not "Northern" either geographically or economically. They will, however, join the ranks of the developed nations within the foreseeable future. This is also happening elsewhere in the world. The middle class of India, for example, is already comparable in numerical terms to that of the United States.

There are plenty of reasons for assisting the poorest nations in their struggle against the forces Kaplan described. The possibility that these nations may destroy us is not one of them. Ω

Residence halls close for winter break

Deans of Students explain rules and regulations covering the semester break

Students must vacate their residence halls within 24 hours of their last final examination.

These buildings will reopen on Monday, January 16, 1995.

Classes begin on Wednesday, January 18, 1995.

Those students whose final examinations do not end until Saturday afternoon, and, therefore, need to remain on campus until Sunday morning MUST inform the Student Affairs Office in advance. A list of those with permission to spend Saturday night in the residence halls will be given to the Department of Public Safety. All students must be off campus by noon on Sunday; therefore, plan in advance.

Because of the College's concern for security in the residence halls, any student who (without written permission of the Deans of Students) stays beyond the deadline for moving out or who returns before the opening date will be fined $50.00 per day.

Students planning to vacate their rooms in the residence halls at the end of the fall semester MUST be checked out by the Director of Buildings and Grounds, Reid Raudenbush. Telephone his secretary at extension 7210. Any student failing to do so will be liable for a one hundred dollar ($100.00) charge. (See page 30 of the Student Handbook.)

Before departing campus, all residents should make certain that their rooms are in good condition. Any damage to the rooms, including writing on the surface of the door to the corridor, will cause the present occupant(s) to be assessed by the Maintenance Department.

It is strongly recommended that students NOT leave valuable possessions in the residence halls during the vacation. Take them home. The College will not be responsible for items left on campus. Make certain the window(s) and door lock. If they do not, inform your RA or the Maintenance Department.

No room changes are to be made without the expressed permission of the Deans of Students. A key change slip must be signed by the Deans and presented to Campus Security before a new room key will be issued. Requests for changes may be made through your RA or directly with the Deans of Students.

Be aware that the College must house new and re-admitted students for the semester beginning in January. Non-seniors in double rooms who currently do not have roommates will be assigned roommates from among these new students UNLESS they elect to have a current student move in with them. This information MUST be given to Student Affairs and the move made before the students' departures for the Christmas Break.

Juniors or seniors living off campus second semester are reminded that they must inform the Student Affairs Office before the Christmas Break. Students who move off campus without permission of the Deans of Students may expect no room refund.Ω

Have a wonderful Thanksgiving weekend!

"No" from 2

more ink on a paper than the student, even if that student got an A. It meant a lot to see that someone was actually looking at my work. I feel there are a lot of teachers who just stick grades on papers without really looking them over. I did not pay $18,000 plus a year for that.

This is a teacher who deeply cares about her students and takes the time to get involved. She teaches in a way that inspires one to be active and vocal in class discussions. I myself was signed up for her Victorian Lit class. Had I not needed the money from a full time job I would still be in this class.

Washington College, you are cheating incoming freshmen with moves like this. I consider the biggest mistake of my life was coming to this college. How can a college that prides itself on being a small personal college stand around and not do something to keep a professor like Pessler? Is it so difficult? It seems that most of the student body is utterly opposed to this decision. Is this college so wrapped up in its own politics that the seventh full time English Department position cannot be returned to what it was? Good Lord! No wonder no one wants to give money to this college. Can you blame them? It seems the wants and needs of the students no longer matter. I thought by coming here I would find something rewarding. The only thing I have found is a huge jar of never-ending problems and an ever growing pile of bar bills.

– William Bloom

Thanksgiving Prayer Service

Sponsored by The Newman Club

Monday, November 21, 6:30 p.m., Alumni House

Brighten someone's day ...

Send them a CandyGram

The AXΩ's are selling Thanksgiving CandyGrams

The proceeds from the $1 CandyGrams will go to support Women of Domestic Violence.

Contact Jennifer Saunders (x. 8506)

Hurry before they're gone!

"Reminder" from 2

ing the language, ideas, or thoughts of another person as one's original work (Student Handbook p.3). It shows disrespect to the author of the work you took the material from. Remember to use A Writer's Reference, or any aids that help you document your papers.

There are also social violations that we need to be aware of when we are hanging out and having a good time on the weekend. When spirits fly, so does self-control. Be careful not to damage or vandalize other people's personal property or that of Washington College. Also take special care not to violate the well-being of your peers. Have a good time and study hard but remember that as members of the Washington College community it is our responsibility to uphold the Honor Code. If by chance you witness someone breaking the Code, you should ask the offender to report themselves within 48 hours. If they do not report the matter to the proper authorities, then you as the witness should report that person to the Honor Code Chair. All cases are kept confidential to protect all parties. It is not fair for a few to take advantage or get by while others play by the rules. Be safe, be smart and good luck the rest of the semester.

-Douglas Beckworth, Honor Board Chair

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

W.C.'s Student Government Association currently finds itself trying to remain atop several momentous issues, not the least of which being the recently titled "Fessler case."

At Tuesday's meeting, much concern was voiced as to the future of both the issue itself and the continued activism on the part of the students. The original spirit of determination on the part of the students has translated into only a few letters of protest on President Trout's desk. According to SGA President Jamie Baker, the time has come to "talk [the issue] up, get people fired up again."

During Vice President Sonja Wilson's report, in which she informed the Senators that copies of all letters concerning Professor Fessler sent to the College President should be sent to Dean Scholz, a debate arose as to whether the students' struggle to have their voices heard should "go public." Baker advised that he was then reticent to allow the issue to be spread outside the campus into local news because it may damage the school's reputation, and thus admissions and professional recruitment. Senator Carey Hargrove suggested that it be made public knowledge in order to show the pride and dedication of the students. Student Life Chair Rob Moran suggested that it be proposed to the administration by the SGA as a possible course of action.

SGA Faculty Adviser Dr. McKillop took this idea a step further and suggested that a "10-step plan of action" should be adopted. This proposal met with nearly unanimous support at the meeting, and Junior Class President Mark Reyero held a meeting Thursday evening to decide the progression of student action. The results of this meeting are forthcoming in The Elm.

An interim College President has been named. John Toll will replace Charles H. Trout, effective in January. Dr. Toll currently serves as a chancellor of the University of Maryland.

Despite the fact that there are only five weeks left in the semester, funding requests are still coming in. Tuesday, funding for the Anthropology club in the amount of $100 was appropriated. Funds were also appropriated for the renovation of the Faculty Lounge and the upcoming Freshman / Sophomore semi-formal.

Also, the search for a commencement speaker continues. Former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff General Colin Powell is unable to attend commencement this spring, so Senior Class President Tyler McCarthy is planning to re-open the book on the class's first choice, author Toni Morrison, whose selection as Commencement Speaker was recently denied by College administration. Former President Jimmy Carter was also mentioned as a possibility.

The three Senators taking part in the Task Force to Review the First Year Experience, Leticia Lyford-Pike, Katie Langan, and Siu-Yee Ng, distributed a printed survey at Tuesday's meeting to accompany the survey already issued over BlitzMail. The two surveys are similar in content: both ask questions about students' opinions about the freshman experience at W.C., freshman English, distribution, and course offerings. In the letter accompanying the survey, Lyford-Pike asks that students "please take this matter seriously and dedicate some time to show that the students are the heart of the school." All students are encouraged to answer the survey, whether on paper or over BlitzMail. For a written copy, contact your dorm Senator. Ω

Maintenance builds a new bridge

An improvement for physically challenged access

Beth McLaughlin

Many have passed with curiosity the recent construction that has been going on next to the Miller Library terrace. As reported before, the Department of Buildings and Grounds is building a bridge from the Cater Walk to the Miller Library Terrace for easier and more convenient access for the physically challenged.

The primary reason for the new construction is the difficulty of the existing ramp.

"It exceeds the slope recommended by the Americans for Disabilities Act and includes difficult turns," Reid Raudenbush, the Director of the Department of Buildings and Grounds, reports. It must be remembered also that when the existing ramp was put in place, the Casey Academic Center and the Cater Walk did not exist. Maintenance is continuing its effort to make the campus more efficient and accessible.

A second reason for the bridge , as Raudenbush reports, is, "The students already have voted by their feet." It was evident that the shortest path from the terrace to the walkway is the dirt foot-beaten path over the wall and through the bushes. There will be at least 100 students who will use this bridge every day for quicker access, and Maintenance has looked forward to this.

The bridge is being built of massive pieces of timber, and very sturdily designed in anticipation of this regular use. The entire project will cost approximately $250.

The bridge will be natural wood and allowed to weather. The tops of the posts will be capped with copper. This is all in an effort to make the bridge look like a dock.

"A common item in Chestertown, it would fit in," said Raudenbush.

As the director, Raudenbush is grateful to the carpenters building the bridge. Although building the bridge may appear to be a simple process, the ramp must be as flat as possible, even though it ends on the Cater Walk, which has a defined slope. Each plank and its foundation had to be gradually adjusted to compensate for the slope, while appearing flat. Given reasonable weather, the bridge should be finished in a week.

"There were a lot of things we took into consideration. We wanted it to serve its purpose and look right, too," Raudenbush said. "We are convinced it will receive a tremendous amount of use." Ω

The handicap access ramp, being built between the Cater Walk and the Library Terrace, is expected to be finished shortly.

Christmas comes to Kent County on Thanksgiving Weekend

Kent County has special events planned for a great Thanksgiving weekend. Amidst the twinkling white lights strung through Chestertown the Christmas season officially opens with the tree lighting ceremony in the Park by the graceful fountain adorned with swans and the Goddess Hebe, Cup Bearer to the Gods, all decked in greens.

Starting on Friday from 5 to 8 p.m. the Leone Woodall Antique Show and Sale will be open at the Chestertown Middle School featuring fine pieces of furniture, jewelry, glassware, and accessories. The Show continues on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from noon to 3 p.m. An annual favorite of visitors and natives alike, the trees are decorated by local businesses and organizations in whimsical to elegant style and you can vote for your favorites! It is held in the Emmanuel Episcopal Church in Chesterton. And just up the street in the Fire Hall local crafters display needlework, dolls, miniatures, pottery, tole painting, decoys, baskets, quilts, braided rugs and other handicrafts on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and in Sunday from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

In between enjoying the Christmas decorations and events, visitors can also enjoy the outdoors while the weather is still mild: bike riding, bird watching at the refuges, beach walking or horseback riding. Call the Kent County Chamber of Commerce at (410) 778-0416 for information. Ω

Annual Renaissance Christmas Feast held at College

Holiday traditions generally are rooted in history, but one tradition at Washington College goes way back – to the Renaissance period.

Each December since 1981, the College's Hodson Hall is transformed into a 16th-century banquet hall where revelers come to eat, drink, and be merrily entertained with Renaissance song and dance. This year's feast is slated for Friday and Saturday, December 2 and 3, beginning at 7 p.m.

Hosted by the College's music and dance departments, the annual Renaissance Christmas Feast features music by the Early Music Vocal and Instrumental Consorts and lords and ladies in costume performing Renaissance period dances, as the guests enjoy wassail, wine, and crudites.

Then, with the bearing of the ceremonial boar's head to the banquet hall, the feast begins. The menu features roast beef, a "medieval" chicken salad, oven brown potatoes, steamed vegetables, and breads and cheeses, all accompanied by special condiments – fluffy horseradish, prune sauce, and onion sauce.

With dessert, the musicians and dancers take to the floor again. The Madrigal Singers carols in English, Latin, French, and German. The Instrumental Consort performs on stringed instruments, recorders, krumshorns, and other Renaissance period instruments. Dancers step to the music, performing the branle, the volta, the pavane, and the gallarde.

"It really is quite a lot of fun," says Garry Clarke, chair of the music department, "and we always have a great turnout. Alumni, parents, and friends come to enjoy a sumptuous meal and a fabulous evening of song and dance."

Tickets for the Renaissance Christmas Feast are $18 each or $25 for patrons – can be reserved by calling (410) 778-7875. Ω

Queenstown resident receives Anna Melvin Hague Memorial Scholarship to W.C.

Jane LaBrie, a W.C. junior from Queenstown, Maryland, is the 1994-95 recipient of the Anna Melvin Hague '05 Memorial Scholarship.

The Hague Scholarship was established in 1992 by Charles and Virginia Hague, alumni of Washington College, in honor of Charles's mother. The gift was made as the College was marking its 100th anniversary of co-education.

Anna Hague, one of the first women to attend Washington College, was a teacher for 50 years in the Kent County public school system.

The Anna Melvin Hague Scholarship is awarded each year to an outstanding student demonstrating qualities of scholarship, character, and dedication, who is expected to make the most effective contribution to the field of education.

LaBrie, a wife and mother of four, is a non-traditional student at W.C., where she is pursuing a degree in English as well as her teacher certification. She hopes to teach English literature at the secondary level. Born and raised on the Eastern Shore, she graduated from Chesapeake College in 1993 with a 4.0 grade point average. While at Chesapeake College, she was a member of Phi Theta Kappa, the national honor society for American junior colleges, and was named to Who's Who Among Students in American Junior Colleges and the National Dean's List. At graduation she received the award for Most Outstanding Graduate in Teacher Education: Secondary Education, as well as the John T. Harrison award.

Currently employed as the general manager of Annie's Paramount Steak House at Kent Narrows, LaBrie has twin daughters, aged 17, who are college sophomores, a 12-year-old son at Centreville Middle School, and a 17-year-old stepson at Queen Anne's County High School. At Washington College, she carries a 3.46 grade point average.

LaBrie is the third recipient of the Anna Melvin Hague Scholarship. Ω

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410/ 778 - 0513

crud.

creative ranting under duress.

by William Denton

I'm not really under duress ... I've got a Camel lit and Biohazard turned up to 8 with the door propped open during quiet hours. I'm free of stress and, as Vanilla Ice used to say, "chill-in' like Bob Dylan, maxin' like Michael Jackson." Unfortunately, I'm the only one of the 900-odd people here willing to do this without pay ... duress not required, I guess. I believe I'll take this time to share with you an interesting and informative anecdote I've recently learned. Take heed, as I think Jesus used to say ...

Upon returning from one of many early-morning jaunts to Royal Farms recently, my usual fare (a dimebag and a pack of Twinkies) in hand, I was enlightened by a friend...no, a veritable peer prophet ... as to the hideous dangers that lurked inside one of my purchases. The grass? Nope. The Twinkies. Yes, the Twinkies indeed. It seems as if I have been unwittingly taking part in a massive government conspiracy since I was a wee lad. You see, those spongy-filled morsels o'heaven we've all been enjoying all these years are, in actuality, contaminated by alien life forms. Oh, scoff at me, why don't you? I did the same at first ... until I heard the truth ...

I'm sure that, in this lone case, you are very much like me. You've always wondered how the Hostess geniuses get that sugary lard into the cake without laying waste to it, right? Well, see if this floats your rubability boat: the mystery filling is actually comprised of tiny extraterrestrial beings which hatch right inside the tasty snack sometime between the bakery and your grocer's shelf. That's the only plausible solution. I hereby challenge you to propose a better one. You've failed miserably, haven't you? I, however, was not such a pushover; I, the cynic that I am, demanded further explanation. I received the following visionary words, all accompanied by the gravest of visages: you see, the alien beings spontaneously combust within twenty years of their birth, so DON'T MISPLACE YOUR TWINKIES! A Twinkie lost between the cushions of the sofa now may be the end of all humanity in 2015.

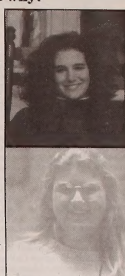
I then incredulously inquired as to the dangers of the strawberry Twinkies and found that they are equally dangerous, the females of the species. The empirical data is staggering - how could it be false?

To those of you skeptical fools who have failed to follow in the natural progression from your opinion to mine, I proffer the following warning: they derided Socrates, they derided Einstein, and they regretted it. Do not fall into the same trap! Take these words, love them, internalize them, make them a part of your life. No need to thank me.

I wanted to give my remaining two Twinkies to that moron who runs up and down the halls of Kent screaming "deeez nuts!!!", but I

Campus Voices

Question by Philip McQuade

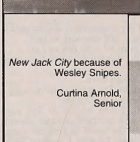


Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What is your favorite movie and why?

The Big Chill; it's got a good soundtrack.

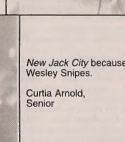
Melissa Wentzell and Andrew Neville, Senior and Junior respectively



Top Gun, because they are hotties and the planes are cool.

Erin Haskell, Sophomore

The Cutting Edge, because I love ice Hockey and the story is good.



Jessica Clark, Junior

New Jack City because of Wesley Snipes.

Curtina Arnold, Senior

New Jack City because of Wesley Snipes.

Curtia Arnold, Senior

Hey Freshmen!!

Think you've got it bad on campus. Well, it could be worse.

Jennifer Ward

So you think you're oppressed, huh? Can't (legally) drink, can't live in a single, you got closed out of two of your classes (tough luck, Pete ...), and you're screwed over for the room draw. Not to mention the big hairy upperclassman breathing down your neck, chanting "Freshmeat ... heh heh ... Freshmeat!"

Hey, things could be worse.

In fact, your freshman counterparts from 1924 would have had absolutely no sympathy for you. They were forced to live under conditions comparable to — or worse than — occupied France.

The dining hall had just moved from West Hall into Reid Hall. West Hall was then made into a dormitory specifically for freshmen.

Then the 1924 Washington College Student Handbook stepped in with a few well-placed rules and regulations for the freshmen:

1. Freshmen must not cut campus at any time.

2. Freshmen must use the back door of William Smith Hall.

3. Freshmen must not use the walk leading from William Smith Hall to the flag pole, known as the Sacred L.

4. Freshmen must hold themselves ready to do reasonable requests for upperclassmen.

5. Seniority must be observed at all times.

6. Freshmen must salute upperclassmen and all members of the faculty.

7. Freshmen must not wear any loud colors or preparatory insignia.

8. Freshmen must purchase a Freshman Cap (a rat cap or beanie) as prescribed by the Student Government as soon as possible after arriving at the college. This is to be worn at all times when out of doors until further notice.

9. Freshmen must attend all cheer practices.

10. Freshmen must not enter nor pass in front of East Hall without an invitation from an upperclassman.

11. Freshmen must help to decorate the gymnasium for special occasions.

12. Freshmen are not allowed to smoke on campus unless they use a corn cob pipe. (I must apologize now to Sean McDowell, who may find this last one particularly offensive.)

To be completely accurate, I must admit that the rules tended to relax after the first few months of the new school year. Still, consequences for breaking the rules were pretty stiff: confinement to one's room or to the campus for a period of time.

You know, some of these rules aren't such a bad idea. Maybe we should look into enforcing them next year — after we have safely become sophomores, of course ....

The source for this article was the book Washington College by Fred W. Dumschott. Ω

EARTH JUMP!
Coming soon to a paper near you!

Chestertown Natural Foods

"Quality natural foods, products and gifts at reasonable prices"

101 Spring Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-1677

BAY TO BAY TRADERS

207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442

Off Street Parking Next To The Store
Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm

Ray-Ban · Patagonia · Columbia Sportswear Company · REEF · Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks · Atlantis · JANSPORT · ORIGINAL LEG · Barrecrafters Car Racks

10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS

WITH STUDENT I.D.

Jeff Frank's GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

This week, I will be getting the students of Washington College a discount. You can depend on me to get your discounts, as I'm much more responsible than that Kevin guy, who just never shuts up. Remember – the White House kept hanging up on him. I'm the one with the connections. If you would like to support me in my battle for Discount turf, call my comment line at 1-800-KEVN-SUX.

I decided that the students of Washington College really needed hardware. I carefully deduced this from hearing some guy down the hall constantly saying that he needed a screw. A hardware store! What an idea! At least I'm the one with the ideas. I'd hate to be stuck with absolutely no talent like that other Discount guy. I could be called an employee into bringing the manager out of her office.

Jeff: Hello, my name is Jeff Frank. I'm with The Washington College Elm. I write a column about discounts, and I was wondering ...

Manager: No! We only give discounts to contractors.

Jeff: Yeah. OK. Thanks. Thanks a lot.

Never one to let a complete and total rejection get me down, I sat down and sulked in front of Acme until I noticed another opportunity for a discount.

Jeff: My name is Jeff Frank. I'm from The Washington College Elm. I see you're a Pepsi machine. I was wondering if I could get a discount? No response, huh? I'm thinking of buying a Pepsi, but I just don't have that much money. Will you lower your price any? No? I didn't think so. Did you see that look she gave me? The people around here seem to be looking at me funny. Maybe they've never seen someone trying to conduct an interview. No discount? Darn.

I thought that it was time for a change. The students of Washington College wanted a discount, and I had to get them one. So I did.

Jeff: What is this store called?

Owner: The Baseball Card Outlet.

J: And you are?

Owner: Dickie. Moby Dick.

J: And you run this store?

MD: Me and my partner Gary.

J: I write a column for The Washington College Elm. I just started writing it. I used to do a similar column with some guy; his name slips my mind at this moment. I go around looking for discounts for Washington College students. We spend so much money on tuition, and we just don't have the money to buy stuff, and ...

MD: Are you selling me advertising, or are you just doing an interview?

J: This column lets the students know about the area stores, and see if we can get discounts.

MD: With a College ID, I'll give a ten percent discount to any Washington College student.

J: Wow. That was easy.

MD: No problem.

J: We just don't have that much money. Let's say I'm the average Washington College student. I know that the average student would be quite upset to have me representing them, but that's too bad. Let's see if I have any money in my pockets. No. This is all I have. A fortune cookie, and a screw. We want baseball cards. Discounts will help us buy baseball cards, which is good because some of us collect baseball cards.

MD: Yeah, we have quite a few students come in here sometimes.

J: I guess that's all. Thank you.

MD: You're welcome.

I'm thinking of changing the name of the column to "I Got You A Discount!", because I did. After I dropped that dead weight called Kevin, I soared ahead into formerly unknown discount turf. Just to defend myself against Kevin and his slanderous column which will no doubt be somewhere below mine on

Kevin Hoffman's GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

I've gotten rid of that deadbeat discount fraud Jeff, and I'm on my own. I recruited Joseph, who used to be the translator for the old discount team, and together we went to the local baseball card shop to get discounts on sports-related merchandise for Washington students.

Kevin: Hello, I'm from The Washington College Elm, and I do a column for the paper ...

Owner: Hahaha! I've already done this.

K: What do you mean? Another guy came in here?

O: Yeah.

K: What did he look like?

O: He didn't look like you!

K: Funny-looking fellow wearing a hat?

O: Yeah.

K: Did you give him a discount?

O: He didn't end up buying nothing! He only had a fortune cookie and a screw in his pocket.

K: Did he get discounts?

O: Yeah, I told him he could get 10% off.

K: He's my archenemy! Maybe could you give a 15% discount to me?

O: Ten percent is as low as I go.

K: Man! I was going to get discounts here.

O: You would have.

K: All right, I'm going to have to go somewhere else. Thanks.

Well, I had no car to get anywhere, and my new partner Joseph wasn't in the mood to give me a piggyback ride. Luckily I spotted Sight and Sound, a new music store across from the Kent shopping center. I managed to get an interview with the owner by way of a speaker phone in his brother's office.

Kevin: Hello, I'm from The Washington College Elm.

Owner: I'm Lee Colby, how you doing man?

K: I'm fine, it's good to meet you.

I appreciate the attention, man. I was just over at your Student Affairs office and they'll be putting some flyers in your mailboxes on campus. We changed our store from "The Communication Station" to "Sight and Sound", cause man, there's just nowhere to buy music in Chestertown.

K: No, there really isn't. This is pretty much the only music store in the area.

L: Yeah, it's fantastic. We do a decent special order business on classical, obscure pieces, and a lot of independents. We're getting into some import things which we'll be carrying in Chestertown as well.

K: That's excellent.

L: We're just trying to carry a little bit of everything for everybody. Our niche is customer service, and that's the bottom line.

K: Is this a chain store or is this your own business?

L: It's just us. We've been doing business for 10 years. We're celebrating our tenth anniversary in business on December the fifth.

K: Are you guys planning anything special?

L: We got a big deal going on. I think we're going to run a parallel promotion in Chestertown. It's going to be our tenth anniversary in business and in Chestertown it'll be kind of a grand opening. We'll have a lot of in-store specials.

K: Do you offer any sort of student discounts?

L: Sure. We're also offering Washington College Students a 10% discount. It's an open game, 10% discount on any regularly priced CDs and tapes.

K: I'm sure the students will be happy to hear about that. Is there a limited time on that?

L: Right now we'll say through December 31.

K: If someone had a specific thing that they wanted, could they talk to you about it and maybe you'd be able to order it for them?

L: Sure man, for sure.

K: What kind of music are you into personally?

L: I like sort of alternative, progressive music.

K: Did you go to Lollapalooza?

L: No, I didn't.

K: All right, thanks. That's enough of an interview. I'll put it in the paper.

L: Good to talk to you man, and we really appreciate the press.

K: Hey, we appreciate getting that 10% discount!

As soon as I finished the interview, I dropped my new partner Joseph, Chinese food in one hand a compact disc in the other. He was just about to pay for the CD when I rushed over to tell him the good news.

Kevin: Hey Joseph are you putting the student discount into effect?

Joseph: No.

K: Do you realize that students of Washington College get a 10 percent discount here?

J: No, I don't know.

K: Give this man a discount! How do you feel about that?

J: I really like it.

K: What CD are you getting with it?

J: I'm buying Mozart.

Cashier: You saved 73 cents.

J: I just saved 73 cents and it's all

Washington College Staff Profile

The new Assistant Vice President for Finance is Eren Rose. Replacing Lauren Bedell on October 18, 1994, Rose is a wonderful new addition to the Washington College staff. Rose formerly worked for the Kent County Government for nine years as their Director of Budget and Accounting. She is also a CPA (Certified Public Accountant) and is currently working towards the completion of a Masters Degree at the University of Delaware.

Originally graduating from the University of Maryland with a major in psychology and a minor in English, Rose decided to embark upon a career in accounting. In 1983 she began to attend night school to become an accountant. Those classes lasted seven years and she still spends time studying for her Masters.

Eren Rose came to W.C. because she really wanted to work in an education environment. "I like the fact that people are interested in looking at things in a new way (at W.C.)," she explained. "Education is important both as a basis for a job and also because it broadens your horizon. It allows you to see that there are choices in your life."

When not at work, Rose enjoys the outdoors. She loves living on a farm and also likes to take walks and work out. She keeps Labrador retrievers and koi (Japanese carp). Rose also enjoys sewing pillows and other items of upholstery. In addition to all this, she is also treasurer for the Holly Society of America.

Rose lives in Quaker Neck on the family farm. Her husband teaches chemistry and physics at Kent County High School. He has a son who teaches at St. Michael's High. Rose is no stranger to Chestertown; her mother, is a Chestertown resident along with one of her two sisters. The other sister lives in Williamsburg, Virginia.

Speak out and save lives with Amnesty International

Jennifer Dougherty

Amnesty International operates on the philosophy that "It is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness." "Silence is consent" is another precept of Amnesty. When we do not speak out against the ills of this world, we are literally consenting to the abuses of it. Thus, Amnesty is a highly communicative organization. Letters are our means of defense against the abuse of human rights. The efficacy of Amnesty's works is surprising. There are literally thousands of Amnesty organizations throughout the world and thousands more people writing letters. By sheer mass and weight of those letters, governments and leaders are forced to take notice. Through letter-writing and networking, the Amnesty headquarters amasses profiles of those people in need of our help, then distributes those profiles among the chapters of Amnesty throughout the United States.

The Amnesty group here on campus meets either Tuesday or Thursday nights at 9:00 p.m. The group's officers are: Siu Yee Ng, president; Luis Torres, vice-president; Jennifer Dougherty, secretary. At the meetings, Siu Yee distributes Urgent Action profiles, which are brief descriptions of prisoners of conscience, people who have been "disappeared" from those who have been mistreated and, in some cases tortured, while in prison. The group then drafts letters to various international leaders requesting some amendment of the given person's situation; whether that be to be given a fair trial, or for him or her whereabouts to be made known, or that the perpetrators of torture be brought to justice. Depends on the nature of the Urgent Action appeal.

Thursday, November 17 was Amnesty Day. The group set up a table in the CAC with pamphlets, petitions, and a brief film. They also set up in the dining hall from 5 - 6 p.m. with similar materials. At both, there was a donation box (all proceeds went to the Amnesty International fund) and a number of

The Computing Center • Macintosh PC • The Internet

Net Surfing

User Dungeon • MUD • IP Address NewsWatcher • Telnet • Finger • Archie • Talk • Gopher • Pacer Forum BlitzMail • LegendMud • Broadcast

by Mindie Kaplan

NewsWatcher is handy program for those who don't have the time or money to run out for the daily paper. You can download NewsWatcher by selecting the Network Software server (found in Info and Updates in the computing center zone). Double-click on the Network Install/Update icon and, when presented with a list of network programs, double-click on "NewsWatcher 2.0d17." This will install NewsWatcher on your hard drive.

Simply double-clicking on the program will present you with a gargantuan list of newsgroups. A newsgroup is simply a record of saved messages on a specific subject. Double-clicking on the selection "alt.book.anne-rice," you are immediately presented with over a hundred messages from vampire-lovers all over the world. Messages that have a number to their left indicated a chain of posts on the same subtopic. For example, the selection "Jandi Graff Re: The Perfect Marius" was continued in a "conversation" that spanned five messages.

To read the next message in a "thread" or series of messages, simply select "next article" under the "news" heading at the top of your screen. Or, if you prefer to use the keyboard functions, pressing command key I will do the same thing. After you select an article, it will be marked as "read" (with a check mark placed beside it) and if you choose to save this session, you will not be presented with that article again.

A convenient way to keep track of newsgroups you want to read is to make you own group list. By going under "File" and selecting "New Group Window," you can create a document containing only those newsgroups you wish to read. With thousands of newsgroups available, creating your own personal list seems to be the best way to keep on top of things.

To add a group to your list, simply drag it from the "Full Group List" to the window containing your personal list. The number on left of the group title will tell you how many messages are in that newsgroup. The newsgroup rec.scuba contained 165 messages at the time this article was written. A second newsgroup, alt.elvis.sighting, only contained 5 messages. Opening the message "I saw the king," I was presented with a cute story about the sender slipping on a bottle of Fruitopia and being saved from falling by Elvis himself. To tell the user that Elvis is not God and it's okay to shower again, you can reply in one of two ways. Under the heading "reply" you can either post a reply in the newsgroup itself, or you can send an E-mail message. If you were suddenly inspired to tell your own Elvis story, you could select "post new article."

Newsgroups range from the useful to the recreational. They cover everything from erotic music to personals ads to the Earth summit meeting. Alt.destroy.the.earth is a lively discussion of various humorous ways to demolish the planet. The article "pour petrol over south pole" suggests that you douse Antarctica with petroleum and make a penguin light a cigarette. Alt.fan.ren-and-stimpy is another fun way to forget about homework or the fact that it's getting cold out-

Popcorn & Jujubes:

A review of Mary Shelley's Frankenstein
by Beth McLaughlin

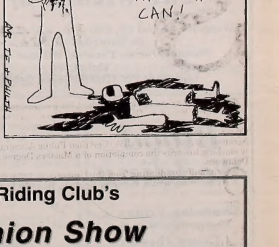
Have you ever left a movie theater completely awed and dumbfounded? This was the overall reaction of the audience in the theater the night the film Mary Shelley's Frankenstein opened. I personally fumbled around hours after the movie trying to regain my normal consciousness. This might be because I'm obsessed by the literature of the time in which Frankenstein was written, or possibly just plain strange.

The point I am making is that it was an affecting experience, with powerful performances by Kenneth Branagh as Victor Frankenstein (as well as the director of the film), Helena Bonham Carter as Elizabeth and Tom Hulce and Aidan Quinn as supporting actors playing Victor's student friend and the captain of the Arctic ship respectively. Robert De Niro plays the monster.

The film was directly based on Mary Shelley's novel, retaining the true essence of her story and maintaining the original plot as much as possible. It is about a wealthy and happy medical student, Victor Frankenstein (Branagh) who lived in the late 18th century in Geneva. In a time when epidemics were rampant and women died of childbirth daily, Victor was experiencing the fulfillment of life as thousands of people were dying daily. During this time in history, science among other fields, was making huge leaps, advancements that were continually astonishing. Yet, with these advancements, people were still dying at a horrifying rate. In a completely honest attempt for mankind, he defies nature and death by recreating a human being.

The fruits of Frankenstein's labors are disastrous. He is successful in creating a monster (De Niro). (This includes countless gory and bloody scenes – I studied my candy box for long periods of the film.) The monster roams the earth trying to figure out his existence, encountering fearful and harmful human beings. In his development, he realizes his horrible existence and pledges Revenge against his creator.

Victor Frankenstein (Branagh) continues his life, not knowing that his creation is alive. He finds out after his family and his true love (Bonham Carter) are irrevocably affected.



The film includes breathtaking scenes of creation and often has religious undertones of Godliness. The film effectively reveals the many levels of the story. The film leaves you squirming either with anticipation, suspense, or just plain horror. This is the true horror flick that all the spin-offs did no justice to.

My English major tendencies not withstanding, I suggest the reading of the novel when seeing the film; you will understand much more about Shelley's meaning and be more likely to enjoy it. (In some sick way I suppose.) Reactions I have heard so far to the film were extreme; audiences either hated it, with no decisive reason as to why, or were passionate, such as this obsessed reviewer. In any case, go to the film – be affected.

HOROSCOPES

Scorpio (10/24-11/22) If you were born on the 16th or after, the entrance of Mars into your sign will cause you to become warlike and aggressive. Channel these forces into the bedroom; you will have plenty of opportunity to be on top.
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) Worried your friends will forget your birthday because it's so close to the holidays? Don't bother — no one will be around to share your meal of lard on your way home.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20) Worried about your breasts? Do you have too much, too little? Buy a Wonderbra. Stuff it with Wonder Bread.
Aquarius (1/21-2/18) Worried your Age is over? Spend your weekend watching Hair, or a naked version of Hamlet.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) You think you're special because friends buy you dinner? Get over it. They just want to fatten you up for that semi-formal.
Aries (3/21-4/19) Buy a new copy of Playboy. The staples have fallen out of your Miss September.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) Don't keep doing other people's laundry. Next thing you know, they'll want to sleep on your sheets and use your slippers.
Gemini (5/21-6/21) Mulling over the symbolism of Fruitopia? Switch to cigarettes.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) Don't open the door. Don't leave your room. Get your roommate to bring you meals. We mean it. Danger awaits you.
Leo (7/23-8/22) Been feeling a lot of anger lately? On the way back from Newt's, walk through the graveyard and take it out on dead people.
Virgo (8/23-9/23) Do you really need that fourteenth J. Crew sweater? Save your cash for your therapist. You're going to need it.
Libra (9/24-10/23) Run.

By Luna and Arcturus
Ember is burned out and has taken an extended vacation.

Andy's

ANDY GOODARD'S PUB
410 756-0270

125 HIGH STREET
ANNAPOLIS, MD 21401

Friday, 18 November
Kevin Johnson & the Linemen were here last month for the first time: an instant hit! Rock, country-rock, extremely danceable ... terrific original tunes.
Saturday, 19 November
The Chesapeake Retrievers
Traditional and progressive bluegrass played by some exceptionally talented musicians.

The Riding Club's
Fashion Show
Saturday, November 19, 1 p.m., Student Center
All who attend will receive a 15% discount at Moon Bay Outfitters.
Modeling will be:
Dina Abbate, Stacy Barker, Chris Camillo, Chris Eaton, Kathy Gauthier, Amand

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

Creative Musical Ranting Under Duress ... sounds like nothing was going on at Tower

All right, confession time. I didn't manage to get around to finding any musical offerings for this week's review. What can I say; life's been tough all around? But, trooper that I am, I'm still doing the column! After all, I'm in college. I don't need to actually know what I'm writing about to do it.

First off, I would like to offer a sincere and heartfelt apology to the friendly people out at the Annapolis Tower Records. If you recall, a couple of weeks ago, I wrote about my displeasure with their lack of professionalism in ordering music for me. Well, it just so happens that later that night when I got home, guess who had left me a message saying, "Yes, Mr. Pierce, the album you ordered just came in. You can pick it up whenever you want!" Well, needless to say, I feel just awful about this. It's just one of those times where I flew off the handle and said something stupid before I got my facts straight. I mean, so what if it took me ordering the album twice and then waiting for close to two months before it came in? So what if I meet with surly attitudes and incompetent help every time I go into that store? So what if I had to listen to some guy with a weak excuse for a beard talk to everyone around him at least twice before he actually got around to ringing up my CDs? But, despite my bitterness over these events, I'm willing to forgive and forget with the Tower people. They did finally get the CD in, so I guess they're all right.

Moving on to the next topic of monologue, what do you listen to? Or, more to the point, what do you want to listen to? You see, I'm thinking of doing a column in the future that will be a list of the top ten coveted albums for Christmas and I can't very well tell you what you want to be listening to if you don't tell me what it is that you want to be listening to. So, this is what I want you to do. Light some incense (or whatever) and sit down in front of your stereo / walkman / thingyou-play-music-on and breath deeply. The breathing is very important here; remember to do it or things will go horribly wrong. Now close your eyes and visualize your music collection. Examine it. Look at each title slowly, savoring the words as they lay in perfect self-contained perfection. This that you are looking at is your inner music collection. It is a perfect untouchable being that rests inside you, impervious to attacks from bad music. Now look at the collection carefully, have you noticed that there are certain titles there that aren't actually in your real-world music collection? These are the albums that you have not gotten yet, but need to find desperately if you ever even hope to achieve peace and fulfillment in you life. Now open your eyes and get a piece of paper and write the titles down quickly before you forget them. Oh, and don't forget to enjoy the subtle warm-inner-glow that you feel after experiencing communion with your deeper self. Got it? Good. BlitzMail me your lists and I'll compile them into a top ten (or twenty, depending on how many lists I get, and how diverse the music is) list of your most coveted Christmas albums, to be printed at a later date (probably somewhere around Easter).

And finally, for anyone interested in the contemporary musical history that made possible the mainstream success of previously underground bands such as Nirvana, there is a book that you should read. It's called Route 666: On the Road to Nirvana, and it's written by a nice sounding woman named Gina Arnold. The book covers the underground scene in its rise, fall, and rise again from the late seventies to the almost present day (it was written before Kurt blew his brains out). In language that flows back and forth from straightforward facts to almost dreamy prose, Arnold manages to capture not only the history of this interesting musical genre, but also the spirit of it. She is, in short, both a critic and a fan. So, if you're looking for something to read besides chemistry or, ahem, philosophy, you should take a look at this here book and see what you think about them old punks.

Symbolism on stage: Blood Wedding at W.C.

Chris Watkins

Symbolism flows from director Richard McKee's production of Blood Wedding like the fluid of its namesake — thick and heavy. From the moment the audience views the impressive, imaginative set, the atmosphere digs and builds.

Surreality is the catchword for this early Spanish drama. The play itself contains a distinct level of surreality. Subjects such as the Moon and Death have physical roles and interact with the other characters.

McKee has gone out of his way to generate a feeling of otherworldliness on the stage. The stage glows a bright orange. Two desolate trees strike up amidst mounds of earth.

The alien qualities carry themselves to the actors. Lead actress Mary Hoffman, the bride, exhibits an aloofness that seems, at times, out of place. The several narrating characters present a similar bizarre, cold attitude.

For the most part, though, the actors give exemplary performances, full of emotion and believability. Despite the previously mentioned detatchedness, Hoffman's performance contains tact and talent. Actress Jenn Morris serves up a treat early in the play, packing her role as the mother of groom Greg Gibson with an energy that is both rich and natural.

Gibson also performs with strength, although, as with many of the cast members, this power requires time to build. He is at his best in the bountifully emotional final scene of the first act.

Many other cast members also deserve special mention. Veteran thespian Jen Friedman, the overzealous mother of the bride, fills the stage with her presence. One finds it difficult not to be taken with her vitality. As an added benefit, she provides a few moments of humor in an otherwise dark drama.

Newcomer Elizabeth Ellinghaus, the embodiment of death, acts with skill and potency. Like Friedman, she possesses a passion that wells up and rushes over the audience. Actor Paul Briggs, the father of the bride, demonstrates a good grasp of feeling and a crisp manner of speaking.

McKee's direction leads the characters and the audience well throughout the play. He pulls enough emotion from the actors to allow for clean interpretation in many of the potentially confusing scenes. At times, however, he leans too heavily on his surrealistic atmosphere. In these cases, the unnaturalness seems overwhelming. McKee's frequent use of flat, emotionless speech, for example – specifically in the second act – damages the flow of the piece.

On the whole, this work deserves commendation. Many long hours have been devoured by this project, and the effort shines through. Technically, the play appears to be nearly flawless. There were no disturbing pauses – the signals for dropped lines – in the production this reviewer saw. Emotionally, the show is mature and full.

Blood Wedding has a great deal to offer an involved audience. Those who wish to explore the depths of a strongly symbolic piece will probably feel welcome at Tawes Theatre on Thursday, Friday and Saturday night at 8 p.m., but those searching for a slice of pure entertainment may find

Actors Community Theatre presents

The Wizard of Oz

November 25 and 26, 7:30 p.m., with a special matinee on Saturday at 2 p.m.
Norman James Theatre, William Smith Hall
Tickets $6
Call (410) 778-1100 for more information

Cleopatra's Daughters present

Appollo II Talent Show

November 19, 8 p.m.
Norman James Theatre

The Washington College Music Department invites you to the

Jazz Band Concert

November 20, 4 p.m.,
Tawes Theatre

Blood Wedding

Thursday, Friday, & Saturday, 8 p.m.,
Tawes Theater

If you have been waiting to see a play this year, this is the one to see.
Passion, Love, Betrayal, and much more.

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

Spider's
(Formerly Newt's)
Hillside Bar
Special Draft Night
Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Midnight Madness
Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Must be 21 or older

Holley's "Water of Life"

Sarah Bell

"I am already in love with the Aegean blue of the Chesapeake, its gulls and terns, the ospreys crying heraldic over their nests of branches on the channel markers, and the great blue heron, Zen master of the quiet anchorage..." Margaret Holley read aloud last Monday night, from her poem "Blue Herons."

Margaret who? Margaret Holley- and yes, you have missed a once-in-a-lifetime experience to hear the one and only poet, Margaret Holley, read her poetry, which I might say was quite fine.

"Blue Herons" was the first poem that she read.

"My husband and I, who is in the audience now, spent our honeymoon night a few years ago here in Chestertown. So this is a special place for us. "Blue Herons" was written before the honeymoon," Holley says with a broad smile on her lips. "But it still holds true."

Each of Margaret Holley's poems had a story behind it which made them even more fascinating. Sometimes the stories were more interesting than the poems themselves. Should I have said that?

The Smoke Tree was her first collection of poems which won her The 1991 Bluestem Award. "Blue Heron" came from this book as did another poem that was written about this area. "The Cliffs" centered on a piece of white paper, caught between the rocks and rustling in the breeze like a "stone's white wing."

Other poems from The Smoke Tree, included a series of poems that focused on the life and work of Marie Curie.

"Back in the late 1800s, it was not very common for women to be scientists. So I was very interested in Marie Curie and by the time I had read my third novel I knew I was hooked," Holley said.

Before Holley read each of her poems about that section, there was a brief explication telling of the discovery of the x-ray or the smuggling of Einstein out of Germany. Each introduction complemented the succeeding poems nicely.

She also read from Morning Star. The first was titled "Siesta Key."

"When I was younger, my family used to go down to Sarasota Florida. It was beautiful there. I returned when I was older to find the place unrecognizable. It was so built up. I couldn't remember where anything had been."

Lines such as, "I saw the sunrise- pink and yellow conch mouths rocking in pools, and sand dollars bleaching on the window sill ...," suggest Holley's love and allure for "the empty beaches of Siesta Key."

Holley also shared with us some of her more recent poems.

"A lot of these poems are traffic jam poems. On my way home from work there is usually rush hour traffic, or I will be at a really long light, and I pull out an old gas receipt and write down the beginnings of a poem."

Unfortunately, the evening had to come to an end. And we all walked away from the Sophie Kerr room with a thoughtful smile playing on our lips, knowing a little bit more about who Margaret Holley was. Knowing that Holley's "Water of Life" was writing poetry.

"For me just now, it is quietness;
for others money, cessation of pain, or a few more months to live inside the unraveling sleeve of the self."
- Margaret Holley Ω

Songs of the Holocaust

Karen Sieger

The Holocaust has been recorded through books, films, et cetera. Kristallnacht, the "Night of Broken Glass," was remembered Sunday night through music in Hodson Hall with cantor, Sam Weiss.

A son of Holocaust survivors, Weiss has dedicated his life to keeping the memory of not only the victims but also the survivors of Hitler's final solution, alive. Born in Brooklyn, New York, where he was active in the New York Jewish music scene. After college and the completion of his cantorial service, Weiss cantored in Connecticut and Delaware before making his way to Baltimore.

Accompanied by pianist Vladimir Svoysky, Weiss took the audience on a journey of the struggles of the Jews during their oppression during World War II. His collection of 10 pieces of music passionately recorded the lives of not only the Jews in the ghettos, but also those in the concentration camps. Some of the songs were translated into English, but most were sung in Yiddish. They were, according to Weiss, "constant companions for the victims and they are living witnesses for us."

On Kristallnacht, November 9, 1938, violence erupted throughout Germany, Austria, and the Sudetenland. 30,000 Jews were arrested and sent to concentration camps like Sachsenhausen, Buchenwald, and Dachau. 7000 Jewish businesses were destroyed, over 1000 synagogues were set on fire, 96 Jews were killed, and 36 were severely injured. This outburst was sparked by the assassination of a minor German embassy official by a young Jew.

Life would no longer be possible for Jews in the Reich. Jews were sent to ghettos, concentration camps, or went into hiding.

Life in the ghettos was one of squalor, despair, and fear. Songs like "Dance, Dance, Dance!" reflected the struggle to keep families together. Families of four received passes that allowed them food rations and a temporary guarantee they would not be deported. In "Dance, Dance, Dance!" the refrain "if you have a yellow paper, you can marry me" sums up how impromptu families were formed and the anguish of larger families who had to decided who would stay and who would not.

At first the concentration camps were designed as penal colonies that exploited Jewish labor. Soon the camps became centers for liquidataion. In Treblinka, a extermination camp 40 miles from Warsaw, between May 1942 to August 1943, 750,00 Jews were killed. Only one picture and songs like "Treblinka" survive to tell the tale. In the song, "Ten Brothers," by Rosberry D'Arguto, one phrase was changed slightly and the song became "play me a melody, they're taking us to the gas."

By the end of World War II, two out of three European Jews were dead. The Kristallnacht memorium revived the memories of the "voices of the victims that could not be still." The millions of Jews who perished during the war cannot be forgotten. The evening was summed up by "The Ghetto Peddler," by Leyb Rozenthal, when Yisrolik, a Jewish orphan said, "Please remember my whistle and my song!" Ω

Upcoming Events Upcoming Events Upcoming Events Upcoming Events

MUSIC

November 26:
Widespread Panic • Hammerjacks, call (410) 659-ROCK

November 27:
Green Day and Pansy Division • Patriot Center, call (410) 481-SEAT

November 28:
Candlebox, Flaming Lips • Patriot Center, George Mason University, call (410) 481-SEAT

November 29:
Danzig, Type O-Negative, Godflesh • Michael's Eighth Avenue, call (410) 768-7901 or (410) 481-SEAT

December 3:
Indigo Girls • The Spectrum, call (215) 336-2000

MUSIC

PLAYS

November 18-20:
The Nerd, by Shue • Chesapeake College, call (410) 822-5400

Now through November 19:
City of Angels • F. Scott Fitzgerald Theatre, tickets $8, call (301) 403-1080

Now through November 27:
A Streetcar Named Desire • Spotlighters Theatre, call (410) 825-2554

November 25-27:
Wizard of Oz • Norman James Theatre, 7:30 p.m. on 25-26, 2 p.m. on 26-27

November 22-27:
Grease • Lyric Opera House, call 1-800-669-STAGE or (410) 481-SEAT

Now through December 4:
Guys and Dolls • Toby's Dinner Theatre, call (301) 596-6161

Now through December 18:
Two Trains Running • Center Stage, call (410) 332-0033

PLAYS

Upcoming Events Upcoming Events Upcoming Events Upcoming Events

FOR ALL THOSE WHO WANT TO BE FUNKDAFIED TO A SEVENTIES GROOVE, COME TO CLEOPATRA'S DAUGHTERS SEVENTIES BASH.

IT WILL BE A BLAST FROM THE PAST. ALL OF YOUR FAVORITE JAMS OF THE SEVENTIES WILL BE ON THE TURNTABLE.

PROCEEDS GO TO CHARITY.

$1 WITH WASHINGTON COLLEGE ID
$2 WITHOUT WASHINGTON COLLEGE ID

COME DRESSED IN YOUR AFROS, BELL BOTTOMS, HIP-HUGGERS, AND BRA SHIRTS, AND BE FUNKDAFIED.

THIS FRIDAY: NOVEMBER 18, 1994
TIME: 9 p.m. - 2a.m.

PEACE, LOVE, AND SOOOOOOUL

Freshman-Sophomore

FAREWELL TO FALL SEMI-FORMAL

featuring The Frogs

Friday, December 2, 9:30 - 1:30, Student Center $5.00 a couple

Freshmen & sophomores may bring date of choice Tickets are available Monday, November 14 through Wednesday, November 23 in the dining hall and through Christina, x. 8677.

Centennial Conference Volleyball Team

Nicole Zemanski

After an up and down season, two members of the W.C. volleyball team were chosen to the All Centennial Conference Volleyball Team. Senior co-captain Beverly Diaz was chosen to the All Centennial Conference Second Team and sophomore Becky Stephens was named to the All Centennial Conference Honorable Mention Volleyball Team. Diaz led the team in kills with 269 for the season with Stephens coming in at a close second with 222 for her sensational sophomore season. Stephens added 73 solo blocks which led the team. In her last week of play, Diaz was named to the Centennial Conference Honor Roll once again. She put together 24 kills, two blocks, four aces, and 41 digs during this last week of play. Both of these players did an excellent job this season. Diaz will be greatly missed next season, but Stephens still has two more years of volleyball left! Congratulations! Ω

Out-numbered, out-sized, but cracking jokes

W.C. world renowned ice hockey team takes on another giant

Dave Kraft

Last Sunday night the Washington College Ice Hockey Club braved the streets of Philadelphia to face the Pioners of Widener University. Once they found the rink, the Sho'men saw that they were once again the decidedly smaller team as a few players could not make the trip. The 11 Sho'men stepped out of the locker room and were awestruck when they saw the Widener team of approximately 35 players. In addition to the numerical size of the Widener team, each one looked like he was in the 6'2"-6'4", 200-250-pound range. It was soon apparent that each one had orders to try to injure each member of the Sho'men team. The Sho'men had their work cut out for them.

Widener scored early, and the Sho'men were quickly learning that hitting these big guys head-on was not a good strategy. Then, using finesse, Chris Daly took a lead pass from Mike Mullen and rifled a shot past the stunned Widener goalie to tie the game 1-1. Widener then briefly took the lead, but a penalty put the Sho'men on the power play. The fearsome Sho'men power play unit (defensemen Tim Reardon and Miro Beran, and forwards Chris Daily, Dave Kraft, and Mike Mullen) is seldom seen, as usually a Sho'man is the one in the penalty box, but this time they were able to capitalize. Mullen won the face-off, took it to the right side and passed across the ice to Kraft, who placed a shot in the top corner of the net to tie the game at two.

In the second period, fatigue was starting to take the Sho'men by storm. Widener scored a few times to take a 5-2 lead. The Sho'men still had a little life in them, though. Chris Daily took a penalty, which the Sho'men killed off. Then he returned to the bench where he was yelled at by his grandfather, who was in attendance. Calmly, Daily said, "Don't worry Grandpa, this next one's for you." Called shots are the things of which legends are made, and sure enough, Daily scored his team-leading third goal of the season on a breakaway. Unfortunately, that would be all for the Sho'men scoring, as the other Sho'men forwards, Graham Munda, John Paine, Todd Barto, Scott Dervaes, and John Moreland, could not penetrate the sizable Widener defense, and wound up losing 8-3. Again, rookie goaltender Ben Feld had an unbelievable game, turning away over 40 shots and increasing his save percentage to an impressive 80.6%. Equally impressive was his joke-cracking ability in pressure trash-talking situations.

The Pioneers will make their visit to Easton on Tuesday, November 29 at 10:15 p.m., when the Sho'men's newfinesse game plan will take effect. Towards the end of the game, the Sho'men skill caused a number of Widener players to take themselves out of the game by missing checks and embarrassingly crashing into the boards.

The ice rink employees may not like to see W.C. fans at the game in Easton, but the team would. There will certainly be an abundance of hitting, but watch out – these guys don't like to be teased. Ω

Congratulations!

Scrimmage Scoop: The basketball scene

Peggy Busker

The Sho'men took on Goucher College in their first scrimmage. The game was broken into three periods. The Sho'men won the first by a few, lost the second by a few, and the second string players played the third period and lost by one point. There was no official score kept and not all fouls resulted in foul shots so the score is questionable in several areas. Goucher was a strong team with some big men on the inside.

On Saturday the team traveled to Annapolis to play their second and final scrimmage. They came together a little more to win the game. Again, the Sho'men played against a big team.

"Playing against older, bigger, stronger men will prepare us for the teams in the Conference," said Derek Cuff.

"Good hopes, a lot of potential, just a matter of the right people stepping up, and us coming together and playing as a team," was sophomore Mark Awantang's outlook towards the coming season after two scrimmages.

Coach Finnegan was not pleased with the loss to Goucher but remains positive about the season. As a young team and in their first game, mistakes will be made. The members of the team are working hard to work the mistakes out of their game.

Coach Finnegan realizes that playing their first five games away is not the easiest way to open a season. He has a very young team but is optimistic that they will play with the determination needed to win.

This weekend, the Sho'men open their season away at the Johns Hopkins Tip-Off. This is a two-day event. Washington plays John Carol from Cleveland, Ohio, nationally ranked 17, in the first game.

While many of us are getting ready to head home for Thanksgiving, Finnegan's team will be traveling to take on Frostburg University in western Maryland. The game is on November 22 at 7:30 p.m. Coach Finnegan is hoping to see many W.C. fans there to cheer his young team on.

A little bit closer to home, the Sho'men take on the University of Delaware, a Division I team, at Delaware, November 26 at 7:30 p.m. Make the hour drive to see the Sho'men take on Blue Hen Delaware.

The men come home December 6 against Conference rival Muhlenberg at 7:30 p.m. Be sure to see them in their home and Conference opener, or deal with Coach Finnegan.

And now for the women ...

A team with only sophomores and freshmen is looking to be a huge threat to the Conference this year. Two players measure in at six feet tall and the other seven fall at 5'7" or above. With an excellent coaching staff including returning head coach Lanee Cole and her supporting coaches Geoff Lanier and Cherie Hogg, these women can definitely do some damage.

The scoreboard seldom reflects effort or quality of play. The Sho'women took on top-ranked NAIA Wilmington College. The final score was 65-46, with the Sho'women on the losing side, but they played hard and confidently for their young team in only their second scrimmage.

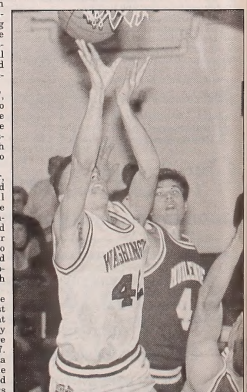
The teams began with very aggressive and close play. Freshman Kristen Snell went out in the first minute with an injured ankle, playing tight defense in the paint. Wilmington scored their first point on the ensuing foul shot. Wilmington was a very big team and Washington had to step up to meet their size. They had several big women on the line for Washington's six-footers to guard.

Wilmington put on a full-court press and Washington had trouble adjusting at first. They began to have more success on breaking the press by using the middle of the court rather than passing to the outside. Wilmington relaxed their press in the second half.

The Sho'women got on the scoreboard when sophomore Lee Ann Lezzer sunk one from the baseline to give Washington two. Lezzer scored twice more from outside the paint. Lezzer played solidly under pressure, as she did last season, making three assists and allowing limited turnovers.

Allison Wentworth and Eboni Taylor continued to be the twin towers on both defense and offense. Wentworth had four blocks and 12 rebounds and scored on three of the rebounds. Taylor put fear into Wilmington with 13 rebounds, scoring on three; two steals; and 16 points inside the paint. Taylor and Wentworth moved well in the paint and put the moves on Wilmington several times. Each had a three-point play, coming up strong and underneath the basket and on the foul line.

Freshman Megan Miller had an impressive game with a long three-pointer late in the second half. Miller hustled and adjusted well to college play. She had two steals and four rebounds.



Tara McKee, at 6'0", came off the bench to score four points. She played strongly in the paint and was impressive on defense with three rebounds and two steals.

Karen Seiger, Hillary Rainey, and Anne Petracco, all freshmen, came off the bench to do some damage as well. Seiger and Rainey combined for three rebounds and two steals. Petracco played well at the forward position and added depth to the offense.

The game was close in the first half. Almost every Wilmington point was answered by Washington. The score at the half was 32-27. Washington needed a hard drive to get the lead. Wilmington had several fast players with good shots and drives to the basket. Washington needed to get the ball inside on offense and use the height and power of Taylor, Wentworth, and McKee. But W.C. did not do this soon enough or often enough. At one point in the second half they pulled within three. But Wilmington jumped far ahead again.

Coach Cole was happy with her team's performance. "They turned the ball over too much (31 times)," she said. But she is very optimistic about the season. She knows her young team can go far. They have a lot of talent and heart. The game was very emotional for the Sho'women. Cole hopes they, "go out every game this season and play 100% of their best basketball and do it as a team, but most importantly, have fun."

The women play away this weekend at the Ramada Tip Off. On November 22, they are here at 7 p.m.

Derek Cuff showing his offensive skills

Women's intramural basketball

Anyone interested in playing in a three on three league, submit a team to Will Brandenburg either at his office in the LFC or through campus mail by Monday, November 21. We will start the league Tuesday, November 22.

A winning start for the W.C. swim teams

It looks like Washington will swim above the rest of the Conference this season to the #1 spot

The men show F&M how it's done

Dave Kraft

The Washington College men's swimming season started off with a bang on Saturday as they avenged last year's loss by defeating Franklin and Marshall 65-30. F&M's notoriously small facility favored the home team, but the Sho'men were not intimidated by it, or by F&M. The pool has only five lanes, so only the top three places scored points. This also favored F&M as their team is smaller than the Sho'men's. The Sho'men's upbeat attitude and hunger carried them from the first event.

"It was a big surprise to see that the team was this close together," said junior transfer Erric Hetzer about his first meet as a Sho'man. "I'd never been on a team like this before."

That first event, the 400 Medley Relay, was won by the Sho'men team of Peter Ward, Jason Campbell, Tim Parent, and Dave Potter. F&M jumped out ahead in the first two legs, but Parent's 55.15 butterfly split, exceptional for this early in the season, closed the gap, and Potter passed the F&M freestyler for the win. The team of Dave Kraft, Julien Gaudion, Scott Steinmuller, and Marcello Brutti took third.

Drew Fritch and Erric Hetzer took second and third in the 1000 Free, good for fourth and fifth respectively on W.C.'s all time list. Dave Cola continued his dominance by winning the 200 Free in which Chris Freisheim placed third. In perhaps the defining event of the meet, Dave Potter and Tim Parent blew away from the field to take first and second in the 50 Free. Peter Ward then won the 200 IM with Dan Wodall coming in third.

After the break, Scott Steinmuller excited the crowd with a come-from-behind win in the 200 Fly. Tim Parent was third. Dave Potter and Jason Campbell took first and second in the 100 Free. Peter Ward and Rob Cronin took second and third in the 200 Back, followed by Dave Cola's second win of the day in the 500 Free. Jason Campbell and Julien Gaudion placed second and third in the 200 Breast, leaving only the 400 Free Relay to go. F&M won the meet last year by touching out the Sho'men by a tenth of a second. There would be no such occurrence this time however, as Dave Cola, Erric Hetzer, Drew Fritch, and Chris Freisheim won the event handily.

"We're very excited about the start," said Coach Kim Lessard. "The win was a little bit expected but we swam over our expectations." The win cements the Sho'men's place among the Conference elite, and sends a message to other Conference teams.

"It shows that we are going to be one of the contenders in the Centennial Conference," said co-captain Chris Freisheim. "It was nice to see the whole team together and enthusiastic about the meet. Every member of the team is going to be a contributor this year." Ω

Women approaching records early on

Dave Kraft

The Washington College women's swim team took a giant step forward as they defeated a tough Franklin and Marshall team 58-36.

"It was a definite unveiling of our new team," said coach Kim Lessard. The turnaround is indicative in comparing the scores from this year and last year, when F&M defeated the women 131-72. The Sho'women swam extremely well, producing excellent times early in the year.

"We were really psyched because it was the first meet," freshman Meredith Bathgate commented. "It makes us feel that our team is really developed."

The meet opened with Washington winning the 400 Medley Relay. The team consisted of Meredith Bathgate (whose leadoff 1:05.86 was the second-fastest W.C. 100 Back ever), Colleen Roberts, Megan Bradley, and Danielle Sullivan. The team of Erin Miller, Robin Woolsey, Amy Draper, and Denise Hakanson followed in third place. Jen Dow took second in the 1000 Free. Then Danielle Sullivan and Casey Bane took second and third in the 200 Free. Meredith Bathgate won the 50 Free, with Jenn Voss placing third to increase the women's lead to six. With Colleen Roberts taking second in the 200 IM, Washington led by three at the break. Thoughts of victory were beginning to spread in the team area.

To start the second portion of the meet, F&M did not enter anyone in the 200 Fly, allowing Megan Bradley and Jen Dow to easily coast to first and second places and increase the W.C. lead to 11. Bradley's 2:24.49 was an exceptional time this early in the year, second fastest on the W.C. all time list. Meredith Bathgate took second in the 100 Free, and Erin Miller and Barbara Murphy took second and third in respectively in the 200 Back. The W.C. lead was now seven, but once again, the Sho'women responded. Megan Bradley won her third race of the day, the 500 Free, with Jen Dow summing to an unbelievable come-from-behind second place. Now the Sho'women knew they could do no worse than tie, as the lead was 14 with two events remaining. But they would not be satisfied with a tie. Colleen Roberts ensured the victory with a win in the 200 Breast. Then, for good measure, Washington's team of Danielle Sullivan, Casey Bane, Jenn Voss, and Barbara Murphy won the 400 Free Relay.

Colleen Roberts and Erin Miller agree on the importance of the victory: "We shocked ourselves. We proved to ourselves that we can have a winning record this year." The team will host Western Maryland at the Casey Swim Center this Saturday, at 1 p.m. The meet should be a good one, so come out and support the team. Ω

If you don't know Jen Green, here's your chance to meet her

Nicole Zemanski

Jen Green has been a familiar face to many of us at W.C. for the past couple of years. Whether it was in the pool during a meet or in Dunning Hall conducting an experiment, most of us have spotted her. She attended W.C. for four years and graduated with a BA in psychology last May. Her career during these four years was an impressive one. Jen was chosen the "Most Improved" swimmer for her sophomore year, "Most Valuable Player" during her junior year, and co-MVP along with Colleen Roberts for her senior year. Jen also showed her leadership abilities by being the team captain during her senior year. Not only did she clean up on the swim awards, but the Sho'men also awarded the Bo Blanchard Award that is given to the junior woman who exemplifies the exceptional spirit of an athlete. This award is a very prestigious honor that is given to a single junior female during the Athletic Awards Dinner.

Besides the leadership and spirit Jen gave the Sho'women, she racked up her share of records and conference final appearances. During her career at W.C., Green broke five school records: two in individual events and three in relay events. The individual marks that were broken were the 100 backstroke and the 200 backstroke. The 200 medley relay, 400 medley relay, and 200 free relay were the relay records that Green crushed. Jen also reached the conference finals for four straight years.

This Lutherville, Maryland native attended Towson High School and has participated in competitive swimming for 17 years. Although she is not competitively swimming right now, she is the assistant swimming coach for the men's and women's team under head coach Kim Lessard. She is also working on her master's degree in psychology while at W.C.

This is her first coaching experience and at the present time it looks like she is doing a great job since both the men's and women's teams beat Franklin and Marshall in their first meet of the season. Green commented, "It's great to see such a talented and enthusiastic group this year. The women's team has that extra drive this season that is needed in order to beat the top teams in the Conference." Jen also stated, "It's great to see that the team gets better and better each year." Her outlook for both of the teams is extremely good due to the mix of seasoned veterans and talented

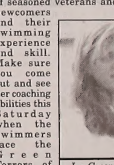


Photo by Lelia Tomlinson

Jen Green, the new assistant swimming coach to Kim Lessard and their swimming experience and skill. Make sure you come out and see her coaching abilities this Saturday when the swimmers face the Green Terror, Western Maryland! Ω

POW

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

Due to the new winter season of W.C. sports, we have a whole different group of athletes to choose from for Player of the Week. Because the women's swimming team beat Franklin and Marshall (58 to 36) for the first time, we have decided to choose swimmer Megan Bradley. She is a freshman swimmer from Exeter, New Hampshire who had a stellar performance against a very powerful F&M team. In the 400 medley relay in which Meredith Bathgate (backstroke), Colleen Roberts (breaststroke), Danielle Sullivan (freestyle), and Bradley (fly) swam, they finished first. In Bradley's other event, the 500 free, she finished first again. Not only did she finish first in the 200 fly, but she gained the second all-time fastest time for the Sho'women. She accomplished all of this in her first ever college meet. Just imagine what she can do as the season progresses ... so watch out for her!

This weekend against Western Maryland College, she will be swimming in the 1000 free, 500 free, and the 100 fly which is an extremely heavy load. Her favorite event by far is the fly and we can see why! Megan has been swimming for 14 years now. For four of those years, she was a member of her high caliber Exeter High swim team which was repeatedly crowned state champs. In her spare time she likes to play tennis, indulge herself in the outstanding social life of W.C., and listen to Nine Inch Nails with her buddy Nicole. Although she loves to do all of these things, she admits that her best events definitely take place in water! Maybe that is why her best friend is the manatee or as she calls it "the sea cow."

She is definitely excited for this season and the great expectations of the Sho'women. "Because we were not really expected to beat Franklin and Marshall, the win was even more exciting," states Megan. She also commented, "We are really psyched for the meet this Saturday against Western Maryland because of the team's great attitude." Much of this "I can" attitude comes from the upset win against F&M.

Jen Dow had a tough but rewarding day last Saturday and deserves the "Honorable Mention" award. Dow had a long day because she swam in the 1000 free, 500 free, and the 200 fly events. She placed second in all three events and she broke 6 minutes in the 500 free. The junior co-captain provided strong leadership and definitely came through for this young team!

The men's swimming team also beat Franklin and Marshall this past Saturday by a score of 65 to 30. Both teams had a great start to a season that is full of great expectations. Stop by the Casey Swim Center to support W.C. in the quest for a another victory against the Green Terrors, Saturday at 1 p.m.!

Pizza, Pizza, Pizza

On November 22, the group of four people who cheer the loudest, in a positive way towards our team (you can razz the other team as long as it is in a sportsmanlike manner; no technical fouls), will win two large pizzas courtesy of The Elm. You must stay for the entire game and sit together. Come out and cheer on the Sho'women basketball team as they open their season at home against St. Mary's.

Photo courtesy of Sports Information

Last year's swim team looking to make waves in the Conference this year

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Friday, Nov. 18

Women's Basketball
Ramada Tip Off, 9 p.m.

Men's Basketball
JHU Tip Off, 6 p.m.

Saturday, Nov. 19

Women's Basketball
Ramada Tip Off, 3 p.m.

Men's Basketball
JHU Tip Off, 6 p.m.

Swimming vs. Western MD, 1 p.m.

Tuesday, Nov. 22

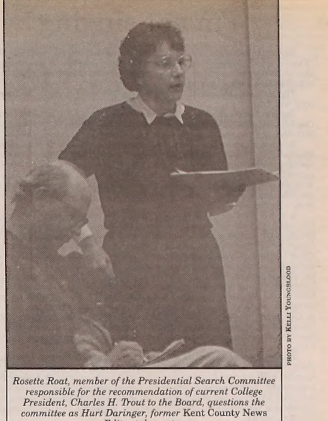
Men's Basketball at Frostburg, 7:30 p.m.

Women's Basketball vs. St. Mary's, 7 p.m.

Scores

Men's Swimming
W.C. - 65
F&M - 30

Women's Swimming
W.C. - 58
F&M - 36



Women's B-Ball Scrimmage
W.C. - 46
Wilmington - 65

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Twelve

Serving the College Community Since 1930

CONSTANCE LEIGH MOORE

Rosette Roat, member of the Presidential Search Committee responsible for the recommendation of current College President, Charles H. Trout to the Board, questions the committee as Hurt Daringer, former Kent County News Editor takes notes.

Presidential Selection Committee holds forum

William Denton, III

After naming Dr. John Toll the acting President of Washington College, the Presidential Selection Committee has before them the onerous task of selecting a permanent replacement for Dr. Toll after his temporary service is complete. According to Committee Chairman Robert Duemling, Dr. Toll has committed to being the College President through June 1995. He further stated that he hopes Dr. Toll will remain in the position longer, as the Committee does not expect to have a successor ready to take Toll's place by July 1. Duemling said his aim is to have a new President ready by September 1.

The Presidential Selection Committee held a forum, which was open to all students, faculty, administrators, local residents, etc. Wednesday evening in the Casey Forum. During the two-hour forum, Professor Duemling and the other members of the Committee answered questions and heard comments about the selection process, the direction of the College, Presidential qualifications and characteristics, and several other related topics.

The Committee was created in the fall, following the resignation announcement of current President Charles H. Trout. According to Duemling, the Committee is using presidential selection literature and publications as a guide to selecting Trout's successor. The Committee is also guided by the suggestions of other members of the college community. Said Duemling, "At the time the Committee was announced, ...there had been a call for expressing...concerns, letters, nominations...as to what we should be searching for and so forth. We've had quite a number of different responses."

According to Duemling, the first priority is to fulfill "the goals and objectives of the College." This is the concern of the most important piece of literature used as a guide by the Committee. Another of the important documents deals with "the desired professional capabilities and personal qualities we are searching for." The compendium of documents used for the search will be used, according to Duemling, as "a statement of what are the needs of the institution, what are the particular circumstances of the institution, and what are the...qualities of the candidate that is being sought."

The Committee's selection process has already commenced: today they held their third formal meeting, and several letters of nomination have already been received. At this, the early stage of the selection process, it is the goal of the Committee "to conduct this process in an orderly and efficient manner as possible, but also to conduct it fairly."

The Committee will be creating a formal document, six to eight pages in length, which will serve as a job description. This "Presidential Profile" will "set forth the needs of the college at this time, what the President will be expected to do, what the priorities will be", said Duemling. This formal document will soon become available "to everybody who would like to see it."

See "Forum" on 3

The concern was voiced by a community parish leader that the new President continue the minority recruitment efforts of Charles Trout. Agreeing that "Dr. Trout has done a wonderful job" in that respect, Professor Duemling issued an assurance that that would indeed be the case. Said Duemling, "We are looking for a President who is committed to diversity on this campus...all of us on the Board are committed to a diverse student body."

See "Forum" on 3

First-year experience evaluated by faculty, administration, students

Kate Meagher

The Task Force for the First-Year Experience and Distribution (TAFFY) is looking to review and revise the experience of students in their first year.

"We're evaluating the first-year experience of Washington College students in terms of the College's objectives," said Assistant Dean Beverly Wolff, secretary and non-voting member of TAFFY.

"The faculty has agreed by vote that it is time for us as a College to consider making significant changes in the first-year experience of our students," said Sociology Chair and TAFFY member Dr. Steven Cades.

TAFFY is looking at the College's mission statement (found in the Washington College catalogue), the history of the College, and what is anticipated for its future.

"We are trying to decide what curriculum would best reflect those things," said Wolff.

TAFFY is reviewing many areas of the first year in which change seems desirable, such as the curriculum, teaching methods, living conditions, co-curricular activities, and student life. Still in its beginning stages, TAFFY's main objective at this point is surveying members of the College community.

Students were sent a questionnaire regarding their own first-year experiences and the three student members of TAFFY (W.C. sophomores Catherine Langan and Leticia Lyford-Pike and junior Siu-Yee Ng) organized the responses and presented them at Thursday's meeting of the task force.

The report lists the questions asked of students and the compilation of student responses. The results are divided into sections. The following is an introductory paragraph to the student members' findings:

"Of the 97 students who replied to this questionnaire, 28 said Washington College was their first choice. Twenty of those said their reason was the strength of the English / Creative Writing programs, along with the size and location. The other eight chose W.C. for its size and be-

See "TAFFY" on 3

English Department loses seventh position

Rachael Fink

After the few days of relaxation provided by Thanksgiving break, this week opened up with another round of meetings during which both the seventh full-time position in the English Department and Professor Audrey Fessler's future at Washington College were discussed.

At the meeting of the tenured members of the English Department the Monday before the break, the Department considered the two-year, terminal position in 20th Century American Literature offered to the Department by the Appointments and Tenure Committee. According to Chair of the Department Bennett Lamond, the department "voted... not to accept the two-year, non-renewable position." The Department still feels it needs a position in 20th Century American Literature.

The Appointments and Tenure Committee, having received the decision from the Department, eliminated the full-time position entirely.

"They [the English faculty] just capitulated," said Lamond. While the English Department still wants "a position in 20th Century American Literature" they will be forced to wait until open bidding for position starts in the spring, following the A&T review of each department.

With the fate of the position decided, Lamond "proposed that now we have a discussion about the Fessler case," said Lamond. "They said we already have."

Personally, Lamond is "troubled that we thought of these issues as separate."

The English Department will now focus on responding to the outside evaluation and doing an outcomes assessment which will look at the major classes, how students are learning and will involve "soul searching and inward looking," said Lamond.

Of the options discussed at the English faculty meeting for the retention of Fessler was a proposal by Chair

See "Fessler" on 3

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through ...

a moment of silence. Paul meditates over the question of prayer in school. 3

Fuzzy animals and sex on film

The Freshman Literary Colloquy addresses the Beat influence and pornography. 5

We get you discounts!

Kevin and Jeff have a tearful reunion in the search to get The Country's Best Discounts. 7

c.r.u.d.

Becky and Brandon take a trip through their own worst nightmare with Mavis Gallant. 9

I'm not singing

Several members of the administration and the faculty would like to see the "Fessler case" relegated to the archives. Several people will be unhappy to see the "Fessler case" on the front page, again. Several people will have to, excuse my rudeness, suck it up and deal.

The English Department, after having lost their seventh position, rolled over and died.

Despite the conclusion of the issue on the part of the English faculty and the A&T committee, there are a few students not willing to let the issue rest (I just happen to be one of those. Surprise, surprise).

So what happens now? Well, that remains to be seen. Several members of the SGA met with Dean Scholz after The Elm interview. What comes out of that meeting will be an indicator of how the SGA will (or will not) continue its protest. The concerns of the AAUP have still not been answered in any official manner, and the AAUP is unsure as to how it will proceed. Unfortunately for me, The Elm will have to rely on the community to perpetuate this issue, and keep it on the front page.

It would seem to me that at this point, the best option to rally around, is the proposition made by the Department of Modern Languages and rejected by the English Department. The creation of a joint appointment in Modern Languages and English makes sense; both are concerned with the study of language, its uses, abuses, and meanings. Audrey (and not to push this too much but did as well) is perfectly capable of filling a position in the Modern Languages Department. She can and is willing to teach the Introduction to Language, the Introduction to World Literature, as well as courses in Russian Literature. She can, and does, serve the English Department by teaching courses in Victorian prose, Forms of Literature and Composition, and Women in Literature. She is also integral to the Gender Studies Program due to her knowledge of gender issues and women's literature. Seems to me that several departments would benefit greatly from keeping such a valuable resource available.

Students would benefit as well. By all accounts, Audrey is an amazing advisor, friend and teacher. A significant portion of the student body has responded with outrage at the various decision made to exclude Audrey from the community. Over the last month or so, I have come to know Audrey relatively well, and I have to say that I sincerely think this institution insane for even considering the exclusion of such an active, engaging and fruitful mind from this community.

There is another very interesting idea for keeping Audrey part of this community. Many institutions have a person in the administration whose job it is to oversee the orientation of the freshmen and transfer students. Often there is also a person who deale primarily with the faculty advising program. With Audrey's aptitude for dealing with students either or both of these options seem tailor made for her. Granted, it would be a shame to remove her from the classroom, but at this point, I will go to almost any lengths, propose or advocate any option that will keep Audrey here. I don't think I am alone in this.

Despite my strong feelings about keeping Audrey here, the thing that I am most afraid of at this point is the possibility of the student body giving up, caving in, becoming resigned. I want someone to stand up and exclaim "We have not yet begun to fight!" or "We won't take this lying down!" or something equally cheesey yet rabble rousing. I don't want us to stop caring or fighting. I don't want us to feel defeated. I don't want it said of us that we couldn't sustain our efforts. If, in fact, the Dean was correct in telling The Elm that the primary reason behind the reconsideration of the issue was the student protest, then we have accomplished that at least, and with this small victory in mind, we should continue to make our voices heard.

No one has started screaming slogans but I won't see this issue die. As my mother is fond of saying "It ain't over 'till the fat lady sings," and I can't carry a tune in a bucket with a handle.

"The time to rise has been engaged … What we want and what we need has been confused … Your finest hour"

-'Finest Worksong,' REM

Despite the lack of response from the suggestion of running a faculty column, the editors still think it is a great idea. So, any faculty member interested in writing the occasional column along the lines of "crud." should contact either Rachael Fink, or Kate Meagher, or contact The Elm through BlitzMail, campus mail or leave a message on the answering machine. If we do not receive any response soon, we will have to start pestering those we most want to hear from, and we all know, that could get ugly. To avoid being stalked by a member of the Elm staff, simply submit your thoughts on anything from abortion to xenophobia or any of the fun and interesting topics in between. Columns should be no less than 2000 characters in length, and if using BlitzMail or delivering on disk, should be composed in Microsoft Word.

Thank you in advance,
The Editors

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan
Arts & Entertainment Editor
Carolyn Fuss
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Nicole Zemanski

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Leticia Lyford-Pike
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-3585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

It ain't over 'til it's over

While some members of the Washington College community consider the decision regarding the elimination of Audrey Fessler's position to be a dead issue, the Student Government Association quite clearly does not.

Despite the faculty's unanimous support of the SGA's proposal to reconsider this decision, three votes have been permitted to extinguish one of our institution's brightest fires.

The widespread protest of the decision to remove Professor Fessler was completely initiated by the student body. For four years I have been encouraged by the administration, faculty, and staff to take an active role in the Washington College community. With each incoming class, our institution elaborates this theme of involvement, urging every new member of the student body to become engaged in the college environment. You may all take heart: You have taught us well.

As representatives of the student body, the SGA must take action. The November 18 issue of The Elm misinterpreted the suggestions offered by Professor McKillop, the SGA faculty advisor, when it stated that McKillop initiated a "10-step plan of action." In reality, Professor McKillop contributed a degree of control to the students' proposed actions. Rather than instigate drastic measures (which may be detrimental to all parties concerned), the Student Government has chosen to follow the guidance of our advisor and appeal in a rational manner to the administration, prompting a willingness to hear and properly address our concerns.

The SGA wishes to avoid any form of negative publicity that may arise from this situation. We are the future donors; we want the next generation to benefit from the experience of Washington College as much as we have. Negative publicity would quite probably lower future enrollments and place our school in serious financial jeopardy. The SGA does not wish to mar the reputation of our institution. We do not want a threat of this nature for our school, for the school of our children.

Even more upsetting than the idea of sending our children to an institution with a bad reputation, or a school suffering from financial difficulty, is the thought of placing our children in an environment where their concerns, fears, hopes and voices will be completely ignored.

The Student Government is charged with representing the student body. That is exactly our intention. We certainly hope that our position will be understood and the parties involved will once again reconsider the elimination of Professor fessler's position. This is not over yet.

– Sonja Wilson

The following poems were sent to Sonja Wilson with a request to forward them to The Elm.

Protect your assets: Opinion of the student body
(for Audrey)

Take out the column
down falls the arch.
Hide the milk
the students go parched.

Withholding the mother's nourishment
from the suckling babes;
Bartering for tin
with a fragment of precious jade.

The stone will crumble,
The milk shall sour,
The child cries out in hunger,
as the tin rusts within the hour.
If you lose the match, you keep the wrestler.
Don't forfeit yet, keep hold o f
Fessler

A Masterpiece of some Design

Give me a lotus,
to create upon this ivory void,
a masterpiece of some design,
that will alter these lifeless spirits unto another color.

(Do not take away our masterpiece. She can, will, and has altered many or the lifeless spirits on this campus. She cares, and we're only returning the favor.)

-The Speaker In the Crowd

This Week on Campus

Dec. 2 - 8

Film Series

Germinal

Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon., 7:30 p.m.

Friday 2
Renaissance Christmas Feast
Hynson, 7 p.m., reservations: x. 7875
Board on campus

Saturday 3
Edwin McCain Band
10 p.m., Stdt. Ctr.
Reception for Toll
Hynson, 4 p.m.
Board on campus

Sunday 4

Monday 5
Faculty meeting

Tuesday 6

Wednesday 7

Thursday 8

Thinking through ... a moment of silence

by Paul Briggs

Once again the issue of prayer in school has emerged. President Clinton recently suggested that he would be willing to consider an amendment to the U.S. Constitution permitting public schools to hold organized prayers. Later on he amended himself, saying that there were different kinds of prayer and that what he was thinking of was something like a moment of silence before class.

This is hardly the first time the issue has emerged, of course. It is important to remember that the debate has always been over organized prayer. It is now, and always has been, perfectly acceptable for students to pray on their own initiative. The only way they could possibly get in trouble is if they pray out loud during class, so as to interrupt the teacher. I do not know of a single case where a student was disciplined for this.

The problem of organized prayer in public school is twofold. First, however broad and nonsectarian the specific prayer is, inevitably there will be students in whose religious tradition the prayer will not be, and who will thus very much object. Moreover, the Supreme Court has ruled that, public schools being organs of the government, for school officials to organize prayer is a violation of the principle of separation of church and state.

Although not explicitly written into the Bill of Rights, separation of church and state has been the law of the land for so long that people may have forgotten the reason for it. That reason is that, historically, close links between religious and civil authority have been bad for both of them. Frequently, religious authorities end up either exercising too much power over the government or being pressured into bestowing "divine" ratification upon government decisions. In either case, both church and state are thereby corrupted.

Another problem, at least in pluralistic societies, is that the government runs a risk of endorsing one faith at the expense of all the others. Recall that the reason that many of our ancestors came here is that their beliefs did not square with those of the Established Churches of England and other nations. (Considering the kind of respect Washington gets today, of course, being the Official Religion of the Federal Government might be more of a curse than a blessing.) The most important reason, however, is that the duties of those who devote themselves to God are fundamentally different from the duties of those who collect the garbage and recruit the army.

This concept has a longer history than most people realize. Some people say, indeed, that it goes back as far as "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." Certainly signs of it can be seen as early as 1679, when William Penn, in a pamphlet against religious persecution, argued thus:

> "But since the industry, rents and taxes of the dissenters are as current as their neighbors', who loses by such narrowness more than Prince and People, the government and the magistracy? For till it be the interest of the farmer to destroy his flock, to starve the horse he rids [sic], and the cow that gives him milk, it cannot be the interest of England to let a great part of her sober and useful inhabitants be destroyed about things that concern another world." (Italics mine.)

This statement illustrates an early understanding of the reality that secular authorities ("the government and the magistracy") have no real stake in the religious outlook of the citizenry, only in whether they obey the law and pay their taxes.

What does all this have to do with prayer in school? In theory, teachers and school officials do have a stake in the moral, if not the religious, attitudes of their pupils. In practice, it often does not work out like this. School officials dealing with unruly students have less luxury to mete out anything resembling ideal justice than judges do. I can remember from my own school years how often a teacher would say to some student caught misbehaving, who tried to explain that he or she wasn't the only one in on it, "Well, you just had the bad luck to be the one caught." The point here is that the authority of the school over the student resembles, if anything, the authority of the state over the citizen. It does not resemble the authority of God, and should not be associated with it.

However, Clinton's suggestion- a moment of silence, as opposed to vocal prayer- does seem to me to have merit. Silence would be about the only form of worship nondenominational enough to show respect for the beliefs of all the students. Nor would those pupils who do not wish to pray be required to; they would only have to keep still. I can't think of any objections to it. Frankly, I'm not so sure the Supreme Court would object to it either.

I propose, therefore, that rather than amending the Bill of Rights, Congress pass a law mandating (not mandating) public schools to hold a moment of silence before class. If the Supreme Court were to decide that this is unconstitutional, however, then the government should leave it at that.

If I honestly believed that a moment of silence- or even a vocal prayer- would keep children from bringing guns and knives to class, end gang violence, decrease the dropout rate, reduce drug and alcohol abuse, improve SAT scores, wipe out illiteracy, and in general bring us back into serious competition with other industrialized democracies in terms of quality of education and chances of surviving to the next century, I would certainly recommend amending the Constitution to allow it. However, no one seriously proposes that it will achieve any of these things. The argument for it seems to be that it would be nice for the students to have a shared spiritual experience. A moment of silence might be that, or it might be only an empty gesture. In any case, when you have something that works as well as the First Amendment, you do not fiddle with it without a much better reason.

One last point. The function of the Constitution is to keep us free people. It is not to make us better people. Some things we still have to do for ourselves. Ω cause of the financial aid. One of those persons said it was because of the reputation of this institution. The 69 other students said they decided to attend W.C. because of 'the money,' not being accepted at their choice schools, the size, the location, and knowing people in their teams from when they were recruited. In addition to these 97 responses we received no input at all on a Shadow Task Force composed of ourselves [Lyford-Pike, Langan, and Ng] and five other students from different classes. The above task force went out and spoke to approximately 70 additional students. Therefore, our reports represents the consensus of about 170 people."

"TAFFY" from 1

Regarding pre-orientation, "Students liked [it], considering it a good way to meet people and feel more at ease in their new environment." The students surveyed had suggestions as to the improvement of the program, and ways to diversify the experience, including collaboration with campus organizations.

Regarding orientation, "Current Freshmen complained that they did not have any specific activities to meet other people." Suggestions included improvement of the Peer Adviser program and more social activities during the freshmen's first week.

Regarding Admissions standards, "The general consensus is that at this school's admission standards are very low." Diversity was another admissions concern.

Regarding distribution, it was the consensus that it should undergo some modifications. "There should be a core curriculum for all students to make them well rounded and ensure that they have some knowledge of different areas of the curriculum." The report suggests that the Formal Studies requirement be split into two areas: Math and Formal Studies. It is also suggested that the number of total required courses be reduced. "In order to make this a liberal arts college, students should be allowed to take a greater variety of courses to see what they like. ... instead of having year-long sequences, students should be allowed to take only one semester of a course, if they wish, and another semester of a course in the same area."

Regarding extracurricular activities, there were complaints in several areas. The library is "too small" and "the actual materials that are here are often superfluous and inappropriate for students' uses," according to the report. Faculty advisers' increased participation in students' academic lives was recommended. Students complain that the dining hall's food quality has decreased in the past few years. They would like to see the meal plan apply to food sold in The Cove.

TAFFY will consider the student report when outlining its goals.

TAFFY's policy is one of complete openness to the College community.

"We have to be wide open," said Cades. Any decision, however positive, "must immediately go to the larger College community for a consensus." He said that the members of TAFFY "want to talk and listen and refine and talk some more" with whoever wants to contribute to the effort.

Comments can be sent through campus mail or over BlitzMail. All members of the task force will receive BlitzMail addressed to "TAFFY."

The process will be a gradual one.

"When a college undertakes such an effort, it is essential that it move slowly and deliberately, because the stakes are too high to make mistakes," said Cades.

Though things will happen slowly, Wolff is hopeful that next year's freshmen will benefit from some changes.

"We're hoping that some of the ideas for reform that come from TAFFY might be implemented as soon as next fall," said the Assistant Dean. She stressed the importance of student and faculty input in the process.

"This is going to be successful only if there's a great enthusiasm for it," said Wolff, "not as something imposed – something faculty and students embrace themselves."

The task force consists of Cades, Wolff, Dean Joachim Scholz, Vice President for Admissions Kevin Coveney, Dean of Student Affairs Maureen McIntire, Director of Reader Services Jeff Chaffin, Chair of the Department of Chemistry Frank Creegan, Assistant Professor of Mathematics Louise Amick, Assistant Professor of Psychology Kevin McKillop, Chair of the Department of English Bennett Lamond, Langan, Lyford-Pike and Ng. Ω of the Modern Languages Department George Shivers. The proposal, passed unanimously by the Modern Languages Department Faculty, would involve petitioning the administration for a joint appointment in English and Modern Languages. The position would involve the teaching of Introduction to Language, currently taught by Shivers approximately ever two years, and possibly an Introduction to World Literature, a course not currently offered by needed by the department.

"Fessler" from 1

Shivers stressed that he was not simply proposing the joint appointment for the sake of saving Fessler's job, but that the position is "a real need within the department."

If the proposal from the Modern Languages Department, Lamond said "it is one of the many things that we didn't go forward with. ... When the A&T committee was formed, it was [the full-time position] we didn't pursue other alternatives."

In an interview with The Elm, Acting Dean and Provost Joachim Scholz indicated that neither he nor the A&T committee discussed the option of the joint appointment. Scholz indicated that all of the protest that the redefinition and subsequent loss of the position held by Fessler has "led to a complete rethinking of this case."

"This has been done twice over," said Dean Scholz, "and the second time primarily because of the student protest." Ω

Freshman-Sophomore

FAREWELL TO FALL SEMI-FORMAL

featuring The Frogs

Friday, December 2, 9:30 - 1:30 in the Student Center

$5.00 a couple

Freshmen & sophomores may bring date of choice

Loyola

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410/778 - 0513

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

Even though support may appear to be dwindling, the "Fessler Case" continues to dominate SGA meeting after SGA meeting. Tuesday's session was no exception.

Petitions containing approximately 215 students' signatures were presented to the Executive Board Tuesday by Junior Class President Mark Reyero. Signatures were collected in the dining hall during last week, a vacation week. Petitions were distributed to all Senators, and they were encouraged to collect signatures.

The SGA plans to separate the issue into two parts: one dealing with the principle of the issue and the other dealing with the Fessler Case as an example of the principle. The former task, that of trying to ameliorate the lack of student input heard by the Administration, will be headed by Baker, and the latter, dealing with the specifics of Professor Fessler's situation, will be headed by Vice President Sonja Wilson.

After Baker referred to the Administration's decision concerning Fessler as a "done deal," several senators expressed the opinion that the SGA is watering down its original ambition to reverse the decision. Wilson responded to the accusations by saying that only the Administration views the decision as final, while the SGA and student body certainly do not.

The Senate also expressed some frustration with the Administration for failing to provide real answers to their questions dealing with the Fessler Case. In order to hopefully have their questions answered once and for all, Baker and Wilson, as well as a few Senators and Class Presidents, are planning to meet with W.C.'s new acting Dean, Joachim Scholz. There has been a scarcity of answers from both President Trout and others, but the SGA's Faculty Adviser, Dr. McKillop, said that "Dean Scholz will willingly explain it to the best of his ability."

W. C.'s Honor Board, under Chair Douglas Beckworth, currently has four cases before it: one of property damage, one for that interesting Kent House fire scare, and two for harassment. The board met Tuesday, and hearings will be held next week.

The Cable TV issue, while still deemed a feasible proposition, is still mired in bureaucracy. It is currently on its way to Anita Gottlieb, the Vice President in Charge of Finances and Administration.

This Saturday, December 3, a reception will be held in honor of the new acting college president Dr. John Toll. The reception, which will be held in current president Charles Trout, will take place in the Hodson Hall Study Lounge from 4:00 until 5:30 on Saturday.

W.C. will welcome the Edwin McCain band this weekend. They will be performing Saturday night in the Student Center at 10:00.

The annual Birthday Ball has been scheduled for February 18. Dinner is scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m., and the dance will begin at 9 p.m. A band has been tentatively scheduled, and the theme will be "The Great Gatsby."

Festivities for Earth Day will take place April 8. The event is sponsored by the Junior Class. Ω

"Forum" from 1

When asked about the lack of diversity on the Selection Committee and how it may affect the selection of the President and the school's diversity, Duemling responded by saying, "we did not go after...specific representation [on the Committee]... we are here, as a Committee, collectively. We are not here as individuals to represent any specific decision."

Different qualities and characteristics were introduced for discussion, from the ability to remain competent under pressure to character and integrity. The widespread concern among the student body that student opinions are failing on deaf ears was voiced by one of the few students to attend the forum, Junior Class President Mark Reyero. In response, Duemling remarked, "I certainly hope that will be the case."

It did not take long, however, for the pressing issue of the college's financial situation to be brought up. Financially, Washington College has been operating in the red for a few years, and it is a major concern among the faculty, administration, Board, and Selection Committee that the new President will lead the school out of budgetary deficit. Said Duemling, "the ability to raise funds is very high on the list of our position descriptions."

The issue of entrepreneurship and innovation with respect to finances was also discussed at great length. There seems to be a consensus that the new President should make finances a high priority and attack this institution's financial problems creatively and diligently. It was agreed, however, that this should be done without allowing the "bottom line" to be that which governs the school's operations, echoing the concerns voiced by President Trout in his October forum with the SGA.

Selecting a President to lead the College into the next millennium will not be easy, but it has been accomplished before. The experience and literature from other selections can only lend itself to assuring a more qualified and suitable president. It shall soon be seen whether the Selection Committee has learned from past Committees' mistakes. Ω

End of semester security precaution

Paul Bayne

With the holidays rapidly approaching we will soon be leaving our dorms and heading back home. The Department of Public Safety has some suggestions about room security for the vacation. First of all, be sure to lock all windows and doors. This may seem obvious, but every year some people forget to do this. This just leaves them open to theft. If any Public Safety officers notice that a window or door has been left unlocked they may enter the room to check for possible theft and lock the door or window. However, by the time Public Safety notices that a room has been unlocked it may be too late and anything that was left may be gone.

This is also common sense, but the Department strongly suggests that students take home anything of value, such as televisions, stereos, jewelry, bikes, etc. Although instances of theft are few and far between, it is best to be safe. If students plan on leaving any appliances such as refrigerators or alarm clocks, they should be sure that they are unplugged before leaving. Be advised that the temperature in the dorms will drop to about fifty degrees. Students who own any temperature-sensitive items should take them home as well.

Public Safety wishes to stress the fact that students cannot return until January 16. As soon as the student body has left after exams the locks will be changed on all dorms. They will not be changed back until the January 16 at 8 a.m. Administration has already sent a notice to each student concerning when to leave the dorms. There is a $50 fine assessed for everyday a student remains in his or her room over the holiday. This is the time when cleaning and renovation is going on in the dorms. If a student absolutely has to get to his or her room, he or she can contact Public Safety, who will work over the entire holiday, and ask for permission. There is no guarantee that you will be let in. Students can retain entry if they get permission from Public Safety. One must have a legitimate need to come back early, not just an inclination to show up when he or she wants to. Any questions about returning early or other safety matters should be directed to Public Safety.

One last note: There is a new warning siren in Chestertown. Its purpose is to warn the area of natural and chemical disasters. The siren was tested last year and is now in official use. This new siren has been implemented for two main reasons. Last year a tornado came through Kent County and since Chestertown lies on a major truck route in an agricultural community, lots of dangerous chemicals and fertilizers are transported through on a daily basis. Should there be a dangerous spill, the siren would alert the public to listen to the radio for further instructions. An official statement that explains the use of the siren has been included in this week's Elm. Ω

Fire in Kent House

A warning to the whole campus

Beth McLaughlin

On November 17, 1994 at about 3 a.m., the fire alarm was sounded in Kent House. Students were evacuated and a Public Safety official, Officer Bryant, reported to the scene. After investigating the building, Officer Bryant returned to talk to the RAs of the dorm. Smoke could be detected on Kent second floor south, but no fire could be found. The Fire Department was then called to the scene.

After a complete investigation of the building, no fire was found. Evidence in a student's room on second floor south revealed that a trash can fire had occurred and the trash can had been thrown from the window. The fire had already been extinguished.

The students, after over an hour's wait, were able to return to their rooms. Although there was no discernible damage or injuries, many problems arose. The situation proved the dorm of Kent House to be poorly prepared for such a situation.

In a memorandum sent out from the Office of Public Safety, RAs were warned campus-wide, " ... this incident did show we were not very prepared for this type of emergency. The following problems were identified, which seems to be common in most of your buildings." Problems included lights being out in back stairwells, prohibiting use of those exits, bicycles being chained to hand railings, thus impeding movement, and the fire doors being propped open. These fire doors lead into the stairwells and are imperative in containing a fire. Stairwells act as chimneys and carry smoke to the upper floors. Although keeping the doors closed is often an inconvenience, proper use of these doors is a statement important and they should always remain closed.

A further concern was the evacuation process. Students left the building calmly and some were inadvertently left in the building. Although an RA's concern is to check each room, students must be aware of the severity of fire situations (even in the case of a drill) and make a point to be personally responsible for themselves.

"Many students just don't pay attention anymore. Alarms are pulled so often, no one ever thinks it's for real," a resident of Kent House said. This proves that it is extremely important to treat each situation as if it is a real fire.

"Although we had a few problems, all in all I think things were carried out well," said Ken Pipkin, RA of Kent first floor south.

"Considering we had had no drills up to this time, everything went reasonably as expected," commented Federico Da-Fieno, RA of second floor north. Even though the residents of Kent House were caught off guard, this situation proves to be a reminder that fire situations do occur, and all need to be more aware and prepared for them everywhere on campus. Ω

BLUE HERON ANTIQUES AND COLLECTABLES

This is where we would like to wish everyone a wonderful winter break, but since it is not time yet, we won't.

Unique, affordable gifts for a special Christmas.

Nancy W. Likanuel

105 Park Ave.
Chestertown, MD 21620

(410) 778-6139

Kent County Civil Defense Emergency Warning Siren

Effective the first Saturday of December and continuing the first Saturday of each month thereafter, the Civil Defense Emergency Warning Sirens, located at or near all county fire stations, will be sounded at 12:00 noon. You will hear a one minute abbreviated siren tone, unlike the tones you hear for fire or medical emergencies.

If this were an immediate emergency, such as a fast approaching tornado or hazardous material spill, this siren would be sounded for three minutes and indicate that citizens should stay calm, take cover IMMEDIATELY WHEREVER YOU ARE, and tune to your local Emergency Broadcast System (EBS) station for emergency information and instructions.

Your local EBS stations are:
WCTR AM in Chestertown, MD 24 hours
WKHS 90.5 FM Chestertown, MD During school hours

Scholarship Report

Graduate School

American Association of University Women (AAUW) Educational Foundation Fellowships and Grants for graduate education

American Fellowships
Doctoral dissertations and post-doctoral scholars

International Fellowships
Full-time graduate or post-graduate study research in USA for women who are not citizens or permanent residents of the USA

Selected Professions Fellowships
Business administrations, law and medicine for minority women; science and technology to all women in their final year of a master's degree in certain scientific and technical disciplines; engineering dissertation fellowships to women doctoral candidates

Career Development Grants
Eleanor Roosevelt Teacher Fellowships
Awarded to women public school teachers in grades K-12 to promote gender equity programs

For information and applications, call or write: American Association of University Women, 2201, N. Dodge St., Iowa City, IA 52243-4030; Telephone: 319-337-1716.

GRE Fee Waiver

If you are a U.S. citizen or permanent resident currently enrolled as a college senior receiving financial aid, you may be eligible for a voucher fee waiver certificate. Contact the financial aid office to get the details.

Undergraduate

Accounting Students

National Society of Public Accountants Scholarship Foundation (NSPA)

Do you intend to pursue your accounting studies in order to enter the profession of public accounting? You may be eligible for an academic scholarship from the NSPA Scholarship Foundation. You are encouraged to apply if you are an undergraduate, majoring in accounting with a 'B' or better grade point average. The NSPA offers 22 scholarships of approximately $1000 each for accounting students entering their third or fourth year of studies and $500 each for students entering their second year of studies. In addition a Charles H. Earp Memorial Scholar will receive an award of $200 per year not to exceed three years. Applicants for this scholarship must be related to an active NSPA member or a deceased member. Applications and appraisal forms may be obtained from the financial aid office or by writing: NSPA Scholarship Foundation, 1010 North Fairfax Street, Alexandria, Virginia 22314-1574.

General

Datatel Scholars Foundation
Apply through W.C. Financial Aid Office and you amy become one of the two students nominated for consideration by the Datatel Foundations Board of Directors. Criteria for the scholarship is a mix of academic merit, personal motivation, and external activities including employment and extracurricular activities. The scholarship which ranges from $500 to $1,500 based on tuition costs are open to full- or part-time students. Both undergraduate and graduate students are eligible. Applications are available from the Financial Aid Office and must be completed by February 13, 1995.

Teacher Education

Sharon Christa McAuliffe Teacher Education Awards of the Economic Development Student Assistance Grant Program

Requirements: Maryland resident; Undergraduate with 60 credits by September 1995, or degree holders with a bachelor's or higher degree, and teachers not certified in a critical teacher shortage field; Mandatory service obligation as full-time teacher in Maryland public school for each year of award receipt; Awards available only in chemistry, computer science, English as a second language, general science, mathematics, physics, Spanish, and Special Education; Undergraduates must have a 3.0 cumulative GPA; degrees holders and teachers must have a 3.0 cumulative GPA for their most recent degree; Awards up to approximately $8,800 per academic year; Application period: November 1 through December 31, 1994 for awards beginning in the 1995-96 academic year.; Applications available from the financial aid office.

Information provided by the Washington College Office of Student Financial Aid. Thirl Ryan, CAC, Assistant Director of Financial Aid; Vicky Sawyer, extension 7214. Ω

For more information concerning scholarship opportunities contact the Financial Aid office today!

Droppe d A Whole Degree

Aaron Blake

Glenn Danzig The Evil Elvis. You know, the "Mother" guy. Well, if that's all you associate with him and his band, you'll be in for a surprise. There's plenty more to both of them than that.

"Mother" is an old song, first of all. It was from Danzig's first album, released recently as a remix. This time, MTV went for it and played the new video incessantly. Danzig, the man and the band, have changed a little since then. To say that would be tantamount to an understatement. So, too, would it be an understatement to call Danzig a epic.

Danzig got the "Elvis" part of his nickname basically because he sounds a little like Elvis. Danzig is an extremely powerful vocalist who can actually played up his Elvis-like voice on Danzig III: How the Gods Kill. That CD was kind of a fluke as far as I'm concerned. There were about three or four good tracks on it, and that was it. Those tracks were the non-Elvis ones.

Danzig earned the "Evil" part of his nickname because of his subject matter. Most of his songs make Slayer's songs sound like church hymns. Actually, some of Danzig's songs could be used in church ... the church of Satan, that is. Whether this is a gimmick or a metaphor, or whether he actually believes it I don't know. I do know, however, that regardless of their subject matter, Danzig's lyrics are a damn sight more impressive than those of any pop star. Whether you listen to it and say "oh my God, what a sick and twisted evil little bast. ... " or you listen and say "cool," it will get a reaction.

The first song on Danzig 4, "Brand New God," is a fantastic groove-based rock tune. It begins with a strong guitar showing from John Christ while Danzig proclaims: "I am a walking, screaming Hell / A thing of torture to behold / This vivisection splits my soul / A thing of torture to behold." Then the drums come in fast and hard, the guitar picks up speed that Christ hasn't shown since Danzig II, and the entire song kicks into high gear. The vocals are vicious, angry, and only vaguely Elvis-like. The only complaint I have is one I've had with the band's albums from the beginning, and that is mainly the fault of Rick Rubin, the producer – Eerie Von, the bassist, gets no credit in the mix. I cannot pick out the bass part from most Danzig songs, and because of this the songs sound a little flat. But aside from that, the songs are well-crafted.

The third song is called "Cantspeak" and it is probably my favorite on the disc. It begins with some kind of ominous tones from John Christ's guitar, and a solid groove beat from Chuck Biscuits on drums. When the verse begins, however, the guitar fades a little and the song becomes a great hip-swaying bluesy number. The vocals are subdued and even sound a little (dare I say it?) light. Until the second verse, that is, when some strong vocal distortion comes in and the guitar picks up again. At this point the mood of the song changes to a very creepy one. The vocals are still soft, but the distortion renders them nearly unintelligible, an effect which, combined with the guitar, makes the little hairs on the back of one's neck stand up.

The rest of the album continues in much the same vein, varying between fast hard rockin' tunes and mellow, haunting melodic numbers, with a few indescribables thrown in for good measure. On the hard side are songs like "Son of the Morning Star" and the fantastic "Dominion." On the lighter side are "Let it be Captured," "I Don't Mind the Pain," and the gorgeous "Going Down to Die." The only song I didn't like was "Stalker Song," which comes off as kind of contrived and more than a little silly. The indescribable ones are "Sadistikal," which is spoken over a vicious drumbeat, and the "hidden track."

Hidden tracks seem to be the new thing to do these days, and Danzig has used them twice. On their 1993 EP Thrall Demonsweatlive they tacked a remix of "Mother" on as the ninety-third track (thus "Mother '93, the one that MTV got) after 85 tracks of five seconds of blank space apiece. This time around the sixty-sixth track is the bonus track, and it will scare the &%&% out of you if you're not prepared for it. I was listening to the CD while I was doing something else, and I thought it had ended after "Let it be Captured." So when this organ started up with this really creepy tone, I nearly jumped. Then the vocals come in, and the real fear starts. I don't want to give away too much, so I'll just say whatever you do, don't listen to it before you go to sleep. Not unless you like Kafka dreams.

All in all, Danzig 4 is an extremely good album and a fine example of Glenn Danzig's songwriting skill and his vocal talent. John Christ's guitars are exceptional as always, and the album merely makes you hungry for more – which you may get, since he is planning some solo stuff after this tour. Hopefully he will stay with the band, though, because I don't know if Danzig could find another guitarist as talented as he.

And if Fionna asks you, the disc was really, really, really, really, really, really, really, really, really, really good. Ω

Andy's

ANDY GOLDARD, MGR.
(410) 778-6779

147 S. HIGH STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620

Friday, December 2
Angie Miller & Topher
Heavenly voice meets wicked guitar. Fabulous originals, favorite covers

Saturday, December 3
Big Blow & the Bushwackers
Primitive folk jive and acoustic soothe ... horns, voices, didgeridoo, strings & percussion. Definitely an original band. Do Not Miss Them!

Come to the first annual SPAGHETTI DINNER sponsored by Zeta Tau Alpha!

Sunday, December 4, 4-6 p.m., Chestertown Volunteer Fire Department. Eat-in only. B.Y.O.B. $7 for adults, $4 for children 12 years and under Tickets will be sold at the door Sunday, and in advance at Bingo Thursday, December 1 (at the fire house). Direct questions to Nicole Zemanski or Mary Jefferson (via BlitzMail ONLY).

ALL PROCEEDS BENEFIT THE SUSAN G. KOMEN BREAST CANCER FOUNDATION

Dale Adams Heritage Exchange and Campus Christian Fellowship present

GOSPEL NIGHT

Saturday, December 3, 7 - 9 p.m., Tawes Theatre
Come join us for a night full of songs and praises!

Earth Notes

BY Andrea Nolan

A few years back I experienced a crisis of sorts. Back in my young and earnest years, in those years before my high school, when I wasn't sleeping or acting stupid, I was trying to save the world. Not only did I believe that the world was savable, but I believed that the responsibility was solely mine. At least that is the way it must have appeared to those around me, because I seemed to be fighting for every cause, from the starving children in Africa to the rainforests of Central America. Ultimately I realized that there was no way I could have a lasting effect on every cause that I supported. I reached the somewhat obvious conclusion that one must pick one's battles, and try to do some good, instead of all or no good, for this world of ours. And thus I became the eco-goddess that I am today, concentrating all of my do-gooder efforts on conservation. However, my crisis was far from over, because I realized that everything I did was harming the environment. Take hiking for example: I drove to reach the trailhead, thereby consuming gallon after gallon of fossil fuels. Then I went hiking, not only churning up the earth with my lug soled hiking boots, but also littering with my plastic water bottle, eating a pesticide-saturated apple, and wearing factory produced clothes. There are a group of people in India (or some country out that way) that have sworn to never intentionally harm another living thing. They don't wear shoes for fear of stepping on an insect, and carry a broom to gently brush off wherever they are going to sit, for fear of smashing a bug beneath their bony bums. However, they do not live on air, they have to eat. And so they eat vegetables and beans and such. Now, I could be wrong, but I thought that plants were living things as well. It seems like discrimination against producers to me.

Well, this all got me thinking. In fact, got me thinking for a while – for a few years in fact. Over the course of those years I came to realize that despite what political or educational actions I am involved in, what I can control most is myself. Thus I decided to pick what I would and would not do to live in better harmony with the Earth. I would choose and limit what harm I would do in my everyday existence. This philosophy of life is summed up in one word: Style. I would try to live life with a sense of style. Now, as is obvious to those who know me, I am not referring to my wardrobe. What I mean is that I would not throw away cans when I could recycle them because that is lacking in style. Likewise, I would not gorge myself on red meat at every meal, because forcing the slash and burn of rainforests so that I may have cow three meals a day is hardly demonstrating a good sense of style. When I go hiking I pick up whatever trash I see on the trail. I don't run my air conditioner in the summer. This philosophy of style transcends pure environmental ethic into an overall lifestyle. I don't pull all-nighters because that lacks a certain sense of style. If the work doesn't get done, then it won't get done. Sitting around, complaining of a self-inflicted martyrdom of sleep-deprivation does nothing for my personal sense of style. I do sink into the occasional fit of complaining about my overabundance of papers, but I do so knowing that I am going against my personal ethic.

I could go on listing my personal dos and don'ts forever. That is not the point of this article. My point is that you don't have to save the world; just try to live life with a little flair. This personal ethic of style is different for everyone. So discover yours, and try to abide by it. Your personal sense of style might differ completely from mine, but live by it honestly and swear by it completely — it is yours, and yours alone. Basically I look for balance in my life. Yes, I still tear up the trails with my lug-soled boots, but I also work with trail maintenance crews. I do gain a perverse delight in throwing a mosquito to fizzle and pop in a campfire, but I rarely kill a spider. I still eat my occasional steak, but I eat a heck of a lot more producers than I do consumers. When I go fishing I save the small ones for my frying pan, and release the big ones back into the stream, out of respect for a long life. I, in no way, perfectly abide by what I believe what I consider a life lived in style, but I have a goal to work towards. However, in living life this way I have discovered that I feel much freer to do what I want to do, which I believe is a direct result of living with the knowledge that my everyday practices are in accordance with my beliefs. I no longer have the overwhelming urgency to run around trying to save the world as I did when I was living my life as a guilt-ridden, hypocritical, bleeding-heart liberal. So, eat, drink and be merry in your lifelong pursuit of style. Ω

Sci-Fi fans in Baltimore:

Register for Balticon 29 soon

Mindie Kaplan

With the release of two new science fiction movies (Stargate and Generations) comes yet another science fiction convention: Balticon 29. This is Baltimore's original fan convention, its wild success sparking a host of others (including Darkover, mentioned in a previous Elm).

The earmark of Balticon has always been variety. Lovers of science, science fiction, fantasy, art, film, and music can always find something fascinating happening. The only complaints tend to be that you cannot decide what you would like to do more (if two events coincide) or that you couldn't get enough sleep (since things are happening 24 hours-a-day for three days!)

Balticon 29 plans panel discussions and workshops in the areas of science fiction, fantasy, horror, writing and storycraft, academic subjects (such as astronomy and other areas related to S.F. & F. fandom), computers and technology, social issues, movies and other media, art and comics.

The guests of honor this year are writer James P. Hogan, artist David Cherry, Filk musician Tom Smith and Hal Clement as a "special guest."

Last year, Balticon hosted nearly 150 attendees and they expect a similar number this year. The science program will "have more than 12 hours of briefings from premier researchers and experts," according to the flier. There will be a writers' workshop, a costume masquerade, and "one of the biggest regional S.F. art shows on the east coast". Don't forget the 24-hour movie room that promises to include Japanese Animation in addition to western science fiction and fantasy movies and the live filk music. New musicians are always welcome to perform; last year a group specializing in traditional Scottish music simply showed up at the door, ready to delight.

Perhaps the best part is the location. The convention will be held in the Radisson's Lord Baltimore, and the Omni International Hotel will hold overflow.

Membership for the convention is only $30 if your registration is postmarked by December 31. Registration at the door is $40. Hotel rooms are $88 a night for up to four people.

The dates of the convention are April 14-16. Please contact Mindie Kaplan for a registration form or for details about rides up there. Hope to see you there! Ω

Chestertown Natural Foods

HOLIDAY CELEBRATION

Saturday, December 10th 9am-5pm

"Quality Natural Foods, Products & Gifts At Reasonable Prices"

Come To Our Open House After The Parade

Bring Your DCA Coupons

Door Prizes • Holiday Specials

Free Product Samples

Dried Fruits And Other

Holiday Baking Needs

Monday-Friday 10-6 • Saturday 9-5

Off Street Parking Available

101 Spring Ave. (across from Post Office)

Chestertown, MD 21620 410-778-1677

PHOTO BY KELLY YOUNGBLOOD

Not all cats are as lucky as Truman Youngblood. If you have the time, please volunteer. If you want a pet, please adopt.

How much is that doggie in the window?

Sarah Bell

Did you ever wish that there was something you could do that would have a significant impact on your surrounding environment yet only take a couple of hours out of your week? (Work with me here.)

The Humane Society of Kent County is in desperate need of volunteers. Kent County has a humane society? Yes, if you take a left onto Washington Avenue, past Roses, past some farms and corn fields, you'll find a little white building on the left with a sign that reads "The Humane Society of Kent County." Imagine that. I am one of the three volunteers here and felt it a good idea to place an article in The Elm telling what The Kent County Humane Society is all about.

The main purpose of The Kent County Humane Society is to prevent the unnecessary pain and suffering of domestic animals in Kent County and to promote satisfying and responsible relationships between people and domestic companion animals.

The establishment is not very large, containing about 18 dog cages, all of which are usually occupied. The cats are separated into different cages depending on their age, compatibility, and how long they have been in the shelter. There is an area behind the shelter that is fenced in where you can exercise the dogs.

What would your job entail as a volunteer? I have been volunteering there once a week for over a month. I usually play with the cats and dogs. Occasionally, I will groom a dog or give some of the puppies baths. I think the most important thing is to interact with the animals, whether you are playing with them outside or just petting them in their lap. They are starved for attention. It's not that the people who work at the shelter ignore the animals; however, the staff is busy with the paperwork and finding homes for the animals.

What you have to remember as a volunteer is that you will be working closely with animals and will tend to get attached to some of them. The Humane Society is not a permanent home for animals. It is a place for animals who come there are adopted the next week or, unfortunately, have to be put to sleep because there is no room for them.

If you are not too keen on working with the animals, there is always paperwork that can be done, such as assisting the public with adoption information or filling out kennel cards and calling up people about adoptions.

If you are a student from the campus and looking for a furry, four-legged friend to comfort you on those lonely Friday nights, come on down to the shelter.

"I want students who are thinking of adopting to know that we will call their landlord to make sure that it is OK that they have the animal," says Barbara Starkey, President of the Humane Society. "We will also ask them what they plan to do with the animal during the summer. We don't want to place him in the same situation which he was just brought out of."

If you can't afford the upkeep of a cat or dog, don't feel bad. Just volunteering an hour or two at The Humane Society would be enough. None of the dogs or cats that I have come in contact with have ever bitten or attacked me. They are just lonely, neglected animals who need a loving hand to brush their coats or scratch behind an ear. A lot of them have never been taught the simple game of "fetch" or have no concept of what a doggie treat is.

The Kent County Humane Society is open Tuesday through Friday from 10:30 a.m. - 3:30 p.m. and Tuesday evenings until 7:30 p.m. and Saturday from 9 a.m. - 12 noon.

I go every Friday around 2 p.m. for about an hour and a half. I would be happy to take anyone who doesn't have a car. You can contact me at 8825 or Jen Burkmar at 8822. Ω

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin and Jeff bump into each other at T.C.B.Y., both in search of bargains.

Kevin: We're from Washington College. My name's Kevin. We do an column on discounts. Can I have your me?

Counter person: My name's reen.

Kevin: We are at the Country's Best yogurt, T.C.B.Y. How did you get nvolved in the yogurt business?

Koreen: I've been with T.C.B.Y. ome years.

K: What prompted you to get into his business?

K: A friend of mine owned a store in Milford, and asked me to come work her.

K: Jeff, what are you doing here?

This is a guy from my College. What are you doing here?

Jeff: What are you doing here? This my discount turf.

K: I used to do my column with this guy here, but we kind of got into a fight, and broke off into separate columns.

K: Oh. Okay.

K: Anyway, can you explain how this whole frozen yogurt thing works?

K: It's soft-serve. It comes in liquid form, we put it into the machine, and add a little tiny bit of air into it, and then it freezes. It's just a little tiny bit of air. It's not like the soft serve ice cream. Most of that is all air.

K: I understand that this is actually healthier for you than regular ice cream would be?

K: Yes, it is.

K: How so?

K: It helps your digestive system.

K: Well, we all need help on our digestive system.

K: It has bacteria in it. The good bacteria.

K: I didn't know there was good bacteria.

K: Yes, there's good and bad. This is the good bacteria.

K: I've noticed that there's been this yogurt phenomenon sweeping the country. What would you attribute that to?

K: Because it's 96% fat free, and there's 11 sugar free flavors.

K: Does it show maybe an example of the weight consciousness, sort of?

K: Yeah.

K: Do you think that promotes anorexia?

N: I don't think so.

K: What if a kid was in here, and they dropped their ice cream on the ground, and started crying, would you give them another?

N: Yes, we've done that several times.

K: Good, cause when I was a little kid, I dropped my ice cream on the ground all the time, and they didn't always give me another ice cream. Of course, this is frozen yogurt. I've noticed that the name T.C.B.Y. stands for The Country's Best Yogurt. Where did that come from? Did it used to be The Country's Best Hamburgers, and that didn't sell, so they changed it to yogurt?

N: I don't think so. This isn't McDonald's, we don't sell hamburgers.

K: You have different yogurt flavors everyday, so if someone didn't like a flavor one day, they could come back the next day, and there'd probably be a flavor that they like?

N: Yes.

K: And you can put toppings on the yogurt?

N: Yes.

K: Doesn't that kind of defeat the purpose of the whole fat free experience?

N: It depends on what you want. All our fruit is sugar free, and we have no sugar added hot fudge. So if they want no sugar added, we have that, so it's up to the customer.

K: Do you offer free samples?

N: Yes.

K: Do you ever have people just keep asking for free samples until they make a whole ice cream cone just from the free samples?

N: Not really.

K: Do you ever get mad if someone gets a free sample, and then just leaves?

N: No.

K: What if someone asks for a free sample of something like chocolate? Something that they should already know what it tastes like?

N: That's okay. We'll give it to them.

K: Can they have a topping on a free sample?

N: No. That they can't have.

K: Jeff, what are you still doing here?

Jeff: Well, I know you're not going to get a discount, so I'm just going to wait until you leave so I can get one.

N: Our prices are probably the cheapest in the area. When we opened the store five years ago in Milford, we had these prices. We haven't raised them at all.

K: So inflation hasn't had any effect on yogurt?

N: It has, but we keep our prices down. We have specials every month, that we run different menu items, like this month it's a Sundette.

K: So it's like a feminine version of a sundae?

N: No, it's just a smaller version.

K: I've never seen a Sundette before. Is that only a TCBY product? Can you get that at other ice cream stores?

N: It's just at TCBY.

K: Did you invent it?

N: Yes. Sundettes, Waffle Bowls, a lot of these can't be duplicated anywhere else.

K: Yeah, they made a whole bowl out of a waffle cone! How they can do that, I can't even imagine. Can you sum up TCBY's customer service policy in a few words?

N: Well, we try to please our customers, that's all. We give them what they want.

K: Yeah, whether it be a Waffle Bowl, a Sundette, or any of these things.

N: Or the flavors they want.

K: And you also have Shivers, banana splits, Stir Crazy, Yog-wich, Yog-a-bar ... does anyone know what those are?

N: Yes.

K: Do people get them confused with Star Wars characters or something?

N: No.

K: Can I have a free sample of some frozen yogurt?

N: Sure, what would you like?

K: How about a vanilla/chocolate swirl?

N: Ok. Do you like frozen yogurt?

K: Yeah, but I haven't had any since I came to college. Do you find that it takes people a while to get used to frozen yogurt?

N: No, it tastes like a premium ice cream.

K: This is really good Jeff, you should give it a try.

Jeff: Maybe I will.

K: I want to make amends. He looks a little mad. Noreen, can you get a free sample for my friend Jeff? What do you want, Jeff? This one's on me, pal.

J: You have such good taste in frozen yogurt, I'll have the same.

K: Try your yogurt, and let us know what you like about it.

J: Mmmm. It's like a chocolate and vanilla swirl.

K: I'll have to ask one more time. The college students don't have a lot of money. Is there any way you can offer some kind of discount for them?

N: We're thinking about getting student buyer cards. They'd get 10% off all menu items.

K: So they get a little plastic card to carry around with them. How realistic is the possibility of doing that?

N: I'm talking to the printers right now about prices.

K: Maybe this column we're doing will get more college students to come here.

N: Yeah maybe, if it doesn't make them run away. Ω

Students serve abroad and live to talk about it

Windie Kaplan

On Wednesday, November 16, a lecture was held by two students who served as Junior Foreign Service officers over the summer. Sue-Yee Ng, a junior International Studies major, spoke about China and capitalist reform. Following her presentation was Marcia Mowbray, a senior Political Science major who spoke about her time in New Zealand.

Sui-Yee Ng, born in Hong Kong, served at the US Council at Shanghai. Ng spoke about the growing competition and free market system that is developing in China. In the past, she explained, China concentrated on developing low-tech industries such as agriculture. Now, however, technology is growing, although wages remain low. Most industries are run by individuals and collectives, not the government.

China is now considered a developing country, yet in 1992 China had the greatest economic output of all nations. Ng explained the various ways the west is able to break into this growing economy. She also spoke on why China is such a desirable market: there are lots of people and many options for investors. The lessening of state control has resulted in the opening of small stands in the streets as ordinary citizens explore the money-making possibilities of a free market.

China is not yet completely open to foreign investors; one needs connections. One way to enter the Chinese market is to go through other companies in the "China Commonwealth." Although state control of the country has lessened, there is still a great deal of state interference and some areas remain state controlled. The government also has many ways to block the opening of new industries. One example Ng gave was the government's treatment of McDonald's. They delayed the opening of the restaurant for an entire month. The key concept to keep in mind when operating in China, she explained, is to not look for short term profit. Although China is not the ideal capitalistic society, it is still reforming and will become one of the fastest growing economies in the future.

Marcia Mowbray, born in Maryland, served at the US Council in Auckland, New Zealand. She began with the history of the country as an agricultural society with the economy regulated by the government. In 1972 until 1984, New Zealand imitated Britain and borrowed a great deal of money to support social programs. Their goal was to redistribute the wealth among citizens and, as a result, the country became one of the slowest growing economies of any first world country. The '90s began to show deregulation. The phone company became privatized and decreased the cost to the consumer by 60%. As an amusing side note, the phone company was bought by Bell Atlantic. Television was also privatized, doubling the number of television stations from two to four.

This deregulation did result in some problems. The government decentralized education system has developed problems. There is overcrowding in some areas and waiting lists for schools in others. There is no designated school bussing, resulting in problems getting the children of working and middle class parents to the schools which have openings. Colleges now charge tuition. This added an unexpected expense to parents who had not saved enough money to put their children through higher education. There are no scholarship programs and colleges do not provide grants to families who cannot pay. Another result of privatization in New Zealand is that health care has moved to private insurance. Hospitals have been raising fees in the expectation of the lowering of government subsidies for health care. There is growing insecurity over both health and education issues.

Overall, with the increase in competition, prices have been lowered and a small business have expanded. Beer, for example, was originally made by only two companies. Now there are many breweries, pubs, and imported beers. The cost has gone down and the variety has gone up. Still, the technological level of New Zealand appears to be relatively low. New Zealand continues to export raw materials (such as wool, lamb, milk, cows, and butter) and import finished goods since the cost of labor is much higher in New Zealand than in the Pacific Islands.

New Zealand has become a part of an economic alliance with Australia and the Pacific Islands. New Zealand also hopes to double its population to six million by the year 2000. This has resulted in some racial tensions. Asian immigrants are considered to be more aggressive and do well in the country. Pacific Islanders are generally poor and do not have much education. Since they do not have a stigma attached to welfare, they are forming an underclass of poverty. New Zealand natives are considered gentle and laid back, taken advantage of by the successful, aggressive Asians and leeched off of by the Pacific Islanders. Ω

Spider's

(Formerly Newt's)

Hillside Bar

Special Draft Night

Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Midnight Madness

Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Must be 21 or older

W.C. student places at Maryland State Dance Festival

Mindie Kaplan

Dina Abbate recently placed impressively at a dance competition held during the Maryland State Dance Festival. Students from throughout the state competed for scholarships to dance companies throughout the country. The auditions covered three categories: Ballet, Modern Dance, and Jazz Dance. Abbate, a freshman this year, placed third overall and was first in the Jazz portion of the competition. She won the Jazz scholarship to the Gus Giordano Dance Center in Chicago. The scholarship will pay for a full semester at the center, lasting from June until August. Abbate was also awarded $50 towards any dance school to which she wished to apply.

Abbate started dancing when she was three. As a child, she was exposed to many different forms of dance. In 1986 she began to take classes specifically for Ballet. In 1988, she added Jazz classes to her repertoire. The next year Abbate joined a dance company, the Jazz Unlimited Dance Ensemble located in Marlton, NJ. She remained with the company for five years. Her first year was in the "petite" class. She quickly moved into the "junior" class during her second year with the company. Her third year, she became a "senior" where she remained until she left to attend Washington College.

During her time with the dance company, Abbate traveled and contended in both regional and national competitions. Her worst experience with the company was on a cruise in Mexico. "Everyone got seasick," she explained. "We were supposed to dance on the boat and the boat was tilted!"

Abbate has two younger siblings, a brother who is eight and a sister, 14, who will dance in the company next year. Abbate began dance classes because her mother "wanted me to be involved in something. My Mom was a dancer and she quit. I think she always regretted it," said Abbate.

When asked about the dance program at the college, Abbate responded by saying, "I love the instruction, but I wish more people were interested so we could put together a program or something." Under the instruction of Professor Karen Smith, Abbate takes Modern, Jazz, and Ballet classes. She will also be performing in the annual Renaissance Christmas Dinner.

Dina Abbate has yet to declare her major at W.C., although she is considering a major in psychology.

"I want to be a doctor of some sort, but I don't know what yet," she related.

Poetry, prose, music, "Bear Sex"

The Beat Influence at the Freshman Literary Colloquy

Jennifer Ward

On Sunday, November 20, the two Freshman creative writing classes presented its Freshman Literary Colloquy. A crowd of about forty people gathered on the porch of the O'Neill Literary House for the event.

This year's topic was the Beat Influence, which refers to a group of writers in the late 1950s, including Allen Ginsberg, Jack Kerouac, William S. Burroughs, and Lawrence Ferlinghetti.

On the Beat movement, Burroughs himself once commented, " ... [it] had a momentum of its own and a world-wide impact. In fact, the intelligent conservatives saw this as a serious threat to their position long before the Beat writers saw it themselves ... You can't tell anybody anything he doesn't know already. The alienation, the restlessness, the dissatisfaction were already there even as the word Kerouac pointed out the road."

Professor Bob Day began the afternoon with a welcome; Eva Kaplan-Leiserson continued with an introduction to the Beat Generation. Other readers included Paulina Sierra Samano, Sean McDowell, Jeff Frank, Ven Ward, Perry Schatz, and Peter Torigoe. Kevin Hoffman concluded by commenting on the influence the Beat Generation has had on today's culture, and the similarities between that society and today's: "The media misperceived the Beat Generation, and now they're doing the same thing with this Generation X whatnot: different people are trying to live up to the Generation X reputation and others are going around trying to avoid it."

The colloquy was a multi-media presentation. In addition to the readings, music of the era, like the Kingston Trio and jazz by Thelonius Monk, played. Jack Kerouac even did his own reading – from a CD. During the readings, a total of four videos played.

The highlight of the afternoon came when "Death to Our Toys", better known as "Bear Sex," made its public debut. Filmed by aspiring boys Kevin and Jeff, it stars Sunshine and Roundboy, two unbelievably animate stuffed bears performing various sexual acts.

"The bears were having safe sex because neither of them had genitalia. I wouldn't want people to think we're promoting unsafe sex," said Jeff.

Kevin commented on the response to the video: "We've actually had a few requests for dubs of it from individual students. We're thinking of mass-marketing it -- if there's a demand. You know, a few people even asked us how we got midgets to dress up in bear costumes." Both Kevin and Jeff refused to comment on the specifics of the making of "Bear Sex".

Becky Bryant reflected on the colloquy: "'Bear Sex' was definitely the highlight. But it would have been cooler if they'd performed the entire colloquy outdoors near the tennis courts – with lots of Roman candles."

Note: If you want to add "Bear Sex" to your own video library, give Kevin Hoffman or Jeff Frank a blank video tape. They will dub it for free and include on the dub "the authentic porn soundtrack. It will be more than you expect," says Kevin.

Upcoming events • Upcoming events

Now through December 4:
Guys and Dolls • Toby's Dinner Theatre, call (301) 596-6161
Now through December 18:
Two Trains Running • Center Stage, call (410) 332-0033
December 16-23:
Nutcracker featuring the Donetsk Ballet • Lyric Opera House, call (410) 481-SEAT
Through December 31:
The Pictographs of Adolph Gottlieb • The Phillips Collection: Artful Evenings, call (410) 481-SEAT
Through January 15:
Gaugin and the School of Pont-Aven • Walter's Art Gallery, call (410) 481-SEAT for advance passes

December 6:
Nine Inch Nails, Marilyn Manson, and the Jim Rose Circus Show • Baltimore Arena, call (410) 481-SEAT
December 7-8:
Ocean Blue • Bayou, call (202) 333-2897
December 8:
Melissa Etheridge and Pete Droge • D.A.R. Constitution Hall, call (410) 481-SEAT
December 15:
NRBQ • Bouhager's, call (410) 563-7220
December 16:
The Soup Dragons and the 360's • UMBC University Center, call (410) 455-3618 for information or (410) 481-SEAT for tickets
December 17:
Biohazard • Hammerjacks, call (410) 659-ROCK
December 19:
George Winston • Lisner Auditorium, George Washington University, call (410) 481-SEAT
December 30:
The Dave Matthews Band • American University Bender Arena, call (410) 481-SEAT

W.C. students Smokeout

Cortney Clulow receives her prize of for the Tobacco Survey on Smokeout Day drawing.

A big thanks goes out to all Washington College students who participated in the Great American Smokeout on November 17. Many students took a break and tried to not smoke for 24 hours. Many students helped to increase awareness of Smokeout Day by wearing stickers. The Kiss Me I Don't Smoke stickers were by far the most popular.

Carol Amberton and Leslie White from Health Services encouraged students to fill out a Smokeless Tobacco Survey. The results of this survey will be used to design a Smokeless Tobacco program which will be presented on campus Tuesday evenings from 7 -8 p.m. beginning January 31.

HOROSCOPES

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) It seems you have a birthday coming up. Get rid of those elements that are leaving you unashaven and unshaved.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20) You hate the holidays, but so does everyone living in the tiny stream of reality that is the college career. Drink a bowl of spiked cider and forget it all.
Aquarius (1/21/2/18) You've been hooked by a barracuda. Pull out a deep sea diving knife and cut out his teeth so you can wear them as a necklace.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) Rock on my bra! If you don't know what that means, read The Vomit Vender. Hint: you're doing well.
Aries (3/21-4/19) Your fire is as yet untamed. Concentrate on pleasing yourself before others, and perhaps the flames will find some control. Leo figures prominently.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) Still moving steadily into the future. Step out of the normal routine. Have a Gin&Tonic to celebrate this semester's achievements.
Gemini (5/21-6/21) Divided again? The side likes your friends; the other wants to kill them. Time for therapy.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) Scalp tickets to the NIN concert and get out that anger by slamming people wearing all black. Or you might try stage diving and slam yourself.
Leo (7/23-8/22) The demon in you is raving mad. Time for you to reevaluate your academic priorities as they are not in order.
Virgo (8/23-9/23) You Virgos always annoy me because you never listen to anything I tell you. This time you're on your own.
Libra (9/24-10/23) Why are you walking away from what you most desire? If you persist you will soon find your fingers intertwined with another's.
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) Your birthday has passed and you are off to a good start, especially in the area of Love. Don't get lost this time, keep track of who you are.

By Ember (Lupa is on vacation, again)

c.r.u.d.

creative ranting under duress. by Becky Bryant & Brandon Hopkins

Havre de Grace: A Shocking Tale of Fast Food, Small Talk, and Abject Humiliation

"Nothing so bores a writer as what other people have to say."
-Mavis Gallant, on the ride from Philadelphia Airport to Washington College

~~~

Upon passing the fifth sign for Havre de Grace exit, Mavis Gallant, world famous short story writer from the New Yorker school, bursts out laughing. "Look!! There it is again! I think this place is following us around."

I feel that sinking feeling one gets after realizing he has missed all three exits back to Chestertown.

"Brandon," I say to myself, "all you need to do now is crash this car and we will top off the evening!"

"Are we lost?" asks Mavis.

"Um, yes ..." I mumble, looking to Becky for help, though she has been lost in a daydream since Céline became the topic of conversation. Another sign for Havre de Grace, and Mavis starts laughing again.

~~~

The conversation about French authors continues as I furiously rack my brain for something to contribute. I've read Albert Camus' The Stranger — that was in English. Picasso was in Paris once, wasn't he? I knew him, I knew this would happen! It's so pretentious, what's he trying to prove? What?! We're lost?! Joppa Town — he's done it now. Oh well, the driver's the one to blame ...

Okay Becky, I shouldn't leave you hanging.

"I think we're going the wrong way. Isn't Joppa Town near Baltimore?"

Oh no, that means two more hours of this! Gee, Mavis hasn't eaten since noon in the morning — I wonder if she wants my grilled chicken sandwich.

~~~

"Don't you have a map in the car?" asks Mavis.

"No, that would be too convenient," I quip.

"Do you want me to draw one for me?" Mavis retorts.

I feel like I have a big "A" for Asshole stamped on my head. We all laugh awkwardly for a moment, then return to mopping the sweat from my forehead.

It's not my fault damn it!!! I'm talking to Mavis, chatting, having a good time, discussing Miller, Malraux, Borrel), Kundera — and BECKY, who's doing nothing but staring out the window, doesn't have time enough to inform me that we missed three fuckin' exits!!

These awkward silences are too much. I've got to make small talk: say something, anything ...

~~~

What is he talking about!?! French Catholics in Maryland? I know nothing about Maryland history, why is he looking to me for confirmation? She must think that we are complete idiots. Please change the subject!

"Look at those statues on the side of the road. How strange. What do people use those for?"

Is she talking about those tacky lawn ornaments? The plastic Bambi, pink flamingoes, a concrete statue of the Virgin Mary, three yard gnomes, two dwarves, a couple of garden trolls, a rooftop Santa with sleigh, and a rustic, light-up baby Jesus.

"I think people just put them in their gardens or backyards," I say, not mentioning the toilet seat my grandparents' neighbors have as a planter in their front yard.

~~~

"Is all of America like this?" asks Mavis. Looking at the strip malls and fast food restaurants, car dealerships, gas stations, and little one-horse towns along the highway, Mavis seems to have developed a warped impression of our fine nation.

"Most of it," I responded.

So here it is — the realization that we are stuck in a bad road-trip movie. This is more humiliating than Keanu Reeves' performance in "Speed". I don't want to drive anymore. I do not want to drive! Why do those images from Blood on the Highway always come back at moments when you have a famous Canadian in the car?

~~~

This is so surreal, I don't now whether I should laugh or cry. I should have had more sleep before I came along. How did I get trapped in this nightmare? Am I getting paid for this?

Nobody's said anything for a long time, when, as we're passing a Christian bookstore, Mavis perks up and says, "I'm so hungry that I could eat Christian books!" Now's your chance Becky, mention the grilled chicken sandwich.

"Would you, er ... like my grilled ... chicken ... sandwich? It's a little cold, I bought it this morning."

I won't tell her that we were keeping it in the trunk of the car before we had to put her luggage there.

"No thanks. Had you mentioned it an hour ago I would have eaten it. But now I think I'll just wait until we get there."

I knew I should have mentioned it earlier! She must really hate me now, I just poured salt in her wound. The road to hell is paved with good intentions. At least we're finally approaching hell!

~~~

Finally, we have reached Chestertown! I think I hear Mavis' stomach growling — I hope to God they have a catered meal waiting for her when she gets to Brown Cottage.

"Becky," I ask, "is that Brown Cottage?"

"No, Brandon, that is the Spanish House."

Mavis just looks at me with that don't-you-ever-have-any-idea-where-you-are-going look on her face.

We enter Brown Cottage to find that our entire English class has been making bets on when we'd return. No feast, no elaborate array of food — one stale donut, one stale croissant, one stale danish, and one glass of water. We were further humiliated when Bob Day, with charming social grace and tact, brought up the topic of our payment.

"Just write down your hours and I'll send you a check.

"You got paid by the hour for this?" asks Mavis.

Oh shit, now what does she think of us! That we got lost to pad our own pockets! We leave in utter embarrassment.

~~~

I wonder if they can hear our laughter.

"Brandon, do you have a cigarette?" The most stressful drive of our lives and she wasn't a smoker!

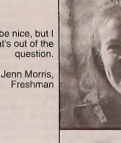
"Were you thinking the same thing I was?" he asks.

"Yeah, she's gonna write a story about this."

"She'll probably call it —" (in unison) "Havre de Grace!" Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Philip McQuade

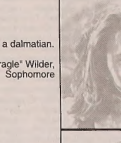


Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What do you want for Christmas?

A really good computer and an "A" in physics.

Jessa DeMars, Sophomore



A car would be nice, but I think that's out of the question.

Jenn Morris, Freshman

As the great pharaoh Benjamin T. Henkle once said, "I want the Grinch Who Stole Christmas and the Charlie Brown Christmas Special to air on the same evening."

Will "Red Dog" Smiley, Junior

I want a dog, a dalmatian.

Heather "Fragle" Wilder, Sophomore

For the Dining Service to actually serve good food next year, and for "Topher to actually graduate.

Matt Petracco, Sophomore

You, Phil, underneath my tree.

Ian McVeigh, Junior

Gallant visits W.C.

Carolyn Fuss

"The combination of her voice and her writing were almost musical, and her prose was very well-detailed. It drew you in," said sophomore Chris Watkins of an afternoon when members of the W.C. community packed the CAC Forum to hear Mavis Gallant read from her work.

The event which occurred on November 18, was originally supposed to be held in the Sophie Kerr room; however, because of the large turnout, it had to be moved to the Forum.

Gallant read from a piece of her latest story, as well as another short story of hers called "Crossing the Bridge." Chris Watkins reflected on her work saying it was "interesting because it showed a lot of realness in the characters." Her stories told mainly of the different races in France and how they interact with each other, their ways of life, marriage ceremonies, family life, and economic systems.

One Washington College student commented on the event saying, "She was very worldly. It was as though through her stories she was transporting you into another person's life in a French community." Ω

BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442
Off Street Parking Next To The Store
Ray-Ban Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm Marlin Patagonia
Columbia Sportswear Company
LANSPORT
ORIGINAL UGG
REEF
10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS
WITH STUDENT I.D.
Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks
Barrecrafters Car Racks

Swim team drowns their competitors

Men's Swimming

Dave Kraft

The Washington College men's swim team extended their record to 2-0 as they easily handled Western Maryland 142-59. The Sho'men had a chance to swim in some irregular events and get some seed times for championships. The meet started off with two Sho'men relays taking 1-2 in the 200 Medley: the team of Rob Cronin, Jason Campbell, Dave Potter, and Drew Fritch, and the team of Tyler McCarthy, Julien Gaudion, Scott Steinmuller, and Peter Ward. In the 1000 Free, Dave Cola, Dan Woodall, and Dave Czekaj placed second, third, and fourth respectively. The Sho'men then swept the next two events, with Drew Fritch, Eric Whether, and Chris Freisheim placing 1-2-3 in the 200 Free, and Dave Potter, Jason Campbell, and Peter Ward doing the same in the 50. In the 200, Fritch and Whether moved into second and fourth on W.C.'s all-time 200 Free list. Tim Parent won the 200 IM in an impressive 2:09.26. Rob Cronin and Scott Steinmuller followed in third and fourth to give the Sho'men an impressive 70-21 edge at the half.

The second half began with Dave Potter, Marcello Brutti, and Scott Steinmuller placing 2-3-4 in the 100 Fly. The Sho'men got their third sweep of the day in the 100 Free, courtesy of Tim Parent, Peter Ward, and Chris Freisheim. Rob Cronin, Tyler McCarthy, and Dave Kraft took 2-3-4 in the 200 Back, all dropping their times from the previous week. Dave Cola won the 500 Free in an impressive 5:03.81, with Drew Fritch second and Dan Woodall fourth. Jason Campbell, Julien Gaudion, and Eric Whether placed 2-3-5 in the 200 Breast. Hetzer's time moved him into third on W.C.'s all-time 200 Breast list. The Sho'men then ended the meet with a bang, as the team of Tim Parent, Tyler McCarthy, Chris Freisheim, and Dave Cola won the 200 Free Relay, and the team of Perry Holland, Marcello Brutti, Ryu Kawai, and Dave Kraft took second.

The team swam well with many swimmers dropping their times from the week before. the Sho'men reached an important milestone in this meet: all 18 men qualified for the championship meet, the first time this has been done. The fact that it was done after just two dual meets makes the Sho'men feel optimistic about the rest of the season. The team travels to Salisbury State on November 30, and returns home to face Ursinus on December 3 at the Casey Swim Center. Thanks to all the fans that came to support the team against Western Maryland, we hope to see you back for the Ursinus meet. Ω

Women's Swimming

Dave Kraft

Continuing their winning ways, the Washington College women's swim team defeated Western Maryland 115-90. Their 2-0 start has caused the women to gain attention, as both of their wins are within the Conference.

"This is exactly how we wanted to start the season," said Coach Kim Lessard. "They swam really well as a team and deserved to win."

The team of Meredith Bathgate, Colleen Roberts, Jen Dow, and Casey Bane won the 200 Medley Relay to start the meet, with the team of Erin Miller, Robin Woolens, Amy Draper, and Denise Hakanson in third. Megan Bradley handily won the 1000 Free, moving her onto the W.C. all-time list. Jen Dow and Amy Draper took second and fourth, swimming their second consecutive event. Danielle Sullivan, Barbara Murphy, and Casey Bane took 2-3-4 in the 200 free. Meredith Bathgate won the 50 Free, with Jen Voss in third. The half ended with Colleen Roberts, Denise Hakanson, and Erin Miller taking 2-3-5 in the 200 IM, and the team leading by a score of 57-36.

Western Maryland, trying to make a comeback, unleashed their two All-Americans, who took first in the next three events to narrow the Sho'woman lead to eight. In those events, Megan Bradley, Jen Dow, and Heather Beauchamp placed 2-3-5 in the 100 Fly. Bradley's time again moved her onto the W.C. all-time list. Danielle Sullivan then celebrated her birthday by breaking the four-year-old 100 Free school record. Her mark of 57.55 was good for second; Jenn Voss took fourth. Meredith Bathgate, Denise Hakanson, and Erin Miller then took 2-4-5 in the 100 Back. Megan Bradley won the 500 Free in an impressive 5:42.71. Barbara Murphy and Amy Draper followed in third and fifth. For the second consecutive week, Colleen Roberts won a close 100 Breast to increase the Sho'woman lead to 102-86.

In the exciting finale, the team of Danielle Sullivan, Barbara Murphy, Jenn Voss, and Casey Bane shattered the 200 Free Relay record in 1:46.84. All four women split 26 seconds in their leg of the relay.

The women look to make it three in a row on November 30 at Salisbury before coming home to face Conference power Ursinus December 3. Come to Casey Swim Center and support the team. Ω

Crew at Frostbite Regatta

Mike Beardsley

On Saturday, November 12 the Washington College Rowing Team traveled up to Philadelphia to compete in their last race of the season. The Frostbite Regatta held on the Schuylkill River (that's Schoo-kill for all you non-Philadelphians out there) is a fine ending to a fall season for the local universities, colleges, and clubs because the races are only 2000 meters long – the traditional spring racing distance.

W.C. crews showed well last weekend by placing both the men's and women's varsity boats first in their final! The Novice men and women also competed, giving them a better sense of what's to come next semester. Clocking in with a time of 7:36.5, the women's varsity eight with coxswain crossed the line first, barely pushing their boat ahead of the quickly closing crew from Mercyhurst, which posted a time of 7:36.7. The women were both enthusiastic and a little taken aback by their accomplishment. On Friday at practice, varsity rower senior Jennifer Dougherty, injured herself and was unable to compete in the race. Instead of giving up on the race, the women held together and won the race, with the help of a brave novice woman Carrie Smith.

The men's boat went out on [illegible] water Saturday to prove a little [illegible] thing to the college rowing [illegible] nity. The men have decided to race [illegible] eight this spring instead of the [illegible] tional fours for which Washington [illegible] College has become known. This [illegible] will put Washington up against [illegible] tougher competition come the spring [illegible] races. The men wanted to go out there [illegible] and show the rest of Division III that [illegible] they could row competitively in the [illegible] eight too. So with that in mind, [illegible] war paint on their faces, the men's [illegible] boat came through the field from fifth [illegible] at the start to a nine second victory [illegible] over their closest competitor, [illegible] Skidmore College from upstate New [illegible] York.

With their appetites whetted, and [illegible] determination on the mind, the crew [illegible] now goes into the weight room for the [illegible] remainder of the semester to prepare [illegible] for next spring. When they come back [illegible] to school from winter break the crew [illegible] will go down into the catacombs of [illegible] Cain Gymnasium to row on the ergometers and lift weights until [illegible] Mother Nature thaws out the Chesapeake [illegible] The "dungeon," as the rowers call [illegible] Cain, is not the best place in the world [illegible] to come back to, but it's better than [illegible] going down to the frozen boathouse for [illegible] two weeks waiting for the ice to melt [illegible] away.Ω

POW

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

This week The Elm and Coaches chose Ben Harris as the Player of the Week. Harris was the difference in the Sho'men's victory at the Johns Hopkins Tip Off. Harris is a sophomore at Washington and is the captain of the young squad. Harris averages 20 points per game. So far this season his highest game was against Muskingum with 26 points. Harris has accumulated 66 points in 4 games and is still going. From the three-point line Harris is 41% and is 75% from the foul line. On the defensive Harris has eight steals and only seven fouls. Ben Harris has established himself as one of the top guards in the region. He was most recently recognized as Tournament MVP at Hopkins. He was one of the top five last season in the Conference in four different statistical categories. This basketball phenomenon hails from Mt. Vernon in Alexandria, Virginia, the basketball Mecca. Harris is undecided in his academics here at Washington but is leaning towards business. When asked about the season Harris said, "I feel very good. We have a young team with a lot of speed to help us out. I believe that we have a shot at winning our half of the Conference to go on to the Tournament and therefore win the whole thing." Next time you go to a men's basketball game, pay attention to number 22.

Honorable mention this week goes to senior Adam Poe and sophomore Derek Cuff. They played well in all four games and provided stability and points for the Sho'men.

Welcome Yule!

A Washington College Community Chorus Christmas Concert

Friday, December 9, 8 p.m., Norman James Theater

All are welcome
Admission is free

Men's B-ball off to start

Peggy Busker

The Sho'men Basketball season kicked off in style at the Johns Hopkins Tip Off. This was the first year that the Sho'men participated in this particular tournament and they left the other teams regret tinir presence.

Washington took on the pre-season 24th team in the nation, John Carroll from Ohio. The game was not going to be an easy season opener.

The Sho'men started their only season Academic All-American, Guard Also a guard was Sophomore Ben Harris. The height was in junior Jerry Davis, at 6'4" junior Ken Lapp, 6'6" and sophomore Derek Cuff at 6'2".

Washington came into the game not giving Carroll much of any lead. The score went back and forth with Carroll always coming out a little bit ahead. At the half the score was 34-31, Carroll.

Washington was not going to give up. They had much better shot selection than Carroll and higher shot percentages. Washington made 32% from the field and 47% from the three point line. At the foul line the Sho'men were tied with Carroll at 67%. Carroll had not made any of their three point attempts and shot only 28% from the field.

As the second half began, both teams stepped up their level of play, looking to take a decisive lead. Washington did not waste much time in catching Carroll. Then W.C., with the help of Derek Cuff and Adam Poe, took a comfortable lead and never looked back.

The Sho'men "played solid," said Head Coach Tom Finnegan, in his 24th season as a Sho'men Coach. He felt that his players made a great effort to knock off the team from Ohio had. The Sho'men finished with 80 to Carroll's 70 points.

Sophomore Mark Awantang and junior Edmund Hicks saw some times as power forwards, scoring 10 points together. Awantang looked impressive with five rebounds and two blocks. Freshman Bradd Burkhart made the Sho'men debut and scored four with six rebounds.

As a team the statistics were very good. Shot percentage increased in the second half to 40% from the field, 50% from the three point line and 69% from the foul line. For the entire game, the shot percentages were over 30% and the free throw percentage was 68%.

Derek Cuff led the scoring with 26 points, with Adam Poe at 19 points and Ben Harris with 14 points. Three of the five starters were in double digits. Jerry Davis came up with 7 rebounds and Ken Lapp had 4.

The Sho'men came back to campus that night celebrating, but they would soon have even more reason to celebrate.

The following night, Washington went back to Hopkins for more of the tournament. They were going to meet another force from Ohio, Muskingum.

The game would almost be a repeat of the night before, but with a hitch: overtime.

Coach Finnegan used the same five starters from the night before.

Washington came out on the tails of their victory over Carroll and took the early lead. The score at the half was 34-31 but this time in Washington's favor.

Washington out-shot and outplayed Muskingum in the first half. Shot percentages were over 40% from the field and 50% from the foul line. Muskingum shot well, but Washington shot more.

The second half was not Washington's strongest. Washington made none of their three pointers and were only 37% from the field. Washington stayed in the game by scoring 81% from the foul line.

With five minutes left in the game, Washington had an eight point lead. Muskingum fought on the pressure and tied the game with 10 seconds left.

Washington picked their heads up and decided they wanted the win bad enough.

As overtime began Ben Harris scored the first eight points for the Sho'men. The defense was clean and efficient, shutting down the Muskingum drives at the basket. Washington kept up the pressure and scored another eight points to win the game, 80-73.

Ben Harris racked up 26 points, six rebounds, and five assists. Derek Cuff had another double digit game, 14 points, two blocks and 11 rebounds. Jerry Davis had eight points and 12 rebounds. Mark Awantang came up with six rebounds and two blocks. Edmund Hicks had a good game as well with six points and two rebounds.

On the freshman side, Gregory Metrinko had three assists, Bradd Burkhart had eight points and four rebounds, and Matt King played solidly with one steal.

With the two wins in the tournament, the Sho'men won the tournament.

Derek Cuff, for his excellent play and contribution, was voted to the All-Tournament Team. This week's POW, Ben Harris, was voted the Most Valuable Player for the tournament.

The Sho'men are now the proud owners of a Blue Jay's trophy. The tournament was a great way to begin the season.

Mark Awantang summed up the weekend play. "We played real good defense and Ben, Derek, and Adam really put us up in scoring."

The next two games were both in any tournament nor were they Conference. The first of the games was against Frostburg, prior to Thanksgiving.

Washington once again came out strong, with the same five starters from the tournament beginning the Sho'men attack once again.

Washington was playing another sclid game when, six minutes into the contest, Derek Cuff sprained his ankle and went out of the game. This was a striking blow to the Sho'men. Cuff, the All-Tournament Team member, had scored nine points before his injure.

Washington would not recover. The Sho'men continued to hustle and score, but Frostburg was always ahead.

At half time, with Washington shooting over 50%, W.C. was behind with 34-30. Frostburg was getting many points from the foul line and the three point line.

Washington tried to cut the lead. At the 14 mark, the lead was six. Washington was within two at one point in the second half, but hit a dry spell which took the lead from their grasp.

The team played well together, considering the adjustments made due to the loss of Cuff. The final score was 86-82.

Adam Poe played well with 25 points, three of them three-pointers, four assists and 3 rebounds. Ben Harris had his usual total above twenty points (22), making four three-pointers. Harris tied Poe in assists. Jerry Davis had five blocks and he and Ken Lapp totaled 11 points.

Awantang feels that the defense just, "was not as intense."

The next game was against the Division I team, Delaware. Emotions and aggression were high for the Sho'men, coming off the Frostburg upset.

The game was close from the starting tip. With Derek Cuff still out, Washington stepped up to play hard. The starting five were Edmund Hicks and Ken Lapp, the twin towers, playing forward. Then at Guard were Ben Harris and Adam Poe. Center was offensive and defensive threat, powerful Jerry Davis.

Delaware scored first. Washington quickly rebutted as Lapp put one in. Then Harris followed with a textbook three-pointer to put the Sho'men ahead. The score continued to seesaw. Davis drove the lane for his only shot in the first half. Edmund Hicks had position and capitalized several times. Awantang found the basket, as did Lapp. Freshman Bradd Burkhart had a three-pointer and a shot from the field. Burkhart's points tied the Sho'men at 40 and topped their 10-point run on the basket that began with a jumper from Poe.

Washington was 67% from the three point range and the foul line, and 43% from inside the three.

The intensity of the first half needed to continue into the second half for the Sho'men to upset the Division I team.

Washington had possession but did not score first. W.C. would not score until five minutes into the half when Poe found the net and was fouled converting the basket into a three point play. Washington was down by seven and needed another run, but would never get the chance. The Sho'men played catch-up. Delaware was up by as much as 11 twice. Washington was as close as five late in the second half. A three-pointer by Poe, a basket from Davis, and Lapp and Burkhart making a lay-up from a steal with under a minute to go brought the Sho'men within striking distance. As in many games, missed shots at the end could have made all the difference.

Washington, however, did play well, especially against a Division I team. The scoring was spread out among the Sho'men, showing something very good about the talent. Adam Poe capped his Frostburg game with 26 points and Harris had 20 points. Freshman Bradd Burkhart reached the double digits with the two upperclassmen with 14 points.

On the little too aggressive side, Freshmen Matt King fouled out, along with Edmund Hicks and Adam Poe.

Derek Cuff, injured and on the sidelines, had the following to say about the game, "The intensity missing from Frostburg picked up at this game and with a couple of breaks, one way or the other, records like end could have made the difference.

This Saturday the Sho'men take on their first Conference team at Western Maryland. Their first home contest is the tail end of a double-header Tuesday December 6 vs. Muhlenberg at 7:30 p.m. ☐

Women's Basketball splits against St. May's, Franklin and Marshall

Micole Zemanski

The last two weeks of play have produced mixed results for the Sho'women. The young squad, consisting of mostly freshmen and sophomores, has played solidly up to this point during the young season for head coach Lance Cole. The women played their first home contest on November 22 in the CainDome before a rowdy crowd against St. Mary's College.

Coach Cole started the game off with freshmen Hilary Rainey and Karen Sieger, along with sophomore team captains Lee Ann Lezzer, Allison Wentworth, and Eboni Taylor. The starting five played the team from the onset of the match with four out of the five ending the game in double figures. Wentworth, Sieger, and freshman Megan Miller led the defense for the Sho'women by holding St. Mary's star player, Cindy Davenport, to a total of 13 points. Wentworth and Lezzer combined for nine steals while Miller added two blocks. By the end of the first half, the Sho'women led 36-25.

Going into the second half with an eleven point lead, the women maintained their lead. St. Mary's battled back to within a few points of the Sho'women by the half. The team came out in the second half with defensive power, but by the end the end of the game the women were in control. Defensively, the women put the St. Mary's Miller ladies team with 12 rebounds while Taylor, Sieger, and Wentworth combined for 26. Lezzer played extremely well by keeping the team in her new point guard position. Lezzer was two for three from three-point range and also led the team with seven assists. Taylor led the Sho'women with 16 points while Miller, Lezzer, Sieger, and Wentworth reached double figures in points. The team played well against the much more experienced St. Mary's squad by mixing the offense up and pressuring the opponent on the defensive end. Although St. Mary's won the battle in the second half by outscoring the Sho'women 36-33, the Sho'women won the war by crushing them 69-61.

This past Tuesday, the women traveled to Lancaster, PA to play the strong squad of F and M Marshall in their first Centennial Conference game of the season. The starting squad of Wentworth, Sieger, Lezzer, Miller, and Taylor started off strong by outscoring F & M in the first half, 32-25. Wentworth led the team with 18 points while Taylor added 16 of her own. Lezzer provided leadership and play-making ability at the point once again for the Sho'women by leading the team with five assists and a 50% for-five three-point shooting. Wentworth and Taylor combined for twenty-four rebounds to lead the Sho'women in the defensive end. Wentworth added two steals while Miller tallied two more blocks. The team's first half field goal shooting of 45.7% beat out Franklin and Marshall's 36.7%.

Coming into the second half with a seven point lead, the women fell flat and slowly lost their advantage. One of the main reasons for F & M's power surge was their free-throw shooting of 76.9% in the second half compared to the 33.3% of the Sho'women. Franklin and Marshall outscored the Sho'women 41-30 in the second half and eventually came out on top with a score of 66-62.

Although they lost to the F & M squad, the game provided the young guns with more experience at the college level and enabled to set up a potent offense under Lezzer's guidance. Taylor is among the leaders in the Centennial Conference with her 15.8 points per game and her 10.5 rebounds per match. Wentworth is not far behind with 15.5 points per game while adding her usual eight rebounds per contest. The bench has provided needed depth so far in this young season with freshman Kristen Snell, Tara McKee, and Anne Petracco stepping up for the Sho'women. The Sho'women's next game is against Mules of Muhlenberg (1-2) this Tuesday in the CainDome. The women are also looking to bolster their 1-3 record during the Gallaudet Tournament next weekend. So come out and see these sharp shooters in action on Tuesday! ☐

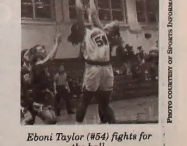

PHOTO COURTESY OF SHARON HUNSBARGER

Eboni Taylor (#54) fights for the ball.

For those who were still in town to see the Women's Basketball team play their minds out and beat St. Mary's in their home opener before Thanksgiving, two pizzas were won. A group of five women took over the crowd and cheered their way to two pizzas. They were: Heather Harper, Dani Heath, Sue Himmelheber, Monica McDowell and Becca Herrera. Congratulations!
Honorable mention, but no pizza was awarded to the duo of Tony Higgins and Chris Hargett (without his bird).
If you are interested in free food, courtesy of The Elm, look for the next contest. The winner could be you!

PHOTO COURTESY OF SPORTS INFORMATION

Eboni Taylor considers her options

Scores

Men's B-ball

John Carroll	70
W.C.	80
Muskingum	73
W.C. (OT)	80
Frostburg	85
W.C.	77
Delaware	86
W.C.	77

Women's B-ball

St. Mary's	61
W.C.	69
Franklin & Marshall	66
W.C.	62

Men's Swimming

Western MD	59
W.C.	142

Women's Swimming

Western MD	90
W.C.	115

Ice Hockey

Widener	8
W.C.	2

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Saturday, December 3

Men's B-ball @ Western MD, 3 p.m.

Swimming vs. Ursinus, 1 p.m.

Tuesday, December 6

Women's B-ball vs. Muhlenberg, 5:30 p.m.

Men's B-ball vs. Muhlenberg, 7:30 p.m.

Swimming @ Widener, 7 p.m.

Next Weekend!

Women's B-ball @ Gallaudet tournament, Friday, 6 & 8 p.m., Saturday 1 & 3 p.m.

Men's B-ball Wild Goose Classic (right here at W.C.!), Friday 6 & 8 p.m., Saturday 1 & 3 p.m.

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Thirteen

Serving the College Community Since 1930

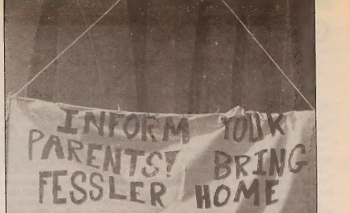

PHOTO BY TERRY GOODSTADT

The speaker in the crowd strikes again. See related article page 4.

Faculty reacts with anger to "Fessler case"

Kate Meagher

"The way Professor Fessler has been treated by this institution is shameful, disgusting, appalling, and uncivilized."

These are the words of Dr. Edward Weissman of the Department of Political Science, echoed by several members of the faculty at Monday's meeting. Fessler's situation remains a prevalent issue on campus, and her supporters among the faculty attempted to convey their message to the administration.

During the time allotted for "other business," History professor Dr. Emilie Amt asked for a report on the status of the request made at last month's meeting for a reconsideration of the Fessler case. Dean Joachim Scholz reported that the offer of a two-year terminal position in American Literature had been made to the English Department and refused. He said that the Appointments and Tenure Committee and the Academic Affairs Committee of the Board were satisfied that proper procedures had been followed and declared the case closed.

Weissman followed Scholz's comments by voicing support for Professor Audrey Fessler and dismay at the way in which her situation has been handled by the College.

"It gives me no joy to say that this is the most appalling situation I've seen in my whole life," said Weissman. "I do not understand rationally how a department can hire someone from a specific field and then decide that its needs are different in such a short time." Fessler was hired three and a half years ago as a Victorianist.

"When it is transparently obvious that a department is incapable of governing itself in a rational, coherent, and civilized manner," then the issue in question must be handled by the administration, said Weissman. He said that he is unable to comprehend what would motivate "an institution in the middle of a crisis to shoot itself in the foot, heart, and mind."

Chair of the Sociology Department, Dr. Steven Cades commented that the Faculty had "asked for reconsideration of the way [the Fessler case] has been handled." He noted that "the question has not been re-addressed."

French professor Dr. Colin Dickson asked about the person behind the position. He said there there has been much talk about the "position" and the "slot," but "no mention of the person."

It seems that her achievements have been ignored," said Dickson.

"At no point did we want to discuss this matter without the person being thought of," answered Scholz. "It is true that the English department refused to deal with a review of the person in the position." He said that they only looked at "the curricular needs and enrollment needs of the College."

Chair of the English Department Bennett Lamond answered Scholz's comments by saying that the English Department was asked to look only at the position. He said that they considered the position and the person as "two separate issues" and that the English Department had no chance to discuss Fessler as a person before they "were told the position no longer exists."

English professor Dr. Nancy Tatum wanted to emphasize that the decision to create the Twentieth-century Americanist position "that could not be filled by Audrey Fessler ... was not unanimous in any way."

"I think even if everything here was procedurally correct, I think this institution is literally kicking out one of its most prized members," said Spanish professor Dr. George Shivers. "I find this unacceptable." He said that the College "should have been down on its knees, begging her to stay."

Fessler spoke on Scholz's claim that procedures were followed. "You were able to convince [the Committee on Appointments and Tenure] that procedures were correctly followed," said Fessler. She pointed out that the renewal of her contract required a third-year review which never took place. "There's a tremendous breach of procedure there ... but of course the Board committee has only your word [Scholz's] to rely on."

Scholz answered that he had informed the Board that procedures had been followed since he took the position of Acting Dean.

Amt expressed dismay "that we can take a colleague and a teacher like [Fessler] and throw her away."

Assistant history professor Dr. Carol Wilson warned that the College's handling of Fessler's situation could lead to the voluntary departure of other members of the Junior Faculty. Weissman stated that her statement was true "not just among the Junior Faculty."

Weissman said that "one of the biggest lies about this College is that it is a family."

"If it is a family it's the most dysfunctional family I've ever seen," said Weissman. "Students should be made wards of the court."

See "Faculty" on 4

Board visits campus

Rachael Fink

With a scant two weeks left in the semester the Board of Visitors and Governors visited the campus for their regularly scheduled December meeting. After a volley of committee meetings, the full Board met to discuss various aspects of College policy and campus life.

The first order of business for this Board meeting was the installment of Dr. John Toll as acting president of the College. Following a unanimous vote by the full Board, Board member Sandy Jones suggested a "reiteration and strengthening of the bylaws" to make it clear that an acting president has "the power of the position as spelled out in the bylaws." The Board unanimously passed this resolution, after which Dr. Toll was invited to join the meeting to enthusiastic applause.

In a speech characterized as "very gracious" by more than one person in attendance, Toll addressed the Board, expressing his commitment to the College and calling for the support of the Board of Visitors and Governors.

"Acting president means acting," said Toll in a pledge to do more than keep the seat warm for a permanent successor to Dr. Charles Trout. Among Toll's goals for his brief stay at Washington College, "unifying the community" and enhancing resources are on the top of his list.

"The major problem is the problem of resources," said Toll. He continued by explaining that "a president doesn't have much authority ... and particularly an interim president." As a solution to this problem, Toll called for "the deep involvement of the Board."

Returning to the agenda, Board President Louis Goldstein expressed his appreciation to Dr. Toll and Dr. Charles Trout. Trout echoed

See "Board" on 3

Changing of the guard:
Toll presidency begins January 1

Rachael Fink

The end of the semester marks the end of Dr. Charles H. Trout's four and a half year stretch as president of Washington College. As of January 1, Trout will be on sabbatical and Washington College will have a new president, Dr. John Toll. Dr. Toll sat down with The Elm last weekend and discussed some of his feelings about and plans for his term as acting president.

Toll comes to Washington College from the University of Maryland where he has served in an administrative position off and on for over 29 years. Toll has also served as the first president of Stony Brook, in New York as well as the president of the Universities Research Association.

As acting president, Toll will have all of the privileges and obligations that the permanent president of the institution holds. He sees one of the greatest challenges that will face him as acting president is the lack of continuity that such a position implies. As he told the Board of Visitors and Governors at their annual December meeting, much of the "continuity is more presented by the faculty and the Board."

Despite this handicap, Toll believes that acting president means just that – acting.

"I will do all that I can, while I am here, to maintain the momentum," Toll told The Elm. He continued by saying that a college must continue to develop. "That is the challenge facing every college."

During his first few weeks here, Toll will "talk to people and learn the details of campus needs and concerns." Toll feels that an important aspect of his job will be listening and he encourages everyone "to come up with

See "Toll" on 3

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through ... the Bosnia situation. Paul places blame where he sees fit. 3

We Get You Fessler!
Can the ghosts of Christmas past, present, and future bring Fessler back? 6

Dropped A Whole Degree
No one cares about Drown, but Aaron Blake likes it. Go figure. 8

Amy, Emily, & Fast Eddy
Sarah reviews the Indigo Girls and a hellish Philly road trip. 9

Good show all!

Well, slap ma mama! That that faculty meetin' w'r more funner thun ma cusins' weddin'.

But seriously folks, it was a good show. I have been attending faculty meetings on a more or less regular basis for a year, and I have never seen a more heated display of emotion on the part of the Faculty. Before I get into specifics, kudos go to Ed Weissman, Steven Cades, Colin Dickson, Nancy Tatum, George Shivers, Emilie Amt, Carol Wilson and Bennett Lamond. Thanks y'all!

With that said – 'Bout time! For a while there I was convinced that the Faculty was rather like a chameleon, cold-blooded and able to change colors at the slightest provocation. I was proven wrong, and will joyously admit that.

I would particularly like to thank those who expressed displeasure at the effort to distinguish between the position and the person. The English Department has lost its seventh full-time slot, and in the process we have all lost a valuable teacher, colleague, role model and friend. One lead to the other; they are not separable issues.

If retention has been the buzz word for months now, humanity was the buzz word at Monday night's meeting. All faculty members who expressed any kind of displeasure at the outcome of the "Fessler case," used the word humanity or its equivalent. Many felt that the humanity of the institution had been compromised by the decision. According to Weissman, humanity was not the only thing to be compromised.

"One of the greatest myths about this College is that it is a family," said Weissman. "If it is a family, it's the most dysfunctional family I've ever seen." Weissman continued by urging a little bit of introspection. "We have got to seriously look at what we are, who we are, and how we behave."

There was also displeasure voiced at the manner in which the decision was reached. The multiple procedural problems that occurred throw a suspicious light over those responsible. That the third year review of Audrey's teaching abilities was never completed, that the Appointments and Tenure Committee has not yet completed its annual review of the departments, and that the Board of Visitors and Governors was assured that all procedures had been followed makes one wonder who is doing what, who is telling whom what and for what reasons. There are many questions about the procedure that have been raised several times, and by several different factions. No one has yet to give an adequate response to them.

Schutt tried. I have to give him that. He responded to repeated questions concerning the assurances given the Board that procedures had been followed by saying that he only assured the Board that procedures had been followed since his taking of office. This exonerates him from responsibility for the third-year review, which should have occurred last year, under the direction of then Dean Gene Wubbles. It does not however exonerate him from falsely assuring the Board that everything was above-board and properly executed. Regardless of his actions, procedures have been breached and the Board was not made aware of this.

The Board has handed down its edict. As far as the collective body is concerned, the issue is moot, the case closed. This should not deter us from continuing to put pressure on the administration and the Board to rectify the situation. As Debra Toll, wife to the acting president said "The slightest agitation brings results."

Which brings me to my next point – don't give up! As students of Washington College we can little afford to let this opportunity for action slip by us. Yes, we are fighting for Audrey's job, but we are also fighting for our voice. If we capitulate, we have only joined a voice, a small one, a weak one. We should not let the administration convince us that all our fighting has taken us this far but will move us no further. They say that our voice has been heard, considered and was instrumental in having the issues reconsidered. But the results are still not acceptable. Do not sit back and let the administration decide that we have reached our goal.

Many would like the students to return from home after Winter Break and pick up their books without once raising the issue of Audrey's dismissal. It may be tempting. We all get tired of a fight. It is hard to sustain a high level of energy. But we have a month to fall back and restock our resources. With the new semester comes new opportunities. We have a new acting president, a new link to the Board and possibly a new ally. Write more letters. Re-send the old ones. Let everyone know we are in this for the long haul.

Don't get dressed yet, not yet
We've been up all night moving the goal posts
-Billy Brag, "Moving the Goalposts"

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher

Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan

Arts & Entertainment Editor
Carolyn Fuss

Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Nicole Zemanski

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.

Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV

Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadline for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Photo calls are accepted at 778-8565.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

Person vs. position

I am one of the many students who have raised their voices in support of Professor Audrey Fessler. I have been an ardent admirer of hers for a over a year now and I am very disturbed by her departure. As a result of my concern over losing her, I have followed the debate surrounding the seventh position in the English department with great care. One of the controversies I found the most disturbing was repeated consistently by Charles Trout (I attended his open session meeting with the SGA in October), among others, and claimed that this issue was not about Audrey Fessler, the person, nor Audrey Fesslor the professor. That seems completely illogical and absurd to me. Naturally, I am not saying, "Hey she's a great gal, let's keep her on." I am saying that she is an extraordinary EDUCATOR, to the fullest extent that that word implies. She does not just extend knowledge to her students, inside class, but outside class as well. Her quest for learning and for opening her students' minds never ends. I am a member of the small Gender Studies Reading Group. Once every other week I (and the four other members) and Prof. Fessler meet to discuss various readings and gender issues. She devotes at least an hour and a half of her free time to this endeavor. As a result, we have all learned a great amount about different gender related controversies, especially about those concerning college campuses, and about controveries in modern feminist theory. This is actually a mini-class on contemporary feminist theory. Since it has not yet been offered as a class, Fessler helped create this reading group to fulfill an academic need. I don't understand how this cannot matter. I don't understand how a person who is an expert in an important field (gender studies in the Victorian Era) and is an amazing educator (not a teacher, not a professor) can be ignored in favor of statistics and projected need. She is fulfilling a need at Washington College RIGHT NOW. I cannot comprehend how losing her can be considered in the best interests of this institution or of the students who comprise this college.

-Erin Rowe

Just a reminder

The end of the semester cram is upon as again. Long papers and exams are in the works. This is just a reminder: do not let stress get the best of you. Times may get hard and we might be stuck in the corner with tons of work that needs to get done. Just remember there are people here to help us in our times of distress. We should talk to our professors; let them know when we might need extra help and or time for that matter. They love to help students who are willing to speak up and ask for a little assistance. Don't find yourself making compromises. In this stage of our education we can not afford to slip up on stupid mistakes like academic violations. Some academic violations are revealing answers, copying from another's exam, and plagiarizing. Plagiarizing is willfully presenting the language, ideas, or thoughts of another person as one's original work (Student Handbook p.3). It shows disrespect to the author of the work you took the material from. Remember to use A Writer's Reference, or any aids that help you document your papers.

There are also social violations that we need to be aware of when we are hanging out and having a good time on the weekend. When spirits fly, so does self-control. Be careful not to damage or vandalize other people's personal property or that of Washington College. Also take special care not to violate the well-being of your peers. Have a good time and study hard but remember, as members of the Washington College community it is our responsibility it uphold the Honor Code. If by chance you witness someone breaking the Code, you should ask the offender to report themselves within 48 hours. If they do not report the matter to the proper authorities, then you as the witness should report that person to the Honor Code Chair. All cases are kept confidential to protect all parties. It is not fair for a few to take advantage or get by while others play by the rules. Be safe, be smart and good luck the rest of the semester.

-Douglas Beckworth
Honor Board Chair

This Week on Campus
Dec. 9 - 15

Have a wonderful Winter Break!

Friday 9
Last day of classes
A Concert of Holiday Music
Norman James Theatre, 8 p.m.

Saturday 10
The Actor's Nightmare
Norman James Theatre, 8 p.m.

Sunday 11

Monday 12
Final exams begin

Tuesday 13

Wednesday 14

Thursday 15

For the last issue of the semester I would very much like to do what Rachael would call a "warm, fuzzy" column, in keeping with the spirit of the holiday season. Unfortunately, the rest of the world has other plans.

Specifically Bosnia. At the end of last semester, I did a column in which I briefly noted the passing of Richard Nixon, expressed my admiration for the people of South Africa, and observed the then-uncertain situation in Bosnia. Since then, not much has changed. Nixon is still dead, South Africa is still doing better than anybody expected, and the war in Bosnia continues with no end in sight. The place names have changed from Tuzla instead of Geradze or Srebrenica- but the situation remains much the same. The fighting is still going on, the Serbs still have the upper hand, and the rest of the world is still unable or unwilling to do anything about it.

Cease-fires continue to be proposed, continue to be occasionally agreed to, and continue to have all the permanence of sand castles in a hurricane. The platitudes are still bandied about peace and regional security continue to flow unchecked. On Monday, at a meeting of the Council on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) in Budapest, President Clinton stated, among other things, that Europe needed "a strong NATO adapting to new challenges" and "a strong effort at cooperating with the United Nations."

What about the United Nations? Their peacekeeping troops have been in Bosnia since the beginning. What have anything to show for it? In the column I did last April, I discussed the role the U.N. was playing. Permit me to quote myself-

"…one U.N. general in charge of peacekeeping' forces in Bosnia was quoted as saying that, while he supported peacekeeping, he was against peacemaking. Unfortunately for the U.N., there is no peace in Bosnia, and if there is to be any, it will have to be made before it can be kept."

Here we are now, more than seven months later, and the U.N. continues its "peacekeeping" efforts, and still there is no peace for it to keep. And yet, something has changed.

Thinking through

Bosnia: J'accuse

by Paul Briggs

Bosnian Serbs, instead of merely harassing U.N. troops, have begun taking them hostage. Currently over 300 of them are imprisoned in Serb-held territory. Here is a direct quote from an article by John Pomfret in the December 7 Washington Post:

"Over the last month, Serb forces have locked Canadian troops in jail cells, gunned British female soldiers at a checkpoint, forced U.N. military observers to lie bound and gagged on an airfield as a 'human shield' against NATO warplanes, kidnaped Ukrainian soldiers at an observation post and held hundreds of others hostage."

These are not the only outrages that have taken place, nor even the worst. Nonetheless, they illustrate not only the impotence of the United Nations, but its irresponsibility in sending troops into Bosnia with neither the authority nor the ability to protect themselves.

Another remark I made back in April was "The current U.S. policy in Bosnia could best be described as consensus brinkmanship." At the time I worried that this might be an unalled-for remark. Now I realize that that is in fact what it was. It was "war," because it has now all but collapsed. NATO is unwilling to permit the further use of air strikes against Serbheld positions. Clinton is unwilling to do so without NATO's approval, and both sides claim that they are unwilling to allow the Bosnian Serbs to take over any more territory.

The reality is that the United Nations literally doesn't know what it's doing there. Nor does NATO. Nor does Clinton, or, for that matter, the Republicans who are advocating air strikes and an end to the arms embargo.

After three years of effort, the U.N. mission to Bosnia has accomplished nothing, and its purpose is as unclear as ever. Recently the U.N. announced that it would try to put 600 peacekeepers out of Bihac. (To do this, of course, they have had to ask permission from troops in Serb-held Croatia.) This gives us reason to hope that experience has taught the U.N. what common sense should have- that it is foolish, irresponsible, and just plain wrong to send people into combat zones unprepared to fight. Now what they need to do is pull out the rest of them. Then the United Nations needs to establish under precisely what circumstances it is willing to send troops into a given area, and how much leeway it is willing to give them. This may restore some of the credibility that the U.N. has lost. You wouldn't ask a mugging victim to walk you to your car at night, and right now no one in the world can feel secure who has nothing but the blue-helmeted soldiers of the United Nations between themselves and an enemy.

As for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, I agree with Clinton that it should be strong, and "adapt to new challenges." And I say it should do that now. The problem is that it hasn't been willing to do that. There has been endless debate over the Future Role of NATO in the Post-Cold War Era, but no consensus has been reached. Time has run out. Should the organization serve merely to defend its members from attack? Then it may as well leave Bosnia to its fate. Should it act as regional policeman? Then it had better send troops into Bosnia as soon as possible- and not "peacekeepers" either. Should the CSCE, as Clinton also suggested in Budapest, "head off future Bosnias"? That only begs the question of what to do about this Bosnia now. Admittedly this is a choice of evils, but the point is that the choice has to be made now.

Meanwhile, Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole has been conducting his own foreign policy. Having taken the lead among Republicans on foreign policy (rather than leave the issue in the capable hands of Jesse Helms) he has been flying about Europe, calling for renewed air strikes and a lifting of the arms embargo against the Bosnian Muslims. He has also called NATO "irrelevant" and suggested that the U.S. be more willing to act unilaterally.

Although I fully sympathize, I must ask what the logic is behind all this. The usual argument for the measures described is that they would "level the playing field" between the Serbs and the Muslims, and help force a negotiated solution. First of all, is that really going to be our new mission? Making sure that every underdog in every armed conflict on Earth gets a helping hand? Second, I am not convinced that either side in this conflict has either the desire to negotiate in good faith or the organizational discipline to implement any agreement. Finally, if we really are going to act "unilaterally" then why bother with Bosnia at all? In all honesty, the United States does not have any vital national interests there.

I realize that we and our European allies have extremely difficult decisions to make, and that anything we do at this point will have terrible consequences. That is, however, what leaders are elected to do.

Sorry about ending the semester on such a sour note, but I had to get all this off my chest. Good luck on all your exams, Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. Ω

"Board" from 1

Goldstein's sentiments concerning Toll.

"I think with Dr. Toll's leadership the College will go on ever higher," said Trout, who continued by saying he was "grateful for having had the opportunity to serve."

Following Trout's remarks, the floor was then opened to questions concerning the administrative reports. Board members questioned why Washington College was not included in several college guide publications, to which Kevin Coveney, Vice President for Admissions and Enrollment Management, responded by saying that such publications were "very subjective collections," and that the College should target a few of those publications and work actively towards inclusion.

Board member Sandy Jones spoke for encouraging the writers of the administrative reports, many of whom spend considerable time putting together relevant material for the Board's consumption.

Following tradition, a majority of the Board committee reports were held for executive session. Among those who did report during the open meeting, the Buildings and Grounds Committee reported that they were ready to move towards the production of bid packets, despite the question over whether or not all of the money to construct the new classroom building would be available. Further discussion of the Daly Hall plans were moved to executive session.

The Development Committee reported much good news for the Board at this meeting. According to the report, annual fund giving is up 15% from this time last year and alumni giving is up 22%. Parent, 1782 Society, and Board giving is also up from this time last year, with Board giving being the smallest increase. Discussion of the Hodson Trust was held for executive session.

Dale Adams, Chair of the Student Affairs Committee, reported on three items on that committee's agenda. The suggestion to place a scrolling light board, similar to the kind found in Royal Farms advertising cigarettes, in the dining hall for advertising campus events. Adams reported that the Audio-Visual Department was in possession of a light board and plans were being taken to borrow it for a trial period. She went on to discuss TAFFY, the committee for exploring the possibilities of changing the orientation, first year and distribution structure. TAFFY is currently on a "fact finding" mission, gathering student responses and looking at peer colleges. Combining the first year experience and the distribution system "allows us to have students into subsequent years," said Adams. The third issue concerned the formation of a retention committee which has come up with 30 to 40 ideas which they will now organize, prioritize, and finally act on in an effort to increase retention.

Following the committee reports, representatives to the Board from various College populations were given the chance to address the Board. Nancy Bastian, Faculty representative, extended welcome to Dr. Toll and best wishes to Dr. Trout. Brien Kehoe, representative from the Alumni Council, discussed the annual alumni retreat. Student representative to the Board, SGA President Jamie Baker, welcomed Dr. Toll, and extended best wishes to Dr. Trout and his wife. He also discussed the plans for the Birthday Ball as well as Earth Day and Casey Day. Ω bold new ideas." In light of the budgetary problems currently facing the College, however, Toll stressed that funding will be a problem and that new resources should be explored.

"Toll" from 1

Toll commended the Board of Visitors and Governors, calling it "one of the greatest strengths" of the College. He is also committed to helping the Presidential Search Committee "in a supportive role" and praised its work to date.

Of the issues present between the Faculty, administration and students, Toll commented, "I wasn't a part of past disagreements," and expressed looking toward the future, and doing "what should be done now in the best interest of the College." He continued by saying that there is currently a good administrative team and "even when there have been disagreements, there has been cooperation."

Despite all the problems facing an acting president, Toll sees some advantages to the position.

"One of the perks is that you can make difficult decisions. … You do what is best. … You don't have to worry about the long-term."

Toll has no delusions about being able to solve any institutional problems alone. Rather, he is asking for the support of every member of the College community to assist the College through these difficult times. The Board, students, Faculty, administration and friends of the College have all done much to help develop Washington College, and Toll asks for their continued support.

"I particularly want students to help during this interim period," said Toll, who continued by praising the efforts of those students involved in the student recruitment program.

"We need new ideas and I think students are very apt to be a major source."

While stressing that a president was unable to represent only the students, the Faculty or the Board, Toll indicated that he is "very eager to listen to students."

Dr. Toll and his wife, Debra, an economist and writer, will be living in Brown Cottage as of January 1, when President Trout begins his sabbatical leave.

The Elm would like to extend a warm welcome to Dr. and Mrs. Toll, and thank Dr. Trout and his wife for their service to Washington College. Good luck on your golf game, Dr. Trout! Ω

Loyola

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

In Tuesday's Student Government Association meeting, the last of the fall semester, the focus was on tying up some remaining loose ends and preparing for the spring semester, the first meeting of which will take place January 24. Once again, as expected, the "Fessler Case" dominated the discussion.

President Jamie Baker relayed some of the subject matter of the SGA's recent meeting with Dean Joachim Scholz concerning Professor Fessler's dismissal: Dr. Scholz outlined the official position of the Dean's Office concerning the Fessler Case and, according to the President, "explained how we got in this frustrating situation". Added Baker, "that doesn't make it right."

Protest banner damages Gibson

Kate Meagher

The "speaker in the crowd" has struck again, this time on The Gibson Fine Arts Building. On Tuesday, November 15, the "speaker" attached a sign to the Casey Academic Center calling for the retention of Professor Audrey Fessler. This Tuesday, after Monday evening's heated faculty meeting, another banner was hung. This sign called for students' appeals to their parents. It read "Inform your parents! If Prof. Fessler isn't home for Christmas" and was signed "a speaker in the crowd." Tuesday's banner was more visible than the previous one, but this activity by Fessler supporters or supporters can be classified as "malicious destruction." The drain baskets were broken off the building and attached to the rope from which the banner hung in order to provide a weight to throw over the side of the building. The crime involved (damage comes to less than $300) is punishable by a $500 fine and / or a sixty-day jail sentence.

Ken Haines, Public Safety's Operations Supervisor, said that the Department of Public Safety is working under the assumption that the same person (or people) is responsible for both signs.

"The indication is that it's exactly the same person," said Haines. "He's given himself a title."

Haines noted that Public Safety is sympathetic to the feelings of the perpetrator.

"We understand people's frustration," said Haines. "... but they need to take it into the right fashion. ...What seems to be a well-intended act turns out to be a crime."

Public Safety hopes to be able to close both cases in time for the semester break. Ω

The SGA's Faculty Advisor, Dr. Kevin McKillop, updated the Senate on the occurrences at Monday's faculty meeting in the absence of Vice-President Sonja Wilson, who usually gives the report. Audrey Fessler's future at W. C. was discussed at great length at the meeting. According to Dr. McKillop, "every single faculty opinion was in favor of keeping Audrey Fessler. There was no dissenting voice, except for the voice of the administration." Unfortunately, the lone voice of dissension is the voice that makes the decisions.

Dr. McKillop also notified the Senate of some impending cutbacks in financial aid which were announced at the admissions Office on Monday's meeting. The cutbacks will affect incoming students beginning next year. The Department of Admissions is, in the words of McKillop, "trying to solicit help from students, faculty, from everybody, to contact potential students...and talk to them about the school, tell them what's good about the school, try to get them to come here, in hopes that that will counteract the reductions in aid offers."

The Senate's representative from the Student Affairs Committee, Corey Stottlemyer, updated the Senate on the Committee's rejuvenated plans to purchase an electronic sign board for placement in Hodson Hall. The proposal, which is surfacing again after failing last year for financial reasons, seems to be the first attempt so far this year to remedy the massive communication gap between the sponsors of social events and the student body. The lack of turnout for both social events and departmental club organizational meetings evidences the ineffectiveness of posters as advertisements. It is obviously going to be helpful, as the situation can not get very much worse, but the problem, once again, lies in the cost.

Another possible remedy for this communication problem lies in the semester-old cable TV issue. It is possible for one channel to be set aside as a

End-of-semester notice from Public Safety:

1. As you leave, try not to park or drive on the grass. If you are going to park in a no-parking zone, to load/unload, use four-way flashers to prevent being ticketed.
2. Students are not permitted to return to school before Monday, January 16. If you need to get into your room, you may stop by Public Safety during business hours and they will be happy to let you into your dorm.

Have a nice break and a safe and happy holiday season.

vors the use of such a firm in the search. Though there are drawbacks to using search firms, Duemling feels that their benefits outweigh the disadvantages. Because the search needs to be carried out "thoroughly, comprehensively, fairly," according to Duemling, the committee needs a search firm's assistance.

"As we embark on this process, we propose to pass the net very, very widely," said Duemling. The committee is wanting to obtain "the walk on water' variety of person. I hope to get someone who has many of those qualities, and, of course, the more, the better," said Duemling.

Regarding the qualities desired in a replacement for resigned President Trout, Dr. Sean O Connor, Chair of the Education Department, voiced his opinion. He said that the committee should not only be looking for a candidate who can "walk on water," but one who can do it "with manners and discipline and with respect."

"There is a great gap between intention and reality," said O Connor. "We need to check out the humanity of this woman or this man ... whoever comes here must be a leader who has the capacity to pull out the best ... one who does not recriminate – does not blame. Check out not just their words, but do they understand the meaning of their words?" asked Dr. O Connor. "Words are easily used. It is actions which are the measure of our soul."

Duemling replied by saying that the committee will want to see any candidate "in action."

When O Connor's feelings were seconded by another faculty member, Duemling said, "Civility is not the only operative factor. It's important to look hard at all facets." He pointed to respect and recognition gained by an applicant's current job as important in the selection.

Duemling also feels that it is time "for the faculty to think about how they've failed the institution. We've all got to pull up our socks."

The committee hopes to have a permanent president in place by July 1, when Acting President Dr. John Toll's contract expires. If such a deadline is not met, Duemling said that Dr. Toll may be prepared to stay until a replacement is found. Duemling is hopeful that a successor for President Trout will be found no later than September 1.

The usual monthly faculty meeting took place after Duemling's comments. In his last Faculty meeting as President, Trout began by thanking Dean Scholz for his assistance as Acting Dean. Trout announced that the recommendation he had made to the Board to reappoint Scholz as Acting Dean had been confirmed.

His farewell remarks were brief. He pointed out that in his administration "there were some achievements and some disappointments. Plenty for the achievements; I'm sorry for the disappointments."

Scholz followed Trout and gave a farewell speech to the president on behalf of himself and the Faculty. He expressed thanks for Trout's 'work, efforts, and achievements." He commended Trouts efforts to "diversify," and to remain in close contact with the Faculty.

"Chuck Trout agonized over the fact that he couldn't deliver" to all of the Faculty's needs, said Scholz.

"I think I can speak for the Faculty if I wish you very well in all your professional endeavors," said the Dean.

Regular business followed Scholz's speech. Scholz reported that the proposal of a Domestic Partnership benefits package, which would allow health coverage for non-spouse partners, had been referred to the Academic Affairs Committee of the Board and then sent to the Benefits Committee of the Board.

Kevin Coveney, Vice President for Admissions and Enrollment Management, requested that the Faculty's assistance in a "spring outreach program." There is going to be a reduction in the number and / or amounts of merit-based scholarships, and the Faculty is asked to join in an effort to contact those prospective students who will be affected by the reduction. In response similar to the student contacts made just before Thanksgiving, each faculty member will be asked to contact two to five prospective students with interests in the professor's area of expertise.

Biology professor Dr. David Russell reported on the Student Affairs Committee. A review of the student task force's report on Health Services has taken place and the committee concurs with the recommendations of the task force. The hiring, the acquisition of a nurse practitioner, will be accomplished when Dawn Overdhulf, presently a graduate nurse in Health Services, completes her study and is certified as a nurse practitioner. The students asked that the Wellness Committee be reinstated, and while the Student Affairs Committee endorses this request, it may be ruled by the review of the admittedly excessive number of faculty committees. The Student Affairs Committee went on to recommend that the school obtain an external review of Health Services by the American College Health Association.

Psychology professor Dr. Kevin McKillop reported on the Student-Government Association on behalf of Jamie Baker and Sonja Wilson, president and vice-president of the SGA. He spoke of the SGA's two major goals in the "Fessler case." The first is a plea to retain Professor Fessler in the English Department. The second is a request to increase dialogue between majors and departments, increase the emphasis placed on semester-end student review of courses, and increase students' input in the decisions that affect their education. McKillop stressed that "the students are not best destroying Washington College." They are motivated by "their love for the College and their desire to do something for the College." Ω

Student Publications Board

The Student Publications Board is now accepting applications for the positions of Editor-in-Chief of the Elm and Editor-in-Chief of the Pegasus. Applications are due by 5:00 p.m. on Friday, December 16. Interviews will be held on Monday, December 19. Applications may be picked up in the Student Activities Office.

c.r.u.d.

creative ranting under duress.

by Kevin Hoffman

Star Trek: Generation X

While calmly watching television in the first floor lounge of Caroline, I quite unexpectedly happened upon a commercial for the new Star Trek movie "Generations." In this short 30 seconds, I had weird fantasies, the likes of which have not been experienced by any mortal man since the death of Gene Roddenberry. So listen to me now as I take you where no man has gone before and share my vision of a better tomorrow.

Imagine yourself in the darkened theater, already half-way through a box of popcorn before the movie has even begun. You settle into your seat and try to forget the rowdy kids behind you as the credits scroll down the screen. At last the title appears, in bold Klingon-style lettering: "Star Trek, Generation X."

Captain Picard sits tall and proud, much like a bald eagle, at the helm of the U.S.S. Enterprise. They have just encountered a new space menace to deal with: the disembodied floating head of Kurt Cobain. Picard is struck dumb by the awesome sight, but quickly snaps to his senses to make a command decision.

"Jordy LaForge, put thrusters in full reverse and take us out of here immediately!" Picard says into the telecommunicator.

LaForge (played by Chuck D of Public Enemy) struts forward. "You're always barking orders at me, wanting me to jump right up and do whatever makes you happy. That's got to stop. It's time I started working to make my people better, and stopped trying to help rich white folks like you. They're political prisoners in Africa. There's political prisoners in the ghetto, slaves to the drive-by shooting! We've got to put the guns down and pick up some books! Peace out!" LaForge says, throwing his trademark visor to the ground in favor of a sporty new "Malcolm X" baseball cap.

Picard is flabbergasted but never loses his rigid coolness. He turns to Data (played by Ethan Hawke) who is lounging in an easy chair watching MTV.

"Data, attempt to establish communication with that alien grunge monster!"

"What was that?" asks Data, half-paying attention.

"Establish communication! Make it so!" yells Picard.

"I don't feel like it. I'm stuck here in this low-level entry position McJob on the Enterprise, with no room for promotion, working under some balding old Baby Boomer. Excuse me for not feeling excited about pressing a button to talk to some empty space ghost! Now leave me alone, I'm watching television, I'll do your little 'establish communication' thing later."

Just then, Wesley Crusher (Brad Pitt) stumbles aboard, nap-sack in tow. "Anyone seen my mother? I couldn't find a job so I'm going to live at home and self-publish my own 'zine on the ship photo-copy machine."

Data jumps up, "Hey, I'll help you with your 'zine if you want!"

While the two young scenesters are planning their new project, Wesley's mother, Beverly Crusher, walks in (Courtney Love). She's wearing a halter top with the words "Bikini Kill?" scrawled in red lipstick on her belly.

"Beverly Crusher! You're wanted immediately on deck seven to get a splinter out of William Riker's left index finger! What are you doing on the bridge?" Picard asks.

"You think I'm your mother? I got better things to do! I'm a Riot Grrrl, not a doctor! Find someone else to work on your rich white male index finger! I got a finger for you . . . my middle finger right in your face!" she screams.

Riker (Tom Cruise) stumbles in, holding his finger in agony. "How can I work on moving up the corporate ladder with a splinter in my finger?"

Picard has lost control and is fumbling with the joystick himself as the ship drifts helplessly towards the great big Kurt Cobain in the sky. Out of nowhere, a transporter beam clicks into action and Captain Kirk (Andy Rooney) materializes onto the deck of the Enterprise.

"What are you doing here Kirk? I thought you were dead!" says Picard.

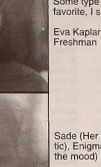
"I came back ... (shifts posture) to tell you all ... (shifts posture) how idiotic you're all behaving! What's with all the fuss about just another dead rock star? In my day ... (shifts posture) we never made a big deal about the death of a rock star ... (shifts posture) except for John Lennon and Elvis ... (shifts posture) You should all have better things to do!"

Before Picard can congratulate Kirk for putting it all in perspective, before Data and Wesley can start writing their first review for their new 'zine, before Beverly Crusher can bark an obscenity for grrrl power, before Riker can schmooze about the next young yuppie Republican meeting, before LaForge can get back to his 'hood to tell his brothers to stop the violence, before all of this can happen, the U.S.S. Enterprise and the whole crew from The Next Generation X collides with the gaping maw of timeless teen angst – the lurking head of the long dead Kurt Cobain – and with a violent explosion of old sitcoms and eighties video hits, the entire thing explodes into a huge mushroom cloud of rehash seventies fashion and pop culture sound bites!

And as you get up from your comfortable seat in the theater to once again enter the real world, all you can think about is what a wondrous adventure the whole thing was, and you find yourself again and again asking the same question: how will they ever make a sequel out of that?

Campus Voices

Question by Philip McQuade

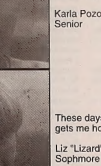


Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What do you think is the best song to make love to?

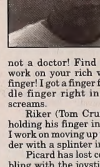
Some type of mellow favorite, I suppose.

Eva Kaplan-Leiserson, Freshman



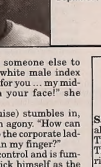
Beastie Boys, Sabatoge

Ken Pipkin, Senior



Sade (Her voice is romantic), Enigma (It puts you in the mood)

Karla Pozo, Senior



You didn't really ask me that question comma did you question mark I like "Blue Velvet."

President Trout

These days by R.E.M. It gets me hot and bothered

Liz "Lizard" Mangano, Sophmore

The 1812 Overture. Especially when the cannons boom.

Mark "The Puerto Rican Prince" Reyero, Junior Class President

HOROSCOPES

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21): You alienate yourself and everybody else. They wonder what's on your mind. They got so tired of you and your self ridicule they wrote you off and left you behind.

Capricorn (12/22-1/20): Beware the drains. Here they come. Smiling, hands outstretched. They want to test your stamina. They will see what you got, how you'll stand up to the test.

Aquarius (1/21-2/18): Believe me when I tell you, life will not break your heart, it'll crush it.

Pisces (2/19-3/20): For you life is a long trip, terrifying and wonderful. Birds sing to you at night. The rain and sun, the changing seasons are true friends.

Aries (3/21-4/19): Ted Nugent is doing an interview telling about how he got shot in the face. He points to a hole in his nose and refers to god as "Big Daddy."

Taurus (4/20-5/20): Monkey see, monkey do, monkey will destroy you.

Gemini (5/21-6/21): It hurts so much when you've got nothing to say. It hurts so much to have to walk away.

Cancer (6/22-7/22) : You go to a record store. Dennis Hopper is there. You go up to him and tell him that you're a big fan of his. He tells you to @#%$ off.

Leo (7/23-8/22): If we don't plant ourselves in the front row of the present, I predict that if any of us reach old age, we'll be sitting on the front porch thinking "Damn, shoulda burned all the temples, screamed and danced and dragged life through the coals."

Virgo (8/23-9/23): You think you're a man but you're only a stand-in, standing in line to be the next bad guy.

Libra (9/24-10/23): Too damn bad if at the end of the day the only thoughts in your head are all the things that they say. What a waste.

Scorpio (10/24-11/22): "Look at this, we have all the boys against one wall and the girls against the other. Why can't you all be like THOSE TWO OVER IN THE CORNER?!!"

Horoscopes by Rollins, selected by Who, the universal substitute.

BAY TO BAY TRADERS

207 Cross Street • Chestertown, MD •410-778 3442

Off Street Parking Next To The Store
Open Tuesday - Sunday 11:30am-5:00pm

Ray-Ban patagonia Columbia Sportswear Company REEF Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks Morris JANSPORT ORIGINAL LEE Barrecrafters Car Racks

10% DISCOUNT FOR STUDENTS
WITH STUDENT I.D.

WE GET YOU FESSLER!

Kevin and Jeff roam campus in search of professors.

Well, here it is, the final discount column of the semester. I have worked tirelessly and diligently to bring you, the students of Washington College, the discounts you want and deserve. Now, for our special final semester episode, we had planned to go to all the various establishments we had previously visited and pester them some more. Alas, that was not to be. One of the restaurants was closed down, another was closed for the day, and Gilchrest was in Washington making policies or some such thing (hopefully he's working on those tax breaks for W.C. alumni).

Then we finally got word of the whole Professor Fessler situation. You've been hearing about it in editorials, letters to the editor, and especially on the front page of this fine paper. Well, we know some of you are such dedicated fans that you only read our column and nothing else, so we thought it fitting to tackle this complicated issue.

Professor Fessler is a fine teacher and the only one of the three teachers who tried that actually succeeded in getting me to read the Canterbury Tales. I was sitting in class one day and she started talking about one story where some unsuspecting young fellow means to kiss a girl but instead gets a face full of something else! That's what I'm going to miss about her. She made English literature sexy.

We tracked down Dean Scholz to get the story.

K: Could you please explain kind of what is happening with the whole Fessler situation?

S: The Fessler case at the moment I believe has been decided by the A&T committee and the decision of A&T has been accepted by the President and forwarded to the Board of Visitors and Governors, and according to these recommendations, the Fessler position has been closed in the English department.

K: Now is that decision absolutely final? Is there anything the students could do maybe that would cause you to reconsider that decision in any way?

S: I think the student protests have already led to a reconsideration of the matter so that A&T, the English department, the President have all revisited the issue once more because of student input and because of student interest. I cannot foresee at this point that the matter would be reopened.

K: Now, you know, with all the protests going on and everything, do you think the people that made the decision in some sense feel like the Grinch who stole Christmas?

S: Certainly it is a decision that has made nobody happy, not even the people who made it. Let me assure you of this. This has been a hard decision that nobody wanted to make but it's ultimately enrollment figures, financial pressures on the College that have forced us to make this decision.

K: Now what kind of alternatives were considered before the decision was made as far as other ways to resolve the situation?

S: Well, I think the two-year position was an alternative. Looking at curricular trends, see what might happen in the future, whether English enrollments might rally, might grow. That decision, however was refused by the English department as acceptable to its own needs so I think an alternative was offered at one point but we can't force the English department to take a position that it does not want and does not think in its own best interest.

K: So, the decision seems to be final? S: As far as I can see the decision has been made. I don't see any movement to reopen the case.

K: So the only thing that could really at this point change the situation is if the guy in charge of this move got visited by the ghosts of Christmas past, present and future or something?

S: I wouldn't see it quite so negatively. I have last week spoken to senior officers of the SGA. We are all interested — having seen what miscommunications and lack of communications can do in the process — we are all interested in maximizing the process.

K: Okay, how do you feel about this whole vigilante justice thing going on around campus where we now see signs being hung up and stuff along those lines, I mean how do you respond to that?

S: I understand the frustrations of students. Students like a professor and students want to see that professor in the classroom, and I don't blame them for their protests. I personally believe that the student protest has been above-board, has been in good taste, if one could possibly accept the administration climb to the roof of the Casey building. But on the whole, the student protest I believe has been even constructive. It is not true that nobody is listening. Yes, it is true that the decision has apparently not been reversed, but we are listening to student concerns. We don't want to get ourselves into the same fix. Term appointments, like the one Audrey Fessler held are being reviewed in general. Are we handling them right? Should we have them? Should we not have them? All of these matters are on the table. But I think the personnel matter that you are most interested in, I think that has been closed.

K: Okay, that's been closed. A lot of students are talking about transferring. I like some kind of organized protest. I mean, I know Jeff over here is talking about just dropping out of College altogether and working as a pizza boy for Procolino's or something.

Jeff: Pizza Pizza.

S: I think after talking recently to SGA members I would say this was the disappointment and the frustration is there. The SGA leaders have all assured me that they would not do something that would seriously hurt the reputation or the future of the College. We take the student protest seriously. All personnel decisions, particularly at a small college, are the hardest of all the decisions you have to make, and they are never, never popular decisions.

K: All right, thanks.

That's it. The semester is over and that's the final discount column for a long time. Next semester we'll be back to our usual discount shenanigans, and they'll surely be on lighter subjects and less important issues. Still though, it won't be the same without Professor Fessler. Before class we would talk about the column and joke around. It was really encouraging to hear a member of the faculty enjoyed reading about discounts and had a good sense of humor. And I still maintain that no one can make English literature sexy the way Professor Fessler can. Ω

The W.C. Musician's Union:

More than just cardboard egg cartons

Sarah Bell

I was unsure what to expect when I walked down the dark basement stairs of Caroline and into the Musician's Union practice room. A musty smell filled my nose as I followed Luther Dudish, the head of the Union, into the small room.

Faded brown egg cartons lined the walls of the room and up above me were colorful tiles with names and symbols scrawled on them. There were two sets of drums occupying one side of the room and a piano and a keyboard at the other end. In one of the corners was a loft and underneath was a storage area for musical equipment but now, only a couple of canned goods occupied one of the shelves.

"We sound-proofed this place ourselves. The Drama department donated all of the egg cartons and the tiles on the ceiling are from the old coffee house. Under the tiles is a foot of insulation," Luther said, noticing my gaping mouth.

"And those egg cartons keep the sound out," I said.

"Yeah," he said, demonstrating by clapping his hands, "That small corridor you came into before entering the room also helps to keep the sound out."

"So, has this always been the practice room?" I asked, sitting myself down on an unstable chair.

"Well, that's a long story. Dean McIntire made a deal with us that this room could be used if we fixed it up and sound proofed it and made up an organization to run everything. When I came here four years ago, this room was kind of a practice room but it was always locked and a lot of the equipment got damaged. The next sophomore year, we weren't allowed to use it because of noise complaints so we practiced in the old dance hall in Cain. It was very informal. My junior year, Cain was off limits and we organized a massive petition drive. We had hundreds of student signatures saying that they supported the music community being able to practice on campus. We took them to Dean McIntire and she let us have this but only if we sound proofed it," Luther said, taking a long pause.

"So, the organization was set up to insure that there is a place to practice and a safe place to keep the equipment. Members of the Union come in and sign a sheet, that is on top of the piano, and practice. Either a Caroline RA or security will come and unlock the door and relock it for them. We will be holding elections at the end of the year and there are dues that will have to be paid, $25. It is so high because we have to finish paying for the foot of insulation and ..." Luther walked into the storage area, uncovering a black mass, "This ... a PA system so that everyone can hear what they are playing when they are practicing."

"Do you guys ever perform or practice together?" I asked.

"Actually, what I will have everybody who is in the Union do is fill out a form saying what instrument they play and there musical interests and so on. That way the musicians can look at the sheet and decide who they want to play with.

What we want to start doing is have the practice room open on Friday nights and people who aren't in the union can show up and play. Also, on Thursdays, starting next year, we will move the PA system into The Cove for a coffee house type thing where people can come in and listen to musicians play whatever instrument they prefer. We would also like to have, in the spring, a free jam outside of the CAC," Luther said.

"What my personal vision for The Musicians Union is to encourage unity among the musicians here at Washington College and to improve the social life on campus. I see students coming together in such things as the Fessler situation and the freshman-sophomore dance." Ω

Chestertown Natural Foods
HOLIDAY CELEBRATION
Saturday, December 10th 9am-5pm
"Quality Natural Foods, Products & Gifts At Reasonable Prices"
Come To Our Open House After The Parade
Bring Your DCA Coupons
Door Prizes • Holiday Specials
Free Product Samples
Dried Fruits And Other
Holiday Baking Needs
Monday-Friday 10-6 • Saturday 9-5
Off Street Parking Available
101 Spring Ave., (across from Post Office)
Chestertown, MD 21620 410-778-1677

The Riverside Players
Proudly Present
The Actor's Nightmare
by Christopher Durang
An experience everyone must see!
Friday, December 9,
The Cove, 8 p.m.
Saturday, December 10,
Kent Co. Library, 2 p.m.
Saturday, December 10
Norman James Theater, 8 p.m.
Admission is Free

The Department of Physical Education will offer a stress-busting yoga / relaxation session
Tuesday, December 14, 5:30 p.m., Dance Studio of the LFC
No prior experience with yoga is necessary. This will be a practical session on deep breathing, imaging, & other techniques for relieving stress.
Come join us.

The Clifton M. Miller Library:
Bigger is not necessarily better

Mindie Kaplan

One of the most important areas of any college is its library system. It is a sign of the institution, a focal point for research, a study area, and the cradle for intellectual growth. The Washington College library is continuing its mission by expanding into new and exciting areas of research methodology.

When asked how Washington College's library compared to similar institutions, it was discovered that the library is smaller and has a lower budget. The administration is aware of the situation and wants to increase the library's share of college's resources and the Miller Library's percentage of the Education and General Budget will be increased when it is possible. The newly formed Friends of the Library Group intends to aid the library by fundraising and providing volunteers to help within the library.

The Miller Library is expanding from the traditional role of a library as a provider of books and periodicals. A part of this is exemplified in the Macintosh classes taught by Jeff Chaffin several times a week. Mr. Tubbs explained that the library is now attempting to teach students, faculty, and staff about how computers and libraries come together as information-providing tools. Ruth Shoge teaches in the area of bibliographical instruction or information literacy also providing knowledge on the wide variety of information to be found through the various resources the college offers.

Future plans for the library include improving the computer system at the library. Mr. Tubbs hopes to expand the "Gateway" option which allows one to connect to the library systems of other colleges and universities as well as dealing periodical articles which may be faxed directly to the student. Tubbs also hopes to add periodical indexes to the library's resident system, enabling students to search the library's respectable collection of magazines and newspapers.

Another desire of the library is to add a service called ProQuest, an article index which includes some articles in their entirety. A student could access this article, print it, and take it home at no added cost. Using Gateway to do the same thing, a student must have a credit card which is billed around $10 for each faxed article plus ten cents a page to cover the copy of the printing cost at the library.

Still another one of the possible upcoming additions concerns obtaining export software and downloading software which would enable a student to download an article from the computer onto a computer disk, saving the cost of printing and also preventing the hassle of retyping material from a printed page. Still other additions to the library's resources include creating an automated reference collection. For example, the library could obtain the Oxford English Dictionary on CD ROM, other indexing services which would be less expensive on CD ROM than as an online service, encyclopedias, almanacs, and other dictionaries.

The Miller Library is becoming more concerned with how library space is being used. Certain areas, such as the basement, where newspapers and microfilm are being stored, are rapidly filling. One may even look forward to a future expansion of the library building, should adequate funding be obtained.

With all this shifting and refocusing on the future of libraries, Tubbs made it clear that there will be no shift away from the printed book. "Books," he said, "are not going to go away." The library ideally hopes to offer both the printed and the electronic word in the future. What the library has been doing electronically has not taken away from the book fund at all. The establishment of the Gateway system was a gift from a major donor and other grants the college obtained. Other parts of the system merely piggybacked the computing center's development of a Washington College Gopher. None of the developments which concern the Internet have used the operating budget which is given by the college.

Formerly 4,000 books a year were obtained for the Miller Library. Now, due to a lack of increase in the operating budget over the past several years and some spending freezes that number lies somewhere between 3,000 and 4,000. The library's collection also grows through gift books. There are many gift books each year, so the actual number of books that are added to the library's collection may still be up around 4,000 a year.

Students and faculty have a great deal of input into which books are added to the collection. There is a suggestion box on the main floor of the library as well as an electronic suggestion "box" built into the automated card catalog. Most of the money is divided between academic departments which then decide which books to buy. Some departments allocate money among professors, others have the department head make the final decision with suggestions from departmental members. "There are as many ways to decide as there are departments," Tubbs explained.

In the case of a new course offering, such as Professor Wagner's Native American Literature class which was offered last spring, a professor may explain the situation to Mr. Tubbs if he or she is not able to obtain books through the regular departmental share of the book budget and Tubbs will try to borrow needed books into the library to support that course. In fact, most of the new acquisitions go to supporting academic classes, although the only new academic areas which received extra money to form a "startup collection" were the recent gender studies collection and business management. Everything else comes out of the regular academic budget. Mr. Tubbs expressed a desire for more recreational reading in the library, but felt that it could not be presently justified with current budget restrictions.

Washington College does not order its books all at once; orders are placed throughout the year. This enables the college to obtain the newest, most up to date, and most pertinent books available as soon as possible.

The library uses a company called a "book jobber" to place book orders. They save the College the time and money needed to place hundreds of smaller orders with publishers. They are also fairly fast in filling the order; a book order usually takes five to six weeks. The college also places some orders direct with the publisher of the book; books ordered in this method arrive in seven to ten days. Books are cataloged and on the shelves usually within 48 hours after the book has been received.

Books for the library are surprisingly expensive. The average cost of each book not including processing fees or the cost of using a cataloguing service is $45. This is why students are charged a standard fee of $45 for a lost book if the actual replacement cost of the book is not known. A student who loses a book is also charged a $15 processing fee because of the time and resources wasted searching for the book in addition to the aggravation of students insisting "But I returned it last year..." and then showing up a week later with the book in hand. All money charged for a lost book, including the processing fee, goes right back into replacing that specific book. Mr. Tubbs explained, "If it was lost, someone was using it." If the book cannot be replaced, the money is funneled into replacing other lost books. Ω

Washington College Staff Profile

Robert Bull is the Assistant Director of Development at Washington College, a position he began in August 1993. He coordinates fundraising campaigns for the college, specifically running the annual phone-a-thon, direct mail campaigns, reunion giving, the senior campaign and the community fundraising campaign. He heard of the job at the end of march and applied because it was both related to his major and would allow him to get his Master's degree for free. He considers it the perfect job for someone fresh out of college. It enables him to work with people his own age, is in a field he majored in, and he can still do theater work on the side both in the College and the community. In addition to those points, he pointed out the benefits of being able to work towards his Master's and meet lots of people. The one thing he enjoys most about his job, however, is the opportunity to educate students about the importance of institutional advancement by way of alumni affairs. "It's the students," he pointed out, "that keep this place alive."

Bull was born and raised in Baltimore where he attended the Baltimore School for the Arts, a high school that allowed him to specialize in theater arts. He went on to attend Goucher College where he majored in theater and arts administration. Arts administration consists of fundraising and organization for non-profit arts organizations. Bull attempted to create a major combining French, theater, and pre-law. "I almost did it," he pointed out, grinning. "I completed all of the theater and more than half of the French and the pre-law." His work experience as includes a job at the Baltimore County Public Library where he supervised a staff of 50 part-time circulation assistants. He also worked with Partners in the Arts, Inc., a Maryland State Arts Council program sponsoring arts workshops for special youth populations. Bull also holds a certificate in French language and French theater from the University of Paris.

Robert Bull has performed in one show at Washington College; he played the part of Thami in the college's production of My Children, My Africa. Keeping involved in the drama scene, Bull is also on the board of directors for the Riverside Players.

Currently, he has begun working towards a master's degree in English at the college. This semester he is taking Shakespearean Tragedy with Dr. Tatum and 18th Century British Literature with Dr. Gillett. He expects to receive his M.A. in May of 1996 along with many of his friends in that class who will be receiving their B.A.s.

A strong believer in education, Bull may peruse a doctorate in the future. "I know I want to continue, but I don't know which direction to take," he explained, mentioning education and public administration as possible focuses for his doctorate. Eventually, he wants to move back into arts administration, back into the theater side of fundraising.

The senior campaign is one of the projects Bull has worked on most recently. "I'm very pleased with how the senior campaign went. Last Wednesday we had a senior dinner. Eighty seniors attended and over 40 of them pledged to the senior campaign. They are well over their goal— hats off to them! There is no end in sight to what they can accomplish."

Bull is also one of the co-advisers for the Dale Adams Heritage Exchange and goes to the gym every day at lunch. Living in Chestertown, he says that he is still adjusting. "It's a bit of a culture shock coming from Baltimore." He also had a note to add concerning students in general: "Although many students don't get past the basement level of the 'Buntagon,' I always encourage people to stop by. My door's always open."

Andy's

ANDY GORDON'S DELI 107 S. HIGH STREET
(410) 778-6767 CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620

Friday, December 9
August West
The cutting edge of contemporary rock is alive and well at Andy's
(Bonnie Rait wishes she sang like Meg.)

Saturday, December 10
The Hula Monsters
Sans Moe. Swing music and pork pie hats. Kimonowannalya!!!

Thursday, December 15
Dear John
Contemporary rock. No cover.

Friday, December 16
Jennifer Ferguson & Scott Smith of Naked Blue
Chestertown record release party for their new disc, Treasure and the Pearl. New Wave, new folk, new rock.

Saturday, December 17
Pete and Maura Kennedy
are married to music ... all new material ... Buddy Holly o.d.'s on Jimi Hendrix while cruisin' donw Highway 10 Unplugged. Acoustic. Alternative.

Droppe d Whole A Degree

Aaron Blake

In The Holiday Spirit? Drown Can Fix That.

A couple of months ago I critiqued Prong's performance at Hammerjack's. Those who read it will recall that I was extremely impressed with the opening band, Drown. I recommended picking up anything by them, but I wasn't sure if it existed. Well, it does, and here is the review for all of the people who waited with bated breath to hear about it (both of you). This is also for those who went to the Nine Inch Nails concert Tuesday.

Drown released an album earlier this year called Hold on to the Hollow, and it is epic. Drown is what Nine Inch Nails would sound like if Trent Reznor were angry instead of just angsty. Drown's lyrics are brutal and hard-hitting, where Reznor's are whiny and bizarre. Reznor used up all his hate on Pretty Hate Machine and burned up all his anger on Broken. What he is left with is self pity, which is what The Downward Spiral is all about. But I didn't come here to trash Nine Inch Nails (not primarily, anyway). I came here to tell you about Drown.

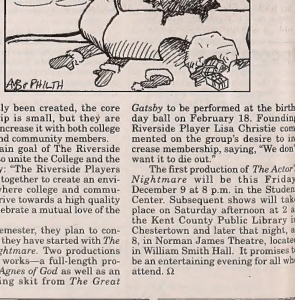
Drown is a quasi-techno band, with less emphasis on programming than most techno or industrial bands. In fact, Drown is probably the only band I've heard that has found the perfect mix of programming and guitar. This is probably due to the fact that Drown's guitarist, Joseph Bishara, also does the programming. Thus he can determine how much of each he wants without the bickering one would get if the guitarist and keyboardist were housed in separate bodies. On only one song, "Longing," does Bishara allow the programming to dominate, and it really is appropriate for the song, since it accentuates the pain heard in the lyrics. On the other tracks, however, the programming is an accent to the crushing guitar and drum attacks. It adds a lot. Without it Drown would sound more like other metal bands. With too much, it would sound like an industrial band. This is just right. It's the porridge that Goldilocks chose. The brutal sonic force of Drown's music is perfectly entwined with the vocals, adding to their strength and meaning. This is what music is supposed to do to lyrics. It exists on its own, but if you are going to add words, they should agree with the music. Not many bands remember this, but a few are showing fine examples of it.

Speaking of the lyrics, they are angry and painful in ways that haven't seen in a long time. Most of them deal with broken relationships and love gone wrong, taking on the vision in these areas that Henry Rollins had in "You Didn't Need" and "Tearing." Lauren Boquette, Drown's vocalist, is reminiscent of Rollins in his delivery, but his vocals involve more speaking and roaring than yelling, which is Rollins' domain. There are almost as many good lines on this album as on a Rollins Band album. Lines that make you go "whoah" or "ouch." Things like: "You were the one / I'm sorry but you could have been anyone," from "Reflection." Or "So I've gone too far? / Have I gone too far? / Yeah I've gone too far / So what, what is too far," from "Everything," the album-closing track that will knock you over. The power of the words, combined with Boquette's delivery and the strength of the music behind him make for a truly flattening experience.

In all, Drown has produced a staggering disc of powerful music and mind-numbing lyrics. If you are a fan of Nine Inch Nails (and aren't pissed at me for dissing them) or Rollins Band or just plain good music, check them out. And E-mail them, Joseph will write back. Ω

Renaissance dinner holiday treat

Carolyn Fuss



Traditional, seasonal carols rang through the decorated halls of the Hodson Hall building last Friday, Saturday, and Monday evening for the annual Renaissance dinner. Complete with singers, dancers, and a bit of acting, all who attended the feast were in for an entertaining evening of fun.

The dancers performed before and after the meal along with the early music consort who sang songs for which they had practiced all semester long. One senior, Harrison Gallagher, explained his thoughts on the evening commenting, "I used to be one of the performers several years ago. I have always thought that the caroling, musical performing, and dancing made for a very festive evening."

Pine needles and bows decked the halls while a dead boar's head added to the medieval atmosphere. Both the singers and the dancers wore costumes of the renaissance period, as many who came to the event had the rare opportunity to observe some W.C. males in tights and ruffles.

The event which was a success, lasted for over two hours as the feast, consisting of such foods as roast beef, potatoes mixed with vegetables, and wassail were served.

Nearing the end of the evening, the partners danced and the chorus processed out of the building singing with lit candles in hand. High spirits were left lingering in the air as the echoes from the last voices of the consort settled within the walls. Ω

Dream the night away

The Riverside Players provide classic bad dream material

Carolyn Fuss

The Actor's Nightmare, the first production ever by The Riverside Players, will take place this coming weekend. This short play, approximately thirty minutes in length, will be performed at Washington College for the first time this Friday night. It is directed by Kelli Youngblood and features actors from both the College and the surrounding community.

The group started out as a theater management class, but its members decided to get some real-world training by putting their studies into practice. Members of this newly-founded organization include directors Kelli Youngblood and Lisa Christie (who also handles the group's publicity), financial managers Steve Fuchs and Caren Lee, and Richard McKee and Cary Kelly, who arrange places to stage the productions and take care of set design. Because the organization has recently been created, the core membership is small, but they are looking to increase it with both college students and community members.

The main goal of The Riverside Players is to unite the College and the community: "The Riverside Players have come together to create an environment where college and community can strive towards a high quality of art to celebrate a mutual love of the theatre."

Next semester, they plan to continue what they have started with The Actor's Nightmare. Two productions are in the works—a full-length production of Agnes of God as well as an entertaining skit from The Great Gatsby to be performed at the birthday ball on February 18. Founding Riverside Player Lisa Christie commented on the group's desire to increase membership, saying, "We don't want it to die out."

The first production of The Actor's Nightmare will be this Friday, December 9 at 8 p.m. in the Student Center. Subsequent shows will take place on Saturday afternoon at 2 at the Kent County Public Library in Chestertown and later that night, at 8, in Norman James Theatre, located in William Smith Hall. It promises to be an entertaining evening for all who attend. Ω

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

BLUE HERON
ANTIQUES
AND COLLECTABLES
Unique, affordable gifts for a special Christmas
10% discount
Nancy W. Libourel
314A Park Row
Chestertown, MD 21620
410-778-3418

Kent County Arts Council & the Emmanuel Church Concert Series present
The Handel Choir of Baltimore singing
"The Messiah"
Saturday, 17 December, Tawes Theatre, Gibson Performing Arts Center, 4 p.m., Tickets $15 adults, $10 students

Fast Eddy's meets the Indigo Girls

Sarah Bell

Rule #1. When lost in the slums of Philadelphia, never ask for directions at a place called Fast Eddy's.

Last Saturday, at around 2 p.m., Tara, Carolyn, Allison and myself hopped into my '84 Honda Civic and headed for The Spectrum in Philly to see The Indigo Girls.

Since the concert didn't start until eight, and it only takes an hour-and-a-half to get there, we figured on doing some shopping on South Street. An hour and a half, huh? Well ... I guess it only took us an hour-and-a-half to get it took out the half an hour we spent looking for the exit for South Street and another half an hour looking for Penn's Landing ... and, oh yeah, another half an hour wandering (well, we weren't really wandering ... it's hard to wander in a car) the ghettos of downtown Philadelphia until we came to Fast Eddy's (which brings us to rule #1) who told us, after laughing at us, that The Spectrum was over 70 blocks away, so another half an hour was wasted driving those 70 blocks until we finally reached our destination.

So ... hmmm ... that would only be about 2 hours then added to the original hour-and-a-half ... three-and-a-half hours. It took us three-and-a-half hours to get to The Spectrum ... stop laughing, it was a traumatic experience.

Rule #2. Make sure you never try to be slick and hide your camera in your coat pocket.

We finally made it, and in one small step we would have been through the opened doors except security was blocking our paths like hair in a drain.

I had hidden my camera in my coat pocket (which brings us to rule #2) and Mrs. Security lady needed to feel my pockets. She asked if my camera was a pack of cigarettes and after a couple of uh's and um's and a swift smack in the stomach by my dear friend Tara, I answered yes and was on my way.

Rule #3. Always go to a concert with friends.

Amy Ray and Emily Saliers are the two most powerful and extraordinary singers. They captivated the audience with their passionate words. Stripping themselves of their skin-colored clothes, standing naked before us, we saw and felt the fire of their souls.

"Touch Me Fall" had to have been one their most beautiful songs that they sang that night. The cello sang magically in the background, accompanying their harmonic voices. They wove a blanket around us with their music, keeping us warm and happy.

They performed "Galileo" and "Least Complicated", and even though we had heard them 100 times before and knew the words by heart, their impact was just the same. The spotlights swept the crowd, as the audience sang and millions of raised hands with banners could be seen. The atmosphere in the theater was comforting; you were among friends.

We left The Spectrum singing "Closer to Fine," a small reminder of an incredible experience, slipping through our thoughts like sand in a sieve.

We didn't want the evening to end (it probably could have gone on forever if we had to find our way through Philly again). But it was late and we were tired.

Driving home, I listened to "Love's Recovery" and the verse " not counting the unmarked paths of misdirection, my compass, faith in love's perfection, I missed ten million miles of road I should of seen ..." jumped out at me and I thought with a smile, "Guess they had the same experience in Philly that we did." Ω

And the band played on

Carolyn Fuss

Washington College dancing fools filled the Cove the night of December 2 as the band, The Frogs, played on. The Freshman-Sophomore semi-formal was the event, and some W.C. students made it one they will never forget.

Although many students enjoyed the dance, some had mixed feelings concerning the band's performance. Sophomore Mari Endo commented on the band's talent saying, "They were pretty good. I liked them."

Others were not in agreement. Sophomore Marshall Norton believed that the band was "not suitable for a dance, but more for a concert. They were good, but not as good as they were the first time they came here."

The Freshman and Sophomore classes sponsored the event, decorating the tables with fruit and punch which satisfied the students as sweat poured from their brows upon leaving the dance floor. There was a wide variety of dress to be seen, ranging from the very formal, long gowns worn by some women to males who donned baseball caps. Some students made the five dollar-per-couple tickets well worth the money as they danced the night away; a few even stayed until the band packed up at two o'clock in the morning. One W.C. student who attended the dance even went as far as to say, "It was better than Cats. The Frogs rock my world. They are the reason I exist."

Whatever the thoughts on the band, some people were determined to have a night of fun last Friday. Sophomore Robyn Mitchell expressed her thoughts on the night saying, "I was really impressed. It was well organized, and the turnout was pretty good. The band was great, so I had an amazing time." Ω

Popcorn and Jujubes

A review of Interview with a Vampire
by Dave Labowitz

Wow, my second movie review ... I hoped that after the first one, they would not ask me to do another one ... Oh well. Anyway, this week I am reviewing Interview With the Vampire starring Brad Pitt, Tom Cruise, and Christian Slater. I have seen this movie twice already, and would not be opposed to going and seeing it again. I think it is one of the best movies I have ever seen. Of course, I have a slightly prejudiced viewpoint because I am a huge fan of Anne Rice's novels. (Except those graphic ones about Sleeping Beauty's sex life that are only fun to read with a member of the opposite sex present.)

First of all, it is definitely different from the book. The ending is the most blatant difference, but is rather exciting, especially if you have read the book and are not expecting it. The funny thing about this movie is the mixed reviews I have heard. Half the people I have talked to love it, the other half tend to not like it at all. It didn't even get good reviews in the paper. The arguments I normally hear against it are along the lines of "It is not sophisticated enough. ... " Given, it is not all that sophisticated, but I fail to see why that is such a major flaw. It is a fun, thought-provoking movie, the same as it was a fun, thought-provoking book. It is impossible to go into as much depth in a movie as in a book for the simple reason that it is a lot easier to describe a beautiful French settlement in words than it is to create it on a movie set.

The acting was just plain stellar. Without Brad Pitt and Tom Cruise, this movie would have fallen flat on its face. They both did outstanding jobs of portraying different vampire personalities. Contrary to popular opinion, Tom Cruise did work out well in a "bad guy" role. He came across as Lestat should – evil, beautiful, and totally remorseless. Brad Pitt was a good Louis as well, showing just the right amount of pain and guilt that his character had in the book.

There is one point on which I have to criticize the movie. The love that was shown between vampires was poorly illustrated. I heard many comments from people coming out of the theater asking if Louis and Armand were gay. No, they were not. Love between vampires disregards gender completely. They love each other as companions in eternity, not as sexual partners. This was a little bit more clear in the book, but rather confusing in the movie.

Great. My favorite part about writing – the conclusion. They told me I had to write one but I have already said about everything I have to say about this movie! Go see it.

Upcoming Events•Upcoming Events

Now through December 18:
Two Trains Running • Center Stage, call (410) 332-0033

December 13:
Public Enemy • 9:30 Club, call (202) 393-0930
The Cranberries • The Patriot Center, call (410) 481-SEAT

December 14:
Everclear, Trusty, and Nine Pound Hammer • 9:30 Club, call (202) 393-0930

December 15:
Biohazard, Stompbox, and Unsane • 9:30 Club, call (202) 393-0930
NRBQ • Bouhager's, call (410) 563-7220

December 16-22:
Nutcracker featuring the Donetsk Ballet • Lyric Opera House, call (410) 481-SEAT

December 16:
The WHFS Holiday Concert • Patriot Center, call (410) 481-SEAT
The Soup Dragons and the 360's • UMBC University Center, call (410) 455-3618 for information or (410) 481-SEAT for tickets

December 17:
Biohazard • Hammerjacks, call (410) 659-ROCK

December 19:
George Winston • Lisner Auditorium, George Washington University, call (410) 481-SEAT

December 30:
The Dave Matthews Band • American University Bender Arena, call (410) 481-SEAT
The Reggae of Urban Blight • The Eight by Ten Club, call (410) 625-2000

Through December 31:
The Pictographs of Adolph Gottlieb • The Phillips Collection: Artful Evenings, call (410) 481-SEAT

Through January 15:
Gaugin and the School of Pont-Aven • Walter's Art Gallery, call (410) 481-SEAT for advance passes

Upcoming Events•Upcoming Events

Spider's
(Formerly Newt's)
Hillside Bar
Special Draft Night
Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Midnight Madness
Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Must be 21 or older

Club Sports in the News

Sho'men, outnumbered as usual, outplay Loyola and win one on the road

Dave Kraft

As the story goes, David slew Goliath with a swing of the stick. Well, maybe it was supposed to be a sling-shot, but the Washington College Ice Hockey Club got its first win of the season on Monday night as the puck hit the Loyola Greyhounds right between the eyes. For a change, the Sho'men were outnumbered as they had only six skaters and a goalie. Yet solid position hockey proved to be all they needed to effectively shut down the Greyhounds.

Star of the game honors had to be shared by emergency call-up, freshman goalie Andy Lopatin, who literally stood on his head to make saves and was described by Scott Dervaes as,"Looking like a Nintendo goalie," and his high school teammate, freshman Rodney Roman. Roman scored three goals and skated so fast that it seemed like no one could catch him - except for that cop on the way home. Sorry, Rodney.

Roman scored the first goal of the game on an assist by Chris Daily. Loyola tried to come out fast but Lopatin, along with the sturdy defense of Dave Kraft and John Moreland, kept the twenty-man Greyhound squad to one goal in the first period. The Sho'men were feeling good, but wondered how long they could keep it up.

Roman scored unassisted, just seven seconds into the second period, really making the Loyola team look foolish. He won the face-off forward and skated right between the two defensemen and faked the goalie out to score. Soon after, Roman completed his hat trick by scoring off a Dave Kraft pass. Loyola scored to make it 3-2, but the Sho'men continued to forecheck and put pressure on their defense. Freshman forward Todd Barto was mucking it up deep in Loyola's zone. After a scoring chance, the Loyola defensemen tried to clear the zone, but Dave Kraft rushed up, kept the puck in, and passed to Scott Dervaes in the center. Dervaes sent a beautiful saucer shot into the lower corner for what proved to be the game-winner. The Sho'men led 4-2 after two periods and could taste victory.

Loyola came out with a powerful offensive attack in the third, but the Sho'men commitment to stay-at-home defense was evident. Kraft and Moreland had no choice but to play good defense; partly because they were the only defensemen that made the trip, but mostly because they didn't want to be known as "the guys who lost the lead and the game." Still, even when they weren't there, Lopatin came up big with a series of acrobatic glove saves. Loyola scored a power-play goal with three minutes left to make it 4-3, but that was all for them. Roman won key face-offs at the end of the game and Daily and Kraft cleared the zone successfully.

The Sho'men are done for the semester, but come back with eight games next semester, including four at Easton: January 30 vs. Salisbury State, January 31 vs. Catholic, February 7 vs. those same Loyola Greyhounds, and February 14 vs. Dickinson. If we could get that road win, we can get you faithful fans one at home next semester. Thanks to the Moreland family, the Roman family, and the Davenes faithful for coming and being the proverbial "sixth man." And who cares if the NHL doesn't start this year? Ω

Goalie Ben Feld makes a save.

Photo by Rachel

Men's swim team sweeps over Ursinus and Widener

Dave Kraft

The Washington College Men's Swim team extended their record to 5-0 with easy victories over Ursinus on Saturday and Widener on Tuesday.

In the Ursinus meet, the team swam extremely well, registering 20 season-best times in individual events, plus many more in relay splits. Dave Cola, Joe Ward, and Jason Campbell were the big winners, each swimming to three first places.

The meet was full of highlights from start to finish. Eric Hetzer dropped 20 seconds in the 1000 Free to win in 10:51.09. Dave Potter and Tim Parent took 1-2 in the 50 Free. Ward won the 200 IM in 2:09.81, and the Sho'men had a 78-11 lead at the break.

After the break, Cola won the 100 Fly, with Scott Steinmuller and Ryu Kawai in second and third. Campbell and Perry Holland took 1-2 in the 100 Free. both with season bests. Including leadoff relay splits, six Sho'men qualified for Championships in the 100 Back: Tyler McCarthy (58.9), Rob Cronin (59.2), and Dave Czekaj (1:01.4) in the relay, and Ward (58.1), Dave Kraft (59.5), and Parent (1:00.9) in the individual event. Drew Fritch and Potter dropped their times to take 1-2 in the 500 free, and Campbell, Juhen Gaudion, and Kraft took 1-2-3 in the 100 Breast.

On Tuesday, the Sho'men defeated Widener, the defending Middle Atlantic Conference champions, by an astounding score of 168-35. They took 1-2-3 in seven of the nine individual events, and 1-2 in both relays.

Cola won the 1000 Free in a Conference-best 10:29.9. Dan Woodall and Czekaj completed the sweep. Hetzer, Potter, and Parent then swept the 200 Free. Campbell, Holland and Gaudion went 1-2-4 in the 50 Free. To end the half, Fritch, Cronin, Chris Freisheim, and Kraft placed 1-2-3-4 in the 200 IM.

Cola opened the second half with an impressive 2:08.28 in the 200 Fly. Steinmuller and Kawai followed in third and fourth. From then on, the Sho'men swept every event. All three 100 Freestylers had impressive swims: Parent (50.47), Potter (50.70), and Hetzer (52.37). Cronin, Fritch, and Czekaj swept the 200 Back, and Woodall, Freisheim, and Kraft swept the 500 Free. Gaudion swam an impressive 2:25.37 in the 200 Breast, and Hetzer took second.

Co-captain Dave Cola was impressed with the team's performances, "Even though there was minimal competition, there were great times. That's what it's about because February (Centennial Championships) is on top of our agenda." The Sho'men's road to February will take them to Elizabethtown this Saturday for their last meet of the semester. Ω

POW

Women's swimming is topping themselves every week and this week two women in particular have caught everyone's attention as they broke records and led their team to a victory over Conference Rival Ursinus. Meredith Bathgate and Danielle Sullivan broke three school records, turning many heads. The meet was won for the women in the relay in which these two participated.

Meredith hails from Abington, Pennsylvania, where she attended high school and swam all four years. She is undecided in her studies here at W.C., but is leaning towards environmental science. She broke a school record in 100 back, tied the school record in the 50 free and together with Casey Bane, Jenn Voss, and co-POW Danielle broke the school record in the 400 free relay. Most recently, she won placed second in 200 back and 50 free, and a first in the 400 relay against Widener.

Danielle swam out of her mind, breaking two school records: one in the 100 free and the other in the 200 free. Sullivan's hometown is Long Island, New York, where she attended and swam for Sayeille High School. Sullivan is considering a major in psychology. She earned two firsts in 200 free and 200 free relay as well as a second in the 100 free in the victory over Widener.

Congratulations to both women as well as the entire women's swim team which is undefeated.

We cannot ignore the Men's swim team. They are undefeated as well and continue to blow away the opponents. Dave Cola, Peter Ward, and Jason Campbell were key in Saturday's win. They all had three firsts and were a big part of the 123-61 victory over Ursinus.

In other sports: Women's Basketball made news with their win over Muhlenberg. Allison Wentworth and Karen Sieger earned honorable mention. Wentworth had the game of her life with 20 points, nine rebounds, three steals and one block – while doing Chemistry and Comparative Anatomy. Sieger played solidly and was marking Muhlenberg's strongest player all night. In Men's Basketball, of course, Adam Poe earns the shot of the week. Ben Harris was honored by the Conference this week and earned the Conference Player of the Week. Jerry Davis tops the Conference in rebounding, with 12 and blocked shots with five.

Intramural B-ball comes to an end

Brian Tipton

Intramural basketball ended Wednesday with the championships in Division 1 and Division 2. Theta Chi played Phi Delta Theta in the division 2 title game.

At the half the Phi Delt's led the game with a 20-15 lead. Andy Taubel led the Phi Delt's with his three-point shooting, but Chad Campbell and Sean Tyszko kept the Theta's in the game. In the second half, the Theta's took control of the game as Sean and Brad Crate further increased the lead. Although he had an unusually slow start, All-star Toby sunk a three pointer to secure the win. The final score was 49-43 leaving Theta Chi as the number one D2 team.

The D1 championship was much more exciting in terms of the score changing constantly. The score was relatively close in the first half with a score of 32-29 the Crew over the Buffaloes. The second half was a different game with the other players waking up. Sonel, Beckworth and Spoon all made their contributions to hold on to a ten point lead at one point. The Buffaloes struggled for a while, but Dave George nailed a couple of threes and was perfect from the foul line. Scott Hein maintained his consistent shooting with a game total of 26, while his older brother Chip came alive in over 11 ridiculous points before fouling out on a touchy call. Dana Rechen and George somehow managed to shut down the unmatched height of the Crew on defense. At the end of regulation the score was tied, sending them into a five-minute overtime. Both teams shot well until the end when the Buffaloes pulled ahead. The final score was 75-70.

The Crew	Total Points
J-Rock	17
Beckworth	11
Burton	2
Spoon	10
Sonel	19
Czarniak	11
The Buffaloes
Hein	26
C. Helm	13
George	12
Rechen	8
Carver	1
Miller	8
Kim	4

Men's Basketball takes it all

Peggy Busker

Adam Poe's winning three-point basket at the buzzer will not be forgotten anytime soon. But before that game, the Sho'men took on their first Conference rival, the Green Terrors of Western Maryland.

The starting five were Ben Harris, Jerry Davis, Ken Lapp, Adam Poe and Derek Cuff, recovered from his sprained ankle.

Washington came out fighting hard and took the early lead. Both teams shot well. Washington shot 55% from the field and 61.5% from the free throw line. Washington had a ten-point lead at the half, 45-35. This was a very fast and high scoring game.

The Sho'men continued to shoot the Terrors again, but the scoring was tied at 55 in the second half. The Sho'men were playing tough inside on offense and defense. Ken Lapp had 12 points and five rebounds.

Washington went on to win the game 100-90. The top news from the game was the level of play by the Sho'men as a team and individually. The team hit 60% from the bonus. Ben Harris got the attention of the Conference by making 35 points, a season high. Mark Awantang and Jerry Davis showed their athleticism with five blocks each. Awantang had six big rebounds and Davis had 12, for the second time this season. Davis was all over the game with a season high of four steals.

"The interior defense was excellent," said Coach Pimnegan.

Juan Poe, Derek Cuff and Ken Lapp were all in double digits for scoring. Freshman Gregory Metrinko got on the scoreboard and had one steal. Freshman Bradd Burkhart found the set and played very well with freshman teammate James Carpenter.

The team came out hard and played a solid game and came home with their first Conference win of the season. They took this enthusiasm to Tuesday's Conference game against Muhlenberg.

Muhlenberg was picked to be number one in the Eastern Conference this season and Washington second.

Ben Harris (Conference Player of the Week), Adam Poe, Ken Lapp, Derek Cuff and Jerry Davis started the game.

Davis won the tip off against 6'5" Chris Bedell. Cuff got the ball under the Sho'men basket twice and got fouled. Cuff made both of his foul shots giving the Sho'men the first basket.

Washington started playing aggressively with strong movement inside by Cuff and Davis. Ken Lapp made his presence known with an early steal.

Muhlenberg came back, however, in full force.

Several minutes into the game, the Mules were up 12-5. Off the bench, Edmund Hicks, Mark Awantang and freshman Gregory Metrinko played solidly to try to give Washington the edge they needed. Harris, Davis and Lapp all struggled and came up with the steal several times to control Muhlenberg's scoring.

Washington's shots were not going in. The shot choice was good and the team was playing smart, but the score remained low.

Harris ended the Washington drought with a sit-down three-pointer. Muhlenberg came back with two break away lay ups in a row, to make the score 18-8.

After a Washington timeout, the Sho'men began to catch up. Awantang and Hicks made consecutive baskets. Cuff got the ball from Harris and went underneath and around the basket for the layup. W.C. was down by six.

The Mules scored several more times, to make the score 29-23. Harris pulled up for a three-point jumper and got all net. The score was 29-26 at the half with W.C. down by three.

The Sho'men came out strong in the second half. Harris found the line and found the basket, followed by two strong blocks on the other end of the court by Lapp and Davis. Davis then got fouled and made one point on the free-throw line to put the Sho'men up by one. Cuff followed with a nice jumper to increase the lead. Then Harris made another three-pointer to put the Sho'men up by four.

Muhlenberg would not give up. They remained within two of Washington. They managed to take the lead again as Washington's defense had a few breakdowns and the Mules had some nice shots.

Harris made another jumper and off the bench, freshman Bradd Burkhart worked the baseline and got two for the Sho'men, tying the score at 42.

Muhlenberg made another three-pointer to put them ahead once again. Washington really needed to step up and take control. Harris had a lay up and followed with another three-pointer to get the crowd on its feet as Washington took the lead. Hicks drew an offensive foul to get the ball back. Then Cuff attempted a lay up which Hicks finished. At this point Muhlenberg called a time out. Washington was ahead 51-47 and the game was in its final minutes.

Washington continued to play tough. Muhlenberg broke through and scored, but Washington recovered. Hicks received the pass and dribbled in the key to score two, making the score 53-49 with 5:50 left in the game. Both teams were hungry.

With the score at 55-51, Davis came up with a huge crowd-pleaser as he stuffed one of the big Mules, denying him the basket. Rebounds were critical at this point and Washington's towers of Awantang and Davis were getting many rebounds. Awantang would have six for the entire game and Davis would have 10.

Washington's lead was cut to two with under four minutes. W.C. played a strong offensive game, with controlled passing and good shots. Muhlenberg caught up and, when they got on the foul line, took the lead by one, 59-58. Seconds later, Harris was fouled on a shot and made both fouls shots to put Washington back in the lead.

Muhlenberg scored again with 45 seconds left to get the lead. Davis was then fouled, and made his second foul shot to tie the game.

Neither team could score and the game was tied at 58 as the buzzer sounded, resulting in one five-minute overtime period.

Awantang wins the tip off in the overtime period, tipping the ball to Cuff. Washington did not score on their first trip down the court. The first points were scored by Muhlenberg on the foul line, despite the yelling crowd.

Hicks attempted a jumper from the top of the key and Poe got the rebound and made his first three-pointer to put the Sho'men ahead. On the other end of the court, Hicks would also get a key rebound. With 34.6 seconds left in the game the score was tied at 62. Cuff was fouled and made one of his free-throws to put Washington ahead. Cuff followed with a huge rebound for Washington possession.

Seconds later, with under five seconds remaining, Muhlenberg scored two from the foul line. Washington was down by one and the crown had their fingers crossed.

A timeout was called and Washington had the ball with 1.4 seconds left. The ball was inbounded to Poe who turned, squared up, jumped, and shot, all in one motion, to make the three-pointer which won the game, 66-64.

The bench then piled on Poe along with the crowd, as Washington pulled a Conference upset.

Coach Pimnegan was pleased with the win but felt, "We were fortunate. They had many opportunities in overtime to win." Muhlenberg missed six foul shots in the overtime period, much to the crowd's liking.

Washington's shooting percentage was not very high: 35% from the field and 57% from the foul line. Ben Harris had 22 points for a season total of 139. Edmund Hicks had a good game with seven rebounds and 11 points. Cuff also made it into double digits with 12 points.

This weekend the Sho'men take on Cabrini College at 8 p.m. on Friday in the annual Wild Goose Classic. If you want to see good basketball do not miss this. Also at 6 p.m., Wilmington College takes on top ten Division III team Rowan College from New Jersey. The losers of these games will play at 1 p.m. on Saturday and the winners at 3 p.m., so come out and support Washington Basketball. Ω

Women's Basketball captures first Centennial Conference win

Nicole Zemanski

The women's basketball team captured their first Centennial Conference win this season by beating the Mules of Muhlenberg 62-50. The win was the first of two during the double-header action this past Tuesday in the CainDome because the men's team also captured another victory. Coming off of a tough loss against Franklin and Marshall, the Sho'women were ready to come out and show the Centennial Conference that they are made of.

The Sho'women came out flat the first half and were out-hustled by Muhlenberg.

"We were simply out-hustled and out-played in the first half," commented Coach Lanee Cole. The team was not playing up to their potential and by the end of the first half they saw themselves down by nine points.

The second half was a different story. The team came back with vengeance by powering through the opponent's defense and defending whatever came in them. The Sho'women came out strong and made the Mules pay for every mistake by capitalizing on Muhlenberg's misses.

The women came back from a nine point deficit to dominate the second half, outscoring Muhlenberg 43-22. Sophomore co-captain Allison Wentworth played the full nine minutes for the Sho'women and her hard work paid off. She ended the game with twenty points, nine rebounds, three steals, one block, and was four for six from the line. Another stellar performance came from freshman Karen Sieger who provided the team with excellent defense. Sieger is a defensive standout for the Sho'women and is constantly matched up against the opponents' top players. Sieger again came through on the defensive end and also added seven points, three steals, two assists, and eight rebounds. Coach Cole noted, "Sieger had her best game of the year." Sieger has definitely been one of many bright spots for this year's young but talented squad.

Sophomore co-captain Lee Ann Lezzer, the Sho'women's play maker, came away with three assists, three steals, and nine rebounds. The sophomore co-captain Eboni Taylor had another strong outing as she tallied twelve rebounds and thirteen points. Freshman Megan Miller proved that she can play in the Centennial Conference by adding six points, six rebounds, and three assists. Freshman Kristen Snell came off the bench for an impressive eight points and five rebounds.

After outscoring Muhlenberg by twenty-one points in the second half, the Sho'women came through under pressure and crushed the Mules.

The key to the victory was the team's free throws. The Sho'women shot 61.1% on eleven for eighteen shooting during the half. The women overwhelmed Muhlenberg in this category as the Mules only shot 45.5% on ten for twenty-two shooting.

Coach Cole said, "This win was a great win because everyone played well and it was a total team effort". Coach Cole was extremely happy with her team's play and considered this win extremely important due to the fact that Muhlenberg is in the Sho'women's Conference. She stated, "We are just playing one game at a time while striving to play to our potential." When the pressure was on the team, the young squad came out with key play after play.

Wentworth and Taylor lead the team in points per game, 16.4 and 15.2, respectively. Taylor also leads the team in rebounds with 10.8 per contest. Lezzer is taking charge at the point and adding a .765 free throw percentage on thirteen for seventeen shooting. Many of the players had to make adjustments in positions this year such as Lezzer. She was placed at the point guard position when Kelly Rodgers transferred to Towson State University to continue her education. Other players such as Sieger and Snell also are continuing to work at their "new comfort zones". The players are doing an excellent job of transferring to new settings due to their versatility.

The women are now 2-5 in Conference play and are looking for a few more wins this weekend when they play at the Gallaudet Tournament. The Sho'women's first opponent this weekend is a strong Frostburg State University. The women will then come back to play five games while we are all relaxing at home during winter break. Their first game of the break will be January 5 against Lebanon Valley.

Come out and support a winning team! Ω

Photo by Gordon Atterbury

Kristen Snell gets serious hang time on her textbook jump.

Scores: ! Ice Hockey: W.C. 4, Loyola 3 !

Men's B-ball	Women's B-ball	Men's Swimming	Women's Swimming
W.C. 100 Western MD 90	W.C. 62 Muhlenberg 50	W.C. 123 (Modified) Ursinus 61	W.C. 107 Ursinus 98
W.C. 66 Muhlenberg 64 (OT)		W.C. 168 Widener 35	W.C. 120 Widener 83

Three dumbstruck seniors (Chris Freisheim, Dave Cola, and Dave Czekaj) watch the women win.

Photo by Tricia McGirr

If you missed the first contest, here is your chance to win.

Come to the women's swim meet at 6 p.m. on Friday January 20, 1995 as they take on Bryn Mawr. Bring three friends; if your group of four is the loudest and most positive towards our team and stay the entire meet, you win two free large pizzas. Come on out and cheer the women on to victory.

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Friday, December 9

Men's B-ball
Wild Goose Classic, 6 & 8 p.m.
W.C. vs. Cabrini College, 8 p.m.

Women's B-ball
Gallaudet tournament, 6 & 8 p.m.

Come out and support W.C. sports. It's the weekend before exams – What else are you going to do?

Saturday, December 10

Men's B-ball
Wild Goose Classic, 1 & 3 p.m.

Women's B-ball
Gallaudet tournament, 1 & 3 p.m.

Swimming at Elizabethtown, 1 p.m.

Friday, December 16

Men's B-ball at UMBC, 7 p.m.

Sports Schedule for Winter Break

Men's B-ball	Jan. 6 & 7 @ Moravian Tournament, 6 & 8 p.m. Jan. 10 vs. Gallaudet, 7:30 p.m. Jan. 14 vs. Dickinson, 7:30 p.m. Jan 17 vs. Ursinus, 7:30 p.m.
Women's B-ball	Jan. 5 @ Lebanon Valley, 7 p.m. Jan. 9 vs. Gallaudet, 7 p.m. Jan. 12 @ Wesley, 7 p.m. Jan. 14 @ Dickinson, 2 p.m. Jan. 17 @ Ursinus, 7:30 p.m.
Women's & Men's B-ball	Jan. 19 Double-Header @ Johns Hopkins, 6 & 8 p.m. respectively
Swimming	Jan. 20 Women vs. Bryn Mawr

The Washington College

Elm

Volume 66, Number Fourteen

Serving the College Community Since 1930

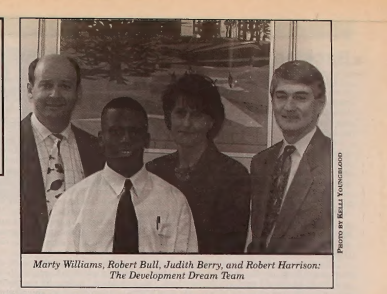

Photo by Kelly Kaufmann

Marty Williams, Robert Bull, Judith Berry, and Robert Harrison: The Development Dream Team

Annual fund reaches record-setting high

William Denton, III

For what seems like the first time in quite a while, there is great news in Washington College's financial picture. The Washington College Annual Fund has recently been gathering donations at a record-setting pace. Interim College President Dr. John Toll has increased the annual Fund's goal for fiscal year 1994-95 (July 1, 1994 through June 30, 1995) to an unprecedented $2 million, and has vowed to lead the charge. With over $1.3 million already, and five months until the end of the period, the goal appears quite realistic.

A recent $100,000 gift for scholarships from a single board member, Alonzo G. Decker, Jr., has helped move the fund toward achieving Toll's goal. With Decker's gift, donation board giving is up more than 40% over last year's numbers. Alumni donations are up 13%, and foundation gifts are up more than 30%. Martin Williams, Vice President for Development and College Relations, called Decker's donation an "extraordinary endorsement from a key trustee." Decker alone has contributed $150,000 to the Annual Fund this year.

Resources from the Annual Fund (gifts which are pledged to continue year after year) fuel the regular spending of the College. The Fund is "one of the bellwether indicators" that the college is thriving, said Williams. The Fund's support comes from various sources: the Donations Board solicits contributions totaling approximately $250,000 per year and the 1782 Society, a special support group with 205 members, has donated about $500,000 this year, its tenth of existence. Independent alumni and friends of the College, as well as state and local community leaders also contribute to the Annual Fund so as to help insure the school's future.

Gifts outside the annual fund are also accumulating rapidly, with a total of $2 million so far this year. These outside funds, unlike those collected annually, go toward W.C.'s capital and endowment purposes. A special gift of $1.3 million came from the Hodson Trust, a New Jersey-based foundation that has supported Washington College since 1922 and is responsible for the Hodson Loan program and the funding of the construction of Hodson Hall. The donation is the largest ever from the Hodson Trust, and also one of the largest single donations in the school's history.

The Senior Class is preparing to make a donation as well - they have already raised approximately $3500 in one of the most successful gift drives in recent history.

The annual Staff Fund Solicitation will soon take place. This year's drive will be chaired by Central Services Clerk Betty Anne Connolley.

There is a continuous effort to solicit donations from the parents of students. These donations are expected to total $175,000 this year. According to Williams, parents have "contributed generously in recent years."

Said Williams, "President Toll will play a key role in determining the success for the balance of the year." Williams is hopeful that Dr. Toll's impact will carry over into future years: his increased devotion to augmenting the annual fund demonstrates his desire to provide his successor with a smoother financial transition when taking over the reins of the school.

"Washington College is a grand college, a real gem," says Toll. "My top priority as interim president is to raise additional funds to maintain a balanced budget. My second priority is student recruitment. I am asking everyone on campus to redouble their efforts in these two areas." Said Toll, "There are many outstanding scholars who are focused on doing the best possible job of teaching undergraduates. The professors are readily available to students and provide ample opportunities for undergraduates to do research with them. The dedicated faculty and staff make Washington College an exciting place in which to learn. I'm very eager to support Washington College's excellent learning environment and to keep it moving ahead." Ω

The Great Flagpole Caper

Kate Meagher

The theft of the rope from the flagpole on the Quad of Washington College just prior to winter break left the Buildings and Grounds Department in a quandary. No one knew how to replace it.

The rope was purchased at a cost of approximately $80. The brass clips with which the flag attaches to the rope were purchased. The question remained: How will we get up there? The pole is 70 feet high. Regular bucket trucks were called, but one could be rented to reach 45 feet and no higher. The ultimate solution came in the form of the Rock Hall Fire Company. They came complete with their ladder truck, and Jim Carter, a Buildings and Grounds employee, went up 70 feet and strung the rope.

Photo by Kate Meagher

Jim Carter restrings the flagpole

While the ladder truck was on campus, it was put to use in the Johnson Lifetime Fitness Center. There was a problem with the pulleys that operate the batting cage, and the ladder truck was able to fit into the LFC and Jim Carter was again able to make the repairs. A donation was made to the Rock Hall Fire Company.

The Buildings and Grounds Department was kept busy all month. The biggest project this month took place in Dunning's lecture hall. The walls, previously painted black, were covered with drywall and painted "to create a nicer, cleaner appearance," according to Reid Raudenbush, Director of Physical Plant. Improvements in the lecture hall were possible as a result of a gift to the school from Dr. David Litrenta.

Buildings and Grounds gave a facelift to the faculty lounge in Bill Smith. The walls and mailboxes were painted and the countertop replaced. The floor was sanded and the room furnished with new rugs and chairs.

Deteriorating vanity tops in Minta Martin were replaced this winter with brand new counters. The doors received a paint job as well. Ω

Roving RAs hit the dorms

New program increases Resident Assistants' visibility on campus

Rachael Fink

In an effort to improve the quality of life on campus, a new program has been initiated involving each member of the RA staff and each resident hall. Roving RAs will now be patrolling the residents halls each weekend night to A) make sure there is always an RA in each building B) increase the visibility of the RAs on campus and C) to deter acts such as vandalism, according to Elizabeth McLaughlin, the newest Resident Assistant Director.

The program, modeled after simular programs at other schools, was initiated by the Resident Assistant Directors with the help of the Student Affairs Office and the Public Safety Office.

"Security is working with us," said Susan Czechowski, RA for the second floor of Reid and another RAD. She indicated that in the future the RAs hope to have radios to facilitate communication between the various RAs on duty

Edward Maxcy, Associate Dean of Students, indicated that the program "doesn't relieve the responsibility of the RA on the floor," but he hopes it will make the RAs more visible to the campus "rather than just to the people on their own floor."

The RAs on duty will be doing rounds through the buildings in their area (anywhere from two to four buildings comprise an area) every hour or half-hour on Friday and Saturday nights starting at 9 p.m. and continuing until 2 a.m. They will be in contact with the Department of Public Safety at the beginning of their shift as well as during the night should the need arise.

According to both McLaughlin and Czechowski the first weekend of patrols went well, with only a few minor problems. Czechowski indicated that she received a very favorable response from several people who felt that having an RA on duty would help to improve the life in the dorms and be a welcome convenience.

In addition to the new program, the RAs now have three new members to round out the staff. David Tsipenyuk is now the RA for East Hall, Kristin Callahan on the fourth floor in Minta Martin and Tod Hall in Dorchester.

The RA staff is currently looking for those interested in becoming RAs next year, and recommending them for the Campus Leadership Seminars offered each semester through the Student Activities Office. Ω

Inside This Week's Elm

The Faculty Speaks

The Elm finally presents a column by a member of the Faculty. The first brave soul is Carol Wilson. 3

"Decade of Stupidity"

Former Elm editor Scott Koon is back to rant. This week he tackles the really important issues of the '90s. 3

We Get You Beer!

Kevin and Jeff browse for gifts for their moms. The owner of Creative Cookery gives them some ideas. 6

Dropped a Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce reviews a rather original Christmas album. 7

Back on campus and excited about it

Here we all are back at Washington College for another semester of academics, extra-curriculars, work, and sports. For some of us, this will be our last semester here, our last cold winter, our last challenging undergraduate class, our last chance to match all the names with all the faces of W.C. Others are just starting their education on this campus. To some of us, the issues presented in this paper are old news; some of us are approaching all of this with a fresh eye.

Approaching the issues, controversies, and problems on campus with a fresh eye sounds like a good idea to me. Seems we could all sit back and take a good long look at the College with an eye towards what we missed before, things we did not include in our equations last semester, things that might make a difference in how we feel about and deal with members of the Washington College community. Are we focusing primarily on the almighty dollar and not taking into account the people from whom that money comes and to whom we give that money? Are we focusing primarily on the academics and ignoring the extra-curricular activities? Do we not take into account the quality of teaching when discussing who should and should not be teaching on a Washington College classroom? Are we too concerned with getting out an issue of The Elm and not paying enough attention to our classes?

These are the kinds of questions each of us should be asking ourselves as we start to get back into the swing of survival here at W.C. In addition to asking these questions, we should start getting involved. This campus is historically apathetic, but rather than gripe about how no one ever wants to do anything we should simply start doing things. If the administration does something you are unhappy with, let them know. If the SGA is not addressing issues you think are important, drop into a meeting and bring them up yourself. If you don't think that the club or organization you are involved with is doing enough, do more. If you're tired of having nothing to do on Friday night, go to a party in the Student Center. If you think the articles in The Elm are drivel, write for us.

All of this is not to say that no one is doing their job, or doing it well. Many of the Washington College community are wonderfully dedicated to their jobs and the College. We have some outstanding faculty, staff, administrators, and even students. Agree with me? Let them know. What I am saying is that there are those of us who could be more involved with the general life and the larger community that makes up Washington College.

But why stop there? How many of the students at Washington College vote in local, state, or national elections? How many of us are even informed about the events that are happening in the world around us? How many of us have sealed ourselves in this ivory tower to see the light of day again?

I'll admit it – I am definitely suffering from Ivory Tower Syndrome, as well as senioritis, greekphobia, athletic blindness, and just general apathy. This aside, I am urging everyone to get more involved and excited and energetic and maybe even more positive about life at Washington College.

Well, enough of that. I am tired of being energetic and involved and positive. On to more exciting things, like contemplating spring break at the beach with my girlfriend and planning my big party after graduation.

Ever noticed how spring break has changed? When I was in high school, spring break was this mystical place of white sand and tan people, somewhere I could never manage to find. Oh, I hit all the right spots, or so I thought. Panama City, Daytona Beach, Virginia Beach, Miami Beach. The sand was never really white, but most of the people were.

Spring break has now become a time to sleep until two in the afternoon and spend no time thinking about how much work I have when I return. I get to read for pleasure (something I would never have considered as suitable for spring break in high school). I get to watch my soaps on TV (something I never have time to do here). I get to spend time with people outside of the Elm staff (something that everyone on the staff really enjoys). In short, I get to relax, not comb some far away beach looking for the perfect person with the perfect tan to spend my break with. Am I just getting old? Or am I just not as picky?

Graduation is another thing I am spending a lot of time thinking about. Will I, won't I? If I do, who do I invite? Mom, of course; all my friends really want to meet her. I guess if I invite my mother, I should invite my father, too. And my sister. Of course, there are a million relatives to send invitations to, just on general principle (and keeping in mind the possible monetary benefits). I have plenty of friends: I should invite, but do I really want a full crowd to witness me graduate somewhere in the middle of my class with nothing to really distinguish me from the rest of the graduating class all dressed in dark blue plastic gowns? About this I am still undecided. Of course, if I win the Sophie Kerr ...

The Winebottles

Saturday, January 28, 10 p.m., Student Center

Free to Washington College students (must show W.C. ID)
Sponsored by the SGA

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher

Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan

Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Layout Editor
Brian Matheson

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.

Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV

Office Manager
Kathleen E. Meagher

Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and cruz do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BittMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8265.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

A student questions Gender Studies' place at W.C.

I write this letter to question the emphasis placed on gender studies at Washington College, especially as concerns the English department. Because I hear so much about gender issues and gender studies around campus, I recently came to imagine that many of the classes offered at Washington College were off limits to me, a gender studies avoider, and this was aggravating. Looking at the course listings for spring 1995, however, I discovered that just four classes were listed under "Gender Studies," all cross-listed, only two of which impinge upon the English department, a "major field" for me. The Sociology and Anthropology departments, two places where I would expect to find gender classes, and where the inclusion of gender studies seems thoroughly appropriate, each offer one class also listed with Gender Studies.

Nonetheless, I am suspicious of gender studies and nervous about their influence at this school. Because the school is small, (a fact I am generally grateful for) the course offerings cannot always be as numerous as they would be if there were more students, and therefore more professors (a correlation, of course, which does not always hold). Thus, the management of the curriculum has to be a more sensitive matter than usual. The two gender studies classes taught by English professors this semester, in fact, excluding freshmen English, History of English Literature, and Introduction to American Literature—the latter two rarely being found in an upperclassman's schedule, and being unattractive to some, regardless of class—comprise 20%, over 20% for non-creative writers, of the English department's offerings. I think this is borderline enough so that it could be excused for one semester (I have not checked the stats for recent semesters). I think it is too high, however, to persist every semester, a scenario which would cost non-gender students a considerable amount of scheduling flexibility, not to mention opportunity, over the course of four years.

I have not taken a gender studies course, so I might seem an unqualified critic. However, from the conversations I have heard, and from the glimpses of gender issues I have caught in non-gender studies courses, I have a vague idea of what one might be like. My feeling is that, with a limited amount of time on this earth, the most worthy occupation of a student of literature is to understand what the greatest accomplishments of each work are, what an author's most significant intentions are, and how they are carried out. I am scared off by classes in the English department with "Women's" or "Gender" in the title (if there were any with "Men's" I would be equally scared)—and I know for a fact that other male and female students at this college share the same fear—because of the possibility that a work will be studied, not with the intention of understanding its greatest accomplishments, not with attention to what the author actually intended for the work, but with the intention of excavating whatever gender implications are present in the work. If a work is of high quality, and its greatest accomplishment is its characterization of the sexes or of a woman's experience of being a woman or of a man's experience of being a man, only then should attention be paid first and foremost to these issues and their importance to the author.

If a class' readings are comprised entirely of work by woman writers—which, though I do not immediately see the point, does not strike me as considerably perverse—and if attention is paid to what is most artistically valuable about the works, then I see no problem. I also do not see, however, a class that could be called a gender studies class, but rather just a class in literature by women. To ignore something of greater artistic value in a work, to favor that which falls within the study of gender, strikes me as counter-feminist, suggesting that women writers have a narrower range of concerns than do men.

Also contributing to my ill feelings about gender studies on this campus, I recently noticed that the Monday series—the series of weekly talks given at the Lit House—usually featuring diverse and attractive topics, this semester is weighted disproportionately toward the gender-related. Further, I have also noted that some professors who are not usually associated with gender studies are trying to sneak smaller doses of gender studies into their classes, presumably to appear more hip to their students. I hope they have not, as I did, overestimated the population of gender students on this campus, and I hope that the majority of English students, who I think just want to study English, and whatever issues are most significantly implicated by each work, remains the department's top priority.

-Ryan Walker

This Week on Campus

Jan. 27 - Feb. 2

Film Series
Bhaji on the Beach
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 27

Saturday 28
The Winebottles
10 p.m., Student Cntr, no admission, must show W.C. I.D.

Sunday 29

Monday 30

Tuesday 31

Wednesday 1

Thursday 2

Thinking through ...

The State of the Union

by Paul Briggs

The President's State of the Union address, although a bit on the long side (almost 90 minutes), was one of his better speeches. In it he discussed the nation's economic and social problems with the understanding which has been one of his strengths. He also sounded a conciliatory note, expressing agreement with the GOP on key issues such as welfare reform and spending cuts. In fact, it would estimate that about eighty percent of the speech consisted of statements which no one in Congress, and very few in the TV audience, would be able to find fault with. At the same time, Clinton did take definite stands on a few issues that might provide some contention between himself and the new Republican majority in Congress. The most significant of these was his support of Affirmative Action. Some Peace Corps which many Republicans have objected to as too expensive. Clinton introduced Congress to several people who had been helped and helped others with the aid of this program.

So it was a very good speech. Of course, Clinton's problem has never been the inability to make a good speech. Nor does he suffer from his occasional tendency to drift off wildly in relating to the concerns of ordinary citizens. What he does suffer from, among other things, is a tendency to champion liberal ideals and propositions with compromises, and darken the skies with innumerable trial balloons. If he can restrain this tendency, his approval ratings may well rise again.

Now on to questions of substance. As I said before, most of what the President said was so reasonable and obvious as to defy all effort to find points of disagreement. Of course obsolete programs should be dropped from the budget. Welfare reform, if carried out in such a way as to encourage self-sufficiency among the desperately poor, would be worthy of a good thing. The streamlining of the federal bureaucracy is proceeding better than anyone had a right to expect, and should continue.

Nonetheless, there are one or two problems. The heart of these is the proposed $25 billion increase in defense spending over the next five years. Although the deficit has gone down in the past two years, it is not yet small enough to warrant complacency about spending. Moreover, if this much money must be spent, then surely there are better uses to which it could be put.

The chances are that this will pass. Even the most GOP-resists defense spending the way a dieter resists fine chocolate - that is, with great difficulty. Even so, this is basically an economic stimulus package, and considerably more expensive than the one that Senate Republicans filibustered to death two years ago. It might serve to reduce the need for a new appropriation in an emergency, but its real purpose is to benefit military-base communities and the industries which supply the Pentagon.

The President also expressed opposition to cuts in Medicare. I understand his concern, but again, the deficit is not yet beaten. There is talk of passing a balanced-budget amendment, which would require very large cuts in spending in the near future, including cuts in entitlements like Medicare. If it should turn out to be necessary to cut Medicare, then do it.

The President also called for an increase in the minimum wage. This is a good idea, but I have a better one, albeit a politically radical one. The reason that the minimum wage needs to be increased every few years is, of course, that inflation keeps driving down its real value. Since these periodic increases have failed to keep pace with inflation over the long term, there has been a steady decline in the ability of minimum-wage earners to make ends meet.[a] This is also hard on employers. Consider the case of a medium-sized business paying 500 people minimum wage for a 40-hour week. A thirty-cent increase would require that business to pay an additional quarter of a million dollars a year. If its profit margin was low to begin with, this would be a serious situation. It seems to me that it would be easier on all concerned to simply index the minimum wage (that is, have it increase every year at precisely the rate of inflation) and let it go. Chances are this will never happen.

In a major break with tradition, the Republican response to the State of the Union address was delivered not by a Congressman, but by the governor of New Jersey, Christine Todd Whitman. This was in itself an important gesture, not only in that it was someone "beyond the Beltway," but in that it was someone who wields executive power, with all its attendant responsibility, unlike a legislator who knows that five hundred colleagues will prevent any mistake he or she might make from harming the public interest.

Whitman, in her speech, emphasized the efforts of herself and her fellow governors. She also said many of the same things that Clinton had said, and called for many of the changes that Clinton said he was working on. The only really specific demand she outlined was one for lower taxes.

This was also something that the President had mentioned, as a part of his "Middle-Class Bill of Rights (and Responsibilities)." Republicans will insist that he stole their idea, whereas Clinton will insist that he is merely fulfilling an old campaign pledge. Of course, we all know that the two parties have been borrowing each other's ideas since the days of Jefferson and Hamilton. The question is, how good an idea is it?

So long as tax cuts for middle-income families are paid for without gutting necessary programs, I see nothing wrong with them. It would be a mistake, however, to put a tax on entire agenda on them. An extra $500 or so a year will help many families, no doubt, but it will not bring economic security by itself. Voters are not children, and cannot long be placated by milk and cookies. There has to be more if public confidence in Washington is to be restored.

In his address, Clinton reintroduced the phrase "New Covenant" which was last heard at the '92 Democratic convention. The basic idea here, as I understand it, is that the government forms a partnership with the public, and both agree to take their responsibilities more seriously. Something like this is desperately needed. If the government had been taking its job seriously over the past few decades, we would not now be $4 trillion in debt. If the citizenry had been taking its job seriously, the percentage of eligible voters who take the trouble to vote would not be so shamefully low. The situation is not beyond repair, but there are limits to what Washington can do to correct it.

In fact, all real wages have been declining steadily for the past twenty years or so. This is one of the most serious economic problems that America faces, and would itself be a good subject for another column. Ω

The Faculty Speaks:

Assistant Professor of History Dr. Carol Wilson provides the first installment of the newest Elm column, "The Faculty Speaks"

The new Acting President of the College, John Toll, has the opportunity to right one of the previous administration's wrongs. The reinstitution of Professor Audrey Fessler would significantly bolster student and faculty morale at a time when morale is dangerously low.

Students are considering transferring to other schools. Faculty are looking for other jobs. Even though Washington College's finances are now foremost in the minds of many members of the College community, the new administration thinks only about "saving" the institution financially, regardless of intellectual and professional integrity. It is time to find, at some point down the road, that we have little left to save. While no individual faculty member is irreplaceable, the cost of re-building a quality faculty will be high for the College— both financially and psychologically.

What does Professor Fessler have to W.C. students? It seems to indicate that the administration does not have students' best interests first in mind: keeping good teachers in the classroom. We're talking about more than just a "popular" professor, whom students "like." The intense student outcry following the announcement of her dismissal indicates that Professor Fessler is interesting, engaging, vigorous, challenging, and students are learning a great deal from her. Colleagues have noted her professionalism, her careful judgments, her high ethical standards. Even if there were no question of any violation of the College's commitment to Audrey Fessler, even if her position had been clearly understood all along as a strictly terminal one, shouldn't we be trying to keep her anyway? Whether we are legally or ethically bound to, she is the kind of professor the College wants to retain.

In the College-wide debate over how to draw more students to W.C., we understand that professors who do their jobs well, who get students interested and involved, are part of that process. Such faculty members are economic assets, not liabilities. Prospective students pick W.C. in part because students here speak enthusiastically about their classes and the professors who teach them. And those prospective students attend classes by Department to present W.C. at its best — Audrey Fessler is one of these professors.

But clearly, many other faculty members here are good at what they do; why all the fuss over one individual? Aside from Fessler's professional merits, the treatment she received certainly seems to indicate that simply doing one's job well cannot ensure that one will be valued enough as an individual and contributing member of the College community to remain employed here. If one faculty member has committed herself to dedicating her efforts to the students here cannot rely on fair treatment by the administration, can any one of us? Can I, can you? Fessler's job performance here at W.C., to my knowledge, has never been faulted. It is not alarmist, then, to suggest that other good faculty are next on the chopping block. Those who are not forced to leave may well choose to work at other institutions whose atmosphere is more conducive to educational endeavor. And, of course, students may choose to do the same. Ω

Koon on the "Decade of Stupidity"

Scott Koon

Every era has its own guiding spirit – the Sexy Nineties, the Roaring Twenties, the Hippy-Trippy Sixties etc. I wasn't exactly wracking my brain trying to figure out what the spirit of our age is, but it came to me anyway. It came to me when I was reading a newspaper article about a guy who hired a stripper for a birthday party... for his 11-year-old son. The guy (who, oddly enough, was arrested) claimed he did it because he wanted to be "a cool dad."

At that moment, the essence of the age we live in came to me. It is likely that the last decade of this century will be known in the annals of history as the Decade of Stupidity.

The outward manifestation of this is the increasing frequency with which people consistently apparently senseless acts. I'm not referring to criminal acts, but also actions completed without any evidence of common sense. Indeed, some of what I'm talking about manifests itself in stupid reactions to crime. One Associated Press story from Tacoma, Washington tells the tale of James Daus, a man who got into a nasty auto wreck coming home from a bar this past New Year's Eve. Three strangers picked Daus up from the site of the accident and drove him home. When they got there, Daus told the men to break a window to get in. Daus' thirteen year-old son, mistaking the good Samaritans for burglars, shot and killed eighteen year-old Christopher West with Daus' .22 caliber semiautomatic rifle.

What was he thinking? Did Daus instruct his son to call 911 in the case of an emergency, and then, if help was not immediately forthcoming, head straight for the gun cabinet? It's reminiscent of the even stupider incident a couple of years ago when that student got blown away for making the mistake of knocking on the wrong door. Again, it may be just me, but when someone shows up at my domicile I don't immediately assume that shooting first and asking questions later is the sensible response.

There are many other examples of stupidity manifesting itself in really dumb criminal behavior. Like the guy who broke his plane into the White House, that guy who sprayed the White House with bullets, Lorena Bobbitt, Marion Barry smoking crack in front of the F.B.I.'s camera, Pro-Life assassins – the list goes on, and on. It is important to realize, however, that this phenomenon extends far beyond the criminal realm. A prime example of this would be the Federal Reserve Board raising interest rates because that darn pesky unemployment rate was just too darn low.

The age of stupidity has not only come to criminals and the elites, but also to the populace as a whole. What else explains the popularity of television talk shows? There is no time when television censors kept even the least risqué programming under wraps, and people didn't feel it necessary to talk about their personal lives in front of millions of people. Now it seems there's no shortage of people willing to go on record endorsing cephalin, watersports, S&M, B&D, mudslides, diaper discipline, penis enlargement, breast reduction, genital piercing, polygamy, polyandry, polypropylene glycol, bestiality, and a whole bunch of other stuff we used to think was perverted.

Oh, and one other popular phenomenon which shows the trend towards idiocy: Beavis and Butthead. I rest my case.

See "Koon" on 5

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

Even as early as the first week of the spring semester, the Student Government Association is preparing for a transition. The elections for next year's executives are on the horizon.

Petitions for the positions will become available in the Student Affairs Office starting February 15. Completed petitions are due back to the Student Affairs Office on February 22. All candidates must submit supplementary campaign essays to The Elm, which will be due February 21 and published in the February 24 issue. An open forum will be held on February 27 at 7 p.m. (the place has yet to be determined), in which the candidates will give campaign speeches. The elections are scheduled for March 1.

After being sworn in at the SGA meeting of March 7, the elected officers will work in tandem with this year's officers until Spring Break, which begins on March 13, in order to train for their new posts. The new executives will take over the operation of the SGA after break.

The most prominent issue at hand is WC's annual Birthday Ball, which will take place Saturday, February 18 in the Lifetime Fitness Center. This year's Ball, the "Great Gatsby Gala", is fully SGA-sponsored, unlike those in previous years. Last year's Ball was financed primarily by donations. According to Secretary Jill Likens, the Birthday Ball will be "student-run from the start to the finish; start-up to breakdown...and we're looking for help!" Recently, a basketball game scheduled to take place in the LFC on the night prior to the ball, set-up for the event will not begin until 10 p.m. on February 17. This leaves about 20 hours for the entire (rather extravagant) set-up to be organized.

A formal dinner will take place prior to the Ball. The Ball itself will feature performances by Doc Scantlin and his Imperial Palms Band, which Washington College's Jazz musicians, the Dance Club, and the Riverside Players. According to President Jamie Baker, "It's going to be a fabulous event. We're pushing it to be the best Ball ever. My hope is that it's going to be a tradition."

While the "Fessler Case" did not dominate Tuesday's meeting as it has dominated the past several meetings, the SGA will maintain its spirit-issue stance: Baker will handle the general principle of the issue (the Administration's lack of responsiveness to student opinion) while Vice-President Sonja Wilson will handle the specifics (the retention of Audrey Fessler).

Following up their successful appearance last semester, the Winebottles will return to W.C. this Saturday night for a repeat performance. They will appear in the Student Center this coming Saturday, January 28, at 10 p.m.

If you are interested in devoting some time to the Birthday Ball, you are encouraged to contact an SGA executive or senator, call the SGA office at x. 8500, or send BlitzMail to "Student Government Association". Your comments, questions, or concerns are welcome, as always, and can be voiced the same way. Ω

The UNO-Innsbruck International Summer School?

A unique study / travel experience in Europe

The University of New Orleans will sponsor a special 20th Anniversary session of its annual International Summer School in Innsbruck, Austria during the summer of 1995. Over 250 U.S. and European students as well as some 30 faculty / staff members will experience life and learning in the magnificent setting of the towering Tirolean Alps in the "Heart of Central Europe."

Participants can earn up to 10 semester hours of credit (fully transferable according to the usual rules) by selecting from over 50 courses offered in a wide variety of subject areas. Courses focus primarily on the cultural, historical, social, political, business, and economic issues of U.S. / European relations and address the theme "100-Year Austria: Bridge for a New Europe." All instruction is in English, with field trips and European guest lectures as integral parts of the academic program. Among the distinguished faculty and guest speakers for the special 20th Anniversary program are Dr. George McGovern, former U.S. Senator and Presidential candidate; Professor Stephen Ambrose, biographer of Eisenhower and Nixon and author of the best-selling D-Day: Climactic Battle of WWII; Professor Douglas Brinkley, author / director of the award-winning Majic Bus: An American Odyssey; Poet-in-Residence Robert Hunter, English translator of the great German-language poet Rilke, specialist on the modern Austrian poetry scene, and lyricist for the Grateful Dead, Bob Dylan and other contemporary musicians; Dr. Otto von Habsburg, head of the former imperial house of Habsburg and member of the European Parliament; Professor Heinrich Neisser, House Speaker of the Austrian Parliament; Dr. Alfred Lugert of the Lugert Corporation for Social Science Research in Vienna; and Professor Rolf Steininger, Director of the Institute for Contemporary History at the University of Innsbruck and prolific author whose recent titles include Der Umgang mit dem Holocaust: Europa – USA – Israel (Dealing with the Holocaust: Europe – USA – Israel).

"Academically, the overall learning is just great," said Dr. Guenter Bischof, a native Tirolean now on the faculty of the University of New Orleans. "A student may read less, but see much more. It is a true living educational experience."

During the summer, students are housed in the Studentenhaus at the 900-acre Old University of Innsbruck, which is only a short walk from the many inns, cafes, and beer gardens in the "Old Town" of Innsbruck. Three-day weekends offer ample time for students to travel to many different destinations in Europe, to hike in the Alps and even to ski the nearby glaciers. From Innsbruck, the efficient rail system reaches all of Austria and much of Europe within a few hours. "Spending the summer in Innsbruck, Austria was one of the most broadening experiences of my life, not only educationally, but socially and culturally as well," said Meg Hanks, a former participant. "If you have the chance to go again, I'll have my bags packed and ready in no time flat." Former student Robert Byron stressed the learning experience by mingling with local residents: "You get to meet and talk with people and look at their perception of the United States."

The UNO-Innsbruck International Summer School will overlap with gala opening ceremonies on July 2 and will end on August 12, 1995. For those who wish to enrich their European experience further, UNO offers an anthropology field school program in Northern Italy during the month of June. The field school is not far from Innsbruck and ends in time for students to attend the International Summer School as well.

The UNO-Innsbruck International Summer School is a wonderful opportunity for students to travel, learn, and earn semester credit hours in a rich and beautiful European setting, alive with dramatic current events.

Enrollment is limited, so interested students should apply as soon as possible. For a full-color brochure / course descriptions write to: UNO-Innsbruck – 1995, International Study Programs, Rm. 211, University of New Orleans, LA, 70148; or call the UNO Office of International Study Programs at (504) 286-7116. Ω

W.C. quiet over break

Alison Parks

What happens as the once hectic hallways full of chatter and excitement of the holiday season turn into quiet, cold corridors anticipating the spring semester? Well thanks to the careful surveillance of our Campus Public Safety, nothing happens, at least in terms of crime.

Jerry Roderick, head of Public Safety, is a key contributor to this success. That is, he looks over as well as participates in the precautions that are taken to ensure safety and security during the Christmas break. These procedures include changing of all outside locks to campus buildings and frequent patrols around the campus. In addition, Roderick also states, "recognizing and emphasizing the importance of the campus' vulnerability during this break is essential in preventing break-ins from occurring."

Additional efforts have also been made to keep W.C. a safe and secure place as the spring semester begins. These efforts involve the cooperation between W.C. students and the Public Safety office. In particular, a recent plan was developed to help stop the frequent vandalism which occurs throughout last semester. This plan involves an RA patrol throughout Friday and Saturday evenings to observe any mischievous actions. Although no reported theft over Christmas break occurred, Roderick wants to remind students for the spring semester, "to be safety-conscious and exercise good safety techniques such as obeying campus regulations dealing with car registration and parking procedures." Ω

Glacier Park to hire 900 college students for summer jobs

College students from across the country are being sought for summer jobs at one of the nation's most spectacular national parks.

Glacier National Park, located in the northwest corner of Montana, is best known for its rugged mountain terrain and its historic lodges. Glacier Park, Inc. is looking for students to fill more than 900 summer jobs in all segments of the hotel and hospitality industry.

Jobs include a variety of hotel positions such as hotel front desk, room attendants, cooks, wait personnel and bus drivers. Many students also participate in the guest entertainment, which includes American Cabaret Theatre, another Glacier Park tradition. Employees are needed this year from mid-May to early October. The highest demand is for employees who can work through late September and early October. Internships are available for hotel / restaurant, culinary arts, hotel administration, accounting majors, and movie and theatre.

The seven hotels and lodges and the famous red vintage tour coaches operate throughout the 1.4 million acres of Glacier National Park. Since the early 1900s, it has been a tradition for college students from across the country to work at the park, thereby enjoying a number of outdoor activities such as hiking, riding, and fishing in one of the nation's last examples of pristine wilderness.

According to Dale Scott, president of Glacier Park Inc., the opportunity to work at Glacier affords students educational opportunities in more ways than one.

"You can get much-needed job-related experience in a variety of areas, which can help with a career later on," says Scott. "But you can also get life experience education by working in spectacular natural surroundings and through developing a camaraderie with co-workers who come from around the world."

For details on jobs and salaries call Glacier Park, Inc. at (602) 207-2620, or write Glacier Park, Inc., Dial Tower, Phoenix, AZ, 85077-0924. Ω

Income tax return assistance offered to area residents

Free income tax return assistance for low-income area residents is available through the help of volunteer tax preparers. The program, which is in its third year of operation, is available at the Board of Education Building from February 4 through the April 15. Sessions will be held on Tuesday afternoons from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. and on Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Assisted persons must have an annual income lower than $16,000 for a single person or lower than $26,000 for a family. Income must be derived solely from salaries, wages, tips, unemployment assistance, SSI, pensions and interest on savings (which must not exceed $400).

People who wish to use this free service are asked to bring their W-2 forms, interest information and any other relevant income records. They should also bring any tax packets or forms they may have received from the IRS, State of Maryland, and / or the State of Delaware. In addition, a copy of last year's tax returns is helpful. Forms will be provided for those without such copies.

This is entirely a volunteer effort. Churches, civic groups, banks, Heron Point residents, Washington College staff and students, local retirees and businesses are providing volunteers. All volunteers receive a practice packet of tax returns to use as a review and a check list is given to each volunteer at the assistance sessions. An experienced tax preparer reviews each return upon completion.

Twenty-six companies, including Bramble, the Board of Education, Campbell's Soup, Kent County, the town of Chestown, Gilpin Point, Kent & Queen Anne Hospital, Rock Hall Processing Plant and Washington Electronics have placed slips with their W-2 statements informing their employees that this assistance is available. As a further community service, companies and banks are lending equipment and contributing the costs of printing the information slips and the posters which are being placed around the county. Ω

Loyola

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

crud.

creative ranting under duress. by Caren B. Lee

Have you ever wondered what Washington College is doing for you? I suppose that with a little work it is possible to get an education here, but what else of consequence comes out of time spent at Washington College? Probably 95% of the students here have at least one complaint (more often several complaints) about Washington College. Perhaps it is the dining services that you find unsatisfactory. Or maybe you have been asked the most popular question inquired by health services (Are you pregnant?). If you are a senior you will understand that the library is less than satisfactory. I could not find a single source relating to my thesis topic in the Miller Library. Have you ever tried three parking lots before you found a place to park? This is apparently an everyday occurrence for many of us. Has anyone one else noticed the insane budget cuts? The Computing Center, for instance, why cut back on such a successful program?

We have all of these questions and most of us can answer them, but where does our money go? When I invest in something (and my education has been a big investment) I really think I ought to know what my money is being used for. I have taken the liberty of asking a few people why they came to Washington College. The number one answer is financial aid. Another popular answer is that they had less than perfect high school transcripts so their options were limited. A third reason is that Washington College presents a small academic environment in which one would expect to thrive. It is, however, difficult to thrive in an environment that does not cater to its customers. We, as students, are paying Washington College for its services, but Washington College frequently seems to give us less than our money's worth. For example, just today I went to the Lifetime Fitness Center an hour and a half after it should have opened and was told I could not use the weight room because the student who was supposed to be there was not there. Washington College pays people to do certain jobs (probably partly with tuition money) and those jobs apparently are not being done. This makes me absolutely furious!

Do you know that Washington College depends on a large percentage of its financial aid money coming from the Annual Fund? The Annual Fund consists of gifts from alumni of the college. I am graduating in four months and have absolutely no desire to give Washington College any of my money for financial aid purposes because so many other so called services appear to be lacking funds.

Let me not be misunderstood. Washington College has potential, but it should focus on making those of us who are presently enrolled happy, rather than paying so much attention to students who have not yet decided to attend. I have spoken to a few helpful members of the faculty and staff, and many of them feel that my grievances are warranted and are more than willing to help make Washington College a happier environment for me, but the changes that I feel need to be made will take a lot longer than four months. Ω

BlitzMail Users!

Students who have forgotten their Blitzmail password and transfers who wish to obtain an account should bring valid student I.D. to the Computing Center. BlitzMail is free to all W.C. students.

Campus Voices

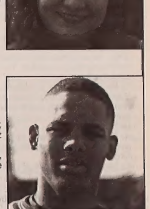
Question by Kelli Youngblood

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What was the last book you read for pleasure?

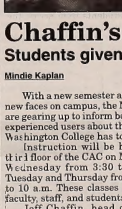
Shadowrun Role Playing Guide

John Weaver, Sophomore



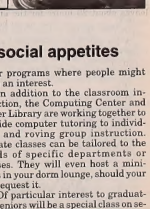
The Things They Carried, by Tim O'Brien

Pearl Pham, Sophomore



Vanished, by Danielle Steele

Mari Endo, Sophomore



The Scarlet Pimpernel, by Baroness Someone

Hosanna Schwable, Sophomore

Is there such a thing as reading for pleasure? To be honest, I can't remember.

Marcia Mowbray, Senior

Mr. Murderer, by Dean Koontz

Mark Awantang, Sophomore

Chaffin's new Mac classes

Students given new tools to whet academic and social appetites

Mindie Kaplan

With a new semester and plenty of new faces on campus, the Mac Classes are gearing up to inform both new and experienced users about the programs Washington College has to offer.

Instruction will be held on the third floor of the CAC on Monday and Wednesday from 3:30 to 4:30 and Tuesday and Thursday from 8:45 a.m. to 10 a.m. These classes are open to faculty, staff, and students.

Jeff Chaffin, head of Readers' Services in the library, also announced his intention to hold a special evening class (or maybe two) specifically for students. The "student edition" of Mac Classes may follow the same topic as the morning classes, but will cover it from the student's point of view. Recreational as well as practical and scholastic uses of the programs W.C. offers will be covered. For example, Excel is more than just a number crunching program. While it can be useful as a data entry tool (and as a job skill), you can also balance your checkbook, keep track of your diet / workout schedule, or even how much money you're spending on Cove Burgers. It's also handy for drawing up class schedules, calculating your GPA, and may be the perfect high-tech replacement for the notorious "little black book." On the purely indulgent side of computing, classes will be held on the highly addictive MUDs and other interactive computer games. Who says you have to waste money to have fun?

The Mac Classes will begin with a week of instruction covering Macintosh Basics, an overview of the campus network (there's more out there than Bolo), and an overview of the Information Superhighway. The following week will cover Claris Works, a program which combines a word processor, database, and communications package in one neat little bundle. This will be followed by classes on Word and Excel. Other classes will be held on specific parts of the Internet, desktop publishing packages as well as Cricketgraph and any other programs where people might have an interest.

In addition to the classroom instruction, the Computing Center and Miller Library are working together to provide computer tutoring to individuals and roving group instruction. Private classes can be tailored to the needs of specific departments or classes. They will even host a mini-class in your dorm lounge, should your RA request it.

Of particular interest to graduating seniors will be a special class on senior thesis presentation and setup. There are many multi-media tools on campus that will help give you the perfect thesis presentation and may be just that something extra you've been looking for to help you get honors. Don't forget about all the computer-driven research tools that will enable you to do a world-class thesis in less time than ever before.

Look for Mac Classes in the upcoming weeks and don't forget to Blitzmail Jeff Chaffin with any suggestions. Ω

Andy's

ANDY GOOD'S 1 BIGHT STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MARYLAND
778-1460

Friday, January 27
Linda McAdam's Country - rock - blues ... singer - songwriter, guitarist
Saturday, January 28
Bitter Creek Simply great bluegrass!!!
Thursday, February 2
The Wicomicos Terrific NYC Duo, melodic acoustic rock
(No Cover)

"Koon" from 3

Flash forward, if you will, to your old age. You've got a roaring fire on, and the grandkids are all huddled around. One of them asks "Gee, what was it like when you were young? Did you smoke pot and protest against the Vietnam War?" And you'll reply "No, that was in the sixties and early seventies." "Did you do disco and wear power ties and recklessly pursue financial gain?" "No, that was the eighties. I had the misfortune of being young in the nineties." "And what were the nineties all about?" And at that moment you can sit back in your chair and reply. "Being as stupid as one could manage." "And where did that get you?" "Nowhere. But I've got some really neat tattoos." Ω

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin and Jeff roam Chestertown in search of bargains.

Kevin: Hi. My name's Kevin, and this is Jeff, and we work for The Washington College Elm, and we're at the Creative Cookery. Could you tell us about this store and what goes on here?

Owner: We have cappuccino, we sell coffee, different kitchen wares, small appliances, home beer-making equipment...

K: Wait a minute! I heard something that's magic to my ears! You say you have home beer-making equipment?

O: Right.

K: Could you tell me a little bit about that? The process of it?

O: Well, not in a nutshell.

K: I'm thinking the college students might be a little bit interested in this. I'm not sure.

O: If they're over 21.

K: Oh, right. Yes, I'm sure the only people that will be messing around with home beer equipment will be over 21. That is my promise to you. How did you get involved in selling home beer-making equipment anyway?

O: I make beer.

K: Do you consider it to be as good as some of the brands you buy in the store?

O: If you don't make any mistakes, and don't screw it up.

K: What happens if you screw up?

O: It tastes like... bathwater.

K: Do you check ID's before you sell this equipment to anyone? It's not illegal to own this equipment, is it?

O: It's not illegal to sell it. It's only illegal to brew it.

K: So, theoretically, a student could come in here and buy home beer-making equipment, and have no problems with it?

O: Theoretically.

K: Maybe for their mom or something, for Valentine's Day?

O: Yeah.

K: So what other kinds of products do you sell here?

O: We sell some cold drinks. We have a special on cappuccinos between three and five on weekdays. They're a buck. They're regularly a dollar fifty.

O: Why did you get into this line of work, selling this equipment as opposed to opening a restaurant or something? Why is this place called Creative Cookery? What is a Cookery anyway? I was a little confused by that.

O: I don't know. I bought the business with the name.

K: So what did you add that the previous business didn't have?

O: Home beer-making equipment.

K: Home beer-making equipment. Of course, of course. Jeff, what do you think of this?

J: I've been noticing these postal stamps around a lot, those ones with the "G" on them. Do you know what they are?

K: Jeff, that's just a stamp. You're supposed to be asking about the store, pal.

O: I work at the college, too.

K: Really? What do you do?

O: I'm a baker for the dining hall.

K: Can you get them to make grilled cheese sandwiches more often? I really like those.

O: That's right, you had those today, didn't you?

K: Yeah. I love those. I had like three or four of them. Did you make my grilled cheese sandwiches?

O: No, I don't work the grill.

K: Well, whoever did, tell them they're doing a fine job.

O: Okay, I'll tell Barbara.

K: Do you get a lot of college students in here?

O: A few. Not too many. But we're planning on getting a sit-down area.

K: Have you done any advertising at the school? Maybe spelling out "Go To The Creative Cookery" in ketchup on their hamburgers or something?

O: We advertised once in The Elm last year, but we found out advertising doesn't really work in this town.

K: I know one thing that works. It isn't too expensive, and it works. What do you think it is Jeff?

J: Uhhh... I don't know.

K: Discounts. Have you ever considered giving a discount to college students?

O: Well, between three and five, they've got the cappuccinos.

K: How about a student discount? Do you have one of those?

O: Not right now, because a lot of the stuff here ... they wouldn't be interested in.

K: Maybe the home beer-making kits will spark their interest.

O: Yeah, I could see it now ...

K: ... Law enforcement officers raiding this place?

O: They already came to the former owner because she was... well, she wasn't doing it on purpose, but those old nitrous things? People would come in here and buy 12 ... 24 cans of whipped cream.

K: Well, how could she know what they were buying them for?

O: It's kind of obvious. "Like, hey man, do you have like 24 cans of whipped cream poppers? My mom needs a lot of whipped cream for a party, you know?"

K: Jeff has come to me numerous times asking for them. I never thought that ... What did you want them for, Jeff?

J: I make a lot of Banana Cream pies ... in my room.

K: So she got closed down?

O: No, she didn't get closed down. It was just a problem. Once she got wise to what was happening, she stopped selling them.

K: Why did she end up having to sell the place?

O: She was tired of the business.

K: Are you getting tired of the business, or are you still going strong, liking it?

O: I like it.

K: It's definitely a nice, comfortable atmosphere. A few tables and chairs would be nice. What is a cookery anyway?

O: You got me. I'm going to change the name anyway.

K: Jeff, what do you think a cookery is?

J: Uhhh ... I don't know.

K: Still no chance of a discount, maybe?

O: You guys are after some discounts, aren't you? Have you been to other places around Chestertown?

J: Yes, we have.

O: Are you asking them about discounts? What are they doing?

K: We went to Wilma's, right across the street here.

O: Wilma's?

K: Yeah.

O: That's a trick, they're closed.

K: Yeah, we noticed. Maybe if they'd given us a discount sooner, they would have been able to stay open. What happened to Wilma?

O: They closed down.

K: Do you know where she is?

O: No.

K: So she just disappeared?

O: No, she's around. She went back to teaching.

K: Before, when we talked to her, she had given up teaching to open Wilma's, but she didn't seem too happy about it. Wilma was the first discount we ever got. Ladies and gentlemen, this is the end of an era... the end of Wilma. Thanks for your time. Ω

Want to Teach?

Learn how for today's schools

If you have a non-teaching bachelor's or advanced degree and want to teach, the College of Notre Dame offers women and men two approved programs for teacher certification. Programs connect current knowledge in teacher education with practical classroom experiences.

Master of Arts in Teaching (MAT)
. . . Completion time . . . 15 months or 2 years

A graduate program of professional studies integrating current research with practical classroom experiences and featuring school-college partnerships.

Accelerated Certification for Teaching (ACT)
. . . Completion time . . . 1 to 2 years

An undergraduate program leading to certification through part-time course work and full-time internships in area schools.

MAT and ACT programs offer certification in:

- Early Childhood Education
- Elementary Education
- Secondary Education

Courses available on weekends and evenings.

For more information, please call (410) 532-5895 (410) 532-5349.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME OF MARYLAND

We've Made It Easier For The Class Of '95 To Drive The Class Of '95.

THE ALL NEW TOYOTA TERCEL

AND THE TOYOTA COLLEGE GRAD PROGRAM.

There's no better way to enter the work force than behind the wheel of the all-new, always dependable Toyota Tercel. And it's easy with Toyota's special college graduate program ... you get Toyota's premier rate*, no down payment, no payments for 90 days, and a year of free roadside assistance. Just see your participating Toyota dealer for all the details.

WE'RE MAKING IT EASIER FOR COLLEGE GRADS.

* COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM FINANCED THROUGH TOYOTA MOTOR CREDIT CORPORATION'S 60 MONTH PREMIER RATE.  TOTAL FINANCED CANNOT EXCEED MSRP PLUS OPTIONS, TAX AND LICENSE FEES. FINANCING AVAILABLE WITH APPROVED CREDIT THROUGH TOYOTA MOTOR CREDIT CORPORATION. DEFERRED FINANCE CHARGES ACCRUE FROM THE CONTRACT DATE. SEE PARTICIPATING DEALER FOR DETAILS.

TOYOTA
I Love What You Do For Me

Home of A Degree

Aaron Pierce

Two-Headed Dogs and the Holiday Spirit

"The time has come, the walrus said, to talk of many things"... well, not really. However, if you will check your watch, you will find that it is time to talk of music. Specifically, strange music, weird music, disturbing music. It is time to talk of big Texans with maniac ideas about what exactly constitutes a song. It's time, my friends, to talk of the Butthole Surfers.

All right, I had promised myself and others that I wouldn't do a Butthole Surfers column. Unfortunately, there are times when vows made in passing must be broken. Even the most surface study of the history of these fine United States will give in reveals with blinding clarity the blatant and, indeed, rampant acceptability of the broken promise. So I am revoking my hastily spoken words of binding in order to speak of one of my favorite bands.

The history and habits of the Butthole Surfers are the stuff of legend in the Austin punk scene. Along with bands like the Big Boys, the Surfers defined a style of music and live was marked by (and some will argue this point as being applicable to the entire punk rock phenomenon) a peculiar blend of bad taste, psychedelia, and, oddly enough, very little of the outrage that seemed to be integral to the punk ideal. The Butthole Surfers didn't actually offend their major audiences that came to some of their first shows, they just scared them.

After years of diligent self-production, the Buttholes finally managed to land a major label a few years back. With the help of Paul Leary, they created an album of superb production value, but, in the eyes of some of the more conservative fans, disappointingly little oomph. True, the emphasis on production taken in the recording of Independent Worm Saloon did seem to be contra to the deliberately rough edge of their previous albums. However, a careful listening to past albums shows, not a carelessness of production, but a lack of money. The guys were merely producing albums without the benefit of major label backing and, consequently, major label funds. In my view, the treatment of the last album was truly amazing and, in fact, true to the ethic previously advanced by the Buttholes.

Fortunately for the opponents of the last album, the Butthole Surfers have come out with a new one. Well, sort of. They released a 45 on Trance Syndicate, the Austin based label created by Buttholes drummer King Coffee to record Crust, a local band of dubious moral fiber. It is, in keeping with the recently-passed holiday season, a Christmas album. The Butthole Surfers, in an attempt to somehow contribute some of that special magic that only they can create, recorded a version of the popular Yule time carol "Good King Wenceslaus."

What does this album a special treat is the fantastic vinyl art featured on the disk. Side A shows us a monstrous two-headed poodle backed by swirling reds and greens, its teeth bared in a gesture of the twentieth century Christmas spirit. The flip side consists of a close-up of the face of the absolute, hands-down most satanic Saint Bernard I have ever laid eyes on. Images of its blood-red eyes still haunt my troubled soul late at night.

My feelings on the actual music on the album are mixed. "Good King Wenceslaus" is just what you'd expect it to be. The same people that criticized the Butthole Surfer's last album will probably criticize this one. It's kind of funny and a cool novelty, but the song isn't all it could be. Past efforts by the band to satirize popular music have come off better than this one. Gibby's vocals consist of one long stream of pseudo-drunken nonsense. It is the band that takes up the familiar lyrics, belting them out on top of a grinding rendition of what are apparently the lost chords of Bast with a needle in her eye. And like all good Butthole Surfer's songs, "The Lord is a Monkey" finally deteriorates in the end into a rumbling feedback orgy, white noise battling with the forces of good taste.

The Butthole Surfers have a slew of albums out. They're not particularly hard to find (except, of course, for the albums that are hard to find...c'mon, every good band's got 'em!). Tower always has a few on hand. For those uninitiated in the joys of Butthole Surfing, I would have to suggest some of their more recent albums. Try Hairway to Steven for starters. It's an all around good album that showcases the different styles embraced by the Surfers: musical chaos to pleasantly innocuous psychedelia. For those interested in harder sound, Independent Worm Saloon offers songs more in the spirit of Gibby's work with Ministry. The music is fast, hard, and relentless. This album shows the band at its tightest. If you happen to be interested in a more down and dirty sound, the sound that kept the Butthole Surfers obscure, try Psychic, Powerless ... Another Man's Sac, or Locust Abortion Technician. In any case, give them a listen. Ω

Popcorn and Jujubes

Koon reviews Nell and Legends of the Fall

I don't get out much, in the past month or so, I've only seen two movies Nell and Legends of the Fall. Between the two of them, they got seven of them three Golden Globe nominations. I'm sure your typical artsy-fartsy film reviewers will love both movies. Us regular folk may be just as much fun as opposed to getting paid to see movies – tend to like different movies than the critics do. In Nell and Legends of the Fall we find two movies that should do well with critics and regular folk alike.

If you think you might at all be interested in seeing Brad Pitt's butt, then definitely check out Legends of the Fall. Although I'm a man, and I have a butt, I'm no expert on men's butts. So I went to this movie accompanied by someone who is an expert on the subject – my sister. Although you only get to see Mr. Pitt's butt very briefly, it left a great impression on my sister. Indeed, for about an hour after the movie, she continued to talk about the various subtle symmetries and the myriad other virtues of Mr. Pitt's butt. She just kept going on and on about how hot Brad Pitt is, and she kept making these "Mmm Mmm," yummy sounds.

But don't be fooled by the fact that they've used a sexy leading man to lure women into the theaters: Legends of the Fall is a macho, manly man's movie. Like all of the best films of the past few years, it's heavy on the Pretentious value. If you like westerns, war movies or gangster movies you'll love this one, for it is a successful combination of all these genres. Pitt is kinda like an early twentieth century Rambo. He engages a grisly grizzly in single combat-twice. When his little brother (who is blinded by an unspecified chemical agent) is mowed down before his very eyes by the heartless Huns on the killing fields of W.W.I, Pitt undergoes a metamorphosis, becoming a psychopathic knife-wielding lunatic whose vengefully murderous scalping rampage is unfettered by mercy or any notion of human compassion. And you'll cheer when Pitt exacts his bloody vengeance against the gangsters and cops who (accidentally) killed his wife.

There's also this family love triangle plot going on. I'm not going to spoil it for you, because there's nothing to spoil. Legends of the Fall is a beautifully made film which does more justice to the script than the script merits. At least there's no happy ending, in the traditional sense. Legends of the Fall is enjoyable but don't expect any real surprises. I give it three and one-half stars.

In Nell, co-producer/actor Jodie Foster is often naked. Now, normally I'm not opposed to seeing Ms. Foster naked, in fact I'd say she's one of the most beautiful women in Hollywood. It's just that the nudity in this film is tasteful. Even worse, Ms. Foster looks like she lost about ten or fifteen pounds for this role, so she's far less sexy than she usually is. Unless you're a devotee of that Kate Moss kinda waif look, which I'm not.)

That being said, I'm sure lots of men (and some women) will go see Nell simply because Ms. Foster is a hottie. That's fine, but while you're here you might as well enjoy the movie. The hill country location is gorgeous, and Foster and Neeson put in predictably excellent performances. A striking feature is the proficiency of the supporting cast. There's a neurotic sheriff's wife who does an excellent job of displaying all the symptoms of a major depression. You take one look at her and say to yourself "Wow, she's really screwed up!" She does an excellent job, but her character isn't explored nearly enough.

A similarly screwed-up individual is the inbred village idiot who delivers groceries to Foster's mother. The actor is so convincing that, even before he opens his mouth, we realize I. he's a juvenile delinquent 2. he's got an IQ of 85 at the most 3. his mother should have taken vitamin supplements during pregnancy.

Nell is touching. I almost cried. Almost. The only problem I had with the movie is with the evil academic research psychiatrist character. Is this becoming a cultural theme? Why is it that in our society, which relies so heavily on the services provided by the mental health community, we find the need to demonize mental health care providers? But I digress. Go see Nell. It's a good flick. I give it four stars. Ω

The deadline for applying for financial aid for the 1995-96 academic year is February 15, 1995. FAFSA and FAF forms were sent in December to all students who currently have need-based financial aid. Any student who does not currently have need-based aid and would like to be considered for the 1995-96 academic year, please come to the Office of Student Financial Aid to pick up forms.

Additional copies of the FAF and FAFSA are available in the Office of Student Financial Aid - 3rd floor-Casey Academic Center.

DEADLINE FOR APPLYING IS FEBRUARY 15, 1995!

IFC announces rush activities

The Interfraternity Council will be sponsoring rush for the fifteen national fraternities represented on campus: Theta Chi, Kappa Alpha, and Phi Delta Theta. Dates for those individual events are below, but there are things the potential rushee should consider and learn more about the fraternal organizations on campus. If you, as a rushee, are not eligible to receive a bid for any reason (academic standing, not at least a second-semester freshman, or are a transfer student who has not been here for at least one semester) as a matter of courtesy you should inform the fraternal organization.

FORMAL rush is usually by invitation only, and only those individuals formally contacted by the fraternal organization may attend. Again, use this time to ask questions and show interest. Bids will be available on Friday, February 17 in the Student Affairs Office. To accept a bid, the student must sign on the appropriate sheet with Dean Maxcy on Friday NO LATER THAN 4:30 p.m. You will be contacted by the fraternity thereafter.

If you have any specific questions about the rushing process, you may contact Mike McDermott, IFC President, at extension 8895 or Dean Maxcy via the Student Affairs Office.

Informal Rush
Tues., Feb. 7 – Theta Chi, 7-11 p.m.
Wed., Feb. 8 – Phi Delta Theta, 7-11 p.m.
Thurs., Feb. 9 – Kappa Alpha, 7-11 p.m.

Formal Rush
Tues., Feb. 14 – Kappa Alpha, 7-11 p.m.
Wed., Feb. 15 – Phi Delta Theta, 7-11 p.m.
Thurs., Feb. 16 – Theta Chi, 7-11 p.m.

Cavani String Quartet to perform at Washington College this week

The Washington College Concert Series is bringing one of America's leading chamber ensembles to Chestertown. The Cavani String Quartet will perform in concert on Thursday, February 9.

The concert begins at 8 p.m. in Tawes Theater of the Gibson Performing Arts Center. Tickets are available at the door.

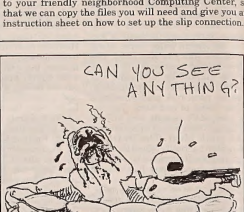
The Quartet comprises four musicians on the faculty of the Cleveland Institute of Music: violinist Annie Fullard, violinist Susan Waterbury, violist Kirstein Docter, and cellist Merry Peckham. The Washington Post said, "This quartet succeeds like few others in communicating the fun of music making, the sheer joy of balancing timbres and weaving sound."

Selected by Musical America for its "Young Artist of 1989" roster, the Quartet has been hailed for its combination of extraordinary musicianship, energy, and technical brilliance. The ensemble appears annually on major chamber music series and festivals in North America and Europe, and has been featured on several televised and radio broadcast shows. The Quartet's first disc recording on the Azica label features works of Bartok and Ravel.

There is no reserved seating in the 600-seat Tawes Theater. For more information, telephone 410-778-7839. Ω

PHOTO BY CHRISTIAN STEINER

The Cavani String Quartet



Updates from the Computing Center

Campus Network/Internet:

Macintosh users who want to connect to the campus network need a network connector. If you bought your Macintosh through the College, a network connector should have been included with your machine. Simply plug it into the printer port of your computer and place the phone cord in the phone jack that says "network connection." If you live off-campus, you need to use a modem.

Students who do not own a network connector may purchase one at the computing center. The cost is $39.95 and may be charged to your college I.D.

Students with IBM-compatible computers may connect to the network with a modem. Please bring a disk to your friendly neighborhood Computing Center, so that we can copy the files you will need and give you an instruction sheet on how to set up the ship connection.

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (1/21-2/18)—The accumulation of life and things means rottenness. Life must destroy life, in the unfolding of creation.

Pisces (2/19-3/20)—Your social life is not dead, it's just pining for the fjords. So muscle up to those bars, bend them apart with your beak, and...VOOM!

Aries (3/21-4/19)—Go back in there and face the peril.

Taurus (4/20-5/20)—Well, Well, the Bull is yet on another rampage from the dungeonous depths of hell. You've done a good job mowing people over so far, keep it up and you'll get a medal.

Gemini (5/21-6/21)—Condescension is your forte but also your undoing. You are not KING OF THE MOUNT but a mere pawn in the general scheme of things.

Cancer (6/22-7/22)—Never, by any chance, injure your fellow man openly. But always injure him secretly. Make a fool of him, and undermine his nature.

Leo (7/23-8/22)—And he thought of his own mission, how he had tried to lay the compulsion of love on all men. And the old nausea came back on him.

Virgo (8/23-9/23)—You are one who delights in all manifestations of the terpsichorean muse...your neighbor who plays Green Day 24-7 is not.

Libra (9/24-10/23)—You have friends in high places; never again shall you be forgotten.

Scorpio (10/24-11/22)—Your sexual nature has finally been buried forever. The little girl / boy in you hath risen to greater heights than she / he imagined thus devouring your adult feelings.

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21)—The smile on your face is too much like a clown's. In fact, lately all I see are your white teeth which echo your high and mighty attitude.

Capricorn (12/22-1/20)—Don't take any crap. Do as you will, you are God here.

Horoscopes by Ember and Shade.

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE
Achieve a higher state of "Bean" espressos • cappuccinos • lattes moos • mochaccinos • hazelnuss creme caramel
baquettes • breads • croissants pecan rolls • danish • bagels • muffins focaccia • espresso cheesecake pizzelles • brownies cookies • tarts
find a cozy spot and warm up at . . .
the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery

Take a Stroll down WINE ALLEY
WINE ALLEY features over 175 wine selections from around the world!
OUR TOP 10 PICKS FOR JANUARY . . .
Wine Spectator would have to agree!

Caymus Cabernet Sauvignon, Napa Valley, 1991	$29.00
Ferrari Carano Merlot, Sonoma County, 1991	$16.00
Pride Merlot, Napa Valley, 1991	$19.00
Chateau Potelle Zinfandel, Mt. Veder V.G.S., 1992	$30.00
Ravenswood Zinfandel, Sonoma County, 1992	$13.00
Pesquera Ribera del Duero Crianza, 1991	$18.00
Ferrari Carano Chardonnay, Alexander Valley, 1992	$19.00
Caymus Sauvignon Blanc, Napa Valley, 1992	$12.00
Duckhorn Sauvignon Blanc, Napa Valley, 1992	$13.00
Pol Roger, Brut Champagne, Napa Valley, NV	$39.00

• Vintage Port • Cognac •
• 1994 Wine Buying Guides (½ price sale) •
Wines available from $4.00 to $70.00 a bottle / Discounts for case orders.
NOW OPEN DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

Spider's
(Formerly Newt's)
Hillside Bar
Special Draft Night
Wed. 8 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Midnight Madness
Thurs. 11 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Must be 21 or older

POB

Washington College's Players of the Break are chosen by the coaches as athletes displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

Ben Harris is honored again with Player of the Break. His constant leadership and dedication remain crucial to the performance of the Sho'men. His consistency in every game has led the Sho'men to key wins this season. Harris a 6'0" sophomore is from Alexandria, VA. He played at Mt. Vernon high school. He averages in the double digits every game and is also the captain of the team. Harris is known to Washington College fans as the three-point master.

Supporting Harris are three others who receive honorable mention. Adam Poe, a 6'3" center from Livingston, NJ, is a junior at Washington. He recently had a season best of 11 rebounds in the game against Johns Hopkins University. Edmund Hicks, a 6'4" junior from Riva, MD, has played solid defense coupled with a dangerous lay-up. Hicks had a season high of four steals against Gallaudet. Another sophomore, Derek Cuff, has caught the attention of many this season by breaking 20 points in more and more games.

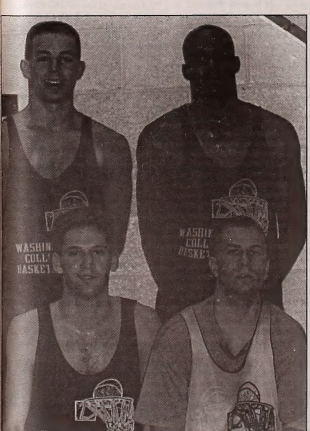
Be sure to watch these men as they go on the road and face their toughest Conference rivals.

In women's basketball, Eboni Taylor has received Conference honors for her performance this season and this week. Eboni is a solid force on the Sho'women team. She averages in the double digits at every game and tops the rebound stats as well. Her most recent feat was against Johns Hopkins University where she notched 25 points and 22 rebounds.

Eboni's teammate Allison Wentworth has topped the scoring lists in the Conference averaging 13.4 points per game and a total of 147 points so far this season. Allison is no slacker on rebounds, averaging 8.4 a game.

The Men's swim team is undefeated so far this season, on their way to being the best. The senior pack of Dave Cola, Jason Campbell, Chris Freisheim, Ty McCarthy, Tim Whittier and Dave Czekajare in part responsible for their winnings. Dave Cola holds school records in free style, medley relays and free relays. Jason Campbell and Chris Freisheim also hold records in the relays. Ty McCarthy, Tim Whittier and Dave Czekajare are solid swimmers who are dedicated and swim in the top of their individual events. The men have broken 100 in every meet this season and their continual improvement has led the team to their 7-0 record. All six seniors will qualify for the Conference championships.

For the women, honorable mention goes to Darlene Schaub. In her first meet back after an appendectomy, she just missed a school record and took two firsts against Bryn Mawr in the 100 and 200 breast. Against Dickinson, fighting fatigue, she took another first in the 200 breast. She is a freshman from Catonsville High School who looks to break some school records soon.



The Elm would like to recognize both swim teams for fine commitment and performance while they spent part of their break in Florida.

Eboni Taylor (above) and Allison Wentworth (below) strut their stuff off the B-Ball court as joint Players of the Break

All photos by Kelli Youngblood.

Ben Harris, Adam Poe, Edmund Hicks, and Derek Cuff (left) take a break from practice to pose for their Players of the Break photo (nice smiles, guys).

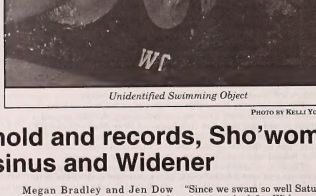
Dave Cola, Jason Campbell, Chris Freisheim, Ty McCarthy, Tim Whittier and Dave Czekajare (above).

Darlene Schaub (right) grimaces in pain while clutching her still tender tummy (not pictured).

All photos by Kelli Youngblood.

Club Lacrosse

Once again, W.C. is breaking out with a club lacrosse team. Ever played lax before? Doesn't really matter. Club lax is for any level of player, from beginner to advanced. For beginners there is the possibility of a lax clinic here on campus and practicing with varsity caliber players. For you intermediate and advanced players, club lax is a member of the National College Lacrosse League, and we play 8 teams of Navy, Johns Hopkins, Syracuse, University of Maryland, and Delaware. Interested? Blitz Steven Dashiell.



Women clean up two days in a row

Dave Kraft

The W. C. women's swim team scored two impressive victories on Friday and Saturday to run their record to 8-0. On Friday, the women defeated Bryn Mawr by the score of 189-71, avenging last year's loss by a similar margin. The women swam their finest meet of the year, recording 19 season-best times, breaking one school record, and making a blowout of what was supposed to be a close meet. Freshman Danielle Sullivan continued to rewrite the W.C. record books as she won the 50 Free in 26.32. Sullivan also swam a season best 2:03.73 in winning the 200 Free, just two tenths of a second off the record, and won the 100 Free as well. Freshman Meredith Bathgate also won all of her events: the 100 Back, 200 back, and 200 IM. Freshman Megan Bradley took 13 seconds off her winning 1000 Free time and became only the second woman in W.C. history to break 2:20 in the 200 Fly. These times rank her fifth and third in the Conference in those events. Junior captain Jen Dow won the 100 Fly and placed second to Bradley in the 200 Fly in a season best time. Freshman Darlene Schaub, who was out the first semester with appendicitis, made her college debut in fine fashion, recording wins in the 100 and 200 Breast, both in Conference-ranked times. Both relays were won by W.C. as well. The team of Bathgate, Colleen Roberts, Dow, and Casey Bane won the 400 Medley Relay, and the team of Sullivan, Bane, Jenn Voss, and Barbara Murphy won the 200 Free Relay. Other season bests were turned in by Liz Lakens in the 200 and 500 Free, Voss in the 100 Breast, senior captain Amy Draper in the 100 and 200 Fly, Bane in the 200 Free, Denise Hakanson in the 100 and 1000 Free, Murphy in the 1000 Free, and Erin Miller in the 200 Back.

Despite their fatigue, Washington defeated Dickinson 103-86 the next day. This marked the first time in history that W.C. had beaten the Red Devils. The Sho'men got wins from Megan Bradley in the 500 and 1000 Free, Jen Dow in the 200 Fly, Danielle Sullivan in the 200 Free, Meredith Bathgate in the 200 IM, Darlene Schaub in the 200 Breast, and the 400 Medley Relay team of Bathgate, Colleen Roberts, Bradley, and Casey Bane.

"A coach couldn't be more proud of a group of this group of girls," Coach Kim Lessard said. "What a complete turnaround from a 2-9 '93-'94 season. Like the women's team has said, 'WAC is back.'" Ω

Unidentified Swimming Object

PHOTO BY KELLI YOUNGBLOOD

The men spank Dickinson in first meet in '95

Dave Kraft

The Washington College men's swim team raised its mark to 7-0 by beating Dickinson College 145.5-54.5. Unlike the women, the men did not have action the previous night, not counting the impressive display of cheering at the women's meet vs. Bryn Mawr (I enjoyed those pizzas, did you Errie?). The Sho'men were too much for Dickinson, as they swept the Red Devils in seven of the 11 events.

The Sho'men started out by taking 1-2 in the 400 Medley Relay. Peter Ward's 57.93 backstroke leadoff was a season best. Ward teamed with Jason Campbell, Scott Steinmuller, and Chris Freisheim to win. Tyler McCarthy, Julien Gaudion, Dave Cola, and Rob Cronin were second. Tim Whittier also made his '95 debut, qualifying in the 100 Back. Drew Fritch won the 1000 Free in a season best 10:54.27 with Dan Woodall second, Erric Hetzer third, and Dave Czekaj fourth. Freisheim, Steinmuller, and Dave Kraft then swept the 200 Free. Peter Ward won the 200 IM in a season best 2:09.11. Cola and Steinmuller took 1-2 in the 200 Fly and Tim Parent won the 100 Free to start the second half. Cronin, McCarthy, and Kraft swept the 200 Back and Cola, Fritch, Hetzer, and Czekaj took 1-2-3-4 in the 500 Free. Freisheim, Parent, Fritch, and Hetzer teamed to win the 200 Free Relay.

This victory confirms the Sho'men's place in the Conference elite. As Coach Kim Lessard said, "This is a great group of young men who deserve a lot of credit for how hard they are working and how they have put W.C. on the map for swimming. We are the new team to beat."

Breaking the mold and records, Sho'women clean up at Ursinus and Widener

Dave Kraft

The Washington College women's swim team continued to show their talent this week, as they improved to 5-0. They defeated Centennial Conference power Ursinus 107-98 on Saturday, and defending Middle Atlantic Conference champion Widener 127-83 on Tuesday.

Ursinus finished second in the Centennial Conference last year, six places ahead of the Sho'men. On the strength of many great swims, including four school records and 19 season best times, the women were able to overtake them.

Megan Bradley swam a fine 1000 Free, dropping her time to 11:34.18. Amy Peterson dropped a full minute off her previous best in that same event. Danielle Sullivan rolled to the first of her three wins in the 200 Free, winning in 2:05.43. Casey Bane dropped three seconds to swim a 2:08.87 and take third to pull the team within a point. Meredith Bathgate, another triple-winner, then sprinted a school record-tying 26.35 to win the 50 Free and give the women a six-point lead. Colleen Roberts and Erin Miller swam season bests in the 200 IM and the Sho'women led by three at the break.

